Most of these ten popes are dropped from the list under the specious plea that they were not canonically elected. The canonical election of every pope is open to the gravest suspicion. For 1000 years they were elected by the priests and people of Rome, just in the same way that we elect our public officers. The gravest disorders naturally crept in, as there was always a Tammany hall in Rome. As early as 418, we find Pope Boniface I. petitioning the emperor to pass a stringent law regulating these elections and to exercise his veto power. In 498, Pope Symmachus convened a council for the same purpose, in which it was proven that votes were openly bought and sold and benefices promised in return for support. Moreover, until the complete separation of the two churches, Roman and Greek, the pope was not consecrated till his election had received the imperial sanction; and, during the Arian rule in Italy and until the destruction of the Lombard kingdom by Charlemagne, the popes were always nominated and elected by the heretical civil power.

Up to the 14th century, few, if any popes were elected without the assistance of the emperor or some king, and very many of them depended on petty Italian princes to secure themselves in the papal chair.

Hence the many wars in Italy. From 1305 to 1378, while the papacy was established at Avignon there was not a canonically elected pope, as all of them were tools of the French king, who nominated and elected every one of them. And up to the 15th century popes were subjects to councils; the council of Constance having deposed John XXIII, as we shall see when we reach that gentleman and elected Martin V., (1417). And the uncertainty, from a canonical standpoint, surrounding all papal elections is evidenced by a decree of Nicholas II., (1509) that a pope, on his election, may act even before consecration. In fact, there is no rule defining canonical elections, as is proven by the late election. If only canonically elected popes are to be kept on the list, then there will be no list.

The present pope was a compromise candidate and was elected because the veto of Emperor Joseph of Austria, prevented the conclave from electing Rampolla, who, unquestionably, was the favorite candidate.

Listen to what he said in 1893, in his first sermon at St. Mark's church, Venice. "The pope is not simply the representative of Jesus Christ; on the contrary, he is Jesus Christ himself, under the veil of flesh, who by means of an existence common to humanity continues his ministry among men. Does the pope speak? It is Jesus Christ that speaks. So that if the pope speaks, we have no need to examine, but have only to obey. There can be no rights in opposition to the pope in teaching or giving orders. His decision must not be criticised, nor his commands disputed. Consequently, by divine appointment, all kings, cardinals, priests, must be subjected to him who has placed all things under his feet."

Hundreds of thousands, inoculated with this papal venom, are landed on our shores every year, and the time may come when this country will regret in sackcloth and ashes what is called liberality.

The microbe of reform will never inoculate a pope who considers himself a reincarnation of Jesus Christ.

My authority for the dates in the following review will be "A General History of the Catholic Church, by M. L'Abbe J. E. Darras, with introduction and notes by the Most Reverend M. J. Spalding, D. D., Archbishop of Baltimore," containing letters of recommendation from Pius IX; John McClosky, D. D., Archbishop of New York; J. B. Purcell, D. D., Archbishop of Cincinnati. Published by P. O'Shea, 1866. Abbe Darras spent the greater part of his life in Rome working on this history, and we are assured that every facility was accorded him to make his history both comprehensive and accurate. I will quote exclusively from papal sources—whenever I do otherwise I will name my authority, who will be an accredited historian

Anacletus.

The first pope dropped from the list is Anacletus, who was supposed to have succeeded Cletus (78-91). Darras says the church was divided on the question whether Cletus and Anacletus were the same or different popes.

In all the earlier lists, including that of Cardinal Baronius, and in fact until the 18th century, tney were considered different persons; were reverenced as martyrs, one with a festival on April 26, and the other on July 23; and both bodies were exhibited in St. Peter's, with the usual miracles performed by each.

But investigation disclosed the fraud and ingenious excuses were manufactured, each one more puerile than the other. It was claimed that both reigned, one representing the Jewish and the other the Gentile portion of the flock. On the death of Cletus that Anacletus resigned in favor of his successor Clement I. But this was such a palpable fraud that the Jesuits were instructed to find some other excuse. This was absolutely necessary as there are three important decretals credited to Anacletus, which are quoted to prove Rome's primacy.

The Jesuits are adepts in this kind of works, but in their zeal they frequently overstep the mark. Notwithstanding their claims for intelligence and for the highly intellectual position of their writers, the papal church knows to her sorrow that the Jesuits are neither truthful in their quotations nor actuated by a high sense of the moral accountability that is conceded to accredited historians. Lazzari and Pappenbrock were delegated to the task and declared, after minuute investigation that Cletus and Anacletus were the same person. That his name was originally Cletus, and during a persecution in Rome, under Vespasian, he left the city. When he returned he called himself "Anacletus, or iterum Cletus (Cletus again)."

But the Jesuits experts were unaware of the fact that there was no persecution under either Vespasian or his son Titus, of whom Darras is forced to say that in his "too short a reign, merited the title of "The delight of the human race." Nor does it dispose of the two bodies in St. Peter's that are "resplendent with miracles performed every day." Nor does it account for the two festivals. If Anacletus ever lived she was a woman; Anna Cletus, and was the wife of Cletus. But I think that both of them are myths.

Felix II., 356-366.

The history of Felix is interwoven with that of Liberious, 352. The council of Arles, summoned by the emperor, had condemned Athanasius, the formulator of the creed bearing his name, which is the foundation stone of the papal creed. Liberius refused his signature, was deposed and sent into exile. Felix, an avowed Arian, was elected to succeed him in 356. Even at that early date the bishopric of Rome was one of the greatest sinecures of the empire. The contemporary historian Ammianus Marcellinus in speaking of it says: "When I reflect the splendor attached to the See of Rome I can understand any intrigue that might be used to reach it. The bishops of that city receive the most costly gifts from the Roman matrons; they appear in public seated in brilliant chariots, in sumptuous attire and their table surpasses those of kings in magnificence."

In exile, Liberius reflected on his past glories and his mind wandered back to that sumptuous table and those darling Roman ladies, now enjoyed by his hated rival. He weakened and signed the Arian creed which denied the divinity of Christ and ignored the Holy Ghost. This is distinctly stated by St. Athanasius, St. Hilary, St. Jerome and the historian Sozomen.

Athanasius calls him "a monster, raised by the malice of Anti-Christ, worthy of and fit to execute the worst designs of his wicked partisans."

In fact, the majority of papists were Arians. At the council of Milan, 355, all the bishops except three, signed the Arian creed. Even Osius "the father of bishops," the "head and leader of the council of Nicea," the first Occumenical council of the church; the man "who worded and drew up the Nicene creed"; even he, joined the Arians, denied the divinity of Christ and ignored the Holy Ghost. And the council of Rimini, 359, attended by over 400 bishops, also fell into line, as did the council of Selencia, in the same year, with its 160 bishops.

Felix was cold and austere; most women disliked him. Liberius was a great favorite with them, for he was gay and festive. On his return to Rome there were two factions. Liberius had the more numerous. So, those of Felix were murdered in the strets, in their homes, in the public baths, and were pursued even into the churches. The historian tells us that Rome was saturated with their blood. Felix escaped, retired to an estate, where he died in 365. All the early records claim him as a saint and a martyr. His festival was celebrated on July 29, particularly at Cerventra, of which city he was the patron saint. His body, in a magnificent sarcophagus, adorned the cathedral and performed miracles.

When people became more intelligent and were able to read, the qustion of the legitimacy of his canonization was raised. So, in 1582, Gregory XIII., ordered an investigation. Cardinal Baronius, who was also "a famous historian" was directed to gather all the objections against Felix and Cardinal Santoris was appointed to defend him. Baronius filled an entire volume to prove that Felix was "neither a saint nor a martyr but an accursed Arian, who denied the divinity of Christ." Santoris, as he testifies, could find nothing in favor of his client and had recourse to prayer.

On July 28, on the eve of Felix's festival, the congregation of cardinals, headed by Gregory, met to hear the testimony and decide if Felix was in heaven, as a saint, or in hell, as an Arian. Baronius presented his facts, proving Felix to have been an Arian, that he had died a natural death and that his burial place was unknown. The weeping Cantoris had nothing to say, but simply knelt and poured out his prayers for a miracle.

The assembly decided against Felix and Gregory had just risen to pronounce the verdict—when—the door suddenly opened; a messenger rushed in and throwing himself at the pope's feet cried out: "Holy Felix, pray for us!" Between his sobs of joy the messenger announced that the body of Felix had just been discovered. Holy Gregory tucked up his skirts and all hands rushed to the Church of Sts Cosmas and Damianus, and lo! in a most elaborate coffin was a pile of bones with this inscription: "The body of St. Felix who condemned Constantius." A Te Deum was sung; Baronius burned his book of facts; Felix was remanded to heaven and the devil sat alone and melancholy, silently chewing the bitter cud of disappointment Thus virtue ever triumphs and prayers and miracles disprove facts.

The faithful were duly informed that Felix had been martyred by Constantius. Unfortunately that emperor had died four years before Felix; but we must not be too captious when dealing with miracles; particularly papal miracles. But the decision nearly caused a schism. The good people of Cervenera declined accepting the newly found bones; the old ones had performed too many miracles. So a guard of holy priests was formed to protect them. One night during a violent storm, a heavy crash was heard. The holy guardians fell on their knees and prayed. The next morning another miracle was discovered. The old bones had disappeared; the new ones had taken their place—inscription and all. Yes! Italy is a land of miracles.

Christophorus, 903.

The next on the list is Christophorus, but in order to understand this case, it will be necessary to go back to Pope Formosus, 891 At the election, Sergius was selected, after "a fierce and violent struggle" While he was at the altar preparing for the ceremony of consecration, the opposite faction entered the church, murdered nearly all their opponents and then elected their leader Formosus. Sergius escaped to Tuscany. Formosus was bishop of Porto and had been excommunicated three times for conspiring to murder John VIII. (872) and deliver Rome to the Turks. Darras says his election was uncanonical because it was "the first example of a bishop transferred from another See to that of Rome."

This was expressly forbidden by the canons, as no one but a Roman was eligible to the papal chair. During his reign of about five years Formosus kept Italy in a state of incessant war. There were three armies in the field and about 100,000 people perished. Then Boniface VI., (896) was elected. He was the son of Pope Adrian III., (884), and had been deposed from the priesthood for his "wicked and scandalous life," as appears in the decrees of the council held by John VIII., (872).

Says Darras, speaking of this election: "In the midst of this confusion, a regular election was out of the question. The faction of Berengarius, in a tumultuous assembly bore to the throne Boniface VI., (April 11, 896). The lawfulness of the election, carried by force of arms, is doubtful enough. But the incumbent only left his name in the pontifical annals, as he died fifteen days after his promotion." He was eaten up with ulcers and died of venereal disease. The mob then elected Stephen VII., (896), as Darras says: "Somewhat more in accordance with canonical propriety."

But, says Archbishop Spaulding: "Some admit Stephen VII., among the genuine popes; while others with Graveson, regard him as an intruder, which he certainly was at the beginning of his career." (Query: How did he become true pope?) His first action was to exhume the body of Formosus and arraying it in pontifical robes, seated it in the Apostolic chair. Stephen then addressed it: "Wherefore, bishop of Porto, hast thou urged thy ambition so far, as to usurp the See of Rome?" As the corpse could not answer, it was declared guilty, brutally mutilated and thrown into the Tiber. The three fingers with which a pope bestows his blessing, were cut off and burned. All appointees of Formosus were declared usurpers and excommunicated; many were imprisoned; several were murdered.

There can be no doubt of this, and here is Rome's excuse for the brutal act. Says Darras: "We must bear in mind, too, that the odious scene we have just described bore no relation to any question of dogma, and that the unheard of conduct of Stephen in no wise touches the infallibility of the Holy See." Ye Gods The friends of Formosus seized Stephen, loaded him with chains, threw him into a dungeon where he was strangled in August, 897. Then Romanus was elected, September 17, 897. He reigned about four months and was murdered by the opposition, Feb. 8, 898. The faction of Formosus then succeeded in electing Theodore II, 898. He pretended to have discovered the corpse of Formosus, which he said had been rescued by some fishermen. He had it re-interred with imposing ceremonies, anathematized his holy predecessor Stephen, declared all his decrees and appointments to be null and void, excommunicated all his appointees, and recalled all the bishops who had been ordained by Formosus. Theodore lasted just twenty days, as the opposing bishops poisoned him.

Says Darras: "The chair of St. Peter seemed at this said period, to have become a mere thoroughfare." There were now two strong factions, that of Stephen and that of Formosus. The former elected Sergius, the same gentleman who had been elected before and driven from Rome by Formosus. But the opposition rallied, drove him from Rome and elected John IX., 898. (This is not the last of Sergius, we will yet find him "true pope"). John was the son of Rampoald, a Benedictine monk, and that rich order bought him the position. His first act was to convene a council, declare Formosus a "true pope" and burn the decrees of the council that had excommunicated him. John lasted two years and fifteen days. The opposition poisoned him.

The now conclave elected Benedict IV., 900. Little is known of him except that the Bishop Luitprand of Cremona says he was "immensely wealthy and bought the election" He reigned about three years and was murdered by the Duke of Friuli. Then the strongest faction elected Leo. V., 903. He lasted just forty days, when his chaplain, Cardinal Christophorus of St. Lawrence, put him in prison, where he was murdered. Christophorus was then duly elected. He reigned about a year.

At that time there lived in Rome a celebrated ecclesiastical "courtezan" Theodora, who with her daughters, Marozia and Theodora, controlled the papacy. There was an innocent and holy rivalry between mother and daughters, the former boasting that she never slept with any one "less than a bishop." Serglus, whom we have already seen had been twice elected pope and driven from Rome, had now returned and was acknowledged favorite of Marozia.

One day he seized Christophorus, put him in prison, where he was strangled. The bones of the murdered pope were afterwards buried in St. Peter's, where they performed miracles and the early records esteem him both a saint and a martyr. But Mr. Gotti has just decided that he is not "true pope," so most likely the miracles will cease. Sergius was then elected for the third time. June 9, 905.

As Christophorus has been dropped from the list, there is a hiatus of eighteen months, and it will be interesting to learn how Mr. Gotti intends to fill it. Sergius is credited with having been successively the favored lover of the mother and the two daughters. And his son by Marozia was duly elected pope in 931, as John XI. He ruled the Universe, Apostolic and Holy Roman church for five years, when he was imprisoned and murdered by his half-brother, Alberic.

The relationships of this holy family were slightly mixed. Marozia had been married to one Wido and after his death—or murder, she consorted with his father, Adelbert, Marquis of Tuscany. Alberic was the result. Sergius III., is described by Cardinal Baronius as "the embodiment of all possible vices." The most notable religious act of his reign was to allow Emperor Leo to divorce his wife and marry his mistress, by whom he already had a child.

(To be continued.)

Life In the Spirit Realms.

A Series of Letters from Spirit Carlyle Petersilea, Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, Medium.

LETTER NUMBER ONE.

My wife has just read a paragraph of two in The Progressive Thinker, that has set up a series of vibratory thought waves within her brain, and as they flow outward they reach and call for me to respond. The following is the paragraph referred to: "We are continually met with the question: If spirits can return, why is it we do not learn more of what they are doing, of what their life consists?"

Now, as my wife together with myself have been mediums for this particular phase of manifestation for more than twenty years, she felt a little discouraged when she read it; and she has read of the same question being asked, a great many times. Somewhat more than twenty years ago, my own father, Franz Petersilea, controlled and wrote automatically a book which I called "The Discovered Country," giving a detailed account of his own experience in spirit life. This book is still for sale. Shortly afterward, my own mother wrote, in the same way, a fully detailed and descriptive life of spiritual beings, what they do and the means used to accomplish whatever work they may be engaged in doing. The books read like romances to be sure; but they are not. They give the real life and experience of two spiritual beings at least.

The book, "Mary Ann Carew," is especially fascinating. This was the real maiden name of my own mother; and she wrote nothing but the truth. My father's book was also true in all its details, the name simply being changed a little, as I, at that time, hardly dared to have it known that I had become a believer in Spiritualism, as it was sure to ruin my business entirely. I had a conservatory of music, elocution, languages and art. I afterwards sold out to the New England Conservatory and then felt that I could breathe a little more freely, and shortly after, I let the world know what I did believe, and that my father had returned and controlled the writing of a book, he having been a teacher in my conservatory, and well known as an agnostic—or a full-fledged materialist rather.

As soon as it was noised about that I was a Spiritualist, my business dropped off to that extent that I might say I was financially ruined; but ruined or not ruined, there should be no more skulking for me; and I have never evaded or skulked since. Not only were those two books written, detailing life in the spirit world, but many others were written which were not published in book form but found their way to the spiritual periodicals, some of them the following: "Solon and Mary," "Edward and Mary," "Amy Lester." "A Celestial Wanderer," being the first experience, in spirit life, of Charles Dickens; and many, many others. Besides all of these, for a number of years, The Progressive Thinker published series after series of letters that were written through my hand automatically by the spirits whose names were attached to them, detailing their lives in the spirit world, how they lived, what they did, giving minute details of things as they found them. My wife copied all these letters out carefully (as they were simply scrawls that no one but she could read, for they were written with lightning-like rapidity) and sent them to The Progressive Thinker, and the editor kindly published them.

These letters were not fraudulent, but true; and, of course, my wife feels a little hurt after our united years of toil, more than twenty years of constant writing for both of us, hers being the most severe and arduous work, in this very phase of manifestation; detailing life in the spirit spheres, or realms, which, with Brother Francis, I think the better word; and after all this the question is continually asked: If spirits can return, why is it we do not learn more of what they are doing, of what their life consists?

Now I would advise all who ask these questions to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, and therein they will find their questions fully answered.

As I said before, my own phase of mediumship was that of detailing life in the spirit realms; and then my wife detailed it out to the world; and now I propose to go on detailing life here in the spirit realms as I find it, using my wife as the medium, and she will go on detailing it to the world as she has for the last twenty years. And really I do hope, after so many years of united toil, we may, together with the invaluable aid of Brother Francis, be able to at least make a slight impression upon the world.

Now by giving a detailed account of my own experience, or a portion of it, for all of it would not interest the general reader, it will show the life here in a general way—how we live, what we do, and so forth—and from this you can all draw your own conclusions of how it is with your own friends.

My wife has received a great many letters since these messages have been published, asking her to ask me if I would not make it in my way to get acquainted with their particular friends and find out what they were doing. Mrs. Petersilea has become confused and amazed, and could not answer half of these letters. Yet she would like to, she feels such sympathy for those who have lost some near and dear relative.

No dear readers of The Progressive Thinker, it would be impossible for me to do this. I can be of far greater use to the world, by writing my own experience and a portion of the experience of those with whom I come in contact, than I could to give my whole time, and Mrs. Petersilea's time, in searching out the particular friends of those who write to her, asking me to do so. Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, get your friends to subscribe, and you will be made acquainted with some of the details of spirit life.

Now life seems, in a measure, to repeat itself, somewhat as one would climb a spiral stairway. Every time one gets around, one's experience seems to be very like the preceding, except a spiral circle higher. For instance, when I was born into spirit life, my father received me, sustained me, comforted me, taught me, put me to bed, and afterward fed me with milk; then he remained with and near me until I was able to take care of myself; and he did precisely the same when I was born into earth life, that being the material birth, this the spiritual, a cycle higher, it will be seen, but almost the same. My mother having passed into the spirit realms when I was a babe, often returned in spirit to see the little boy she had left here, she visited me the same way as an angel, and still continues to do so, but, as on earth, she is too far removed to make a home and live with me.

Franz Liszt was my dearest musical friend in my adolescence, when I was sent to Germany to finish my musical education, not my teacher—my teachers were those of the Leipzig Conservatory—but my dear friend whom I loved. I appreciated his wonderful music and played it to him as few others could to his satisfaction; but we could not agree on religion. In my adolescent state as a spirit, I again visited him and played to him, dearly loved and appreciated him, but again we could not agree on religion.

When, as a young man, I left Germany and returned to Boston, Dr. Eben Tourgee and myself founded the New England Conservatory of Music. Dr. Tourgee was the business founder and manager, but was not a musician, yet he loved and appreciated music above all things. I was, at that time, the principal musical performer in Boston. Dr. Tourgee sought me to aid him in founding the New England Conservatory; and together we founded it; he the business manager and your humble servant the musical director. Now, why I enter into all this detail, is to show how life and its incidents are repeated in cycles.

In my last letter I told you how I meant to found a conservatory of music, elocution, languages and art. Now my mind became very intense on the subject and sent forth vibratory waves into the ether and they were caught up by my old friend and coadjutor Dr. Eben Tourgee, who had been here in the spirit life for, perhaps, fifteen or more years; and once more Eben Tourgee sought me out. I want also to say, that you may understand my position better, that in later years, and shortly before he entered spirit life, he had been the one who had bought me out and merged my conservatory, which I had started later in life, into the New England, together with myself, once more; for I had, after a number of years, left the New England and started one all by myself which I carried on for fifteen years. That makes twice my life and interests become merged into that with Dr. Eben Tourgee while still on earth. Now comes the third time, higher up the scale of being, both now being in spirit life. The cause of our separation in both instances on earth was our wide divergence on religious subjects. The first time he wanted me to become a Methodist, and because I demurred he bestowed his best favors upon others not as competent as myself, which he openly admitted, but the conservatory must be run by those who were of the Methodist persuasion. I became discouraged, was young and hot-headed, and left and started one of my own. As I said before, after fifteen years, he, together with the company, bought me out, and once more I joined my forces with his. During this time—five years—he died, or rather, went to the spirit realms, and as the conservatory was run mostly by Methodist ministers, they did not care to have a Spiritualist—which I had now become—at the head of the musical department; consequently I again left them, as they and I desired. Whilst admitting that I was supremely qualified, my Spiritualism was objected to, and the position was given to one far less competent, as they soon discovered, and he was ousted not long afterward. And now, after a few more years, I too am here in the spirit realms, and my strong desire to found a spiritual conservatory went forth in great vibratory waves, of which I really was not at the time fully conscious. Very few, as yet, on earth, realize to what extent their thought waves influence the whole world; not only the lower world, but the spirit world as well. As previously stated, these waves reached and struck my old friend and coadjutator, Dr. Eben Tourgee.

I had formed for myself a small studio in the spirit realms, somewhat like the one I had left on earth, perhaps a little better and more refined, for I wanted to be as near my wife as possible, and live a good deal as I had lived when in the material.

I was sitting, thinking deeply about the conservatory that I desired to found, when my door opened and in walked Dr. Eben Tourgee.

(To be continued.)

BOOK REVIEW.

A Triangular Polemic. A Discussion on Reincarnation, or the Successive Embodiments of the Human Spirit. By J. M. Peebles, M. D., The Peebles Medical Institute, Battle Creek, Mich. Price, 30 cents.

Dr. Peebles has performed a distinct public service in producing the above-named volume as it offers between its covers a comprehensive review of the much-discussed question of reincarnation on the part of its advocates and opponents. The work comprises the correspondence between Dr. Peebles, Dr. Helen Dinsmore and W. J. Colville which took place in the columns of the the English Spiritualist journal, Light, in London, and the Banner of Light in Boston. It may be accepted that each writer has said the best that is to be said upon the side selected. Mrs. Densmore presents the usual arguments in favor of the assumed re-embodiment of the spirit, while the nature of Mr. Colville's contentions are so well known that neither need be re-stated here, as my readers in the past have been made thoroughly familiar with the arguments in the pages of this journal. Dr. Peebles' replies are in most cases brilliant, always forceful and pointed, but his wit fulfills the dictum of Figaro, the immortal barber, who lays it down that,

"Satire like a razor keen,
Should wound with a touch scarce felt or seen."

In support of his position Dr. Peebles quotes from the communications given through the mediumship of W. Stainton Moses, J. J. Morse, E. W. Wallis, and M. H. Wallis and others, and presents a characteristic and special approval of his positions from the pen of Andrew Jackson Davis. As to the oft-repeated question, "What is the process of reincarnation?" on page 74, the Doctor quotes from the "Chondogya Upanishad" of India which, according to the Rajput's teachings upon reincarnation, says "The person to be re-born becomes more ethereal by relieving himself of his seven sheathings when he becomes breath-like, then vaporous, then cloudy, then descending wraps himself in the awaiting womb, and there lies condensed as an embryo, to be out-born at the end of the tenth lunar month." How beautifully simple! You just melt away into smoke and there you are—or there you are not, which ever way it may strike you! Dr. Peebles presents eleven clearly defined propositions in opposition to this Oriental dogma and he concludes a very capital pamphlet with a valedictory from which we have only space to quote the following stirring lines:

"Spiritualism posited upon Spirit (essential, infinite and all-energizing), embodying as it does consciousness, life, love, purpose, and will; and considered in its measureless depths in its lofty heights and in the immensity of its all-embracing wideness, holds the key that unlocks all the treasure-stores labeled 'occult phenomena,' and rationally explains the phenomena of life, birth, growth, maturity, death, and that majestic march of the spiritual man through the grim gate of mortality and thence onward and upward through the ether zones and starry spaces that gild and glorify the measureless heavens * * * Finally, beloved opponents, farewell! It is questionable if we ever meet again in this present physical incarnation (though I trust to the contrary) and, it is very doubtful if we ever meet in the distant hereafter; for inasmuch as aspiration and purpose are the measures of destiny, I purpose when throwing off this encumbering vehicle of flesh and blood to press onward and upward to the spirit-illumined homes of Hare, Edmonds, Denton, Brittan, Kiddle and kindred reformers whose fraternal palms often press mine—upward to the celestial homes of those sages and seers that have long walked the companions of white-robed angels; while you, oh, reincarnationists! in consonance with your time-dragging, birth-repeating dogma of reincarnation expect to halt along the way—halt for further experiences—halt for more worldly conceptions—halt for repeated reincarnations—halt for more bodily embodiments—halt for more fleshly re-births into the purgatories of a dreary and all too often painful mortality of mental and moral cripples—into that letter of passional materiality which the inspired prophet said with emphasis, 'killeth.'

"And so, beloved, farewell! A fond, tender farewell with my best wishes for your prosperity while wandering and meandering through your future flesh-clogged embodiments. Again farewell!"

Andrew Jackson Davis in the course of his brief letter says when writing to Dr. Peebles, "Often have I exclaimed aloud—'Good!'—He has given reincarnation another death-blow. It is wreathing—dying." And the Doctor truly says, "Approval from such a source is comparable to a cooling, refreshing fountain fringed with palms in a desolate desert."

This book deserves the widest possible circulation among the advocates of either side of this much-discussed question, and we predict for it a very large sale.—Banner of Light.

"Social Upbuilding, Including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

A PRACTICAL COURSE FOR Physicians and Students of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to

MISS NETTIE WINTER,
466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PUBLICATIONS OF Hudson Tuttle.

Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.

This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.

In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRIT AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.

English edition. Price, $1.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF MAN.

Containing the latest investigations and discoveries, and a thorough presentation of this interesting subject. English edition. Price $1.

THE SECRETS OF THE CONVENT, OF THE SACRED HEART.

This book was written for an object, and has been pronounced equal in its exposure of the diabolical methods of Catholicism to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Price, 25 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.

A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

How to investigate. How to form circles, and develop and cultivate mediumship. Names of eminent Spiritualists. Their testimony. Eight-page tract for mission work. Singles copies, 5 cents; 100 for $1.25.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.

By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best peoms of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE.

For the home, the lyceum and societies. A manual of physical, intellectual and spiritual culture. By Emma Rood Tuttle. A book by the aid of which a progressive lyceum, a spiritual or liberal society may be organized and conducted without other assistance. Price, 50 cents; by the dozen, 40 cents. Express charges unpaid.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.

For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.

All books sent postpaid. Address
HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

THE WIDOW'S MITE,

AND

OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value. 538 octavo pages. Price, cloth. $2.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year..... $1 00
Six Months..... 50cts
Thirteen Weeks..... 25cts
Single Copy..... 5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1904.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

Evil and Suffering.

Probably to counteract the extreme heat of the weather and the effects of the sleepless nights caused thereby, some of our orthodox Chicago ministers have taken up, for pulpit exercise, the occult subject of the origin and philosophy of human suffering and evil in general. The orthodox treatment of the subject from the ordinary pulpit must inevitably induce deep somnolence, which, under the circumstances must be regarded as a much-needed good—to the sleeper.

A Methodist and a Congregational pastor both took the view that it was a law of the universe that everything good should be gained at the cost of suffering, and that the object of suffering was the purification and perfection of human character.

The Progressive Thinker does not intend, during the hot season, to plunge into the depth of the bottomless pit of this orthodox discussion—though it is probably as well-informed as they are on the subject of the origin of evil and the philosophy of human suffering, but we would ask these reverend philosophers to kindly elucidate the relationship between the sufferings endured by innocent animals undergoing the tortures of vivisection, and the purification and perfection of human character. To us unorthodox it seems the tendency is toward perfection in heartless, unfeeling devilization of human character.

And what of the sufferings of babies, and irresponsible children, too young to philosophize on the purport of their sufferings?

Great men are not always wise—and even orthodox preachers flounder into waters whose depths are beyond the sounding of their plummets. If these preachers could be induced to study Hudson Tuttle's works, "The Religion of Man" (one of The Progressive Thinker's premium books), and "The Arcana of Spiritualism," it would undoubtedly result in a significant enlargement of their view of the mysteries of life and being.

Harrison D. Barrett Nominated for State Senator.

We learn from an authoritative source that, during his absence from home in Somerset County, Maine, the Democratic party nominated our good brother, H. D. Barrett, for its candidate for State Senator, by acclamation. This is certainly a mark of appreciation of the worth and standing of Mr. Barrett in his old home county.

It is an old adage that "man is not without honor save in his own country," but in this instance there lies an indication that man can be honored in his own country, and with no small honor either.

The Progressive Thinker is not a political paper in any sense, but here is a worthy young man who has been at the head of the N. S. A. ever since its inception, and as its executive officer has shown Spiritualists his metal, his energy and ability, and his name should suffice, without laudation, to inspire every Spiritualist to earnestly and quietly do their utmost to elect him. He merits their support regardless of party affiliations, by his earnestness for good government and his personal integrity.

This is a grand opportunity to do a good turn for a competent and deserving man. We hope to hear of Mr. Barrett's election, and wish him all the success we know he merits, and that is no small amount.

Not Worth Controverting.

The God Idea in nature is a speculative thought to account for all the wonderful phenomena which an ignorant or an educated person sees or comprehends in a boundless universe. He sees life everywhere, living, moving, thinking beings, and whether of eternal duration, or without a beginning, it seems impossible to comprehend its existence without a designer, a creator.

As a matter of fact, it little matters what view is taken of this subject; it is one impossible of elucidation, and in truth, of comprehension by a mortal mind. A being of such gigantic proportions that he was able to call the universe into being, with its millions of suns and solar systems, and endow all matter with life, is certainly too magnificent to be comprehended by mortal mind.

The name of such a being is immaterial. We neither assert nor deny his existence, for the facts will be the same, however positively asserted or denied; then why waste strength in an effort to establish something beyond the grasp of human mind? He who insists there is such a being need not be disputed; and he who denies it is antagonizing a claim of which he has no knowledge. The machinery of the universe will move right on just the same, which ever postulate is true. Science is too limited in knowledge to wrestle with such an august subject, and revelation, priest made, is quite as ignorant, whatever its pretensions.

Godless Schools in the Philippines.

According to W. E. Curtis' letter in the Chicago Record-Herald, "religion" is not taught in any of the public schools of the Philippines. He says:

The most sensitive nerve of the educational situation here has never been shocked. No attempt has ever been made by any American teacher, so far as is known, to introduce religion into the schools. Everyone was thoroughly instructed on this point at the outset, and it is believed that the instructions have been faithfully observed. The government does not pretend to control the thoughts or consciences of its teachers, or interfere with their scruples in any way, and no restraint is exercised upon their conduct after school, but during stated hours religious exercises are forbidden. Religious topics may not be discussed and no religious instruction is permitted.

I happened to be in Rome when the first army of American teachers was sent to the Philippines three years ago, and Cardinal Rampolla and other eminent prelates there were very much concerned about the movement. The Roman Catholic papers in Rome had published grossly exaggerated statements regarding the educational policy and the intentions of the United States, and conveyed the impression that 600 Protestant missionaries had been shipped over into our new possessions to proselyte. Cardinal Rampolla and even Cardinal Satolli, although he had lived in the United States four years, had that impression, and it was impossible to convince them that it was a mistake. When I explained to them that the teachers were volunteers who had answered a public notice by appearing before the examiners of the Civil Service Commission, and had not been selected by anyone; that their religious beliefs or church connections had never been inquired into and were unknown to the officials, and that President McKinley could not possibly have taken any direct personal interest in the matter, they were very incredulous, and in a satirical way Cardinal Rampolla intimated that our President was not doing his duty toward the Protestant faith and the Methodist church of which he was reputed to be an active member. His eminence frankly suggested that if my statements were true President McKinley had neglected his opportunities. But I am sure that the officials of the holy see, at Rome, in the United States and in the Philippines, are now convinced that there was no sectarian purpose in the organization of the school system here, and several priests of whom I have inquired tell me that there has been no cause to complain of the conduct of the American teachers in meddling with religious affairs. The only man who has criticised the educational system here in my hearing is an American monk.

There is no record, and nobody knows the representation of the several denominations in the corps of teachers. They have all been selected by strangers after civil service examinations from lists of eligibles, according to their standing, but, if the native teachers are counted, the Roman Catholics are very largely in the majority, for every Filipino is nominally a Roman Catholic, or at least has been baptized and will be buried in that faith. Commissioner Smith, who in the division of duties has been given charge of the educational system, is a Roman Catholic from California. Dr. Barrows, his subordinate, the superintendent of education, is a Protestant from the same state. At least two of the division superintendents are Roman Catholics, and there may be others, but nobody here seems to know. It is the general impression among officials of the bureau of education that Protestants or non-Roman Catholics are in a considerable majority among the American teachers, but their denominational connections are unknown.

At first the conservative element in some of the provinces objected to Protestant teachers, and asked for Roman Catholics. It took some time to become accustomed to the new regime. The schools had always given religious instruction, so that it was more a matter of habit than principle for them to ask why their children were not taught the catechism as usual; but now, after a year or so, everybody has fallen in with the new plan, and has been convinced that it is better to confine religious instruction to the church and the home. There are parochial schools in several of the parishes, but 90 per cent of the children of the Philippines are now entirely without religious instruction. This is largely due, however, to the division in and demoralization of the Roman Catholic church, the lack of priests and funds. If the Protestants had men and money they might make serious inroads upon the Roman Catholic field, but they lack both. Altogether there are less than a hundred foreign missionaries of all the Protestant denominations in these islands.

Words for H. D. Barrett.

To the Editor:—I have learned through a friend and brother that H. D. Barrett has been nominated by the Democrats of Somerset county, Me., as a candidate for State Senator.

Spiritualists are thinkers, independent thinkers, and few of them are tied so firmly to party lines that they do not pick their men to vote for, and to say they dare not vote as they please is to challenge their independence, question their manhood, and doubt their ability to decide upon such matters, and knowing Brother Barrett as well as we all do should make us wish we were residents of Somerset county, Maine, at least until after the coming election.

I, for one, hope the Spiritualists and all lovers of honesty, independence and energy will act upon their inalienable rights as men, and as citizens of the county of Mr. Barrett's birth, and do him the kindness he merits by giving him their unanimous support, that he may be elected to the State Senate of Maine.

Hurrah for Harrison D. Barrett!

Chicago, Ill. DR. T. WILKINS.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked lives. Price, by mail, $1.

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price, 25 cents.

"For God's Sake Hurry to the Church!"

The above were the words of a spirit who came to a Catholic Priest at night, imploring him to hasten to the church and take the body of his daughter lying in a coffin, to his own room and save her life. This is what The Progressive Thinker has always taught, that no one has a patent right on spirit return; no one can circumscribe the law that renders spirit return possible, or confine it to any one particular club, cult or sect. Just think for a moment about the spirit knocking at the door; then observe the radiance of the room, and the full-form materialization, all affording splendid evidence of the truth of Spiritualism, and that, too, right in the Catholic Church. The Catholic Priest was mediumistic, illustrating an other fact, that psychic laws are no respecter of persons, and are not confined exclusively to Spiritualism.

A WONDERFUL MANIFESTATION.

To the Editor:—A few weeks ago a lady of this city sat upon her veranda of her home perusing the columns of The Progressive Thinker. She is a Spiritualist and a medium, held in high esteem by not only those of her religion, but by many others.

A gentleman passing by inquired for a Spanish family supposed to reside in the neighborhood of the lady's home. Incidentally, he asked for a drink of water, and as the lady was procuring it, he took up the paper, and when she returned he was deeply concerned in reading—so deeply in fact that he was unconscious of her presence with the draught of water.

She quietly suggested that perhaps he should not read the paper, and the visitor naturally asked why. She replied: "It is a Spiritualist paper, and many persons would not peruse it if they knew the cause for which it so bravely waged battle."

The visitor then asked if she was a medium, and upon receiving an affirmative answer, hungrily inquired if she saw any spirit forms about him. She said that she did not, and that her phase of mediumship is peculiar, being confined to the impressional.

He remarked that he was glad that he had finally met a medium.

She said that if he had been desirous of meeting one, it could certainly have been easily effected, as mediums are numerous in the city. He said that while knowing this to be true, the time had not fully arrived. He then recounted several personal instances of spirit return. One of these under the peculiar circumstances attending it, is intensely interesting, and I here give it as an incident evincing wonderful psychic power possessed by the gentleman.

It then developed that the visitor was a Roman Catholic priest, pastor of a church of this city.

At the time of this incident he was pastor of a congregation in an eastern city. Sometime previous to this he had officiated at the obsequies of a man, a member of his congregation. A young lady, the daughter of the man spoken of above, had, as they supposed, passed out of the body which, encoffined, reposed in the church during the night preceding interment. Before leaving the church the minister said that he placed the lid of the casket over the body, but did not fasten it, leaving a small crevice so the air could enter the casket.

He then withdrew from the church to his residence, and soon afterward retired. Shortly he heard a distinct knocking at an outer door of his residence, and on opening it he discovered no one. Thinking it strange, he returned to his couch and the knocking was repeated. However, this time he contented himself by asking who was there, and upon receiving no reply, he dismissed the occurrence from his mind and soon fell asleep.

About midnight he was startlingly awakened from a sound sleep.

The room took on a mild radiance of light of about the blending of twilight, and his first thought was of fire. But he was soon digsuaded from this, when at the foot of his couch appeared, distinctly outlined in form, the spirit father of the young lady whose remains as he thought reposed in the chancel of the church. The spirit speaking excitedly, though distinctly, said, "Father, if you would save the life of my daughter, for God's sake hurry to the church, bring her to this room and place her upon your couch."

The minister was much perturbed by this strange, weird visitation, and the uncanny message so strangely enunciated, and sleep forsook him for the remainder of the night, but he could not pick up courage to enter the church in answer to the message delivered by the spirit.

The next morning at daybreak he arose, and going to the church, determined to investigate the affair to test the truth of the message delivered him.

Nervously he approached the casket, conscious that he was bereft of courage, for the hair of his head persisted in standing erect, and up and down the posterior portion of his anatomy a goose-pimply sensation asserted itself in spite of all his philosophy. But while engaged in removing the lid of the casket, the brother of the silent one entered and upon beholding him, stood transfixed, exclaiming: "Father, what are you doing?"

For reply the minister said, "Come here, I have need of you."

Now that another person possessing the cheerful habit of dwelling in the body was near him, his courage reasserted itself, and he bravely informed the brother of his purpose of examining the body for any trace of life existing.

This so excited the young man that the only assistance rendered was his presence to inspire himself with courage for the task. He quickly made an examination and found undeniable evidence of a slight respiration. They carried the casket to his room, and placed her upon his couch as directed in the strange message. The brother hurried for medical aid, and upon returning with two physicians, was rejoiced to learn that his sister had revived and that consciousness was restored.

She said that she was fully conscious of every movement around her; knew when they pronounced her dead; knew when they measured her for what she then feared would become for a time her living tomb, and was fully aware when she was placed in the casket and borne to the church, but could not so much as move an eyelid, nor by any outward sign indicate that her spirit still inhabited the earthly tenement.

This lady was afterward married and actually passed to spirit life one and a half years ago, leaving two beautiful children.

The minister has frequently called upon the lady to whom he recited the foregoing facts, since his first visit. She asked permission to give a detailed account of his numerous experiences from the rostrum, and to which he assented without the least hesitancy, "and," said he, "tell them that I shall soon resign the pastorate of my church, for with its teachings I have never been satisfied. Its chancel is too narrow for me. Tell them, that upon leaving the church I shall write no book exposing it, for I love the old church, and I belong to a family whose history runs back for centuries, and which has all along been represented in the church by ministers or higher officers. Tell them also, that the time is not far distant when I hope to occupy the little rostrum of your society, and address them upon the greatest question that can possibly affect mankind—the return of disembodied intelligences."

The lady recited the above facts on Wednesday evening last in Caledonia Hall at the meeting of the Chrisfian Spiritualist society. She said that the incidents gleaned from his conversation are numerous, and that she will give them from time to time.

Dr. McEntire, the pulpit orator of this city, pastor of the First M. E. Church, in a sermon, very inconsistently to the teachings of the Bible, which he endorses without qualification, denominated returning spirits as "spooks." Of course, the doctor was, as usual, making a grand-stand play to catch the plaudits of the popular ear.

In this connection I hand the doctor over to the tender mercies of Sister White, a preacher of the Burning Bush persuasion. Said she: "There's old Bob McEntire, a high-salaried preacher, catering to the soft palates of the rich in the name of Jesus, and in the guise of Christianity dragging his deluded membership after him down to hell." I do not espouse the good sister's bitter indictment.

The article in a late Progressive Thinker over the signature of J. S. Loveland, has the true ring. Divest Spiritualism of commercial mediumship, which will effectually kill off fakeism, or drag slowly along with that incubus to finally sink the cause.

J. L. MERRITT.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Do You Wish to Become an Ally of Crime?

One who is in daily touch with the spirit world, seeing spirits and talking with them, and an author of world-wide reputation, yet who is not recognized as a Spiritualist, writes:

"I want to congratulate you on the 'Open Court' feature. It is all right, and will do a lot of good. Your own position on the subject of 'Fraud' is in exact accord with my own views, and I believe will win out in the end. To suppress the cry of fraud where fraud actually exists, is simply to become the ally of crime. There is no half-way place. Fraud is crime, and the party who conceals it becomes a party to it. That is the law of the land, and whoever runs counter to it is an enemy of the state and society at large."

Feminizing Education.

Why shouldn't American education be "feminized?" It is the women who seem to be interested in education.

It is the women who organize state and national associations for the discussion of the training of boys and girls. Where is the congress of fathers? It is dispersed through golf clubs, and billiard clubs. It has gone out to sit on the bleachers at base ball games. It has sneaked through back alleys to prize fights. It has taken the afternoon train for the races. It is calling for drinks in large club-houses. It is devoting most of the time it can spare from business to the development of the social, sportive and bibulous aspirations of the race.

It is the women who are willing to do the teaching while the men seek more remunerative occupations. Are they to be jeered at for it?

It is the women who organize clubs for co-operating with the teachers and for bringing the home and the school together in the preparation of future citizens. If the men won't give their leisure time to this, they leave an opening, and, if the women avail themselves of the opening, where does the blame lie?

It is the women who go to the legislature to present petitions for child labor bills. It is the women who take up the kindergarten movement and who push it. If the men allow the kindergarten movement to go by default who is responsible for its feminized sentimentality?

The women seem to be doing the best they can. It's not entirely their fault that they are feminine. If they could get a little masculine corroboration they would probably welcome it.

And as for the flubdub and flapdoodle and rot in mother's conventions, have you ever read the political platforms promulgated by parties which are run by men?—Chicago Tribune.

HE DIDN'T KNOW BEANS.

An Incident Illustrating the Power of Suggestion.

There is instruction as well as amusement in the following excerpt from the New York Sun. It illustrates the principle and power of "suggestion" and "auto-suggestion" fully as well as could be done in a long and solemn disquisition by some learned professor in the science.

Read, laugh and digest.

Washington, D. C.—This is a story of a War Department chief of division who didn't know beans until very recently.

A singularly robust and fine looking man, this War Department chief of division has been a most entertaining hypochondriac for many years. He has, at various times, imagined himself to be afflicted with all known and many diagnosed maladies, from housemaid's knee to bubonic plague.

By one of the transports from Manila, about a fortnight ago, he received a large round box containing about a quart and a half of queer, dark-colored objects that somewhat resembled lima beans in shape, but very much reduced in size. An old fellow clerk of the War Dtpartment, now stationed in the Philippines, had shipped them to him. This letter accompanied the box:

"I'm sending you, by the up transport, old man, a remarkable remedy for dyspepsia that I've hit upon down here. They're pills that have been known to the friars for centuries, and the formula according to which they are made is one of the friars' great secrets.

"They're marvelous. You remember what a wreck I was in Washington? Well, when I got down here and was put next to these pills I was cured so fast that it almost made me lonesome.

"One a day is all you need. Just swallow it whole. I'll be hugely mistaken if these pills don't make a new man of you."

The chief of division was so pleased over the receipt of the box that he showed it all around the office. On the very day the box arrived he swallowed one of the things, and before knocking off work that afternoon he declared that he was already beginning to feel a heap better.

Every day he took one of the things just before the luncheon hour, and on the fourth day he began to talk to his office associates of challenging the winner of the Jeffries-Monroe fight if he kept on getting so much better and stronger in health.

The other day a bronzed young officer, just back from the Philippines, swung into the robust hypochondriac's office. He was a lieutenant and had known the division chief very well while on Washington duty himself.

The division chief nailed the young officer as soon as he entered the room and told him about the wonderful dyspepsia remedy of the friars.

"Greatest thing I ever saw or heard of, these pills," he said to the lieutenant, producing the box with pride. "They've absolutely fixed me up fit to whip my weight in mountain lions already." And then he went ahead and told the young officer about how they had been sent on to him by the civil employe down in the Philippines.

"A remedy of the friars, you say?" said the young lieutenant. "Queer I never heard of it—and I had several bad doses of dyspepsia myself down Mindanao way. Let's have a look at the things."

The division chief pulled off the lid of the box. The young officer gazed at the darkish-looking things for only about half a second before breaking into a roar.

"Man alive," he explained, "these pills of yours are nothing but frijoles!"

The division chief looked sulky when all the clerks in the room gathered around, grinning.

"Quit that nonsense," he said to the young officer. "Frijoles, my eye! They're medicine, and they've made a new man of me."

"Well," said the young officer, holding himself in with difficulty, "they are the best looking things in the way of something to eat that I've seen since I left the islands, and I wouldn't mind having a well boiled mess of them right now."

"Look a-here, you cub youngster," said the division chief, roiled, "stop this fooling. If you'd swallow three of those medicinal things at the same time we'd be having a lieutenant's military funeral on our hands."

The young officer sent out for a saucepan which he half filled with water. He placed the saucepan on a gas stove used by a woman clerk for the making of noonday tea, and dumped the whole boxful of friars' dyspepsia remedy into the saucepan, to the visible pain of the old-time division chief.

The frijoles were boiled to a nice pulp in about an hour or so, and then the young officer borrowed some salt and pepper and sat down and made a luncheon for himself, licking up the whole saucepanful of the beans of the low latitudes and swearing that he had not enjoyed anything so much since last he'd clapped an eye on Iloilo.

The old-time division chief knows beans now, but the clerks in his room are not taking any chances on mentioning beans to him.

"VOICES OF THE MORNING."

A Volume of Poems by Belle Bush.

A second edition just out, 270 pages, neatly bound. Retail price, $1. To agents on commission, 62½ cents.

The following are a few of the many recommendations sent to the author from well-known writers and lecturers: From Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A.: "To the Public:—It gives me great pleasure to recommend to all lovers of good literature, Miss Belle Bush's beautiful poetical offering, 'Voices of the Morning.' Miss Bush is a soul poet, and writes upon the loftiest themes under the highest inspiring influences. No one should be without this excellent work."

From Mrs. M. T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A.: "I will take pleasure in recommending my literary friend who loves poetry to purchase your book."

From A. F. Melchers, associate editor of the Sunflower: "Voices of the Morning, by Miss Belle Bush, is a book of true poetry and may claim the right of being placed among the best American productions."

From Dr. Geo. A. Fuller, noted author and lecturer: "I read your poems frequently at my Sunday lectures, and think the one entitled 'The Artist and the Angel' is worth the price of the book. I wish you success in selling the new edition."

From James H. Foss, a distinguished author and lecturer: "I will gladly do all I can to give publicity to your delightful inspiring poems."

Hoping that a concert of action on the part of these friends and Spiritualists generally, will lead to the rapid sale of my book, I am prepared to consign to reliable agents any number of copies they may order, to be paid for when sold, and unsold books can be returned to me, if uninjured.

Address all orders to the author,

BELLE BUSH.

Shirley, Middlesex County, Mass.

Self-Examination.

From every part of the United States come approving words of the course pursued by The Progressive Thinker in having a session of the Open Court, wherein a process of self-examination of Spiritualism will be comprehensively conducted. "Look within, and cast out, if possible, all evil tendencies," is advice that can be applied to a religious sect, to a cult or a club, as well as to the individual. This self-examination is now going on in Spiritualism, and as usual, it will come out of the scorching ordeal with flying colors. Those who don't believe in this process of self-examination, this cleansing method, are invited to express their views in the Open Court. Especially do we wish to hear from those who believe that the materializing mediums are justified in dressing themselves in artificial toggery and personating your spirit-friends. There have lately been a dozen exposures of exceptionally prominent materializing mediums, one after the other, and each one has been found dressed in artificial toggery, especially prepared for the occasion. Now is the time to express your opinion. This Open Court is for Spiritualists only, for the purpose of self-examination.

The Open Court.

This Special Department is creating widespread interest. The article by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, a medium of world wide fame, will attract great attention. Prof. B. F. Underwood, a profound thinker, a firm believer in spirit communion, and his wife an excellent medium and author, has something to say of special interest. Others follow, giving their views in an interesting manner. The paper from first to last page will be found to be especially valuable and suggestive.

Two Infidel Papers United.

The Boston Investigator, founded by Abner Kneeland in 1831, has been consolidated with the New York Truth Seeker, founded by D. M. Bennett in 1874. The Investigator was the oldest Freethought or Liberal newspaper in the world. Abner Kneeland, the founder, was once imprisoned for blasphemy for saying he did not believe in the God of the Unitarians. In the time when Wm. Lloyd Garrison (the elder) was dragged through the streets of Boston by the mob, with a halter around his neck, and all public halls were closed to him, Abner Kneeland gave him the use of his hall in which to declare his abolition sentiments. Abner Kneeland was succeeded as editor by Horace Seaver, a very popular writer and speaker on Freethought. He was succeeded by Lemuel K. Washburn, also a brilliant writer and speaker.

D. M. Bennett, who founded The Truth Seeker, was once imprisoned for thirteen months at the instance of Anthony Comstock for defending the right of free mails. On his release Mr. Bennett was received at Chickering Hall by his friends, and it was the largest audience that ever tried to get into that building. He was then sent on a year's tour around the world. He died in 1882, since which time the paper has been edited by Mr. E. M. McDonald, who is also president of the American Secular Union and Freethought Federation, the national organization of the Freethinkers of the country, which meets this fall at St. Louis, in October.

The Truth Seeker is the largest and best of the "Infidel" journals and has at different times absorbed three other Liberal publications. It has a brilliant corps of contributors, numbering among them such men as Moncure D. Conway, of Virginia, the world-famed biographer, once a clergyman, and for many years the speaker at South Place Chapel, London; Hugh O. Pentecost, for fifteen years a Baptist minister, now a successful practicing lawyer and independent speaker in New York; Gen. Wm. Birney, of Washington, son of the famous Abolitionist of that name; Dr. W. A. Croffut, Ph. D., who owns the biggest newspaper correspondence syndicate in the country; Wm. Henry Burr and Dr. J. J. Shirley of Washington; J. E. Roberts, pastor of the People's "Church of this World," of Kansas City; Mr. W. E. P. French, widely known among the literary celebrities of the country; and others equally prominent. Mr. Lemuel K. Washburn, the former editor of the Investigator, is also now attached to its staff as Editorial Contributor, and the former correspondents of the Investigator have also been "taken on," as the English say, making the strongest combination of heretical writers in the country. The Truth Seeker also has the books published by the Investigator, and all of the brilliant lectures of Mr. L. K. Washburn. Orders for any of them, wholesale or retail, should be sent to it. The Truth Seeker is a large sixteen-page weekly, issued Saturdays by the Truth Seeker Company, from 28 Lafayette Place, New York City, at $3 per annum; seven cents per copy. Ask them for special premium offers to new subscribers.

The Protecting Care of Angel Friends.

I am firm in the conviction that we do not give our spirit friends sufficient credit for what we have been accustomed to call "miraculous" interference, in many ways in our behalf particularly in saving us from what appeared to us inevitable death. I will illustrate by reciting briefly a case that has just occurred in my own family.

My wife,—of feeble health and in her 77th year—in ascending stairs to the second floor, while turning a right angle of the stairs about half way up, losing hold on the railing by having some clothing in her hand, slipped over headlong and fell about eight feet, landing on a lounge.

In her almost helpless condition, my daughter and I who rushed to her aid, felt absolutely certain her neck was broken and her death inevitable; but after extending her limbs on the lounge, and the lapse of a few seconds, the most gladsome surprise of our lives came by her saying, "I ain't hurt much." And in a few minutes she was on her feet, laughing over it.

So far from leaving a debilitating or depressing effort on her, the event signally marks the beginning of better health generally than for months past.

She insists that so far from the fall hurting or bruising her in any way, she was scarcely conscious when she struck the lounge and seemed to arouse as from a sleep. V. FELL, M. D.

Washington, D. C.

NEW BOOK.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end it is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Address all orders to

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"Astral Worshop." By J. H. Hill, M. D. Price $1.

Our Eclectic Magazine. = The Cream of the Secular Press.

THE WONDERFUL PRESENT.

The Gifted Author, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Presents Some Valuable Thoughts for Consideration.

Whoever you are, and wherever you are, it is well for you to study yourself carefully and find what you are.

Never in the history of mankind has it been so necessary as to-day for human beings to be real and genuine in character. Never was insincerity so far below par.

The sixth sense is rapidly developing in mankind, and the world is beginning to understand what of old was known only to seers and adepts.

There is a great spiritual wave sweeping over us—in spite of the cry of the pessimist that this is the age of materialism. And in spite of the fact that America is money mad (or perhaps, as the natural counter effect of it) there was never so deep and intense a spiritual hunger in the land as there is to-day.

In the time of the Pilgrim fathers ministers and clergymen were regarded as little below God in their power to bring salvation to sinful mortals.

In this age we know that clergymen are merely men who have studied and thought along certain lines of religious beliefs, and each one of us feels his or her own power to think and study toward the truth with certainty and with as satisfying results.

Never did individuals think so intently and independently as to-day. Two interesting and important articles appeared recently in the San Francisco Examiner.

One was from the pen of Prof. Edgar Larkin of Lowe's Observatory, Cal. He said: "The standing marvel of these latter days is the vast, world-wide movement now under way—the exploration of that wonderful mystery—the human mind.

"Dormant faculties are being discovered.

"Vast results beyond anything that has yet appeared on earth are in sight."

The other article was by the Belgian philosopher, Maurice Materlinck Let me quote a few phrases:

"Though you assume the face of a saint, a hero, the eye of the passing child will not greet you with the same smile if there lurk within you an evil thought, an injustice, or a brother's tears. It is thoroughly borne home to you that if there be evil in your heart, your mere presence will proclaim it to-day a hundred times more clearly than would have been the case two or three centuries ago. It is felt on all sides that the conditions of the work-a-day world are changing. Let us wait in silence—perhaps ere long we shall be conscious of the murmur of the gods."

When we read words like these from two of the world's acknowledged thinkers, men of great learning and sane minds, and wide research, it is impossible to ignore the tendency of the times toward a higher religious thought than we have yet heard preached from pulpits.

It is not a death bed religion, not a religion of fear, or of mere faith which is coming to the world in this age, but a religion of facts—the facts of the illimitable power and eternal duration of the immortal soul.

In your own soul lies salvation. In your mind lies unlimited power. You are helping to make the world better or worse by the thoughts you carry in your mind, as you sit alone, or as you converse with friends, or as you walk the streets. No matter how secretive you are, and how uncommunicative, yet this indefinable power is at work, and you are not only making karma for yourself, but you are influencing the welfare of people you may never see—of people yet unborn. If at this moment you wish any human being aught but good, if you hold one thought of revenge, or hatred, or anger, or ill will—down on your knees and cry to the invisible Forces about you to help you cast it forth.

For so surely as you entertain it, so surely shall it work harm to your own life, to your own home and your own business affairs. Not to-day, perhaps, not to-morrow, but by and by when the currents in space catch it and shape it for destruction, it shall wreak its vengeance upon the being that sent it forth. Put away all your grudges; put away all your wrongs and clear your mental chambers of bitter and unwholesome memories

Leave your foes and your enemies to Time and Justice.

Wish earth's wrongdoers nothing but light upon the way to see themselves as they are and to live better lives.

They must reap what they sow, and it is not necessary for you to swing the scythe.

That is held in the hand of Eternal Justice.

Go your way and mind your business—the business of growth and development. For that is the business of every living soul. If you find it hard to believe in any Power greater than your own mind, in any life beyond this earth, keep silent and wait, do not put yourself on record as an aggressive unbeliever; for sooner than the wisest of us dreams "the murmur of the gods" may become audible to human ears.

The vast spaces about us are quivering with unuttered secrets, and there is a hush of expectancy in the air.

"Science is organized knowledge," and what the seers have long known, science is upon the eve of proving.

Be ready to receive the knowledge when it is given to you.

To-day, as never before, skepticism brands a human being with ignorance.

Be silent and wait.—Chicago American.

MEDIUMS WANT TO SEE MORE OF DANIEL BOONE.

Anderson, Ind., July 15.—At the Chesterfield camp of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists to-day mediums and their friends were much interested in a dispatch from Hartford City to The Indianapolis News last evening, in which it was stated that it was the advice of a medium of Chesterfield that led to the great success of the Daniel Boone Oil Company, in the Muncie oil district. An effort was made to locate the medium credited with having told, through her spirit control, where oil might be found in great quantities and gave further information to the oil prospectors. It is thought that the oil well seance, if it really did occur in the Chesterfield camp, was held during the winter or early in the spring. Only one medium lives in the camp throughout the year. She is the wife of Dr. Pierce, of Chesterfield.

No seances were held in camp last night. It was reported that some of the mediums were trying to call up the spirit of the late Hiram Staley of Chesterfield, to inquire if he thought that Clay Dusang, who is under arrest, was guilty of throwing the stone that caused Staley to lose his earth life. All the mediums in camp last night disclaimed any intent to investigate murders, and said that their spirit controls would not undertake to tell who did murder Hiram Staley at Chesterfield, or Mrs. William Starbuck, at Greensboro, and Miss Schafer, at Bedford.

W. F. Peck, of St. Louis, arrived last night and opened his engagement for lectures this afternoon.

SING, FOR HEAVEN'S SAKE, SING.

There Is Something Delicious in Singing Under Certain Circumstances—Marian Martineau Gives Her Views in the Chicago Tribune.

"Sing! For heaven's sake, sing! Sing, I beg of you!"

The speaker was the head physician in an asylum for the insane upon Long Island. And the woman to whom he spoke was a pupil of Mme. Marie Cross Newhaus, director of the Vocal and Operatic School of New York.

She was visiting the retreat to see a former friend. And one of the patients, recognizing by the subtle instinct of the insane the musical genius of the visitor, asked her to sing.

Mademoiselle demurred. She was not accustomed to singing under such strange circumstances, to such a strange audience, and amid such strange surroundings.

Then the physician in charge leaned over her chair and whispered, "Sing!"

And mademoiselle sang.

"I would have had to struggle with the patient wildly for hours if you had refused," said he.

Speaking of it afterward she said: "I was never so impressed in my life with the power of music. A famous actor who had been confined in a strait jacket suddenly became calm and they took his bonds off him. A woman who had had hysteria for days quieted down and came into the parlor.

"But strangest of all was the case of a young woman from Pittsburg who had not left her room since her arrival nor spoken to a single person. This young woman opened the door of her room—so the attendant said—and gradually crept downstairs and into the parlor. Once there she came across to the piano, put her hand on my shoulder, patted me, and smiled while I was singing. When I had finished she talked cleverly and rationally on the subject of music."

When eminent authorities declare that music will cure bodily ills, and when there are sanitariums and retreats that are built specially for the treatment of nervous invalids through the nerves of sound, is it any wonder that the woman who is nervous begins to inquire into the musical treatment and how it works?

Here are the things that are claimed by those who believe in the music cures and who are working them:

They claim first—and this may seem extravagant—that the abundant hair of musicians is caused by the musical sounds which they continually hear. They claim that people who live in musical countries have thicker hair than those who live in countries where musicians are scarce.

They claim that musicians are always good natured and that it is the direct relation of cause and effect. The music cure works constantly upon their minds and makes them good tempered. Such a freak as a cross grained musician was never known.

The musical curists believe that music improves the health. Musicians and their families are usually strong and firm, both in health and spirits. It is not to a musician's family that one looks for illness. All are well. The health of the musical Germans is attributed largely to this.

Again, they claim that musicians usually are cheerful and that the families of musicians usually are free from the blues. They are light hearted, and there is that peculiar buoyancy which makes geniuses. They assert that if you want your children to be brilliant you should keep them in a musical atmosphere.

But the musical curists claim much more than this. They claim that rheumatism, sciatica, headaches, and neuralgia of all kinds can be cured by musical sounds. The kind of music that is good for one person is not necessarily good for another. Music is like any other kind of medicine.

Where one has an ache and is torn with various ills the music should be soft and sweet—of the soothing kind. But for blues and nervous affections generally the music should be loud and fervent. Discords will work harm to either man or beast.

There are women who are clever enough to soothe away their own headaches with music. They can "rest" their nerves with the piano, the violin, or the mandolin; and they know which airs to bring to the rescue of their tired nerves.

There are women who can be put to sleep with music, and there are others whose toothache can be healed.

It is claimed by those who are enthusiastic that music is good for the complexion. They argue that certain musical sounds work upon the nerves and soothe them and that this is good for the digestion, since quiet nerves aid the digestive organs. The stomach digests its food more perfectly when the nerves are in good condition. And good digestion soon shows in an improved complexion. They actually cite cases to prove that the complexion is affected directly by music. In a large school of students, singers and musicians, there is not one bad complexion.

Money invested for a musical instrument is, according to this, money well spent, and the woman who buys a piano, an organ, a violin, a banjo, or a mandolin contributes in greater or less degrees not only to the family comfort but to its beauty as well.

Men fight better to music; and they stand fatigue better and are better on the march. Horses will bear up longer when they hear martial music. They will endure the longest and most tiresome stretch of country if they can have music. This is a well known fact to many men. But it is upon the nerves of women that the music cure has wrought its greatest wonders, and it is the tired, the wornout, the sick, or the discouraged woman who ought to try it.

IS IT POSSIBLE THAT ANIMALS, TOO, HAVE SOULS?

H. Rider Haggard's remarkable story of what he thinks is a telepathic message he received from a pet dog at the instant of the dog's violent and painful death will awaken wide interest.

Since the late Mr. Myers and his associates established the Society for Psychical Research in London, with its branch in this county, everybody's attention has been directed to the phenomena, and it is now accepted by many that telepathy between human beings is an established fact.

But is has never before been suggested that telepathy between man and the lower animals is a possibility, though in many of the reports to the Psychic Research Society it has been said that animals seem to have cognizance of Spiritualistic manifestations.

Mr. Haggard's experience, if it is to be believed, would appear to permit a startling hypothesis, namely, that animals possess souls or spirits identical in quality with that which man is assumed to possess. If this be granted, there is no escape from the deduction that, if man's soul be immortal, immortality attaches also to the souls of animals.

And why not? Science teaches that all forms of life had a common source, and who shall say just where in the scale of evolution the former protoplasm acquired the germ of eternal existence?—Chicago Journal.

AN EXCEPTIONALLY CREAMY ARTICLE.

Can Soul of a Dog After Death Impress Human Consciousness?—Queer Queries Started by Haggard—Author's Weird Dream Raises a Number of Puzzling Questions—Positive Answers Eagerly Awaited—Chicago Psychologists Discuss Case With the Keenest Interest.

Dr. Julia Holmes Smith, the well known Chicago psychologist and physician, asserts the belief that dogs have souls, but will not say that souls of animals can by telepathy hold converse with human beings after death.

Questions Raised by Rider Haggard's Dream.

Do dogs have souls?

If they do, is it possible for a dog's soul to speak to human beings' consciousness through telepathy?

May the human consciousness be transposed, either asleep or awake, to the body of the lower animals, if the bond of love and sympathy be strong?

Does the soul, animal or human, ever linger near the earth and communicate with other souls after leaving the physical body?

Can there be telepathic communication between the subconsciousness of person or animal rendered unconscious from injury or otherwise?

Psychological delvers are marveling over Rider Haggard's nightmare—the dream in which his pet dog's soul spoke to his own, and in which his own personality and consciousness were transformed to the animal's body.

Chicago students of the occult have some interesting theories over the weird experience announced by the famous novelist at London. Almost unanimously they characterize it as a remarkable demonstration, tending to prove many of the more advanced theories.

Questions which local psychists do not attempt to solve or explain are raised by the story. Some of them are:

Do dogs have souls? Generally claimed that they do.

If they do, is it possible for a dog's soul to speak to human beings' consciousness through telepathy? Doubted.

May the human consciousness be transposed, either asleep or awake, to the body of the lower animals, if the bond of love and sympathy be strong? More doubt.

Does the soul, animal or human, ever linger near the earth and communicate with other souls after leaving the physical body? Haggard says his dog "Bob" must have been dead when he received his telepathic vision.

Can there be telepathic communication between the subconsciousness of person or animal rendered unconscious from injury or otherwise? Haggard's dog was probably unconscious.

These are some of the questions aroused by the actual experience detailed by H. Rider Haggard yesterday.

Haggard, in writing of his experience, said that, following a terrible nightmare, he had a vivid vision. There was an awful oppression on his mind as of a terrific struggle for life. He saw his black retriever, "Bob," to whom he was intensely attached, dying by a stream.

Then his own personality seemed rising from the dog. His head was against the raised head of the animal, which was trying to speak to him. Failing to speak, the dog transmitted to his mind in an undefined fashion the knowledge that it was dying.

The dog, Haggard learned, was killed three hours before that dream.

"I confess that I am forced to explain it by telepathy," said Haggard, in an interview at London. "The dog, or its soul, succeeded in calling my attention to its actual or recent plight by placing whatever portion of my being that was capable of receiving impulses when enchained by sleep into its own terrible position."

Local psychologists and scientists and students of the supernatural are pondering them and anxiously awaiting an authoritative explanation. Some comments and theories on the phenomenon follow:

Dr. Julia Holmes Smith, a leading member of the American Society for Psychical Research—I am not prepared to say that Rider Haggard's dream, or nightmare, or whatever it might have been, was a mere coincidence. I am sure I have seen and known dogs that had souls. Where souls begin and animal existence ends is the question. There is always the question and who shall answer it. When Rider Haggard tells a story of his own experience we must heed it, because he is a famous writer and his ability as a thinker is recognized. We are all influenced by the trend of our own minds and Mr. Haggard in his dream might have been influenced by his affection for the dog "Bob" and received the vivid impressions that later turned out to have had a real foundation in fact."—Chicago Examiner.

THE SOUL OF ALL OUR TEACHING.

The following beautifully spiritual poem, by Dr. Henry van Dyke, has in it the soul of all our teaching, and the loveliness of all our hope; and is a true summer poem, says Light.

Only a little shriveled seed,—
It might be flower or grass or weed;
Only a box of earth on the edge
Of a narrow, dusty window-ledge;
Only a few scant summer showers;
Only a few clear, shining hours,—
That was all. Yet God could make
Out of these, for a sick child's sake,
A blossom wonder as fair and sweet
As ever broke at an angel's feet.

Only a life of barren pain,
Wet with sorrowful tears of rain;
Warmed sometimes by a wandering gleam
Of joy that seemed but a happy dream;
A life as common and brown and bare
As the box of earth in the window there.
Yet it bore at last the precious bloom
Of a perfect soul in a narrow room—
Pure as the snowy leaves that fold
Over the flower's heart of gold.

THE STERN REALITY OF "WAR IS HELL."

An American minister, reminding his countrymen of General Sherman's fierce saying, "War is Hell," quotes from a letter sent by the great general to the president of the Western Sanitary Commission, in which he said:

I confess without shame that I am tired and sick of the war. Its glory is all moonshine. Even success, the most brilliant, is over dead and mangled bodies, the anguish and lamentation of distant families appealing to me for missing sons, husbands, and fathers. It is only those who have not heard a shot, nor heard the shrieks and groans of the wounded and lacerated (friend or foe), that cry aloud for more blood, more vengeance, more desolation.

WEIRD CRIES IN FLAT TERRORIZE TENANTS.

While Mrs. Anna Valentine, in the Bergen county jail, at Hackensack, is awaiting the outcome of the efforts being made to save her from the death penalty for the murder of Mrs. Rosa Salzi, her former neighbors in the little borough of Lodi are in a state of excitement over the nightly visitation of what they believe to be the ghost of the slain woman.

Soon after the murder was committed, last February the husband of the victim left his twin babies with a neighbor and went away from Lodi. The flat in which the woman had been killed was vacant for a time and then another family moved in.

The first night the new tenants spent in the house they were aroused at midnight by a sound as of a woman in agony and calling for help. The families occupying other flats in the house had not been disturbed, although in the Salzi apartment the screams seemed loud enough to be heard a block away.

After remaining in the house another night and hearing the same sounds repeated at midnight, it is said, the family moved out, declaring that they would not sleep there another night.

A second family and a third tried the flat, each time with the same result—the weird screams at midnight, accompanied at times, it was claimed, by a noise as of a struggle. But none of the tenants claimed to have seen any ghostly figure until a few nights ago, when a skeptical man declared that he would spend the night in the flat and find out the cause of the strange sounds.

He stayed until a few minutes after midnight, when he left hurriedly. He declared that he had not only heard, but seen enough to convince him that there was more than imagination in the stories.—New York World.

CAMP GROUNDS VISITED BY OIL OPERATORS SEEKING POINTERS.

Oil operators, prone to follow the advice of "wizards" or to make locations for prospective wells by the bending of a peach-tree twig, now get the opportunity to consult the Spiritualist mediums at the Spiritualist camp-grounds in Chesterfield before making a location.

Oil on the waters of White river which flows through the heart of the oil district is so plentiful that fishermen say it is driving the fish away, and the boys from the old swimming holes.—Indianapolis (Ind.) News.

DON'T WANT TO SEE COMMON MERCHANDISE MADE OF THEIR BELIEF.

Making merchandise of Spiritualism does not meet the approbation of many members of that sect.

Many people are Spiritualists from a conscientious belief in its teachings. They believe the religion is entitled to a position above the plans of common merchandise and consequently are considerably put out over the action of some mediums on the grounds. It is such statements as made in a Muncie paper that makes them tired. That paper says:

"Oil men were much in evidence and a number of gentlemen from Muncie were on the grounds. They consulted Mrs. Waite and claim to have received the most encouraging advice concerning the oil field. A number of men who consulted the clairvoyant last year tendered her thanks and praises yesterday for her opinion regarding investments. During the test services Mrs. Waite received and answered hundreds of questions concerning oil investments. She went so far as to name the companies and the location of the leases and telling the success already acquired. Many an investor was elated over her advice and others left with dejected feelings."—Anderson (Ind.) Bulletin.

THE REAL GENUINE HERO ILLUSTRATED.

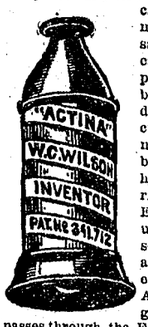
If we are not careful, the noble word "heroes" will suffer fatal degradation, and will be lost for all the higher uses. It must not be allowed to apply only to soldiers. In very truth, we need to be chary of applying it to soldiers at all. A countryman of that fine prophet, Emerson, lately said well—and it was fittingly said in Emerson's country:

Truly, there is a large place for our non-military heroes. Emerson says: "Times of heroism are generally times of terror, but the day never shines in which this element may not work. The circumstances of man, we say, are historically somewhat better in this country and at this hour than perhaps ever before. More freedom exists for culture. It will not now run against an axe at the first step out of the beaten track of opinion. But whoso is heroic will always find crises to try his edge. Human virtue demands her champions and martyrs, and the trial of persecution always proceeds."

Here, then, is the test of the true hero. Business man, soldier, statesman, reformer, educator, poet, whatever, if he lives to a higher end than merely self, and is true to the best that is in him, whatever the cost, we may have him for a hero, and try to find for ourselves the source and inspiration of his greatness. And it may be we shall find him in none of these open and public walks of life. It may be he will prove to be none other than Ernest, the simple husbandman, who has been with us all the while. It may be that the nearest likenesses to that face in the mountain, which was at once grand and sweet, will be found among those we have never understood sufficiently to know them for the heroes they are, and who, as a part of their heroism, would reject the name.

A TERRIBLE INDICTMENT.

An issue of the Freethinker contains the following statement concerning the last words of a young criminal doomed to execution for murder, in Chicago:



"Father Cox, who had been trying to convert Neidermeyer, last night gave him a book entitled 'Notes on Ingersoll.' The bandit read a few pages, and returned the volume with the comment: 'I get my opinions from my own thoughts, not from Ingersoll or any one else. I wish I could believe in your religion. If I could hypnotize myself into the belief I was going somewhere to be happy forever, don't you think I would be glad to die? The world is all wrong. There are no attractions here for men like me. We grow up in the slums, half starved and always miserable. We see our parents work day after day like slaves, year after year, and at the end they die miserably. If I had had plenty of money or an education there might have been some enjoyment for me. Chicago is full of boys like me, growing up without advice or help. They drift into cheap saloons, and if they are not good-natured, they don't care if they do kill other people. I read your prayer book all right. I can't believe in them. Why should I go to a place of everlasting torture? I've been pretty bad, I'll admit, but I'm going to pay all the penalty I shall ever pay this morning. If the churches did something more for those who need aid in the struggle to earn a living, they would do more good than they can by converting men who are about to be hanged.'"

What a terrible indictment of "civilization" and "religion."

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.
Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address
DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1142, Detroit, Mich.

$40.00 A WEEK.

Reliable man or woman each county as manager to exhibit, take orders, appoint agents for Hurricon Valveless Oil-Gas Stoves. Wonderful invention—beats others—Automatically generates fuel gas from kerosene—Miniature gas works—Absolutely safe—Enormous demand—Splendid for summer cooking—Delight customers—Cheap, clean, safe fuel. Gasoline is dangerous. Catalogue Free. Write today. World Mfg. Co., 5087 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, O.

767

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

In the World Celestial.

By DR. T. A. BLAND.

"It is inexpressibly delightful."—Hon. C. A. Windle.

"It lifts the reader into enchanting realms."—Medical Gleanor.

"It is intensely interesting."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

"Three things make this book remarkable. Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.

"It will give us courage to pass through the deep shadows of death to the sun-lit clime of the World Celestial."—Rev. H. W. Thomas.

"Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great Spiritual book, but a most beautiful romance of two worlds."—Banner of Light.

It is Printed in elegant style and bound in cloth and gold. Price $1.00.

The Mystic Thesaurus,

Or Initiation in the Theoretical and Practical secrets of Astral Truth and Occult Art. By WILLIS F. WHITEHEAD, Editor Agrippa's "Natural Magic." The book treats of The Symbol of the Cross, Spiritual Gifts, Inspirational Conception, Initiative Exposition, The Astral Brotherhood, Message of the Brotherhood, The Magic Mirror, and Celestial Companionship. It is a good text book for students of the Mystic, and will be sent postpaid, in paper, for $1.00.

"Talmageau Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmound addressed a large and intelligent audience at Corry in the New Opera House, Sunday, July 24. The subject, "The Soul, the Spirit and Their Relations," was selected by the audience and handled in a profound and masterly manner, and yet so clearly that all could comprehend it. Many questions of a spiritual nature were handed in and answered in her usual clear and concise way.—Corry (Pa.) Daily Leader.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley writes from Rockford, Ill.: "I returned here to serve the Psychic Science Society for Sunday, July 17, and find the same enthusiasm existing among its members as during my former work among them. Despite the terribly hot weather we had a grand meeting and the large audience was most attentive from first to last. I will lecture in Genoa, Ill., the last Saturday and Sunday of July. From there I go to Wonewoc camp until August 15, thence to Clinton, Iowa, until the close of camp. Address all letters to me, until other wise requested, to 3148 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill."

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie passed through the city last week on her way to Clinton, Iowa. She goes from there to Chesterfield camp this week.

Dr. J. M. Peebles passed through Chicago last week on his way home from St. Louis. He delivered several lectures there and attended the Exposition.

Detective P. S. O'Connell of the detective bureau, left last night for Denver to bring to Chicago Martha E. Sabin, the clairvoyant, who is accused of victimizing Chicago women through "charms." The woman lived at Michigan avenue and Twenty-first street, and posed as a palmist and clairvoyant. A number of women were induced to visit her and it is charged she obtained money and over $1,000 in jewels from them on the pretense of making them immune from sickness.—Chicago Chronicle, July 28.

Mrs. N. Speight writes: "The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Englewood Spiritual Union will give a dime circle, Thursday evening, August 11, at the residence of Mrs. Koehler, 838 West Sixtieth street. A number of mediums will assist in making this a most interesting and enjoyable occasion. All are cordially invited to come."

Mrs. Anna Richter of 656 East One Hundred and Forty-first Street was complainant in the Morrisonia court yesterday against Frank Horowitz of 2635 Third avenue, who, as a Spiritualist she said, obtained $1,100 from her under various pretexts between November and March last. Mrs. Richter said her husband died one year ago and that last Fall she went to the wife of Horowitz, who is a fortune teller, in quest of advice as to the best means of obtaining work for her son. The fortune-telling woman, said the complainant, told her Horowitz combined the practice of Spiritualism with his trade of tailor, and that he could be of assistance in obtaining work for the young man. The complainant said she called on Horowitz who asserted that he was in custody of the spirit of her deceased husband. He told her, she said, that he could accept no money, but that if she would put $50 in a machine drawer and turn around three times the spirits would get it. They did, she said, or the money was gone, at any rate, after she had followed instructions. Mrs. Richter said that Horowitz threatened that if she took the matter into court he would cause the judge to drop from his chair. Magistrate Crane held the prisoner in $500 bail for examination Monday.—New York Times, July 23.

C. I. Kehligua wries from Canton, O.: "The Canton Church of Grand Unity 'Liberal and Spiritualist) is preparing for immediate active work. It has recently come into possession of a meeting hall very centrally located, in the Blanchard Building, and some financial support. A speaker and organizer is wanted as well as correspondence with speakers for the winter. A clairvoyant or other worker will be given a room in the location above referred to as well as support, personal and organized, and the city will extend a welcome. A donation and movement to establish a spiritual community is on foot. Will those interested write?"

To-day W. F. Peck delivered an excellent discourse on "Involution, or the Divinity in Evolution." Yesterday was a rest day in the camp and there were no meetings except lyceum in the morning. To-morrow there will be a lecture at 2:30 p. m., by T. W. Smith, followed with tests by one of the mediums.—Anderson (Ind.) Daily Bulletin.

M. N. Pease writes from Richville, Mo., that he would not take $10 for the premium books he has. He would like to have some good test medium and lecturer visit his locality. Reading The Progressive Thinker and the premium books, he has information that he can utilize for the benefit of Spiritualism.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. William Dorman was celebrated by the First Spiritualist Society of Spokane, Wash., at the rooms in the Dean Block on Front avenue. Mrs. Corcelius, the pastor of the Spiritualist society, performed the ceremony, following in a humorous vein the real Spiritualist ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Dorman reside at 1908 Gardner avenue. They were married 50 years ago at Evansville, Ill. He was formerly a Methodist preacher. An interesting feature of the occasion were the greetings from the spirit world from the parents of both aged people and from other relatives. These greetings came by way of Los Angeles in the form of a scroll painted by Mrs. Dorman's sister, Mrs. M. E. Kratz, a medium of that southern California town. It was explained that the scroll was painted, or rather drawn, in less than two hours by the medium while she was blindfolded. The spirits told the medium where to place her hand to find the particular crayon wanted and guided her hand in the drawing. The drawing was well done. One message to Mr. Dorman worked into the scroll read, "Mother and father are aiding you, and join in sending greets." The parents of Mrs. Dorman had their message inscribed in German characters. Another message, signed "William," read, "Papa and Mamma, I greet you; be patient." This was from a departed son. "We are ever near you," read the token from the spirit world sent by sister Katherine. In large characters across the face of the scroll was written in glowing letters, "Blow the trumpet of truth. There is no death." Fifty or more persons attended the meeting. The aged couple stood under a wedding bell made in three colors—pink, representing love, the foundation of marriage; green, the life everlasting, and white, for purity.

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes: "The Band of Harmony Social held at Mrs. Tresness' was a success in every sense of the word. A number of strangers were present. With music, comic songs and recitations the afternoon and evening were very enjoyable. It shows what our people can do if they try. It would be well for seekers of a general good time to remember our socials and not miss them."

Grand picnic given by the German Spiritualist society, Light and Truth, on Sunday, August 21, 1904, at Mayfair Park, 1481 Montrose avenue. End of Montrose and Elston avenue car line. One block from C. & N. W. Depot; two blocks from C., M. & St. P. Depot. Races and games. Tickets, 25 cents. Children under 14 years, free.

The First Spiritualist Church is located at 232 N. Alabama street, and has scores of attendants in Indianapolis. Spiritualism is the term used to denote the opposite of materialism. The first Spiritualists, so far as known, were Mr. and Mrs. Fox and their two daughters, who, while living at Hydesville, N. Y., in 1848, were much disturbed by continual unexplained knockings. They discovered that the presence of certain "mediums" was required to form the link between the worlds of the living and the dead before they could understand the meaning of the knockings which they finally concluded were intelligent communications from the spirit of a murdered peddler whom the "rapper" claimed to be. Since that time Spiritualism has grown rapidly. It has enlisted followers from all sections of not only the United States, but of the entire world, until to-day every village and hamlet has its advocates of Spiritualism who claims to establish communication with the dead. The larger cities, like Indianapolis, have hundreds of Spiritualists within their confines. What is Spiritualism—imagination, fraud or fact? The Sunday Sentinel is at the present time holding open its pages to a fair and intelligent discussion of the question. Communications and answers are being received from all sections of the state. Mrs. Virginie Barrett of 832 Broadway is one of the leading Spiritualists in the city, and in her belief she has a host of followers. —Indianapolis (Ind.) Sentinel.

H. R. LaGrange writes: "Farmer Riley, the materializing medium, has arrived at Island Lake Camp. He will be there for two weeks. He will be pleased to meet all friends and acquaintances while there. The camp is in a very prosperous condition. We have a few more rooms left at the new modern 50-room fire-proof hotel; prices 5 and $5.50 per week. Come and spend an enjoyable week with us."

Lottie Leavitt, secretary, writes from Clinton, Iowa: "The Philosophical Society of Spiritualists have had Mrs. Alice C. Barry of Philadelphia, as their speaker and medium for the past six months. Mrs. Barry is an inspirational speaker of the highest order, progressive and liberal upon all subjects. We see many strange faces in our meetings, and there seems to be an earnest endeavor to in all ways advance the cause of Spiritualism by harmonious work and effort. The society will hold no Sunday evening meetings while the Mt. Pleasant Park camp-meeting is in session. The Band of Harmony which is auxiliary to this society, will give their pleasant socials every second and last Thursday in each month as usual."

The ninth annual camp-meeting of the Central New York Spiritualist Association is in session in Freeville, beginning Saturday, July 23, and Closing August 21, lasting four weeks and five Sundays. The officers of the association are, W. W. Kelsey, president, Cortland; R. Rhodes, first vice-president, Elmira; Mrs. Jennie McNeil, second vice-president, Tully; Mrs. B. C. Myers, treasurer, Harford Mills; Miss Victoria C. Moore, secretary, Dryden. Talent of a high order in Spiritualism has been engaged, and there will be present several leading mediums, who will hold trumpet and materializing seances and give readings and magnetic treatment. The test mediums will be Oscar A. Edgerly, D. A. Herrick, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing and others of note. Phenomenal: D. A. Herrick, trumpet medium; C. B. Nichols, materializing medium; Mrs. Addie Cooper, reading and magnetic treatment; Victoria C. Moore, reader.—Elmira (N. Y.) Gazette.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

The following first-class talent is engaged for the Grand Ledge (Mich.) Camp, a very popular place of resort: Oscar A. Edgerly, Mrs. Zaida Brown Kates, Geo. W. Kates, Rev. B. F. Austin, Mrs. Marian Carpenter, Mrs. Piper, Dell Herrick, Mrs. Helen Chapman, Mrs. N. M. Russell, James Riley, Miss Mattie Woodbury, Mrs. Evarts, Mrs. Virginia Rowe, Geo. A. Letford.

Jennie C. Paine writes from Potsdam, N. Y.: "We have been very fortunate in securing at West Potsdam and Potsdam the services of Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, of Troy, N. Y., who has been with us nearly the whole month. She comes as state missionary, which office she fills with much honor. Her meetings have been very successful and she has succeeded in working up a mass-meeting in the town of Potsdam, a town of 5,000 inhabitants, that the Spiritualists of this section hope will prove a success in every way. It will take place some time in October."

Mrs. LeSieur writes :"The next benefit Band of Harmony will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rockwell, 814 Emmit street, Thursday, August 4. A fine programme is promised. Their home is reached by taking the Metropolitan (Logan Square branch), riding to the end of line. The last meeting at the home of Mrs. Tressness, July 21, was a very large meeting and greatly enjoyed by all who were present."

Elizabeth E. McCarthy writes of the good work she did in Houston and other places in Texas, awaking many people from their lethargy. She writes: "I am now at home again in Denver, Colo., among kind friends. Though my stay in Texas was of short duration, the seeds of a higher spiritual unfoldment have been well sown and deeply rooted, and when I return I will find a golden harvest of progressive thinkers waiting to receive me."

Dr. P. S. George writes from Lincoln, Neb.: "I feel it my duty to call the attention of the readers of The Progressive Thinker as to the action taken by the Postmaster General in the case of one so-called, self-styled Prof. R. A. Dutton, of this city, who has extensively advertised his great psychic powers and his wonderful ability to instruct, and who caught suckers by the thousands. His mail is held at the Lincoln postoffice by order of the Postmaster General until further orders. In my opinion he is one of the greatest pretenders and deceivers in the field. He promised to cure every known disease—the deaf, the dumb, the blind, the lame and halt; teach hypnotism, power of dreaming when wide awake with eyes open, and to pass to any part of the earth at will, and talk to people, hear their voices and be heard, but when the order came from the Postmaster General for him to appear in Washington, D. C., or his attorney, he sent a Lincoln lawyer to represent him. Just what the outcome will be I am unable to say, but will try and keep the readers of this paper informed as to the result of the investigation of this case by the postal authorities."

Rozetta Gott writes from Wellington, Ohio: "Our little Spiritual Progressive Thought Society of only a few members has been attacked by the Methodist minister and some of the members of that church. One thing the minister said from his pulpit was that Spiritualists took up Spiritualism as a last resort, and when that left them, as it always does, that they sunk to lower than the brute and were not fit associates for other people. Every Friday afternoon the ladies of our society meet at my home to sit for development. At our last sitting, a Methodist sister came just as we were through. She is a great missionary worker and I suppose she thought she must save us. However that may be she found four Methodists who had wandered away from the fold. The consequence was that we had about a half-hour's hot discussion. She told me that it was the work of Satan, etc. My object in explaining is to ask a favor. Will every Spiritualist who feels interested in our little society or in Spiritualism, concentrate their thoughts for ten minutes at the time of our next meeting, Friday, August 5, at 2:30 promptly? This will be our thought: 'Will the angels help us to succeed in overcoming all opposing forces, and add to our number and strength?"

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was highly favored on Sunday, July 24, by the two good lectures, or rather, one lecture and one after-talk. The lecture by Mrs. Nora E. Hill was full of good teachings and one that set people to thinking. She is a grand good worker. The after-talk was by Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, of California. She did not talk long, but long enough to reach the hearts of the audience, which was large. All went home pleased. Many were made happy by messages from some loved one, through Mrs. Kline. On Sunday evening next, August 6, we will have Walter DeVoe with us, who needs no recommendation to any who have heard him. Those who have not will do well to come. Services at 319 East 55th street every Sunday evening. Don't forget the picnic at Beverly Hills on same date. Everybody welcome; and bring your own lunch. Come and have a good time."

Mrs. J. M. Brown writes: "We are very pleased to write your good paper of the great success of Miss Mae Hunt's meetings in San Francisco, Cal. Every Sunday night the hall is packed to the doors with an audience that is an honor to any speaker; they are bright, thinking minds, interested in the deep occult truths which flow from the lips of the speaker under the deep inspiration of her guides. Different ones speak from time to time, such as John Pierpont and Theodore Parker, the great orator and abolitionist, and we have been promised that soon we shall hear from Robert G. Ingersoll, giving his experience when he passed into spirit life. Miss Hunt speaks under deep trance, with a clear, strong, magnetic voice, and she loves her work, never tiring of doing all she can for the cause of Spiritualism. These meetings will present different phases, so as to meet the needs of the people as they unfold new growths and aspirations."

F. H. Parker writes as follows, but does not give name of town or city: "Chas. J. Anderson, (boy orator) is lecturing to large audiences at N. S. G. W. Hall, each Sunday at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m., on new thought lines. He gives perfect satisfaction to his increasing audiences. Mrs. Katie Heussmann Harveston lectures at the Unity Spiritualists Hall, 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Her tests or circle following the morning meeting is proving an interesting feature as well as her convincing tests from the platform at each Sunday evening lecture. The Thursday night social every two weeks at the hall, proves interesting as well as remunerative. Mrs. R. Y. Tuttle, an old lady and pioneer Spiritualist, true to the cause, passed on this spring."

Mrs. Celia Hughes, trumpet medium, will go to New York for a much-needed rest the first of August. On her return, September 1, she will resume work at her home, No. 69 Thirty-first street, Chicago.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Remember, next Saturday, August 6, you are all invited to an outing at Calumet Grove. The grounds will be free till 9 p. m. Lunch will be served from 2 to 3 p. m. All bring your basket. This is a lovely shady grove on the Calumet river. Fine boating, fishing, swimming, etc. Bring your music, games, hammocks, etc. Everybody welcome to come and enjoy the pleasures of the day."

Mrs. Olive A. Atwood writes from Hartford, Conn.: "Mrs. I. W. Storrs will close the season with a meeting Sunday evening, July 31, at her home, 122 Clark street, Hartford, Conn., where she has held two meetings a week—every Thursday afternoon and Sunday evening; also four special meetings, having a conference in the afternoon; supper and lecture in the evening. Mrs. Storrs is a lady of rare worth and ability as a medium, and gives all a hearty welcome. Chinnewama, her little Indian guide, gives true and loving messages from spirit friends. Mr. and Mrs. Storrs are delegates to the National Convention, and all hope they will return with their zeal renewed and souls strengthened for the coming winter's work."

Mrs. S. W. Bradley writes from Butte, Mont.: "I notice our subscription has nearly expired, and send in to renew. We have taken The Progressive Thinker from its first issue and feel we cannot afford to do without it, as it takes its readers onward and upward. Sometimes when a 'hot blast' strikes it, I almost wish more tolerance could be manifested, but on the whole I know there are good results and I feel like extending words of good cheer."

A Noble Woman Passed to the Realm of Souls.

Mrs. Sue A. McGuffin, wife of Mr. J. B. McGuffin, of Milton, Ind., passed to spirit life on Monday morning, July 25, after an illness of six months' duration. The disease was cancer of the stomach, and although her suffering was continuous and intense the beauty of her character shone through it all with a calm patience and fortitude that was marvelous.

Mrs. McGuffin was the daughter of Silas and Hannah Small, old residents of Henry county, Ind., and was born September 26, 1849. Her grandfather, Seth Henshaw, was perhaps the oldest champion of Spiritualism in the state, and was also the leader in that region of the early abolitionists.

Mrs. McGuffin inherited this progressive spirit, but the innate sweetness of her nature made her so kindly tolerant to all that she never had an enemy in her life. She never was heard to speak an unkind word of any human being and all who knew her loved her.

She was married to Mr. McGuffin, June 6, 1868, and during all of those thirty-six years their lives together blended in perfect peace and perpetual joy.

Her knowledge of Spiritualism sustained her in every trial, and is the consolation of her husband and their adopted son Roy, in their bereavement.

The funeral took place at their home near Milton, on Wednesday, July 27. C. W. Stewart, of St. Louis, who is an old friend of the family, conducted the funeral.

The sweet lovely life of Mrs. McGuffin has left its influence upon the souls of all her loving friends, even as her music, her art and her poetry is left for their contemplation, and they realize that she has only passed within the veil and they will sooner or later greet her again in a sweeter, purer realm of life. Peace to her memory. S.

LITERARY NOTE FROM JOHN LANE.

Personal Note on C. H. Hinton, M. A., Author of "The Fourth Dimension."

C. H. Hinton, the author of a comprehensive, popular exposition of the nature, qualities and possibilities of what is commonly regarded as rather an abstruse subject of science and mathematics, which John Lane has recently published under the title of "The Fourth Dimension," contributes to the July number of Harper's Magazine an article upon the subject, in which he makes some novel suggestions for the aid of those who are not clear as to the definite purpose of his scientific inquiry. As one case in which an attempt has been made to find evidence for the reality of a fourth dimension he cites the following, which depends on the properties of configuration. In a plane three points, he says, can be found equally distant from one another, such as the vertices of an equilateral triangle. In space four such points can be found, such as the vertices of a tetrahedron. Five points equally distant from one another can be found by assuming a four-dimensional space. Now, to account for the properties of organic compounds it has been necessary to assume that the carbon atoms in the molecules of certain substances are related to one another, as are the four vertices of a tetrahedron. If in the problematical structure of the molecule of other substances it becomes necessary to assume the existence of five atoms at equal distances from one another there would be evidence of a fourth dimension. A similar condition is assumable in a case which depends on the properties of rotation. We are familiarly acquainted with left and right hand shapes; the image of an object in a mirror, exactly like its original, but transposed on the other side of the plane, is an easily comprehensible example. One of these objects cannot be rotated into another in our space. Rotation in a plane takes place round a point; in our space round an axis; and by analogy we should conclude that in four-dimensional space rotation took place around a plane. As a matter of fact if we have two triangles set near one another in a plane, but not touching, they cannot be rotated completely into one another by any motion in that plane. There are two substances, however, two varieties of tartaric acid, which are alike in all physical and chemical properties, except in their behavior with regard to polarized light. One turns the plane of polarization in one direction, the other in the opposite direction, a condition which is due to the molecules of the one being exactly the same configuration as the molecules of the other, save that those of one are right-handed and the other left-handed. These two varieties, however, change one into the other apparently without so far as is at present known any chemical resolution of reconstruction. If such proves to be certainly the case it will be a proof of the fourth dimension, because only in four-dimensional space can a right-handed shape become a left-handed shape by simple movement.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

OBSESSING SPIRITS.

A Few Words In Reply to an "Idahoan."

In The Progressive Thinker of July 30, is an article commencing thus: "Brother J. M. Peebles announces that he will soon issue a book of 400 pages on obsession and demoniac influences," etc., and then Brother C. J. Johnson, of Idaho, proceeds to criticise it. Now, by just what principle of justice or ethics a man can criticise a book before he sees it, is to me something entirely new. Brother Johnson says, "Such a book will, according to promise, show the reign of undeveloped spirits in this and foreign lands * * * But he leaves it there without prescribing a remedy to cure so fearful a state."

Pray, how do you know, friend Johnson? Upon what ground do you make this statement? It may be policy to misrepresent—policy to cover up facts, but principle and moral honesty exclaim, "State the facts—tell the truth, and that though the heavens fall." This is in harmony with Editor Francis' "Open Court," a court of fact, philosophy and equity, where all sides may have a fair and candid hearing.

Fortunately, I have the advantage of Brother Johnson, for by luck, or providence, or spirit impression, I was in Battle Creek and in Dr. Peebles' room the very afternoon that this first thousand copies of the book, "The Demonism of the Ages, and Spirit Obsessions," was brought to Dr. Peebles' office. It is needless to say that I purchased a copy, and I have read the volume of thirty-three chapters with a most intense interest. In this book the Doctor makes no attempt to prove the fact of spirit intercourse. He takes this for granted, but dwells upon the nature of spirits, their conditions, their occupations, their good and evil influences. He has twenty or thirty pages from persons obsessed. Some of them exhibit the most painful and pitiful struggles with demons, earthbound spirits dwelling in the lower zones about the earth. He allows some of these evil spirits to speak for themselves. He explains their methods of control, and the dangers resulting therefrom. He also very carefully and philosophically points out the methods of preventing obsession, and also the how, and the best way to cure the obsessed. The book is, in my estimation, considering the status of Spiritualism to-day, the most important book that the Doctor has ever written. Those who believe that there is no evil here, nor "evil spirits" in the next world, will not fancy the book, for the Doctor, as we all know, is an independent and fearless writer, and has the faculty of striking with his pen straight from the shoulder. I hope that Brother Johnson before further criticising the book, will carefully peruse it.

This book, in treating of the hypnotic control of spirits by entrancement, runs near to the border line of that much-discussed volume, "The Great Psychological Crime." These "storm centers" (to use your felicitous phrase, Mr. Francis) that gather in the heavens of Spiritualism, not only make us think but investigate deeper, and weigh all subjects, and all sides of this great movement called Spiritualism, which so threatens the complete annihilation of orthodox Christianity. E. C. L.

Memphis, Tenn.

A LESSON FROM NATURE.

Deep down in a shady valley,
By the sunlight seldom sought
I chanced one day, on a stagnant pool,
With slimy green poison fraught.

And I thought, what a loathsome place—
Passing with averted eyes,
Nothing but weeds could ever grow here,
Such poisonous vapors rise.

Another day, my wandering feet
Had led to the self-same place,
And lo! a white lily, pure and fair
Smiled sweet from the water's face.

And while I gazed in glad surprise,
I listed, a still small voice
That whispered to my wakening soul:
Lo, child! look thou and rejoice.

The lily from that filthy slime
Thus has forced its upward way,
And so, from the depths, earth's children, too,
May climb to the endless day.

ANNIE H. PIERCE.

Rockford, Ill.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mr. J. W. LeSuer passed peacefully to spirit life early Tuesday morning, July 19, from his home, 43 Ashland avenue, Chicago. Mr. LeSuer was born in Chautauqua, New York, and although in his 65th year, was full of spirit and energy even when ill, and in all his life was never too busy to do a kindness. He was one of the trustees of the Church of the Soul many years, and was always actively interested in the welfare of that society and Spiritualism, and will be greatly missed by all old-time friends in the church and by hundreds who know nothing of Spiritualism. He leaves a wife and four children, several grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Mrs. S. J. Ashton officiated at the funeral.

DR. T. WILKINS.

Passed to the higher life, July 21, 1904, from Detroit, Mich., Dorothy Cornyn, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rose Cornyn, aged four months and three days. The bird-like voice whose joyous tones made glad this scene of sin and strife, sings now in everlasting song, amid the tree of life. Services conducted by Rev. Nellie S. Baade.

It is with regrets that I have to announce the death on Sunday last, of Mr. Harry Clinton Morehouse of Boulder, Colo., formerly of Morro county, Ohio. The family have long been readers of The Progressive Thinker, and this takes the last remaining member of a large family excepting his widowed mother. He was thirty-five years old last April, was a prominent and honored citizen of this county, being the largest dealer in bees and honey in northern Colorado. His death was occasioned by appendicitis, after an illness of eight days.

LEO VINCENT.

TO WOMEN WHO DREAD MOTHERHOOD

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain—Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or remain childless. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at childbirth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how it may be done absolutely free of charge. Send your name and address to Dr. J. H. Dye, 154 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you, postpaid, his wonderful book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure sterility. Do not delay, but write to-day.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE

Spiritual Songster. A collection of thirty-eight inspirational songs adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

Starnos. A rosary of pearls culled from the works of Andrew Jackson Davis. Intended to imbue the sorrowing and stricken heart with new inspiration. By Dr. Della E. Davis. Price 50 cents.

Startling Facts or Deeds of Darkness Disclosed, Relative to Auricular Confession, and Its Relations to Sacerdotal Celibacy, Convents, Monasteries, Morality, and Civil and Religious Liberty. By Rev. J. G. White. Price, 75 cents.

Strike of a Sex. A unique story of a strike among women. Price 25c.

Studies in the Outlying Fields of Psychic Science. How to investigate, form circles and develop mediumship. A test of genuine mediumship. By Hudson Tuttle. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Superstition in All Ages, or "Le Bons Sens." Testimony of a Catholic priest who abjured the Christian religion and asked God's pardon for having taught it. Price, cloth, $1; postage 14 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope. This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. Price 25 cents.

Teachings of Jesus, Not Adapted to Modern Civilization. With the true character of Mary Magdalene. A book full of truth. By George W. Brown, M. D. Price 15 cents.

Ten Commandments Analyzed. By W. H. Bach. Price, 25 cents.

The Arcana of Spiritualism. A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy. A splendid work by the seer and philosospher, Hudson Tuttle. Price, $1.25.

The A, B, Z, of Our Own Nutrition. An excellent work and guide to perfect health. By Horace Fletcher. Price, $1.

The Aristocracy of Health. A Study of Physical Culture, and Our Favorite Poisons. A masterly work on the subject, by the gifted writer, Mrs. Mary Foote Henderson. Price, $1.50.

The Candle From Under the Bushel, or Thirteen Hundred and Six Questions to the Clergy. Nuts that are hard for them to crack. An interesting book. By Wm. Heart. Price 40 cents.

The Crisis. By Thomas Paine. Price, 25 cents.

The Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. Price, 75 cents.

The Development of Spirit—After Transition. The origin of religions, and their influence upon the mental development of the human race. By the late M. Faraday. Price 10 cents.

The Discovered Country. A very spiritual book, given through the mediumship of the late Carlyle Petersilea. Price $1.

The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God. By Dr. Thomson J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

The Dream Child. Reads like an inspiration. Treating clearly upon the laws of affinity, love and the attendant pain and sorrow invariably experienced therewith. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

The Fairy Land of Science. This beautiful book fills a niche in the hearts of the young people. Lyceum library literature. By Arabella B. Buckley. Price $1.50.

The Fountain of Life, or Threefold Power of Sex. A work that should be studied by both man and woman. It is one of the author's most useful and instructive books. By Lois Waisbrooker. Price 50 cts.

The God Idea of the Ancients, or Sex in Religion. A sensible, logical statement of opinion, but not of a revolutionary or sensational nature. A good book all through. By Eliza Burt Gamble. Price $2.25.

The Greatest Thing Ever Known. A dainty, helpful book. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price 35 cents.

The Great Psychological Crime, which claims that subjective mediumship is injurious, is edited by Florence Huntley, author of "The Dream Child" and "Harmonies of Evolution." Price $2.

The Idea of God. By Dr. Paul Carus. Fourth edition. 32 pages. "An effort to purify our 'Idea of God' that it may be greater, sublimer, and more awe-inspiring to future generations than it has ever been yet."—Literary World, London. Paper cover, 15 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization. A trenchant and masterly treatise. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price, 25 cents.

The Kingship of Self-Control. Full of most helpful ideas, and bound in white covers with pretty floral design. By William George Jordan. Price 30 cents.

The Life of Jesus. By Ernest Renan. Translated from the original French. Price, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

The Life Radiant. For every one in every walk of life. By Lilian Whiting. Cloth binding. Price, $1.

The Lover's World. A Wheel of Life. Treating on the subjects of love, marriage and parenthood. By Dr. Alice B. Stockham. "The Lover's World, garnered sheaves from the wisdom of books and life's experiences, is now returned to the heart of humanity." Price, silk cloth, $2.25.

The Majesty of Calmness. By William George Jordan. Price 30 cts.

The Missing Link of Modern Spiritualism. A most valuable book, giving a history of early Spiritualism. Written by Leah Fox Underhill of the Fox Sisters. Reduced to $1.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature. Demonstrates the continuity of life and our environment of spiritual influences. Free from all theories of superstition. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 25 cents.

The Mystic Thesaurus. By W. F. Whitehead. Leatherette, Price, $1.

The Other Side of Death. Scientifically examined and carefully described by C. W. Leadbeater. Price, $1.50.

The Romance of Jude. A story of the time of Christ, given through the mediumship of Mrs. Longley. Cloth bound. Price, 50 cents.

The Power of Truth or Individual Problems and Possibilities. It is excellent. By William George Jordan. Price 75 cents.

The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional. This is a most valuable book. It comes from an ex-priest, whose character is above reproach. By Father Chiniquy. Price $1.

The Prophets of Israel. Popular sketches from Old Testament History, than which no branch of science, in the last generation, has undergone a more profound revolution. By Carl Heinrich Cornell. Price 25c.

The Principles of Light and Color. Including The Harmonic Laws of the Universe, The Etherio Atomic Philosophy of Force, Chromo Chemistry, Chromo Therapeutics, and The General Philosophy of Fine Forces, Together with Numerous Discoveries and Practical Applications. Illustrated by more than two hundred engravings and four-colored plates. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Price $5.

The Relations of Science to the Phenomena of Life. Ideas of life scientifically expressed in contradistinction from the old theories. By Spirit Professor M. Faraday. Price 10 cents.

The Religion of Spiritualism, Its Phenomena and Philosophy. This work was written by that noble modern savior and grand man—Rev. Samuel Watson. A marvelous work. Price $1.

The Soul. Its Nature, Relations and Expression in the Human Embodiments. This is clearly a book on re-embodiment, or the principles of reincarnation. By the guides of Cora L. V. Richmond. Price $1.

The Soul of Things. These three volumes are among the most popular works ever written in explanation of the Spiritual philosophy. By William and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. Price $1.50 each; postage 15 cts.

The Soul's Song of Triumph. A prose poem by Harrison D. Barrett. Price 10 cents.

The Spiritual Alps, and How We Ascend Them. A few thoughts on "How to reach that altitude where spirit is supreme and all things are subject to it." By Moses Hull. Price, cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death, and Its To-Morrow. The Spiritualistic idea of Death, heaven and hell. A logical statement, proven both by facts and the Bible. By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

The Spiritual Significance. By Lilian Whiting. This book is all that the name implies—a spiritual book. Price $1.

The Spiritual Wreath. A new collection of words and music for the choir, the congregation and the social circle. Containing 64 pages. By S. W. Tucker, author of many musical publications. Price 15 cents.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. A book of short stories, written expressly to interest and instruct the young. A good work for Lyceums. By Susan H. Wixon. Price $1.

The Sunday Question. A historical and critical review, with replies to an objector. Its motto: All time too sacred to do wrong; no time too sacred to do good. Price 15 cents.

The Talmud. Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry and legends. Also sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polang. Price, cloth, $1.

The To-Morrow of Death, or the Future Life According to Science. Is just what it purports to be—what the title indicates—in every chapter. By Louis Figuier. Price, cloth, $1.50.

The Unknown. By the scientific writer, Camille Flammarion. Price, $2.

The Widow's Mite and Other Psychological Phenomena. A new book of 538 pages by I. K. Funk. A most remarkable and valuable book. Price $2.

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

From Paris comes an amusing story of a medium, who was arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses. She gained the confidence of a rich widow, and gave her messages from her departed husband. He was 76 when he died, but he told his fond old wife that he had regained his youth, and when she came to him she would find the beautiful ideal she married in early life. He wanted her to come to him, for his boarding-house fare, although superior to anything on earth, was not agreeable to him. He wanted her to superintend the cooking! He advised her to give her effects to the medium, which message she obeyed, and then he told her when she would die, and this also she did to the hour.

That medium, no doubt, was a fraud, a cute and clever cheat, and merited the punishment she received.

But Spiritualism is not the only cloak in which fraud may clothe itself. As a parallel take the press report from Hebronville, a town in the state claiming to be the focus of American culture.

"Religious frenzy characterized the closing sessions of a holiness campmeeting at Hebronville to-day. The afternoon and evening meetings were addressed by Edward A. Ferguson, an evangelist, and he painted such a weird picture of the sins of his auditors, of the terrible future which will be theirs if they do not give up their worldly ways, their gold and diamond baubles, that his words were taken literally by many present. Women removed their watches and their rings, sobbing as they did so; crying that they were poor, miserable sinners, they placed at the appointed place for receiving offerings. A hostler for an Attleboro manufacturer gave $50. Women jumped and shouted, and so did men."

In what does this evangelist differ from the fake? She pretended to give messages from the husband; he from Jesus Christ and God Almighty! The result was the same. She gathered in the widow's possessions, he the valuables of a crowd he had excited to frenzy by his fake piety.

The Entombed Past.

The wide extent of Greek colonization is shown by recent excavations made near the estuary of the Dnieper, site of the ancient Greek city Olbia. It was a colony of Miletus 655 years B. C. and the center of a great trade with the interior as far north, it is claimed as the borders of the Northern Sea. A report of the progress of the excavations has the following interesting paragraph:

"Olbia was destroyed by the Getae about 70 to 60 B. C., but it revived, and when it was visited by Dion Chrysostom about 100 A. D., it was again a flourishing city. The excavations that are now in progress upon the site of this city are being carried out by M. Formakovski under the auspices of the Russian Archaeological Society. Mr. Formakovski has succeeded in unearthing extensive portions of the walls and foundations of the original city, which date back from the seventh century B. C. The masonry is identical with that of the ruins of ancient cities excavated in various parts of Greece. Before this depth was reached, two different strata of walls and basements bearing descriptions of the fourth and the first centuries B. C. were encountered. The stone blocks composing the ruins of houses, temples, etc., in these upper strata are of remarkably exact area, square proportions, and excellently dressed. The more solid constructive work is, however, found in the remains of the original city. At this depth there was unearthed a perfectly preserved wine cellar. Some fifty huge jars or vases had evidently contained red wine, now turned to a light powdery substance. A large collection of valuable antiques in gold, marble and ancient pottery has also been found in these newly uncovered ruins."

In those days when war was the occupation of nations, the capture of cities too often meant their destruction. This terrible fact is recorded in the ruins of cities, superimposed on the ruins of other cities. In this instance above the splendid architecture of Olbia two other cities have been built, destroyed, and buried under the accumulation of the dust of ages.

The Way to Purity of Life.

Foreigners are constantly expressing their opinion, adversely, to the freedom which is given to American women. They have been taught that opportunity is the one essential for the manifestation of immorality. They seem to have no conception of that strength of character that resists temptation.

The freedom of the American woman, the trust placed in her ability to care for herself, has developed all the noble traits, independence, self-reliance, and keen wit, that make her superior to the women of all other nations of the present and the past, intellectually and morally. Those who believe that women are weak and require constant espionage, should study the object lesson furnished by France. The Cornhill Magazine has the following regarding the relations of the sexes in that nation:

"The word 'courtship' has no equivalent in the French tongue, because the thing does not exist. Stolen tete-a-tetes even furtive kisses, may, of course, be indulged in, but only under a modified chaperonage, the half-shut eye of parents or guardians. No young French lady would be permitted, for instance, to undertake a cycling expedition with her future husband. Still less could she take train with him for the purpose of visiting relations in the country, were the journey of half an hour's duration only. Lovemaking begins with the honeymoon."

With all these safeguards, the morality of the French people is not proverbial. The distrust of women expressed in laws and customs leads to the production of character consonant thereto.

The strength and glory of a pople lies in the chivalrous estimation and trust in the good sense and moral integrity entertained of its women.

Parental Training.

Children are brought up differently from what they used to be, so much that the more conservative think they are not brought up at all. The goody-goody, Sunday-school child has disappeared, and even the numerous books he used to read on his way to heaven are supplanted with stories of "strenuous" lives. The rod has become as unpopular as a corrective, with the public, as it ever has been with the children. It is thought a relic of barbarism. The new method of government of children is well expressed in the following extract from an English exchange:

"The parent should never be domineering nor egotistical in his relation to the child. The idea that in order to gain obedience it is necessary to make the child feel that its papa is a 'big, powerful man that might do something awful' if it does not obey, is a relic of barbarism and has no place in a well-regulated home. The continual bossing of children, just because the parent is physically able to enforce his authority, is not only tyranny of the most inhuman sort, but is contrary to all laws of development and good government. The true parent is never an egotist, a boss, a scold, a harsh critic, or a fault-finder; but a protector, a counsellor, a wise, sympathetic critic, and a loving friend. He never makes uncomplimentary comparisons between self and the child, nor belittles its efforts, no matter how crude and ineffectual. His look is sympathy, his word is encouragement, his smile is inspiration, and his touch is tenderness and love."

But this advice, however applicable to some children is not to all. Some children can be reasoned with, and others cannot be. The great majority of children are born savages, and their education, especially their moral training is to civilize them, and train them to be gentle, sympathetic and just.

This education should have begun many centuries ago, and the grandparents well advanced in its acquirement. There are children that can understand no corrective measure other than force. Jesse Pomeroy, the boy fiend, who delighted in seeing suffering, and tortured animals and playfellows for pleasure, could not be reasoned with. Restraint was the only means.

This is a matter not of position in the social scale as much as of organization. Children of delightful character are found in the lowest walks as well as the highest, and not always the angelic little Fauntleroy is the most lovable.

A lovely lady with a lovely little boy with curls, was riding in a street car. Opposite her sat two ministers, returning from conference. "Ah, brother," said one, "what would we not give for the sweet purity of such an angelic child. Truly did the Savior say, 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven.'" Just then they overheard the boy say to his mother, "When I get to Grandma's, I'm going to have my hair cut off, and stop playing d—n angel!"

The fact is that children are not alike, and rules applicable to one will not be to another.

The most potent influence is example. Whatever may be the training, the example of parents will be followed. As you desire your children to be, be yourself. If the mother is loud and hasty of speech, and rude in manners, she cannot expect her children to not imitate her ways.

A restraint put on children is always resisted, and if it is made so heavy that the will ceases to rebel, the child becomes a weakling and a nobody.

DONA NOBIS PACEM.

Only the dead are ours.
Oh, friends, I hold my hands, such weary hands,
With infinite longing toward celestial bowers
Come to me from the fadeless Summer Lands
For I am weary and grown tired of grief,
Heartsick of fruitless quests, and wounded sore
By this world's bitterest arrows, and no more
Can dreams of future brightness bring relief.

All whom my heart held dear
Lean to me from the silence. Let me rest
With the old sense of comfort strong and near,
But for a moment sheltered on your breast.
For here there is no shelter. Bleak and wild
The path leads onward where my bleeding feet
Must with the thorns or burning plow-shares meet.
Mother, the night is deep about your child.

Spirit to spirit lean.
I feel you through this blind material clay.
Only the veil of silence slips between
To bar you from my longing eyes away.
Open the door to that unshadowed life,
Lay your cool hand of healing on my heart
And bid this fever-dream of life depart,
For I am grown so weary of the strife.

Earth's bubbles break and fly.
Give me the cup immortal. Dead Sea fruit
Long have I eaten and my lips are dry.
That acrid poison sears their singing mute.
How shall I voice for others faith and trust
While all my soul within the shadow lies?
How shall I point the way to Paradise
With blinded sight, and forehead in the dust?

For them if not for me
Lift up a light that I bear witness here
In certain knowledge of a dawn to be.
Unveil the radiant splendor lying near;
I am too tired to pray to any God.
I need the human hand, the human touch,
The mortal love which bears and suffers much,
And no stern master with a chastening rod.

Only the dead are ours.
Flesh of our flesh and mortal once as we.
Now safely sheltered where no tempest lowers.
Lean then, my dead, and comfort bear to me.
That seeing, hearing, clasping hand in hand
I may rise up made strong to witness here,
How true, eternal, living, loving, near,
Abide the happy souls of Summer Land.

BEATRICE ST. GEORGE.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In "Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

WAS IT IRON?

Wm. Denton Is Called Upon to Explain Matters.

Somewhat more than a year ago, Spirit William Denton, through the columns of The Progressive Thinker informed us of certain of his proceedings in the spirit world in which he told us of the use of locks and keys. Recently an article purporting to come from the same source and published in the same paper, informs us that he William Denton has found no iron in that world. Now in behalf of myself and many other readers of The Progressive Thinker, I should like to ask Mr. Denton of what material were those locks and composed?

The writer of "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands" informed us tnat he met with the spiritual counterpart of iron.

In The Progressive Thinker of June 4 is a communication signed William Denton in which he tells us that airships are to be used to slaughter whole armies and thus bring war to an end. Hundreds of years ago the church persecuted and destroyed millions of persons in order to put an end to what the church chose to call heresy. Was it destroyed? Are there not more heretics in the world to-day than ever before? The statement is made that Benjamin Franklin is at the head of the movement. Are the affairs of this world in the hands of one so young as Benjamin Franklin? Where are the countless hosts who have inhabited this planet in all the ages that are past, and why do they allow those who have but lately risen from earth to return and educate its inhabitants through fear, the old orthodox way, and moreover I would like to ask what is to follow this wholesale slaughter of armies? Who will use those air ships when the armies have been exterminated? Will anyone be safe? What will prevent any person who can secure the use of an air ship from following the example of the "progressive spirits" who would murder to prevent murder, from using them to wreak vengeance on private individuals or whole families or communities, should they give offense?

And would they not be used by any two or more parties, as strikers and their employers, against one another, and make life a more fearful thing than it is to-day?

Whence come wars? In every country the people are obliged to support the aristocracy of the state and in most of them in addition to that the aristocracy of the church; while back of and supported by both is still another and more powerful aristocracy of lords who compel wars that they may wring from the toilers of the nations the wealth with which they hope to enable their descendants to own the earth, literally to own every foot of land which the earth contains.

Is there a nation to-day that is not paying interest on its war debts? How long shall peace reign in any nation? Only so long as shall be required to recover its financial standing sufficiently to sustain another shock of war, when the lords will contrive to make an excuse for war. Who are these lords and are they titled?

Who are their agents ever on the alert to secure for them the plunder, and who study the game of war as players at chess study as to which king shall be moved next. Look about you and answer for yourselves. Do you ever hear members of the so-called Christian clergy advocate war? and quoting in support of their claims passages from the teachings of one whom they say is the prince of peace? And how of the state? In our public schools to-day little children are taught military drill and little boys of seven and eight years go home from school to boast and bluster of the soldier's life and to teach the older members of the family what a glorious being a soldier is, a hero to be venerated, while in anticipation of the life of the soldier he soon learns to think and talk of killing whomever he may meet, practicing in the meantime on small animals and in mockery, on his own small companions. Is it any wonder that such children grow up with murder in the heart? and if as a man the sudden impulse to kill shall seize such a one and he does not resist, who will be blamed? Probably his mother; and learned (?) men will talk of prenatal conditions. Of what avail the mother's effort to cultivate the sentiment of mercy in the heart of her son, when the public schools with its war agents comes between; forgetting that "as the twig is bent the tree is inclined." Upon whom will fall the weapon when the pent-up war spirit shall force him to act? Perhaps upon herself, or perhaps upon his father. Who will try and sentence him for murder? The state which taught it to him. And now we are told that "progressive spirits" (?) are to control mortals to invent air ships, from which, armies and later, no doubt, anyone who may offend shall be destroyed.

I for one hope that the air ship will prove a failure and do not feel grateful to those spirits who are assisting mortals to invent them. There are some things the invention of which should be deferred until we have emerged from savagery.

What, then, is the remedy? Let the children be taught the truth, that war is murder and that all wars are a disgrace to humanity; and let parents be taught that a government that will establish schools in which little children are taught to look forward to the time when they shall be called to go forth to murder their fellow men, and which at the same time, supports other schools in which the same children are taught, "Thou shalt not kill," and "God is love," is a government which needs to be improved upon.

Let the mothers be the only teachers on this question and they will teach their children that war is murder, and in time they will understand and teach them, too, that there is no excuse for war, that may not be removed by the united voices of people, and when all children shall have learned these lessons war will be no more.

If the lords want war, let them fight, but let the people refuse to fight, and suffer and die that lords may continue to draw their revenue from the toil of the world's millions, who yearly impoverish themselves that they may be the slaves of lords.

Mothers of America, it is time for you to look to the future of your country, remembering that peace and the spirit of murder though it be called war, cannot dwell together, and that you demand the right to teach your little sons what right really is. Their moral training will be safest with yourselves.

There should be a new meaning for the word patriotism. The support and protection of the homes of the people in peace, and the effort to abolish war should be understood to be a part of the true office of government, and the patriotic citizen should be he who demands of government such protection.

The man who raises his hand against his fellow-man for reason of his own, is tried, sentenced and executed as a murderer, by the state, while he who bears the weapon of the state, and goes forth to commit as many murders as he can, because forsooth the state is angry or in reality because the lords have offered certain persons of influence a share in the plunder, is called a patriot and a hero and his occupation is looked upon as sacred.

Will Mr. Denton please tell us more on these subjects and remove, if he can, the doubts of the same?

VALENTINE ROXBURY.

Minneapolis, Minn.

NATURALNESS OF SPIRIT LIFE.

It is difficult for those who have not paid attention to the subject to understand the naturalness of spirit life. Our conception of the reality of things is based upon physical sensations, and anything (save sound and odors and the recognized imponderables) that does not respond to our sense of sight or touch is deemed to be formless and unreal. This conception is a materialistic one founded upon the erroneous idea of the sufficiency of our physical organs to cover the whole range of natural phenomena; there are none other, super-natural is a misnomer.

Science has demonstrated that there are sounds both above and below the perception of the most sensitive physical ears, and colors beyond the perception of the most acute physical eye, and clairvoyance—both induced and natural, has proved that there are forms real (and substantial in a sense) outside the range of physical vision or touch. Form implies substance, but not necessarily the same kind of substance we are familiar with; we cannot conceive of form without substance, and, if the forms akin to human constantly seen by seers and clairvoyants, have substance, so also must the worlds or spheres in which they live. Deleuze, Billot, Cahagnet, and other early magnetists, having no belief in a spirit world, were annoyed in their experiments by the frequent descriptions of dead (?) people whom they professed to see, and deeming them illusory, checked them whenever they began to describe the forms. The persistence with which they recurred to the subject, eventually induced them to allow their sensitives to interrogate these forms, the result being the recognition of spiritual entities who had left their mortal bodies, and were living under new and higher conditions. The late Dr. J. B. Motherwell, who was one of the earliest and most successful experimenters in mesmerism in Australia, had the same experience, and up to the time we made his acquaintance (1866) had persistently ignored his sensitive's allusions to what he called "dead people." Our conversations with him, however, quite altered his views, and opened up a new and interesting field of research to him. These, and other sensitives who followed quite independent of each other, described not only the forms, but the world or sphere in which they lived, with its hills and vales, its streams, lakes, trees and flowers, as real, and apparently as substantial to their interior vision as the material world. It only requires the cultivation of that interior vision to enable a large percentage of humanity to see whilst yet in the mortal body the beauties of that higher world which they are destined to inhabit when they shuffle off this mortal coil.

But all are not sufficiently sensitive, and but few who are so are favorably positioned to apply themselves to the cultivation of their interior powers. Harmonious surroundings and the absence of business worries are essential to the individual cultivation of clean vision. The development of clairvoyance and lucidity, however, may be accelerated by mesmerism, but this should not be attempted empirically, it is too serious a matter; both operator and subject should thoroughly understand what they are entering upon and have perfect confidence in each other, the magnetizer should have singleness of purpose and a high object in view, if selfishness intrudes little good will result. As in all scientific experiments and discoveries the majority of people have to accept (and do accept) the evidence of experts; so in psychic science must the majority, who are unable to give the time and conditions for personal experiment, be content to take the evidence of those more favored, who, either in themselves possess the power, or have the control of instruments whose vision extends beyond the normal range. Few of those who have not paid serious attention to the subject are aware of the immense amount of evidence that has been accumulated during the past half century, ample to convince any unbiased mind. Spiritualistic literature is now easy of access, and those who cannot afford to purchase it will find a number of standard works in the Melbourne Public Library, whilst, for a small subscription, they can obtain books for home reading from the Victorian Association of Spiritualists, or the Melbourne Progressive Lyceum.—Harbinger of Light.

Hay-Fever and Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to ith wonderful powers.

Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering and had no return of the disease. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years' suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter., writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years suffering. Hundreds of others give similar testimony. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the medicine before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

KEEP POSTED

In Current Spiritualistic and Occult News.

You can do it by reading each week The Progressive Thinker. The Philosophy and the Spiritualistic and Occult phenomena it contains each week, is the marvel of the age. No one can afford to be without the paper. Its price is within the reach of all.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

THE MATTER OF DIET.

Its Relation to the Genesis of Crime.

Of all the delusions that have afflicted the human mind the most cruel and diabolical in its results upon the individual and human institutions, is that which looks upon every child as "born in sin," and with a natural and inevitable tendency to sin; that is, to incipient crime. It predicates the criminal in every child born under the sun, and thus refers the genesis of crime to a malevolent Nature, or the demoniacal mandate of a malevolent God.

It is strange how an old lie, especially when it dons an academic hat or an ecclesiastical gown, will hold in unquestioning assent some of the sanest souls of every generation, until, as Emerson says, "a thinker is let loose upon this planet," and men wonder why some self evident truth had not appealed to them before. The human race in every century of its history has not been wanting in philosophers and scientists who told their contemporaries that the making of a good man as well as a healthy one is largely a matter of diet. It seems strange, too, how long men have been breeding splendid horses and intelligent dogs, without recognizing the fact that food and environment are the essential factors in breeding kind and intelligent animals, and that man is no exception to the animal kingdom.

In the Palo Alto stables where not only were the horses scientifically fed, but an oath or an unkind word or tone, even, were forbidden in their presence under penalty of instant dismissal of the offender, the horses became famous the world over for their gentleness, speed, fine mettle and endurance. At the famous dog kennels of the world where dogs are bred to be as intelligent and more moral and devotedly kind than most men, food is the main factor depended upon to attain this end. A famous dog trainer, writing to Dr. Kellogg, who had sent his magnificent St. Bernard to him for training, said he could not teach his dogs anything if he fed them meat. They were too stupid and irritable when fed upon a meat diet.

The Albany (New York) Orphan Asylum a few years ago had some especially irritable and intractable children, who seemed to be perfect types of the orthodox doctrine of original sin. The officers of the institution happened to be thinkers as well as officials, and it occurred to them that the orthodox meat diet might have the same effect upon children as upon dogs and might be accountable for a good deal of orthodox original sin. The results as given in a yearly report of the asylum are not only a striking commentary on the orthodox doctrine of original sin but also upon what our criminologists term "the increasing tendencies to crime among children."

"Flesh and soups," says the Report, "were wholly banished * * * and there were reformed habits in regard to sleeping, air, clothing and exercise. During the first three years in which the old system was followed from four to six children, and often more, were continually on the sick list. A physician was regularly in demand, once, twice, or three times a week, and deaths were frequent. During this whole period there were between thirty and forty deaths. After the new system was fairly tested, the infirmary was entirely vacated, and the services of the nurse and physician no longer needed. For more than two years there was neither sickness nor death in the establishment. In the twelve months succeeding this there were three deaths, but these were deaths of new inmates.

"Since the new regimen has been fully adopted there has been a remarkable increase of health, strength, activity, vivacity, cheerfulness and contentment among the children. The change of temper is very great. They have become less turbulent, irritable, peevish and discontented, and far more manageable, gentle, peaceable and kind to each other."

One of the superintendents also adds:

"There has been a great increase in their mental activity and power; the quickness and acumen of their perception, the vigor of their apprehension, and their power of retention daily astonish me."

Every mother believes her baby to be an angel. Her instinct is correct, all the orthodox dogmas to the contrary notwithstanding. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," said the world's greatest ethical teacher. A generation of such children, fed upon Nature's pure and simple foods, and given as kind and humane and Christian environment as the horses in the Palo Alto stables, would do more to bring in the reign of righteousness taught by the same great teacher than all the evangelists and missionaries can bring about in a meat-fed, nicotinized, alcoholized humanity in a thousand years.

"The eating of beefsteak makes me a brute," said Byron, which is only a personal statement of truth, reiterated by the great spiritual teachers of every age. To keep the brute out of a man and the poet, i. e., the creator, in means the spiritual as well as the physical and moral regeneration of man. Saint Beuve declared every man was born two-thirds poet. The normal child, happily born, instinctively feels its kinship with bud and bird and all sentient life. "Please don't step on it, mamma; it hurts," exclaimed a little boy friend of ours, whose mother's foot was in danger of crushing a woodland violet. It was the poet speaking with the child's lips. A diet which transforms this child, two-thirds poet, into a man two-thirds beast, is manifestly not in harmony with that law of ethical evolution, which has made the higher mammalia, and especially the primates, vegetarians. Vegetarianism, so far from being a reform against Nature, is the reform in harmony with Nature, and its highest ethical law. To find the genesis of crime we have only to trace the first fundamental factor in individual and national life, the food customs, and especially the flesh-eating customs, which by Nature's immutable law, transforms the poet-born child into a man lower in his appetites and more cruel in his passions than his brother carnivora of the forest.—Vegetarian Magazine.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

TEMPLE HEIGHTS.

A Grand Camp in the Good Old State of Maine.

The Temple Heights Spiritual Corporation will hold its annual session, this being the twenty-second, at their beautiful grounds on the banks of the Penobscot Bay in the good old state of Maine, on the dates of August 13 to 21 inclusive. Arrangements have been made for a very interesting session of camp-meeting and it is expected that a large attendance will be the outcome. The officers of the corporation are: President, J. G. Harding, Waldo; vice-president, A. T. Stevens, Belfast; secretary, Orrin J. Dickey, Belfast; treasurer, R. A. Packard, Northport. Directors: Benj. Colson, Bangor; M. R. Webber, Fairfield; Geo. W. Morse, Belmont; Mrs. M. W. Williams, Central Falls, R. I.; Mrs. N. H. Rhoades, Rockland; A. J. Skidmore, Liberty; Mrs. O. S. Rich, Bangor.

Temple Heights is charmingly located on the banks of the Penobscot river, with wooded hills in the rear and springs of cool, refreshing waters, healthful and attractive. Temple Heights appeals to the lover of natural beauty with a little of the artificial. To the lover of a spiritual campground Temple Heights affords all that can be desired, having good drainage, sloping land, a large park with plenty of seats, and spacious auditorium where the meetings are annually held.

The good beaches, and mountains rising a thousand feet in the rear, easy of access and affording delightful views, makes this place one of the most desirable as summer home. Only six miles from a railroad station and having daily steamboat lines and a good pier, with the quiet surroundings, or amusements if one desires, combined with the sweet spiritual influences as is in the gathering of ancient Indian tribes in this spot in years gone by. The sunsets are fine, the Penobscot being likened to the Bay of Naples. Cottages are plenty and rates low. All are welcome and made so by the management of the grounds.

The scenery has no equal and the drives are beautiful, glimpses here and there of the bay, showing the thousands of little islands, with sail and steamboats plying over the water surface. The sailing is safe, boating and bathing good, combined with mountain climbing, fine beaches and fishing. The spring waters here possess medicinal value, having been the center of an early Indian camping ground.

The grounds are laid out in streets and avenues and the lots and cottages are all pleasantly located. The meetings are always of interest and this season there will be presented an excellent programme. An invitation is extended to all to visit the grounds and partake of the beautiful philosophy, or absorb from nature the benefits they can. During the week of camp-meeting a small admission is charged daily or season ticket being sold. Daily announcements will be made of the changes and features of the program.

This season the platform will be graced with the presence of some of the ablest workers in spiritual circles. Mrs Effie I. Webster, Lynn, Mass.; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Westfield, N. Y., and Edgar W. Emerson, Manchester, N. H.

Madame Marie Foster, of Boston, Mass., a well-known soloist, will be present during the season and will render selections in connection with Congregational singing at the meetings.

Tests will be given each day from the platform by Mrs. Effie I. Webster, Carrie E. S. Twing and Edgar W. Emerson.

On Tuesday evening, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing will give an entertainment in the auditorium and a seance on Friday vening for the benefit of the association. On Wednesday evening there will be dancing at the auditorium for the young people, and on Thursday evening will occur the annual concert, with a pleasant programme. Saturday evening the Ladies' Aid entertainment. Other evenings will be given to social meetings and seances.

ORRIN J. DICKEY.

Thinks a Change Should Be Made.

To the Editor:—Unless the constitution and by-laws are changed both in our State and National associations, there is going to be a material reduction in the number of local societies that will affiliate with the state organizations, at least there will be quite a number of local societies in this state that will sever their connection with the state organization unless some change is made, and there are at least a few societies that have never taken out a charter under the state organization who would do so provided a proper change could be made, in the by-laws and constitution. Under the present rule the state organization is not necessarily run by the delegates from the local societies, but may be run by persons who pay in their dollar, regardless of whether they are delegates from subordinate societies, members of any organization or even Spiritualists.

Under such conditions any city where the state organization is located can run the whole business regardless of the wishes of the local societies, if they can rustle dollars enough, which of course they can do if they have any local interests to push to the front, for sometimes one dollar will do it, and it seldom takes more than ten dollars to set at naught the majority vote of the legal delegates present.

Local societies where such conditions exist, who wish to deal fairly with their associates and promote the best interest of the cause, will withdraw their support from organizations which can be run in that way. I understand that any person can become a member of the National Spiritualists' Association for life by paying twenty-five dollars, and have all the rights and privileges of a regularly elected delegate, and thus it may be seen that by the payment of this small sum by an antagonist, the wishes of a majority of the state associations might be defeated.

This condition of things has no precedence among properly organized societies. These things will have to be changed if organized Spiritualism ever makes much advancement. State associations should be composed exclusively of delegates duly elected from the local societies of the state, who should elect their president and other officers, and they should all hold their positions until their successors are duly elected.

The National Association should admit no one as a member unless he had first been duly elected as such by some state organization, and no local organization should be allowed more than one representative in the state association, and the state associations should be limited to one representative in the National Association.

Under such regulations the acts of the National Association would always conform to the wishes of the majority of the state organizations, and all acts of state organizations would please a majority of local organizations who were represented; under this arrangement the business affairs of the various organizations would be conducted in the interest of all, money could not defeat the wishes of the majority or be shoved into the pockets of the few. The foregoing we believe to be the sentiments of our society and we would be glad to hear from all who are interested upon this subject. Especially would we like to hear from the local organizations in this state.

JAMES L. DOW.

Manhattan, Kansas.

Read This List of PREMIUMS.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

1. The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, our leading Premium Book this year. Price 25 cents.
2. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Price 25 cents.
3. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Price 25 cents.
4. Seers of the Ages, by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 25 cents.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 40 cents each.

We have only ELEVEN Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any two of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.
Any three of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.
Any four of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.
Any five of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.
Any six of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.
Any seven of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.
Any eight of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.
Any nine of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, prive $2.90.
Any ten of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Lastly, all of these ELEVEN Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.35, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

OUR ELEVEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.35.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
6.—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Transcribed by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.
11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Address all orders to

J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Illinois.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. F. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

A Terrible Indictment.

It Is Presented With Masterly Skill Against the Anthropomorphic God of the Bible, Which Has Played Such an Important Part in the History of the World, and Which Figures Conspicuously in Every War That Occurs, so Claimed—In This Indictment the Brutal Savage Nature of This Anthropomorphic God Is Laid Bare With a Skillful Hand.

Man, in his primitive state, was doubtless a very weak creature both mentally and physically.

Living in the primeval jungle, he had to encounter numerous venomous reptiles and ferocious beasts. He frequently witnessed terrific hurricanes, calamitous earthquakes and disastrous floods, without knowing whence, how or why they came. His life was a continuous struggle for existence in which the fittest alone survived. These conditions filled him with fear until it became a part of his nature.

And he necessarily transmitted this quality to his children, by hereditary descent, until it became the most dominant characteristic of mankind. Some of the subtle and cunning ones, in this, saw their opportunity.

They would feed and stimulate the fears of the common people and soon completely control and govern them.

In pursuance of their clever scheme they manufactured an anthropomorphic god and endowed him with suitable attributes to reign over the people, and constituted themselves his prime ministers or priests to receive and deliver and interpret his wonders to them.

It was necessary to make their god a composite character, being good or bad according to his own sovereign will. They made him a god of love, mercy and benevolence to all that implicitly obeyed his commandments, and just the opposite to all that disobeyed his orders.

To fully answer the purpose for which they made him, he must needs be a god of hideous and wrathful quality to all that ignored his authority.

Knowing that jealousy and vengeance are the most direful elements in a dangerous character, they endowed their god fully with these hateful attributes.

They said to the people, "The Lord is a jealous god and avengeth and is full of wrath, the Lord taketh vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies."

"I, the Lord thy God, and a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me."

Knowing hate to be the most cogent factor in leading a jealous one to seek revenge, they invest him with this loathsome quality and make him say, "Was not Esau Jacob's brother? Yet I loved Jacob and hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste."

And knowing that one who is given to spasmodic fits of anger and wrath, is always exceedingly dangerous, they endow him with this characteristic.

Moses felt and expressed his inability to lead Israel out of Egypt and the "the anger of the Lord was kindled against him." And when this god saw what Aaron and the people had done while Moses was up in the mountain, he became furious with rage, and said to Moses: "Now, therefore, let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them."

Moses, however, was much better than his god. He argued the case with him, reminded him of his covenant with their fathers, and called his attention to what the Egyptians would say about it, and urged him to repent of this evil against his people.

In fact, he touched his majesty up on his honor, and succeeded in pacifying him, and he repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people. And now having made their god a terrible monster, endowing him with jealousy, hate, revenge, wrath and fury, they proceed to tell the people some startling and terrible things which he had done.

In the long ago, certain angels who kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he cast down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness,

Because the people did not obey his orders, he sent a flood upon the surface of the whole earth and drowned the entire human family and every living thing except one family and a few animals to replenish the earth again.

Because the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, two ancient cities, did not please him, he rained upon them brimstone and fire out of heaven and burned them, and because Madame Lot turned her head and looked back to see the fire, he turned her into a pillar of salt. Because the king of Egypt would not obey his edicts, he sent ten terrible plagues upon that country.

He turned into blood the Nile river and all the other waters of Egypt.

He filled the land with frogs so that they were in the houses, in the bedchambers, upon the beds, in the ovens, and in the kneading troughs.

He turned all of the dust of the land into lice so that they covered man and beast throughout all Egypt.

He sent a grievous swarm of flies into all parts of the land so that the whole earth was corrupted by them.

He sent an epidemic of murrain and killed all the cattle, horses, asses, camels and sheep in Egypt.

He sent a plague of boils upon man and beast throughout all the land; however, the boils could not hurt the beasts since they had all died of the murrain.

He sent a very furious hailstorm which killed all that were in the fields, both man and beasts, though the beasts had all been killed before by the murrain.

He sent a plague of locusts which darkened the whole land and ate every green thing which the hail had left.

He sent darkness, thick darkness, which could be felt, over the whole land of Egypt for three days.

He killed the first-born in every Egyptian family, and also the first-born of all the beasts, though they had all been killed twice before.

And finally he drowned Pharaoh's entire army in the sea, men and horses, his horses having all been killed before.

And because Korah, Dathan and Abiram, three of his servants, took exceptions to the rule of Moses, he caused an earthquake to swallow them and all that appertained unto them.

And his anger being kindled against Israel, he caused King David to number the people, and then, because he numbered them, sent a pestilence upon Israel and killed seventy thousand men.

That Joshua might have more time to avenge himself of his enemies and complete their slaughter, he caused the sun and moon to stand still for one whole day.

These with many other cruel and vindictive stories were written in the priests' "Holy Books" that the people might ever know the wrath and fury of their god.

This fabulous anthropomorphic god, through his priests, issued edicts for the control of the people.

One of these specified that the man who would not harken unto the priests that minister before him, should be put to death (Deut. 17:12).

And another specified that one should surely kill his brother, his son, his daughter, his wife or his dearest friend who should secretly suggest the worship of any other god. (Deut. 13: 6-10).

And to stimulate and feed the fears of the people more thoroughly, the priests fabricated a horrid devil and endowed him with ubiquity, guile, mendacity and villainy.

They set him forth as a roaring lion walking about, seeking whom he might devour.

And his chief mission was to lead the people into the pitfalls of ruin and the only way to escape his direful influence was to heed the priests' instructions and obey their god.

And to cap the climax, the priests manufactured an endless hell of torment for all that dared reject the service of their god. For ages they have been haranguing the people about their angry and wrathful god, wily and ubiquitous devil, and sulphuric, burning hell, and have very largely succeeded in keeping them in a state of fear and submission.

"Ye, too, believers of incredible creeds,
Whose faith enshrines the monsters which it breeds,
Who bolder e'en than Nimrod, think to rise,
By nonsense heaped on nonsense to the skies."

It is high time that men and women arise in their might and throw off this ignoble bondage to fear and priestcraft.

In order to escape the thraldom of fear, one must live a wholly upright life.

One that is selfish, covetous and niggardly, necessarily has a guilty conscience which always begets fear.

Homer, in the Iliad, represents that when the Trojans and Greeks were set in battle array before Troy, Paris, whose base conduct had caused the war, sprang forth alone from the Trojan ranks, godlike in beauty, and challenged the Greeks, one and all, to meet him singly in mortal combat.

Menelaus, the husband of the stolen Helen, like a hungry lion, leaped full-armed from his chariot, exulting in the thought that his personal vengeance should be gratified. But conscience made a coward of Paris; he starts back, "as a man that sees a serpent in his path."

The godlike visage grows pale, his knees tremble, and the Trojan champion draws back under the shelter of friends, from the gallant Greek whom he had so basely wronged.

Livy tells us that Sixtus Torquinius, the dishonorer of Lucretia, quailed as no Roman of his blood and rank would otherwise have done, when young Valerius dashed out from the legion to engage him in mortal combat.

And Shakspeare makes a consciousness of guilt cause Macbeth to quail before Macduff.

"Of all men else have I avoided thee,
But get thee back, my soul is too much charged with blood of thine already;
I will not fight with thee."

Men pride themselves on their physical courage and this is praiseworthy, but strange, passing strange, men of great physical courage are often the greatest moral cowards.

In the face of public opinion, they have not the courage to think for themselves, or if they do, have not the courage of their own convictions.

Homer, in the Odyssey, represents Circe as warning Ulysses, in his passing through the strait which divides Sicily from Italy, to avoid the sea monsters, Scylla and Charybdis, that had wrecked so many galleys.

And so we should be careful to steer clear of the dominant Scylla of priestcraft and the debasing Charybdis of fear, religious monsters which have wrecked many a frail bark on the ocean of life.

"Whatever you are, be brave,
The coward is a liar and slave,
Tho' clever at ruses,
And sharp at excuses,
He is a sneaking and pitiful knave,
Whatever you are, be frank,
'Tis better than money or rank,
Still cleave to the right,
Be lovers of light,
Be open, above board and frank."

Union Star, Mo. HENRY BOONE.

THE ETHICS OF PARENTAGE.

In an article reviewing at some length various works on the population question, the Review of Reviews says: "The substitution of reason for instinct as the guide of human beings in the propagation of life has gone on steadily since 1877 unblessed and unguided by the spiritual teachers of mankind. The result is that the duty of child-bearing is increasingly ignored. But the practice of limiting families can only be defended from an ethical point of view if it is strictly conditioned by a recognition of the imperative obligation of all those who can afford to provide the necessary conditions for healthful support and development of a large family to breed up to the maximum of their capacity. Otherwise the whole of the future is handed over to the classes who exercise no restraint, who are animated solely by the gratification of physical instinct, and who litter the world with children whom they can neither feed, clothe, nor educate properly. In other words, the right to restrict families within the limits of health conditions can only be recognized with safety when it is indissolubly linked together with the recognition of the duty of the healthy well-to-do pair to produce as many citizens for the future state as their health and wealth render possible."

HAS VISION OF SON DYING.

New York, July 23.—"I had a presentiment that something dreadful was going to happen to Michael," tearfully exclaimed the mother of 8-year-old Michael O'Dea, who was drowned in the East River. At her home 205 West Sixty-Fifth street, Mrs. O'Dea told of how at 3 o'clock she had a presentiment foreboding evil for little Michael.

At that moment the boy was drowning in the East river off Seventy-Second street. He had gone bathing there with his brother Johnny and George O'Leary. Michael could not swim, but he took his brother's dare and plunged in beyond his depth.

"It came over me so sudden," said Mrs. O'Dea, "that I was nearly prostrated. Try as I would, I could not dispel the horrible feeling that something had happened to my boy. It seemed a vision of death to me. I went to several neighbors and tried to keep my mind off all thoughts of danger. Finally, in sheer desperation, I appealed to my friends to help me find my son. If I could have been brought to him at once all would have been well. I went from house to house, but could get no trace of him. Just as I was giving up all hope and almost fainting I met my son Johnny carrying Michael's clothes."

Logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools and the beacons of wise men. The only question which any wise man can ask himself is, whether a doctrine is true or false. Consequences will take care of themselves.—Huxley.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by aiding you with a strong, stimulating Sodo and Rhubarb Compound, or patent Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 28 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send in Your Dates and Names of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper corrections as to dates, etc., can be made.

Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

The camp session of the M. V. S. A., Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, will open July 31 and close Aug. 28. For programmes address Mollie B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

Maple Dell Park, Ohio.

The American Spiritual, Religious and Science Union will hold a camp session at Maple Dell, commencing July 24 and closing Sept. 11. F. H. Sherwood, secretary, Mantua, Ohio. The grounds will be open for family reunions, Sunday-school picnics, and Sunday meetings, etc., from June 1 to Sept. 15.

Lily Dale Camp, N. Y.

This favorite place of resort opens July 15 and closes September 14. For full programmes address the president, Mrs. Abby L. Pettengill, Lily Dale, N. Y.

Lake Sunapee Camp, N. H.

Lake Sunapee Spiritualist camp-meeting commences July 31 and closes August 28—four weeks and five Sundays, at Blodgett's Landing, N. H. For programmes address Lorenzo Worthen, secretary, Hillsboro Bridge, N. H., until July 25; after then at Blodgett's Landing, N. H.

Chesterfield, Ind.

Chesterfield (Ind.) camp-meeting opens July 14 and closes August 28. For programs and other information address Lydia Jessup, secretary, Chesterfield, Ind.

Unity Camp-Meeting.

The Lynn Spiritualists' Association will hold meetings every Sunday at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, Mass., commencing June 5 and ending Sept. 25. For full particulars address Mrs. A. A. Averill, 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

Freeville, N. Y.

The dates for the Central New York Spiritual Association Camp-meeting, at Freeville, N. Y., are from July 23 to Aug. 22, four weeks and five Sundays. Owing to the protracted and severe illness of our secretary, Miss Victoria C. Moore, I am acting secretary, to whom all letters pertaining to the camp should be addressed. W. W. Kelsey, President, Cortland, N. Y.

Lake Brady, Ohio.

The Lake Brady Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 3 and closes Sept. 4. For full programme address A. G. Keck, Akron, Ohio.

Delphos Camp, Kans.

This camp-meeting will begin August 5, closing August 22. Address all communications to I. N. Richardson, secretary, Delphos, Kans.

Grand Ledge, Mich.

The Grand Ledge (Mich.) camp opens July 31 and closes August 28. For full programme address J. W. Ewing, Grand Ledge, Mich.

Island Lake, Mich.

The Island Lakes Camp, at Island Lake, Mich., 42 miles from Detroit, on the Flint and Pere Marquette railroad, commences July 10 and extends through the month of August. For full programmes address H. R. LaGrange, secretary, 84 East Montcalm street, Detroit, Mich.

Onset Camp.

Commences July 28 and ends August 28. For full programme and particulars address the secretary of the camp, Onset, Mass.

Franklin, Neb.

This camp commences July 29 and closes August 15. For full partticulars address D. L. Haines, secretary, Franklin, Neb.

Forest Home, Mich.

This camp-meeting, located at Snowflake, Antrim county, Mich., will open July 30, and continue till Aug. 22. For full programs address Mrs. Ruth Eastman, Secretary, Box 69, Mancelona, Mich.

Waterloo Camp, Iowa.

The Central Iowa Spiritualist Association will hold its camp at Waterloo, Iowa, from August 21 to September 11, including four Sundays. For particulars address J. E. Andrew, 205 E. Linn street, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Wonewoc, Wis.

The camp-meeting of the Western Wisconsin Camp Association will open Aug. 4, 1904, and will close Aug. 22. For full particulars write Miss Gertrude Spooner, secretary, Wonewoc, Wis.

Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass.

This excellent camp opens July 31, and continues for 30 consecutive days. For full programmes address Albert P. Blinn, 61 Dartmouth street, Boston, Mass.

Harmony Grove, Cal.

The Harmony Grove Spiritualist Camp-meeting of Escondido, Cal., commences July 17 and closes July 31. For full particulars address T. J. McFeron, secretary, San Diego, Cal.

Southern Cassadaga Camp.

The Southern Cassadaga camp at Lake Helen, Florida, will open the first Sunday in February and close the 26th of March. For information regarding rooms in Apartment House or in cottages, also for programmes, write to Mrs. J. D. Palmer, corresponding secretary, Willoughby, Ohio.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

The dates for Vicksburg camp-meeting are July 31 to August 22. For full particulars, address J. Fraser, manager, Vicksburg, Mich.

Haslett Park, Mich.

This old and popular camp opens July 30 and closes Aug. 28. For full programs address J. D. Richmond, secretary, St. Johns, Mich.

Edgewood Camp, Wash.

Edgewood camp, Washington, opens July 31, and will continue three weeks, ending August 22 and 23 with their eighth annual convention. For full particulars address Julian W. Smith, 1115 North Fife street, Tacoma, Wash.

Ashley, Ohio, Camp.

The Spiritualist camp-meeting at Ashley, Ohio will open August 7 and close August 28. For full particulars address W. F. Randolph, secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

Parkland Heights Camp-Meeting.

This camp will remain open Sundays only until September 1. For further particulars, address Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary, Floral Heights, Parkland, Pa.

Temple Heights, Camp, Me.

The Temple Heights Spiritual Corporation will hold its annual session, this being the twenty-second, at their beautiful grounds, on the banks of Penobscot Bay, in the good old state of Maine, on the dates of August 13th to 21st inclusive. Arrangements have been made for a very interesting session of camp-meeting and it is expected that a large attendance will be the outcome. For full programs address Orrin J. Dickey, Belfast, Maine.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building. Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 15. Admittance without examination. Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week.. .. .. 1.75

Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. Price 75 cents.

ELTON E. HEDRICK,

ASTROLOGER.—Vocation, business speculation, matrimony, changes, travel, all affairs of life. Fee $2.00. Send date of birth as near the hour as possible. Address, 2021 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. 776

DON'T READ THIS.

If sick write to me, and I will give you a free examination. I want no leading symptom. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Send name, age, sex, complexion, weight and 10 cts. in stamps or silver, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth many dollars to you. Be sure and write your own letter. Address.

FRANCES L. LOUCKS,
85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address

MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

YOUR FORTUNE

Typewritten and sent FREE if you will send your birth-date and three stamps for mailing expenses. I have astonished thousands with my wonderfully correct reading of their life, past and future. I correctly reveal your future love affairs, business success, marriage mate, etc., and give advice on all affairs. Address, SHACKEN, Dept. T.B., 2152, San Francisco, Cal.

Institute of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics: can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to

E. D. BABBITT, M. D., Geneva, N. Y.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

The oldest and best known physician now in practice. His cures are wonderful; his examinations free to all who send him name, age, sex and lock of hair, and six cents in stamps. He doesn't require any leading symptoms. He cures weak men. Address,

DR. J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
Lock Box 1203, Stoneham, Mass.

MILLER'S MAGIC MIRRORS

A Successful Road to Mediumship.

Indorsed by leading Spiritualists as developers of different phases of mediumship, especially Clairvoyance. Our mirrors are chemically treated and very sensitive to spiritual elements. With a little patience you can not fail to develop your phase of mediumship. Price, $3.00. Horoscopes written for $1.00. Give date of birth, year, and where born. W. H. MILLER, P. O. Box 169, Canton, Ohio. 756m3

TRUMPETS.

The infallible Fibre Trumpet is guaranteed better than metal. No. 1.—36x5 in.—inlaid top and bottom, cardinal colored enamel, $1.50. No. 2, $1.25. 33 x 4 inches, plain, with no insulation, brown color. Pamphlet with instructions for all kinds of development will be mailed on receipt of 12 cents in stamps. Trumpets will be sent on receipt of price. Manufactured by

JAS. NEWTON, 423 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

FRANK N. FOSTER,

The Noted Psychic for

Spirit Photography

Send name and address for circular. Sittings by mail. 91 Fitzhugh St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

MISS MAE HUNT.

Trance Medium and Lecturer, is located at 205 Turk st., San Francisco, Cal. Readings including three questions by mail, $1.00. 767tf

WOMAN: A Lecture Delivered to Ladies Only. By Mrs. Dr. Hulburt. On the present status of woman, physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. The divine law of true harmonial marriage, etc. Price, 10c.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

Apollonius of Tyana Identified as the Christian Jesus. A wonderful communication, explaining how his life and teachings were utilized to formulate Christianity. Price 15 cents.

HEALING, Causes and Effects, By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Deals with the finer mental and spiritual forces as applied to healing. Price, 50 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M. D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

RADIANT ENERGY and Its Analysis, Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics, by Edgar L. Larkin, Director Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California. This book treats upon a new branch of research into the laws of nature, and to the student or even an admirer of the modern astrological literature will surely come with great interest. Price, cloth, $1.75

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,

HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

THE HARMONIC SERIES.

Harmonics of Evolution (Florence Huntley),	Vol. I.,	$2.00
THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME,	Vol. II.,	2.00
The Dream Child,		75

These works have made a profound impression on the most advanced and progressive intelligence of the age. In the field of Psychical Research it can be said truthfully that they have created a veritable "Cyclone" of interest and discussion. Their subject matter and simplicity of expression make them intensely interesting and fascinatingly attractive to every one who can understand the simplest English. They have made simple and clear the most difficult problems of human life, and carry a special message to all who love the truth.

The Great Psychological Crime—Contents—Part I.

Psychological Crime; New Definitions; Pertinent Admissions; What Is Hypnotism; The Deadly Parallel; Man and His Two Organisms; Physiology and Pathology of Hypnotism; "Auto-Hypnotism," a Misnomer; "Suggestion," a Lexicological Libel; Independent Suggestion, a Fact; Hypnotism and the Three Brains; Does Hypnotism Cure? A Violation of Natural Law; True Suggestion and Therapeutic Faith; Post-Mortem Hypnotism; What of the Hypnotist?

Part II.

A Risk and a Duty; Other Definitions; Significant Admissions; Facts Demonstrated; Spiritual Mediumship Analyzed and Classified; The Principle Involved; "Automatic, Physical Mediumship" Impossible; Neither a "Gift" Nor a "Power"; The Destructive Principle in Mediumship; Mediumship and Morality; Mediumship and Martyrdom; Mediumship and "Affinity"; Mediumship and Emotionalism; Mediums and Their Motives; Mediumship and Insanity.

Part III.

The Genesis of "Hell"; The Way of Death; In Perspective; Individual Immortality; On What It Depends; Self-Control, the Application; The Line of Despair and the Powers of Darkness; The Law of Spiritual Gravity; Admonitions and Suggestions.

Supplemental.

The Value of "Theories"; Differences and Distinctions; Transmigration; Transubstantiation; Reincarnation; Metempsychosis; Self-Perpetuation; Conditional Immortality; Inherent Immortality; Individual Extinction; Psychical Reinvesture.

Harmonics of Evolution—Contents.

Preliminary Statement; There Is No Death; Life After Physical Death Is Scientifically Demonstrable; Life Here and Hereafter Has a Common Development and a Common Purpose; The Scope, Method and Purpose; The Genesis of Physical Life; The Spiritual Basis of Evolution; The "Law of Natural Selection"; The Natural Law of Selection; A Question in Science; The Completion of an Individual; Masculine Will and Feminine Desire; The Struggle for Happiness; Masculine Reason and Feminine Intuition; The Spiritual Basis of Love; Natural Science Corroborated; Natural Marriage; Legal Marriage; Divorce; True Marriage, Mathematics, Harmonics, Ethics.

Handsomely Bound.

Send for Circular.

Address all orders to

THE INDO-AMERICAN BOOK CO., 12 to 27 North Kedzie Ave., Chicago.

C. WALTER LYNN

THE

Eminent Healer and Gifted Psychic.

Health Restored by Common Sense Methods.

For the Cure of Mental and Physical Ailments.

OBSESSION CURED

For Free Diagnosis of Disease, send five two-cent stamps, age, name, sex, and own handwriting.

Readings and Business Advice, $1, and Two Stamps.

Address 784 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,
230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal

Do You Need Spectacles And Better Eyesight? I can help you. I Will fit your eyes by Clairvoyance and spirit assistance at your own home with the improved melted pebble lense, to see near and at a distance. Please write for illustrated circular, showing styles and prices. Also, my spirit method of treating that restores lost vision and impaired eyesight. I guarantee to fit your eyes, and safe delivery by mail.

SAMPLE FREE.—Sufficient magnetized Compound for four oz. cures sore eyes, restores the eyes to normal vision. Ten cents for postage.

B. F. POOLE.
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). It teaches you how to penetrate the veil of sense and matter, converse with spirits, read the crystal, see the future, progress and attain illumination, and be a Yogis. "All students will do well to study this excellent volume. —W. J. Colville. "It is a revelation."—Light. "Best work on the subject."—Mind, "Marvelous—Epoch-making."—Lilian Whiting.

SPIRIT WORLD, by Gaffield, cloth, 50 cents.

AURAS AND COLORS—With exhaustive dictionary of color meanings. A unique book for unique people. Price 50 cents

PSYCHOMETRY—The first and only book which teaches the science so that you can practice it. Price, 50 cents.

EASY LESSONS in Inspiration Clairvoyance and Psychometry. Price, 50 cents.

REALIZATION—How to enter the super-consciousness and be a Yogis. Price, 25 cents.

DIVINATION—A Ms. series on how to divine hidden things, and lost treasures, become a seer. Price, $1.00.

CRYSTALS for crystal-gazing, a new lot at $2.25 each, postage prepaid.

HOW TO REMEMBER PAST LIVES—A Ms. series on this fascinating subject. Price, $1.00.

Send for Prospectus of "The College of Divine Science and Realization of Divinity." Reduced tuition. The only one of its kind in the world.

J. C. F. GRUMBINE,
1285 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

POEMS of the Life Beyond and Within. Voices from many lands and countries, saying, "Man, thou shalt never die." An excellent selection. Edited and compiled by Giles B. Stebbins. Cloth, $1.

DEATH and the AFTER LIFE By A. J. Davis. An instructive and interesting work for all to read. Price 60 cents.

CONFLICT Between Religion and Science. Just the book for progressive thinkers. A book that is very interesting to people who have a taste for the past religious history. By John W. Draper. Price, cloth, $1.75.

Man and the Spirit World as Disclosed in the Bible." By Rev. Arthur Chambers, Associate of King's College, London. An excellent book for Christian people who would investigate and learn the facts of Bible teachings as well as modern spirit phenomena. Price, cloth, $1.10.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results. By J K Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

THE TALMUD Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polang. 859 pp. Price, cloth, $1

PSYCHE Is the invention of a practical medium, under spirit guidance, and is designed to develop mediumship. Many, by its use, have received long communications from spirit friends, and express great satisfaction. Price, $1, and 20 cents extra for expressage.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

THE DIAKKA. The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. By the Seer A. J. Davis. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism, embodying a most important recent interview with James Victor Wilson, a resident of Summer Land. Price, 50 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

A Valuable Work.

Concentration, Meditation and Inspiration. How to develop these desirable gifts according to the most approved methods of ancient and modern teachers, together with a set of six symbols comprising six months' study. By Laura G. Fixen.

A course of practical experimental lessons, of especial value and assistance to those who desire to be benefited by the development of powers of concentration of thought, clear meditation and superior inspiration.

Sent complete for 50 cents.

YOU CANNOT AFford to miss an issue of this paper, with its wealth of SPIRITUAL LITERATURE.

The Progressive Thinker.

SEND YOUR SUBscription in at once, and keep pace with all that is transpiring in the ranks.

VOL. 30 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 13, 1904. NO. 768

Our Open Court Now In Session.

For a time, during this camp-meeting season, which is usually the dullest business season for spiritual papers, we have thrown our columns open to our giants in thought upon one of the most important topics that come under the name and philosophy of Spiritualism. Some masterly articles have already been given our patrons and there are many more to follow.

We find some of our readers very sensitive to the publication of anything that hints of an acknowledgment that there is such a thing as fraud in our ranks, and upon the other hand we have those who have nothing to cover up, and who would wage an aggressive warfare against it openly, publicly, as a means of stamping it out. These are given an opportunity, side by side, to express themselves, and the discussion has already awakened a deep interest in the cause. The Open Court surely fills a niche that has been carved for it.

Free-handed, open and logical discussion can only be conducive to the best interest of any cause. A philosophy that will not bear criticism is a trembling failure. A science that will not stand discussion in this age of reason has not a good foundation and should be pigeon-holed as a relic of the dim past. A religion that can not stand the storm of adversity, that can not weather the gale of mental unfoldment of the day, should be relegated to a museum as an antiquated monstrosity, lost in the fog of ignorance.

Are you reading the findings of this Open Court? Are you reading the testimony upon both sides and recording the findings in your unbiased mind? Do you appreciate our effort for truth? If so you should become a life subscriber for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. Send your name, address and remittance after you read our unparalleled premium offer.

ROMANISM VS. REPUBLICANISM.

An Address by Dr. Dean Clarke.

Our pilgrim forefathers came to this country that they might have liberty to worship God according to the dictates of their own reason and conscience.

Their descendants fought the battles of the Revolution to break the chains of political despotism, and finally established our republic to secure the blessings of both civil and religious liberty. It was their wise design and determination forever to separate church and state, and to prevent the church from dominating the state, as it had so long done in the old world where kings ruled by assumed "right divine."

The voice of history and experience had taught them that no tyranny is so despotic, cruel, and relentless as that which claims divine authority. Hence they determined to found a government whose rulers should be shorn of all such sacrilegious claims,—a government "deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed," and not from the assumed will of God, nor from any earthly potentate claiming His vicegerency.

Our forefathers left us the glorious heritage of "a government of the people, by the people and for the people," and made the ballot box "the ark of our covenant, or Constitution," the shrine of our liberties, the palladium of our rights, and the bulwark of our protection.

Knowing that "Ignorance is the mother of devotion" to all "false gods," and to all sacerdotal rulers, the noble founders of our republic created our public schools to educate the masses, and give them the intelligence indispensable to good citizenship. Our common school system is not only the corner stone of our republic, but is the chief part of its entire foundation. Remove it, and every pillar of our free institutions will soon totter and fall!

Accursed be the dastard hand that shall dare strike a blow against the "arks of our safety," the free schools of America!

Forever let the "Stars and Stripes" wave above the sacred cradles of our liberty as their protecting Aegis, and may the sacrilegious hand wither and perish, that attempts to pull "Old Glory" down from the shrine that gave birth to it, and all the free institutions o'er which it waves!

Our common schools are the crucibles in which alone can be amalgamated all the heterogeneous elements that compose our nationality. They are the only alchemists' vessels for transmuting base alien material into the gold of true democracy and genuine Americanism. They are the sole foster-parents to unify the many diverse "kindreds, races, and tongues" composing the great American populace, and make of them a family of brothers and sisters dwelling together in amity and peace.

They are the one only universal solvent to make of "one blood," one mind, and one spirit of true patriotism, all the aliens who have sought refuge in this land of freedom, which so many of them have polluted with exotic and poisonous plants! Long live America's common schools! And may they, like Aaron's rod, swallow every parochial serpent that now nestles in Uncle Sam's bosom, only to turn and sting it for his mistaken and misplaced generosity!

Our forefathers, we have said, came to the rockbound shores of New England to escape from politico-religious despotism, and to found both civil and religious liberty as a birthright and heritage of their posterity forever. But, alas! for the uncertainty of human hopes and calculations; as of old, "Satan came also," and in the garden of our "Sunny South," he planted beside the tree of liberty, the Upas of Ecclesiastic despotism, whose scions have spread till they fill our fair land with the blighting breath of priestly curse and Popish anathema!

The mitred tyrant, who, claiming power plenipotentiary from heaven had enslaved all Europe with politico-religious bondage, sent his superstitious vassals and minions to the New World, and side by side with the altars of liberty, erected the shrines of Popish and Priestly tyranny, which today cumber the sacred soil of freedom, and menace the very foundations of our blood-bought liberties!

Thus to-day, we see in this great nation, boasting of its religious freedom the strange anomaly of the greatest and most liberty-crushing despotism that has ever cursed the nations, covering our whole land with its nurseries of tyrants, and its strongholds of superstition and oppression! Taking advantage of religious toleration, which is the genius of our free institutions, the greatest religious aristocracy this world has ever seen, has thrust its Trojan horses within the gates of every city of our republic, and the armed minions of popery within, are only waiting the word of command from the Boss Tyrant of the world to spring out and attempt to capture every shrine of Freedom!

In our own day and generation, our fathers and our brothers with sword, bayonet, and bullet, cut the bonds that held in unjust servitude, four million ebon-hued slaves, who are now free citizens of our great republic, thank heaven!

But, sad to say, there are yet nine million more, who think themselves free, who are in reality, wearing a yoke of bondage and are crushed in spirit under the iron heels of a mitred despotism far worse than that which bound poor Afric's slaves! Romanism not only enslaves bodies and souls on earth, but with audacious arrogance, claims the keys of heaven and hell, and the power of God to hold every soul in eternal fiery bondage that dares claim religious freedom as the birthright of man!

Can such a despotism as this, which was "conceived in iniquity and born in sin" in the dark ages of barbarism, be harmonized with the genius of democracy, and the polity and principles of republican institutions?

Can a theocratic autocracy, a One, God-man power which arrogates authority in church and state, and over the individual consciences of men, be reconciled with the spirit of individual free-thinking, and free-voting which every American claims as a birth-right?

Nay! Nay! Romanism and republican-democracy can no more be blended than fire and water, light and darkness, truth and error, vice and virtue, angels and demons, or Christ and Belial!

The two systems are antipodal, and as antithetic as white and black, as heaven and hell, and when the pope, or his sycophantic priests, pretends to love our republic, it is the love that a headstrong, arrogant child bears toward an overindulgent foster-mother, who allows it to tear her house down over her head, and to "raise the devil generally" with her household treasures!

The Pope loves our country as the wolf loves the sheep-fold, or as a buzzard or a hyena loves a battle-field. He loves America because it is free-preying ground for priestcraft to "gobble" our virgin soil, and collect "Peter's pence" from American citizens who vainly believe they can "serve two masters," one of whom claims dominion over their money, and their souls, and, for policy's sake, allows them to serve the other, for "the loaves and fishes" they may get to send to their supreme ruler, "His Holiness!" Be not deceived. Romanism never can be Americanized.

No Pope ever yet recognized "the inalienable rights of man," as set forth in the Declaration of Independence. When cardinals or priests profess political loyalty to our government, it is always with a mental reservation, which outwardly spoken means this: "loyalty till we can get the political power to establish the Pope and his regime in America!" They know they "cannot serve two masters" so utterly at variance! Romanism is "a wolf in sheep's clothing" prowling in our rural pastures, "living on the fat of the land," and fleecing its flocks to sustain a foreign potentate.

It is a cunning intriguing demon of despotism, surreptitiously plotting the overthrow of our educational, civil and free religious institutions, and all protestations to the contrary are but rank hypocrisy seeking to hoodwink willing dupes!

Short-sighted and unsuspecting people may condemn the A. P. A. organization, and in purblind confidence in our national safety, may cry: "Peace!" "Peace!" But there is no peace with the most consummate despotism on earth, except in abject submission to its autocratic decrees!

Not only is "eternal vigilance the price of liberty," but it will cost loyal Americans as dearly as it did a certain Canadian Frenchman to live "in peace" with his termagant wife. Being asked one day if he lived in peace with her, his dubious and lugubrious reply was: "Yas, I live in peace with her, but—I have to fight like hell for it!"

Nay! Nay! American liberty can never lie down "in peace" with Catholic slavery and Romish tyranny, so long as there is one drop of the blood of the heroes of '76 in the veins of loyal patriots!

"The 'irrepressible conflict'" is at hand, it is inevitable. Indeed, "the war has actually begun" at the schoolhouse and the ballot-box, and we must "fight it out on that line," and maintain these sacred shrines of our liberties at all hazards—if need be, with "our sacred honor, our fortunes and our lives," as did our forefathers.

It is high time that American freemen awake to the dangers now menacing all that we hold dear. We are slumbering over a smouldering volcano that may burst forth in a night, and spread the baleful fires of ruin o'er all our fair land!

The wily sappers and miners are secretly at work undermining our strongholds. Shall we dream in fatuous security, "hugging the delusive phantom of hope till our enemies shall have bound us hand and foot?" Or, forewarned, and forearmed, shall we rise in the might of heroic patriots, and "beard the Romish lion in his lair, ere he gains the growth and strength to exterminate us, as it is his avowed purpose to do, unless we are asses enough to put on his tawny skin?

The crisis that shall determine whether Protestant patriots shall rule and protect this country, or, whether the vandal minions of Rome shall govern and subvert it—is much nearer at hand than unwary Rip Van Winkles now dream!

Our sainted and immortal political savior, Abraham Lincoln, spoke with a prophet's ken when he declared that this country could "never exist half slave and half free."

The truth of that warning was sealed with rivers of the best blood of this nation! How much less then, can our mighty nation survive and prosper, half Catholic and half Protestant, when Catholicism is the synonym of both civil and religious bondage.

Fellow citizens, let us not be lulled to repose by the soft-toned purring of the pope's cajoling sycophants. They all have claws, and they live on prey which they "catch by guile."

A faithful servant of the pope can never be a true American citizen, and every one of his perjured emissaries, and arch-traitor archbishops knows it while he chants his "Te Deum" of "Good Lord" and "Good Devil," and vainly pretends to love and serve two masters!

Romanism, root and branch, is an exotic Upas, cumbering ground made holy by the blood of Protestant patriots. It is an anachronism of barbaric ages which is anti-American, hostile to freedom and progress, and is wholly out of place, and it has no business to be fostered and built up in a country consecrated to Liberty, Justice, and Universal Progress!

BEWARE of it, patriots!

When the great magnate of absolute despotism, the pope of Rome, shall come to our shores to establish his autocratic dynasty in the land of Washington and Lincoln, let us welcome him and his cohorts to the hospitality of a grave, and dig for Romanism its "last ditch," so deep it shall never know a resurrection! DEAN CLARKE.

SOUL VIBRATIONS

As They Emanate from a Profound Thinker.

The realization of any event or circumstance in life never comes up to the expectation. To-morrow is an impostor; it never fulfills its pledges, or brings what it promises. We live in visions and dreams; fiction not fact; in shadows not substance. The painter adds fiction to his picture, the sculptor to his statue, the poet to his verse, and the orator to his oration. The beautiful things in literature, in art, and in life come through imagination, feeling, sentiment, and the higher qualities of the mind and heart. Every poet, artist, or actor must be a mystic, a dreamer, a visionary. Knowledge does not come to him in the ordinary way; his dreams are prophecies; his sights are visions; and his thoughts are pictures. No earthly sordid nature ever rises to those lofty heights; only as the spiritual nature predominates and outweighs the material. Some one has written, "that Schiller, before commencing a work, heard within himself a harmony of indistinct sounds which were like a prelude to inspiration. Also that Rembrant when in the act of commencing a picture had a vision of rays and shadows, which communed with his soul, before he had animated the canvas with the personages." The most supreme moments of our life are passed in silence and alone, unaided and unheeded by the multitude around us.

"Ah, deep is silence—deep as human souls,
Aye! deep as life, beyond all lead and line;
And words are but the broken shells that shine
Along the shore by which the ocean rolls."

There are experiences of the soul that no words can describe, no pen record and no imagination portray. Mankind judge from the outward appearance and not from the inward struggle. The moral, intellectual and spirit victories and defeats no eye sees, no ear hears, no heart feels. The people see the finished picture but not the failures leading up to it; they behold the completed statue but not the broken and disfigured images that lie scattered along the way. The banner is never flung to the breeze until after it is nailed to the standard all decorated and inscribed.

"* * * * men behold
The goal achieved,—the warrior, when the sword
Flashes red triumph in the noonday sun;
* * * * * * * * *
They reckon not the battle and the march,
The long privation of a wasted youth;
They never see the banner till unfurled."

Life is a great body of contradictions. It is a tragedy, a poem, a fiction, a fearful reality. How rapidly the panorama moves. How the varying moods of the mind change in a few hours; yea in a few moments. So strong,—so weak,—so happy,—so wretched. All of these feelings, conditions and emotions pass over the soul as rapidly as the flying clouds, driven by the winds, cross the sky. In our weakness and in our necessity, we call out into the vast unknown, but so utterly lost is our cry that there comes back not even the echo of our voice. Thoughts are as powerful as words; a wish, a desire, is as potent with God as a prayer. Outward form and ceremony may assist the creature, but it has no bearing with the Creator. He looks at the petition and not to the vesture with which it is clothed. As the deepest grief finds no expression in tears, so there are times when words are weak and meaningless to the soul, and silence is more expressive than speech. Very few realize the great purpose of life. Veneering to some always looks like mahogany; whatever shines is pure metal; all gilding is gold; and every stone that sparkles is a diamond. The longest life is but a passing shadow and yet how often time hangs heavy on our hands and we long for the day to pass by. But nature knows nothing of time or measurement; these are of human invention. The world is always old and it is always new. The same energy and force passes through a thousand transformations and uses. How beautifully Draper illustrates this thought. 'A particle of water raised from the sea may ascend invisibly through the air, it may float above us in a cloud, it may fall in the raindrops, sink into the earth, gush forth again in the fountain, enter the rootlets of a plant, rise up with the sap to the leaves, be there decomposed by the sunlight into its constituent elements, its oxygen and hydrogen; * * * Though shed in the tear in moments of despair, it may give birth to the rainbow, the emblem of hope."

Matter is continually changing its form, but no new material enters into the universe. When rightfully considered everything bears the stamp of age. No one can tell where or when any thought, idea, or influence had a beginning. It is impossible to date the birth of a single invention, reformation, or a revolution. The smallest act leads to the greatest results; the most indifferent individual often becomes an important factor in civilization and life. Aesop was both a slave and a philosopher but his fables are known wherever language is spoken. A fanatic, or a man with only one dominant thought or purpose, sometimes does more for the world than a well-balanced mind. A reformer is always a man of exaggeration; he is apt to see things a little distorted; and imagines that the whole world hangs on the success of his particular idea. "Among such men rise up the sublime figures of John Brown, Garrison, Clarkson and Phillips. Must we call them unbalanced? Can we assert that we did not need them just as they were? The cartoonist is a more truthful artist than the painter or the photographer; they only give the outward form, the shell, the husk; while the caricature often shows the very marrow and moral quality of the man. Every time a man speaks, he makes a mental picture of his real self. An individual can reveal his whole character and tendency of life in a single sentence. One or two strokes of the brush in the hands of a skilled artist, makes his image laugh or weep, converts it into a wise man or a fool. There are no fixed points in life. One condition of society grades into another so insensibly as to proceed unnoticed. What constitutes sanity or insanity, always has been and always will be a debatable question. The dividing line between talent and genius cannot be determined. No agreement has been reached upon what is natural or supernatural, and inspiration is alike, a matter of conjecture. The counterfeit and the genuine are so near akin as to baffle detection. "The play of imagination in the brain of the opium eater is as free as that of genius itself, and the creations produced in that state by the pen or pencil are as wildly beautiful as those owed to the nobler influences."

Some people's imagination is so vivid and strong and their mental and spiritual make-up so sympathetic and receptive that all they see and hear changes, magnifies, subdues, softens and refines beyond the limits of ordinary vision or feeling. A grand display of hue, tint and color, at once ceases to be simply "color, it is conflagration;" music that is especially softening and refining, or jubilant and gay, becomes to them more than music, it is real "intoxication." Things as impalpable as air, as unsubstantial as a dream, and as fleeting and transient as sound, help to mold and fashion the character. You might as well undertake to fathom the workings of nature's secret laboratory in the bosom of the earth, or in the world above, as to tell what particular influence has been the controlling factor in one's life. Every element, idea and principle that we come in contact with, blend together and enter into it. The fugitive joys, the transient pleasures, the hours of sorrow, the books we read, the pictures we contemplate—all help to build up and form character. The daily habit, custom and talk of life are circumscribed by a very small circle. People mostly read for entertainment, not for information; they read for the present, not for the future. Moments, freighted with weal or woe, pass by unknown and unappreciated. I have read that in one of the ancient wars a soldier found a beautiful bag, highly ornamented, and filled with pearls, but being ignorant of their value he threw away the pearls and saved the bag.

"There are immortal moments in each life;
They come and go,—
One scarce may of their presence know,
Yet in them there is struck a chord,
It may be loud, it may be low,
* * * * * * * * *
Which will vibrate,
Like circles from a pebble's throw * * *"

It sometimes happens that the preface is the best part of a book and the postcript has been known to be the best part of a letter. It is the small incidents in life that make up its great import and meaning. Some one has said that when Abraham Lincoln was asked for some facts and circumstances in his early history to be inserted in the congressional directory, he replied: "They may all be compiled in one poetic line, 'The short and simple annals of the poor.'"

That portion of a man's history that one person would deem the most important another crowds to the background. I have seen it stated that Jefferson did not direct that on his monument should be engraved the fact that he had been president of the United States, but that it should record that he was the "Author of the Declaration of Independence, and of the Statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia." A great burden presses upon each individual soul. Whatever conceit a man may have as he passes through this world, will surely be well tempered with plenty of humiliation. Whatever heights are gained, there are still visions beyond. We spend no time with the present. We live in the future, in hope, in expectation and in memory. What is hope? What is memory? Real or unreal, which? Something permanent and lasting, or transient and fleeting? Whatever is satisfying in our experience is either a hope or a memory. No true history of a man's life can be written. Goethe characterized his own autobiography as "Truth and Fiction."

"We live in deeds, not years; thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs.
He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

Norwich, N. Y. HENRY M. TEFFT.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

An Interesting View From the Standpoint of a Shaker.

In The Progressive Thinker of Nov. 28, 1903, is an article by E. W. Baldwin, on the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

He says: "Were these principles lived up to, strictly, the world would soon become wreck and ruin. After two thousand years of preaching it, no man has ever lived it. This is a pretty fair length of time for a trial."

As I think I can produce indisputable evidence that it has been lived up to over one hundred and twenty years, and is now lived up to, I feel it my duty to correct the errors, in defense of the character of Jesus, as I would have him defend my character in like circumstances had he the same evidence that I have; and no doubt he would do so.

He also says: "The Golden Rule stripped of its glitter is a pewter rule." Just so, take the life out of it, then it is dead pewter; but keep the life in it, it is then glittering gold.

He says further: "It is next to impossible where one has personal interest, for him to have a sound judgment."

Very true; Jesus knew that, he therefore took precaution to exclude personal interest from his spiritual church. He knew that it would be impossible to establish a universal brotherhood admitting personal interest; he therefore wisely excluded it.

His mission was to separate the spiritual from the natural in his church, and he did so.

Jesus Christ was sent to save the world from error and wrong—not only father, or mother, brother or sister, clan, church or nation, but the world universal, consequently he had to be universal in life practice and teaching for a perfect example, and exclude all things selfish which can not be universal and eternal, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. II. Thess. 4:18.

I will now introduce the Shaker Church Covenant as evidence to prove that the Golden Rule has been lived up to, in this society, for one hudred and twenty years, and if it can be lived one hundred years, it can be lived endless.

Perfect redemption is impossible without the Golden Rule being lived up to. This is a vital question for the progressive Christian to investigate. It may be essential, and take time and energy to accomplish it.

Shaker Church Covenant.

Preparation for admission into church relation. Artticle 2. Part of section 3. An essential step is to settle all just and equitable claims of creditors and filial heirs, so that whatever property they may possess shall be justly their own. When this is done, and they feel themselves sufficiently prepared to make a deliberate and final choice, to devote themselves with all they possess wholly to the service of God, without reserve, and it shall be deemed proper by the leading authority of the church, etc., he may be admitted, etc.

Article VII. Section I. Dedication and consecration of persons, property and service. According to the faith of the gospel which we have received, and agreeable to the uniform practice of the church of Christ from the first establishment in this society, we covenant and agree to dedicate, devote, consecrate and give up, and by this covenant we do solemnly and conscientiously dedicate, devote, consecrate and give up ourselves and services together with all our temporal interest to the service of God and the support and benefit of the church of this community and to such other pious and charitable purposes as the gospel may require, to be under the care and direction of such elders, deacons and trustees as are or may be appointed and established in the church by the authority aforesaid.

Section 2. Dedication and release of private claim. Whereas, in pursuance of the requirement of the Gospel, and in the full exercise of our faith, reason and understanding, we have freely and voluntarily sacrificed all self-interest, and consecrated and devoted our persons, services and property, as aforesaid, to the pious and benevolent purposes of the gospel; therefore we do hereby solemnly and conscientiously, unitedly and individually for ourselves and our heirs, release and quit claim to the deacons, or acting trustees of the church for the time being, for the uses and purposes aforesaid, all our private personal right, title, interest, claim and demand of, in and to the estate, interest, property and appurtenances so consecrated, devoted and given up; and we hereby jointly and severally promise and declare in the presence of God, and before these witnesses that we will never hereafter, neither directly nor indirectly, under any circumstances whatever, contrary to the stipulations of this covenant, make nor require any account of any interest, property, labor or service, nor any division thereof which is, has been, or may be devoted by us, or any of us, to the uses and purposes aforesaid, nor bring any charge of debt or damage, or hold any claim, nor demand whatever against the said deacons or trustees, nor against the church or society, on account of any property or service given, rendered, devoted or consecrated to the aforesaid sacred and charitable purposes.

In confirmation of all the aforesaid statements, covenants, promises, and articles of agreement, we have hereunto subscribed our names and affixed our seals, etc.

If this dedication of all we have including our life labor into a joint brother and sisterhood inheritance does not fulfill the Golden Rule, then my judgment must be unsound.

Jesus exercised sound judgment by wisely excluding personal interest from his church, thereby making it possible to live up to the Golden Rule; but outside of his church it is impossible; there is no law except the Shaker Covenant that has the power and can give strength to obey the precept.

Jesus said greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. St. John 15:13. And greater friends has no man than those, that lay down their life service for their friends in mutual relationship; which Jesus has established by establishing this covenant by the power of spirit control. H. B. BEAR.

Harrison, O.

CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.

False Claims of Christian Leaders Shown.

It is claimed by the leaders of Christianity that we are indebted to it for our civilization. Such civilization as it has produced will not do to brag on. History shows that it is responsible for the night of ignorance in which Europe wandered for over a thousand years; and the prejudice then instilled against learning by ecclesiasticism has not yet wholly disappeared.

About the time of the first century, A. D., was the flood-tide of Roman greatness—the age of poetry, history, philosophy; and the love of learning was not a monopoly. The third century presented a different picture—learning despised, history degraded to lying chronicles, poetry and philosophy contemptible. Why this rapid decline from greatness to the abyss of ignorance? It was the effect of the religion introduced into the Roman world during those centuries.

The Christians stigmatized learning as profane. The offices of instructors, prevously held by noble philosophers, were assigned to ignorant, superstitious priests. The knowledge of the Pagan world was discarded, and dogmas of theology supplied the place. The church absorbed all the mental activity of the times. Learning, poetry, profane history, were discarded as unworthy of the attention of regenerated mortals. Polemics was the solution of incomprehensible dogmas by endless verbal warfare. Ignorance became canonized.

As science expands and ennobles the mind, so such disputations narrow and dwarf its powers. These studies of questions which are merely artificial formulas, having no existence except in imagination, corrupt the fountains of knowledge.

No adequate conception can be formed of the darkness of the human intellect at that period. Superstition grew like rank weeds, and ascetism depressed the understanding to still lower depths. Even the minds of progressive thinkers were led astray along paths beginning in ignorance and ending nowhere. Worthless, except as curiosity, was the literature produced in those ages.

Ignorance is the primal slime in which infallible authority grows sleek and powerful. The Christian hierarchy grew stronger, gaining powers by every possible means, staying its hand at no crime, pausing at no cruelty.

Any one who affirms that for the knowledge and civilization we enjoy today we are indebted to Christianity, should be pitied on the score of ignorance. If that religion is so productive of advancement, why did it not put forth its fruits during the thousand years it held mankind in implicit obedience? Did it foster learning? Countless martyrs whose only crime was extending human knowledge answer, No.

For a thousand years it sat upon the prostrate form of civilization and guided the course of events. The chronicles of the Dark Ages reveal the results. Morality, self-reliance, nobility of character disappeared as this religion gained ascendency. It caused immeasurable pain, blighted and blasted the joy and hope of countless lives.

When Constantine became the champion of the Roman church his hands were soon stained with blood. King Henry of England became manifold worse by espousing Protestantism.

Such civilization as Christianity produces is of the savage, brutal kind, causing havoc and destruction The civilization it forced upon the aborigines of America caused them to fade away and perish. The civilization it forced upon the Aztecs of Mexico and Peruvians of South America resulted in the utter extinction of those great nations.

We are now having a fair illustration of it in Russia, where Christians are on the war-path—one of the inevitable fruits and effects of a religion based upon a case of murder. Its founder said, "I come not to bring peace on earth, but a sword." That has been literally fulfilled by his devotees. We cannot reasonably expect anything better from worshipers of Jehovah—god of wrath, blood, war.

Great expenditures of wealth and effort are made "to Christianize the heathen." "Christian civilization" is a misnomer, a monstrous fraud, and the world can get along without it.

The world is growing steadily toward a better state A few lives ripen under each nation and cycle to perceive the truth and herald the cause of liberty.

There has been some genuine civilization and progress for a few hundred years, but it has pursued its way independent of and in opposition to Christianity. There is a mighty effort being now made among truly civilized people to counteract and overcome the pernicious influences of Christianity.

A. H. NICHOLAS

Summerland, Cal.

A CORRECTION.

The Much Slandered Thomas Paine.

It is too much to expect the Christian clergy to tell the truth about Thomas Paine, or that President Theodore Roosevelt should correct his slander in terming him "a filthy little Atheist"; but it would seem that it was very late in the day for a correspondent of The Progressive Thinker to repeat one of the stale falsehoods which the church has circulated for nearly a hundred years; and yet in The Progressive Thinker of July 16, L. P. Smith of Toledo, Ohio, writes: "I cannot advise any one to read 'The Age of Reason,' and can appreciate the advice of Franklin, himself a skeptic, who advised Paine to burn the manuscript before it was published."

Now this assertion of Franklin's advice is a "lie out of whole cloth," invented by the clergy to blacken the character of one of the noblest men who ever lived, and without whose aid our independence would not have been secured. The Age of Reason was written in 1783 or 4, and Dr. Franklin died in 1760, some four years before the book was written. Did Franklin come back from the spirit spheres to give that advice? Brother Smith should post himself before writing history.

J. S. LOVELAND.

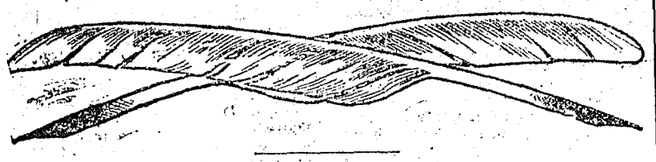
One should seek for others the happiness one desires for oneself.—Buddhist.

He sought for others the good he desired for himself. Let him pass on.—Egyptian.

Men and things have each their proper perspective; to judge rightly of some, it is necessary to see them near, of others we can never judge rightly but at a distance.—Rochefoucauld.

Let them obey that know not how to rule.—Shakspeare.

All politeness is owing to liberty.—Shaftesbury.



Perfection is attained by slow degrees; she requires the hand of time.—Voltaire.

The acknowledgement of weakness which we make in imploring to be relieved from hunger and temptation is surely wisely put in our prayer.—Thackery.

Too much gravity argues a shallow mind.—Lavater.

No subject can be too sacred to be understood.—Ingersoll.

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

Pertinent Questions Answered

Verily the Open Court has proved to be a wonderfully attractive feature of The Progressive Thinker. It is open only to Spiritualists, and enables each one to express his views as he sees fit. It is a sort of class meeting where experiences, conclusions and advice are given freely. It only offends the fake monstrosities who deal in stock tests and use artificial toggery in materializing seances. In this issue we present the highly interesting letter of the venerable J. Young McFarland to Mrs. Laura Hyland. Her reply follows. Both will be read with deep interest.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MRS. LAURA M. HYLAND.

Dear Sister:—From being a fake medium, you have turned fraud hunter in materializing circles. God bless the man or woman who can expose the shams of Spiritualism, and who has the courage to do it.

But some of your utterances affright me. I am afraid, "lest while you gather up the tares, you will root up the wheat also."

Or is there any wheat? You say there is none in materializing circles in Los Angeles; and you think there is none in San Francisco. You don't know about the East.

You have been a Spiritualist twenty-three years, and a fake medium for materialization—you do not say how long. But you were simply playing detective, with many inward sighs and groans, till the right time should come to tell your narrative.

And now you have Elsie Reynolds up a tree, and are barking on the trail of a dozen more. God grant that you may tree them all, and keep them treed. Or if you can bring them to a finish, I am in the market for their hides.

But I shudder to hear you tell what you did yourself, and will not sleep well till you tell us how you did it. With Elsie Reynolds you carried on your deception for—well, I do not know how long. You deceived the very best men in the town where you live. One case you mention as a sample of many. You went by invitation to the home of Mr. H. You entered a cabinet in the corner of the room—a cabinet prepared, not by yourself but by the family. Hence, blind doors, confederates, were impossible. You went into "a deep trance." A tall man with whiskers came out. Mr. H. recognized him, conversed with him, shook hands with him. His mother came, mother-in-law, uncles, aunts, etc., and he recognized them all. Finally his three little children came out altogether—two of them no higher than his knee. One stood at the door of the cabinet, and one approached him. He was patting the little face when, by your order, the light was turned on. Horror! It was your face he was patting. You had been "the whole thing." O my sister, "tell it not in Gath; publish it not in the streets of Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice; lest the daughters of the uncircumcised be glad."

I long to hear you tell how you did it. I partly believe you, and partly I do not. "Help thou my unbelief." How could you be three forms, not one of them yourself, and in three different places at the same time? If you can do that, you are a prestidigitator to whom Herrmann must take off his hat. I shall listen to hear presently that you have thrown a ball into the empyrean and climbed into heaven by the string. No use for you to give seances for a living. You can do better by giving public exposures of Spiritualism. And, my dear sister, there is a lot of it that certainly needs to be exposed.

To guide me from the labyrinth of error, you offer me a single talisman, but I frankly confess to you that I am afraid to trust it. You say that a materialized spirit cannot be touched, although it may touch you. In proof, you quote scripture. Jesus said to Mary in the garden, "Touch me not." But you forget that on the very same evening, to the full circle, Thomas alone being absent, he said, "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." When the force is stronger, things may be done which pass our previous experiences.

Understand, I would not discourage you in the least in your hunt after the gray wolves that have gotten in among the sheep. I hail you as succor sent in an hour of distress. Would that you were in Chicago. I think I could take you in a bee line to two or three fake materializing circles; and yet they run on from year to year without interruption. There may be no hell, but there ought to be for those who do such things. And I, for one, believe that what ought to be, is. Hell fills a long felt want.

What I want to do is to call you out. I want you to tell us how you did it.—tell us how you were three persons, not one of them yourself, and in three different places at the same time. If you can do this, why should any man escape a rope's end hereafter by proving an alibi?

Am I the victim of a fakir? Listen, and I will tell you minutely as space will permit, what I have seen, and then you will please tell me where the trick comes in.

Here in Chicago I have gone a dozen times to a seance conducted by Miss Nichols. I will not give the street number, lest I do her an injury, for her circles are even now too large. The place is in an upper room—a double parlor, a curtain being drawn across the middle while the circle is gathering. A lantern behind the audience and up in a corner against the ceiling, sheds a "dim religious light" diagonally across the room towards the cabinet in the opposite corner. The amount of light is controlled by a slide in front, in such a way that very nearly total darkness can be produced. This is done for first materializations, but seldom or never afterwards.

When the hour to begin has struck, the curtain, before which two or three dozen persons are now sitting, is withdrawn, disclosing a cabinet in the opposite corner, and a piano on the side of the room. The cabinet is simply three widths of dress goods suspended from a pole. The material is seen folded back over the pole, showing the corner of the room in full view. The audience is invited to examine the cabinet, and the majority now go forward and thump around the walls, stamp the floor, and explore the two adjoining rooms to their hearts' content. They are then invited to seal all the doors leading into the seance room, and I have seen this done; though it is quite unnecessary, since no one could enter by any door without being seen. The circle is now seated, the gas is turned out; and, led by the piano, we sing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The medium strokes the cabinet curtains with her fingers as often as she approaches them, and walks incessantly up and down the room scattering her magnetism, from the cabinet into the horse-shoe circle, provided it has not been necessary to pack the center of it with spectators. During the two hours' performance she is not in a trance, nor in the cabinet at all, save when occasionally she passes momentarily behind the curtain to leave her magnetism, but is the most conspicuous individual in the room, and in sight of everybody practically every instant.

White-robed figures come out of the cabinet, generally one at a time; sometimes four or five at once, large and small. The medium understands the spirit which comes, though it is commonly voiceless; goes back into the circle, and seizing by the hand the person called for, leads him up to the spirit standing a few feet in front of the cabinet, and in nearly all instances there is mutual recognition. During this interview of the living with the dead the living is kneeling, so as not to obstruct the view of the sitters behind, and the medium is kneeling at his side. HE HOLDS HER BY THE HAND EVERY MOMENT. As the seance progresses the light of the lantern is increased, because the stronger force demands less darkness. Spirit lights constantly appear, generally on the floor, sometimes near the ceiling. Many of the forms do not come from the cabinet; they come up from the floor, and often at the very feet of their friends. I have seen my daughter a dozen times—always the same face and form absolutely, but always a different robing or arrangement of the hair. Sometimes she comes from the cabinet; sometimes from the floor at my feet. In a trumpet circle miles away I asked her, "What will you do if I go again to the place where I have seen you twice already, to prove to me absolutely that it is Mabel, and nobody else?" She said: "I will come to you and bring to you a white carnation."

I went. She came out of the cabinet twenty feet from where I sat—came directly and steadily towards me, as one on some important errand bent, though I had not a thought that she was any spirit of mine, till when within six feet of me, the light fell squarely upon her face; I threw up my hands and exclaimed, "It is Mabel." In her outstretched hand was a white flower, the size of a carnation; she came up to my very knees, sank, and disappeared at my feet. When every lineament of her form was gone, for an instant there stood the flower, perfect as a crystal, then vanished at once into thin air.

To return the compliment to Mabel, I went again, carrying with me an American beauty rose. She came out of the cabinet, took the rose which I offered her, retired a step, knelt down, folded her hands in an attitude of prayer, turned towards the cabinet, and disappeared. I said to myself, "My rose is gone. There is not a foot of this floor which will not be trampled by a hundred feet before the seance ends." An hour and a half later a patch of light appeared on the floor not two feet from the chair in which I sat. In an instant a gold cross appeared upon it—a badge which Mabel always wears upon her right breast; there was a momentary wavering; then it rose steadily, and in less time than I can tell it, my daughter stood before me; and to increase the wonder, she handed me back my American beauty rose, as perfect as she received it, and I have it yet. She placed her hand on my head, then sank through the floor at my feet.

As the seance progresses and becomes stronger, male forms appear, some of them soldiers in full regimentals, occasionally an Indian in full dress. A tall, magnificent-looking Hindoo comes and calls for a doctor, whose guide he is. The doctor goes down upon his knees, and the Hindoo approaches him with outstretched and half uplifted hands. The doctor goes under control, and bursts forth in a thrilling panegyric of Jesus of Nazareth, whose history he comprehensively expresses from the cradle to the cross. All the while—five to eight minutes—the Hindoo stands motionless with uplifted hands. A mother comes with a babe in her arms, and one or two tots by her side. Recognition after recognition takes place. There is frequent sobbing and rejoicing. The medium goes back into the circle with unerring certainty for the person wanted, very often a total stranger to her; and though his face is turned from the dim light which shines directly on the back of his head, she never fails to find the proper person. Think of the millions of forms and faces there are in the world, and then think of the mathematical chance of bringing each mortal face to face with his spirit friend. Is it one in ten thousand?

I have seen forms robed in a glory greater than Solomon. I have seen female forms rise up from the floor with flowers in their hair, or with various ornaments of attire. I have seen an old soldier come out to me and put his hand on my head, then materialize a flag in that hand and retire, waving it. I have seen a spirit come up from the floor within two feet of me; a tall, slender woman, with a gold crescent in her hair half as large as my hand; I have heard a gentleman say, "Friends, this is my guide Jean; as a witch she was executed by burning in England in the 16th century. She was a lace weaver." Then I have heard him request her to give a specimen of her art. She went down upon her left knee, with her right foot advanced, and her hands in active motion near the floor. There was the growth momently of a white substance like fine gauze till it reached the size of a half bushel. Then she rose straight up, and extended her hands wide, displaying a lace shawl two yards long and half as wide, and having a beautifully embroidered border; after sufficient exhibition she threw it backward over her head, drew it gracefully around her shoulders, turned towards the cabinet twenty feet away and vanished into nothing. During the time she was weaving that shawl—five minutes or so—she was directly beneath my eyes as I sat in my chair, and I could easily have kicked her. Perhaps our friends, Messrs Hale and Cherry, who have gained so much notoriety by the offer of $1,000 for an honest materializations would have done it, and if the form had not survived the kick, would have pronounced it a fraud. Three times have I seen our friend Jean do her weaving.

Twice have I watched the pageant on Easter Sunday; and as, for two hours, fifty spirits or more came one after another, out from the cabinet or up from the floor, while the audience sang snatches of Christian songs in the intervals, and the medium was visible evtervals, and the medium was visible every moment, walking up and down the trembling mortal who was talking to his arisen mother or child, how could I keep from my mind the glorious words of the Apostle Paul, "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body; and as one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead." It was more convincing a thousand times than all the sermons of all Christendom preached on that high day.

In the middle of the seance the gas is lighted and a momentary recess is taken. As many persons as can stand in the cabinet are now sent into that corner. Understand, there is nothing there; not a chair, not a stool—simply the empty corner of a room, obscured by some dress goods. The gas is again extinguished, and presently a Catholic sister, robed in black, her right hand extended and holding a depending rosary, comes out of the cabinet a few feet and returns. The mortals in the cabinet now come out and go to their seats. They saw nothing, felt nothing, though the spirit came out and returned while they were there. And now again the sister comes out and advances far into the room, calls for a little child if one is present, causes it to kneel, then kneels herself and lays her hands in blessing on its head. She then rises and returns to the cabinet, accompanied by the medium and one other person, and these two hold the curtains wide open while the spirit is seen to enter the corner and disappear through—or at—the floor. Is is thus proved that the cabinet in no way hides a fraud. What would become of your tricks, Sister Hyland, under such tests?

Barring the fact that some darkness must be secured, there is absolutely nothing neglected, to prove that all is just what it appears to be.

I have been thus minute, though omitting much of corroborative evidence, and much of further interest, because space would be denied me. I have tried to be sufficiently full and exact, because I want you who have been qualified by twenty-three years' preparation to crack nuts, to crack this one. I want you to show me where the trick comes in. Meanwhile let me say through you to your friends Hale and Cherry, that, if they and I should meet and converse together, there would certainly be a fool present; while I should stubbornly maintain, at least till I hear from you, that I am not the fool. If you can show us where the trick comes in, for heaven's sake, "come over to Macedonia and help us."

I do not think much of the proposition of your friends Hale and Cherry. What do they know about the conditions necessary to spirit materialization more than they know about the N rays or Marconi's waves? When Marconi accepts their dictation, it may be time for some medium to do the same. Why don't they go into the shops of the Western Electric, and announce that they will not believe in electricity unless it can be made to pass through a glass rod? Lord Bacon said that we enter the kingdom of knowledge as we do the kingdom of heaven—as a little child. If Thomas had demanded to see his Master in the street, or in the midst of a lot of Hales and Cherrys, it is about certain that he would never have seen him at all. The Nazarene would not have shown himself alive to help somebody win a bet, nor to convince the man who said, "He casteth out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils;" but when those who loved him were with one accord in one place, he came and waved his hand and said, "Peace be unto you."

If Hale and Cherry will come to Miss Nichols' circle, and behave like gentlemen, and think like rational beings, everything reasonable will be done to show them that spirits, who materialized on the Mount of Transfiguration, materialized for Abraham, for Lot, for Daniel, for John in Patmos, can still materialize, but only for their friends.

"Thomas, because thou hast seen me thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen me and yet have believed." That is—Blessed are they that have some little respect for the testimonies of their fellow-men.

The very first cry of some babies is the yell of a college graduate. From the hour of their birth they know more than other babies will ever learn. It is useless for these to go to seances; for though forced to admit the phenomena, they would still say, "He casteth out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils."

But you, Sister Hyland, are not one of these. You do not deny that there is genuine materialization, though you have shown us how convincing can be the sham. It is because I believe you are qualified to help honest inquirers, that I turn to you. I wait with concern to hear how you did your trick of being three babies in different places at the same time. Tell us how, and it may throw a flood of light into dark places. And if the circle which I have described is a fraud, kindly point out to me how the fraud may be detected. But if you cannot do this, then please go to that heart-broken Brother H., who patted your cheek so tenderly, and tell him that, though he has once been cruelly deceived, his dear little children are yet certainly alive, and that if he will come to me I will cheerfully take him to a place where he can see them as I have seen Mabel. Truly your friend,

J. YOUNG M'FARLAND.

1340 Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. HYLAND'S REPLY

To Mr. McFarland's Questions.

"There's a cry from Macedonia, 'Come and help us.'"

Are you willing to be helped, dear brother? If so, grasp my words, and I will save you from the foul waters of deception, into which you are rapidly sinking.

You say: "I shall listen, to hear presently that you have thrown a ball into the Empyrean, and climbed into heaven by a rope."

Listen no longer, good brother, the "ball" has already been thrown into the Empyrean of Truth, and I am climbing into the heaven of hope, by the string of assurance that soon there will be no more "tares in the wheat," in the fertile fields of Spiritualism.

"Or, is there any wheat"?

Truly there is plenty of "wheat;" but look not for wheat on an ash pile.

"With Elsie Reynolds you carried on your deception for—well, I do not know how long," you say.

It matters not "how long," but how earnestly—a few months, but I was ambitious.

"You offer me a single talisman * * * but I am afraid to trust it."

Do not do so; trust your own good reasoning powers; God has not slighted you.

"Am I the victim of a fakir?" you ask.

Yes.

"There may be no such place as hell, but there ought to be, for those who do such things," say you.

Oh, brother dear, do not judge!

"The happiest heart I ever knew,
Lived in a quiet breast;
That did the very best it could,
And left to God—the rest."

"I have seen my daughter a dozen times;" "I have seen forms robed in a glory greater than Solomon;" "three times have I seen our friend 'Jean' do her weaving;" "I have seen an old soldier come out to me, put his hand on my head, materialize a flag, waving it, and retire." "I have seen a spirit come up from the floor, within two feet of me, a tall slender woman with a gold crescent in her hair. She was a lace weaver." "Occasionally an Indian in full dress;" "a tall, magnificent Hindoo;" "a mother with a babe in her arms;" "fifty spirits or more on Easter Sunday;" "a Catholic sister robed in black, carrying a rosary"—these also have you seen and still you ask, "Am I the victim of a fakir?"

In a "spiritual" line, there are a great many "mediums" (besides self) to whom the infallible Herrmann can "take off his hat."

"Am I the victim of a fakir? Listen, and I will tell you minutely as space will permit, what I have seen, and then will you please tell me where the trick comes in?"

Mr. McFarland, what made you write those words?

Is it not the voice of the Great Creator? Who is your silent Dictator? Impressionable consciousness — God. There is no accident in nature. He is warning you. You wrote those words for a purpose. Study thou His ways. "He will help you."

"Help thou my unbelief"—your soul sent for that cry—He heard and answered it—now thou must help thyself.

Your unbelief can only be helped by your belief; follow me closely—I will not lead you astray.

"Would that you were in Chicago"

I wish I was, I would reproduce the "American beauty rose and carnation" manifestation.

From my cabinet while I was a "genuine materializing medium," Generals Sherman and Lee have "materialized," waving the grand old flag of freedom, and in deep bass voices would sing our immortal song, "The Star Spangled Banner." (It pleased the old "boys in blue" here, Sawtelle being but a mile from a National Soldiers' Home.)

Prof. W. Bowman in a lecture on "The lights and shadows of mediumship," once alluded to the starry robe (worn by the ancient Hindoo philosopher, who materialized from my cabinet)." It was a magnificent mass of stars—why, it would put the very heavens to shame." Reflections!

Elsie Reynolds and I also had "lace weavers," who wove yards of beautiful lace.

Mrs. Reynolds—I mean the "lace weaver," used to commence weaving her lace from her waist line, drawing it up from under her belts, it being concealed underneath her skirts. I would—I mean my "lace weaver" would weave it just the same as Miss Nichols does, and as I have already illustrated to the reporters.

Down on one knee, the lace is concealed under the skirts (as mentioned); by getting hold of one corner of it, it must be "woven" quickly, or drawn from under the skirts very rapidly. I tell you it keeps a "medium's" hands pretty busy in active motion near the floor for a few minutes; the pile of lace looks just as if it might fill a bushel basket. But it doesn't.

Then Mrs. Reynolds and I did exactly the same things as Miss Nichols' "Jean" did, extending our arms at full length, we gracefully threw the lace over our shoulders—and returned to the cabinet, and "dematerialized."

Miss Nichols' "lace weaver" did not "vanish into nothing."

There is no such thing as nothing.

She merely vanished into another room, by means of a trap-door, which cannot be detected because Miss Nichols has black paper on her walls (or did have).

Mrs. Reynolds and I also had Catholic Sisters of Mercy and Charity, respectively, "Sister Mary Frances," and "Josephine;" in Mrs. Reynolds' cabinet "they materialized" the cross; in my cabinet they materialized" the rosary (from which I had taken the cross) but (I have two rosaries) sometimes "they" would hold across about twelve inches long in either hand, oftentimes "they" held it to "their" bosoms while speaking words of comfort.

Mothers with babes in their arms, Indians, and goodness knows who else, "materialized" from my cabinet.

"What would become of your tricks, Sister Hyland, under such tests?"

They were well received and believed by the faithful goers to the seances, until I showed them "how it is done"—and then "the silver cord was loosened;" and "the golden bowl was broken."

"I long to hear you tell how you did it. I await with concern to hear how you did your trick, or being three babies at one time in different places; how could you be three forms, not one of them yourself, and in three different places at the same time?"

A misconstruction. "Heavens! I was those three little tots!" are my words.

But how about being at Mr. H.'s knee, and in the entrance of the cabinet, some six or eight feet distance?

"This is where the clever trickery predominates."

Being claimed as a "trick," it is nothing more than a trick, and could not serve as an "alibi."

According to all philosophical reasoning, "no two objects can occupy the same space at the same time;" we know, also, as rational beings, that it is also a physical and spiritual impossibility—it was a trick—nothing more.

If I was to give you a pen-picture of them (the tricks of materialization) do I not know from bitter experience that you, too, would say: "She could not make me believe that such apparent fraud was the counterpart of the beautiful phenomena I have seen at Miss Nichols?"

One cannot realize a grand play by hearing some one tell all about it, even after they have just come from the theater.

I am perfectly willing to do so, but do I not know that it would only invite ridicule?

It is not advisable to do so. All "mediums" do not know all the tricks, and it is worth something to them "to know the other fellow's schemes." Truly, it would do more harm than good.

I will write you a private letter, and will explain in detail to the best of my ability, how they are done; will also send you a valuable book of instructions and information, and will also send a spirit robe, some little spirit ornaments like crescents, stars, etc., with directions how to use them, and then you can have a seance all to yourself, and it won't cost you anything—and won't harm anybody.

It is the best I can do, and it is the first time that I have ever offered "spirit" wardrobe to anyone.

Yet I do not expect it to be appreciated. "It wouldn't look spiritual to you"—because you will know the trick; if Herrmann was to show us how he did his wonderful performances, the charm and mystery would disappear, and just so it is with the spiritual tricks.

To the audience it matters not how they are done—they must be interesting and effective.

You say: "I will not give the street number (of Miss Nichols' address)."

She lives on No—— Sieber street; but it does not matter where she lives; it only matters how she lives.

"And if the circles which I have described are frauds, kindly point out to me how the fraud may be detected."

"I have seen Mabel (my daughter) a dozen times; some darkness must be secured, but nothing is neglected to prove that all is just what it appears to be."

Yes. It is just what it "appears" to be—nothing more. "Things are not what they may seem"—they appear so.

"I want you to show me where the trick comes in."

Poor, dear brother—half inclined, half declined—the "trick" is partly in your own too great faith; partly, you deceive yourself.

Her tricks are done with confederates; trap doors; black robes over luminous ones; concealed luminous robes and ornaments; wigs, masks, false whiskers, (or male confederates), her "nerve" and your credulity.

Don't you think that the similarity between Mrs. R.'s and hers, and my spirits are striking? Thousands of persons can bear testimony to the spirits described in this letter, as coming from the cabinets of Mrs. Reynolds and my own.

"How may the fraud be detected?"

To the great amount of lasting good it would do to the millions of Spiritualists in the United States and elsewhere; as long as you and Mr. J. R. Francis, our worthy editor, both reside in Chicago, invite Mr. Francis to a private and special seance, for you two gentlemen only.

(Elsie and I used to get grand manifestations in private seances and only two men present.)

Buy about twelve yards—of Canton flannel will do—divide it in four lengths, three yards to a length, make the cabinet yourself, or rather, perhaps Mr. Francis could get a seamstress to sew up two seams only, wide hems on both ends. Put it up yourselves.

If you cannot conveniently procure a "light box," or sliding, shaded lantern, use what many other mediums can conveniently use, in "case of emergency," an ordinary lamp, shaded with a newspaper. (the "spirits" will tell you how to regulate it—they always have done so).

If the "forces" are not strong enough (which will be very likely to be the case) allow Mr. Francis to invite a couple of his friends—for the benefit of his paper—I am very sure indeed, that he and his friends will "behave like gentlemen and think like rational beings," and I am more than sure that it would be a very harmonious circle.

"Everything reasonable ought to be done to show them that spirits who materialized on the Mount of Transfiguration, can still materialize, but only for their friends."

Surely Mabel ought to come.

If Miss Nichols will accept your proposition, and come alone—demand that much—and will walk up and down in front of the cabinet, or kneel down in front of the cabinet (as is her wont), while either one of your gentlemen hold conversation with the spirits at the cabinet, or come to your feet and materialize, while she is in plain view in another part of the room—if she will do this, she is a genuine materializing (?) medium, and God bless her—but if she refuses on any pretext whatever, she is a fraud!

Now I have shown you a fair and impartial way "how the fraud may be detected." I am trying to help you, so that our broken-hearted Brother H. will not have to go to you, as he is indeed a very busy man; he knows his little children still live—but not with the commercial "materializing mediums."

"Is it one in ten thousand?" You mean Miss Nichols, do you not?

No. She is ten thousand in one.

Shake off that spell, brother, it is binding you down worse than would a convict's chain—you are neither free, mentally nor spiritually. Awaken! Realize the fact that your darling daughter Mabel would not make you pay 50 cents or $1 for her visitations. Ask the great spirit Intelligences to lead her to you direct.

Be cheerful; you are too melancholy; the sun cannot shine through the clouds.

I thank you heartily for your many kind words; the others, I will forget, and I will show my appreciation in more than words.

I will reverse St. Paul's glorious words, and name it:

An apostrophe to the "materialized spirit."

It is sown in incorruption, it is raised in corruption; it is sown in honor, it is raised in dishonor; it is sown in power, it is raised in weakness; it is sown a spiritual body, it is raised a natural body; and as one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead, and the materialization—of the living.

LAURA M. HYLAND.

Sawtelle, Cal.

Two Views in Reference to Mr. Forbush.

To the Editor:—Though it seems rather late, I wish to show the other side of the fraud which was mentioned in the Grand Rapids Press of March 19, 1904, also The Progressive Thinker of May 30, which nearly dumfounded us, for we had sat in Mr. Forbush's seances with no good reason to suspect fraud. While I was not present at the fraud (for fraud it certainly was on some one's part) I feel that the medium was used most egregiously unfair to say the least.

In my opinion a fraudulent sitter is as virulent as a fraudulent medium and either is a fit subject for the place that is ungentlemanly to speak of. The Press would not publish the medium's article of vindication, though it was signed by many of the sitters who were present at the time. I happened to be in Grand Rapids a few weeks later and heard the medium's side of the story, and also attended the last of series of test seances given by Mr. Forbush, and was one of three who prepared the room and medium for the seance. The room was an upper floor with but one entrance. The door and window were securely fastened, the door locked and nailed, the window nailed and sealed, the carpet examined closely and renailed so nothing could be obtained from beneath which could be used for making up forms or dress, the walls and curtains were closely scrutinized to see that nothing was secreted about them or any chance for a confederate to assist. Then the medium was disrobed and every article of clothing separately examined and handed to him, one at a time; nothing white found about his apparel except a handkerchief. He was then seated in a chair, with his feet in a pan of flour.

All took seats and awaited results. Within fifteen minutes a form, taller than the medium, parted the curtains and stepped out, dressed in a white robe. Nearly every sitter received and recognized and conversed with one or more of their departed friends. The materialized forms were quite strong, of both sexes and different ages.

The writer received and conversed with a well known lady friend, a former student in life, who while talking to him handed him a fold of her dress that he might see that it was real cloth. At this seance were some strangers who claimed to be skeptics and said it was their first seance and that they received their spirit friends to all appearance and with good evidence. At the close of the seance, the committee examined the medium and cabinet and found everything just as they left it, not a seal broken, and it was impossible for the medium to leave his chair without making tracks on the floor. All the committee could say was, "I am puzzled." I am creditably informed that the other two of the committee, or one at least, worked in the Press office where the fraud report was printed, but made no mention in the Press that he had ever made any investigation.

I have sat in Mr. Forbush's seances several times and always with families whom I would not suspect of harboring fraud. Have met his mother and other members of his family and they bear the impress of integrity and honesty.

I write this article without Mr. Forbush's request or knowledge.

Recently a lady, knowing I had attended a test seance of Mr. Forbush, asked me to write it up, and gave me an article from The Progressive Thinker of April 30, by Mr. Geo. Ferris. While I compliment him on his language, in expressing his noble thoughts, I feel he has sown a little broadcast and like marring the varnish of his article, especially where he says "he is firmly convinced that there are from ten to one hundred frauds to one genuine of both trumpet and materializing mediums." He also says that the controls should have told their medium that a trick was being played on him, and thrown the whiskers out of the cabinet. It was proven that the whiskers were not put in there till the grabbing was done. Besides, the ——— was a Jew and you must remember, Brother Ferris, that neither a sitter in or out of the body can analyze a Jew.

We would like to ask Brother Ferris or anyone to tell where was the fraud in the above described seance.

Hart, Mich. D. B. HUTCHINS.

Opinions will most naturally differ as to what constitutes a test seance of undoubted accuracy and value. In a test seance for the purpose of conclusively, irrefutably, proving the medium to be genuine, no precaution should be omitted; absolutely every possibility of fraud, even the very slightest, should be carefully guarded against.

There should be no possible chance for confederates, and every circumstance that will cast the least shadow of doubt or suspicion on the medium should receive attention. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link, and to leave one chance for fraud destroys the value of the entire seance as absolute proof.

The Society for Psychical Research, in the investigation of Mrs. Piper's mediumship, provided against every possible chance for fraud. They took precautions which many Spiritualists have deemed unnecessary and detrimental, yet thanks to their painstaking and untiring efforts we have a vast amount of accurately recorded phenomena that is compelling the attention of people who would never have given attention to the subject but for the thoroughness of this investigation. To have omitted one precaution would have been to make this celebrated case valueless as scientific proof.

Take also the experiments of Sir William Crookes with D. D. Home and Miss Florence Cook. What would have been their value had he failed to be thorough in his investigations?

But judged by this standard—that to omit one precaution makes the test valueless—and how many of these so-called "test" seances are such in more than name? It is a fact, self-evident to the critical observer, that in nine-tenths of the so-called test seances, faith takes the place of knowledge, and the honesty of the mediuum is assumed, not proven.

It is very easy to apply tests that will not permit of fraud, but observe one fact: The seance should not be held under conditions dictated by the medium, nor should the place where the circle is to be held be left for the medium to select. Every sleight-of-hand performer can produce inexplicable phenomena under test conditions—if the selection of the tests is left to his discretion. Fraud is only possible when conditions are sufficiently lax to allow it, and no one knows better than the fraudulent medium under what conditions he can manifest.

If the seance is held at the home of an acquaintance of the medium, even though we have no good reason to doubt the honesty of that person, yet it is a circumstance that certainly must cast a shadow of suspicion over the manifestations. And if said acquaintance is also a medium—and here let me again say that there may be absolutely no reason to doubt the genuineness of this acquaintance—another element of uncertainty is added to whatever manifestations may be given.

After the exposure of Mr. Forbush the claim was put forth that the paraphernalia was placed in the cabinet for spite, but there never was an exposure yet that this same claim was not put forth and with just as much evidence to support it.

And the test seance which Mr. Forbush has held in the endeavor to vindicate his mediumship are lacking in some of the essential points necessary to give undeniable proof of his honesty and integrity. In the first place these test seances were held at the home of a prominent Grand Rapids medium, and not at a place where the medium was unacquainted as should have been the case. I do not desire to be understood as claiming that this medium in any way aided Mr. Forbush, but when a test seance is held every detail should receive attention. If Sir William Crookes in his investigations had overlooked such a vital point as this his "Researches" would not be of much value in demonstrating materialization and other physical phenomena.

Mr. Forbush was asked to hold a seance under the mosquito-bar test at the home of a Spiritualist of good standing, from whom he had no reason to fear unjust treatment, but, like every other medium so far as I have heard, who has been asked to go into a strange house and submit to the mosquito-bar test, he refused. Why?

As matters now stand Mr. Forbush may be a medium or he may not, with odds in favor of the latter supposition, but this much is certain: before he gives a conclusive demonstration of his genuineness he will have to submit to test conditions that at least are more perfect than those he has submitted to in the past. GEORGE B. FERRIS.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

WHAT IS THE MEANING OF LIFE?

O, what is the meaning of life?
With its endless routine of strife—
With its hopes and fears,
Disappointments and tears,
O, what is the meaning of life?

The soul, how it sighs and sings!
Like a harp of ten thousand strings—
Like the moan of the sea,
Or the rain on the lea—
The saddest of all sad things.

Sometimes, how the shadows fall!
Like a dark and dismal pall
Round the fireside at home
Or wherever we roam
While vainly for light we call.

How we long always to be glad!
Yet oftenest we are sad,
For the joys that we crave
We are given a grave
With its heap of fresh dirt, and a slab.

And O, how we long for love!
The completeness of life to prove
How we stretch our hands
'Cross the weary lands
For the joy of the angels above!

Then tell me, O sage, if you can,
The why of life's intricate plan—
The sensitive soul
O, its mysterics unroll!
Explain them, O sage, if you can.

LAURA B. PAYNE

San Antonio, Texas.

MY MISSION.

To-day on wide, intrepid wing
My soul would cleave the upper air,
And out of vastness find the force
To build life's mansion grand and fair.

Why grand? To glorify the power.
Why fair? For beauty's noblest praise;
For both to mark my God-hood's reach,
To evidence life's wondrous ways.

To prove how strong we can become,
What store and power wait on our call,
What attributes we hold for use,
What manifests may come to all.

To see, to feel, to know, to tell
Th' out-breathings of the Infinite,
To fix the eye on father peaks
And wider scopes to inter-knit.

To smite the rocks where knowledge streams,
Pent up would gladly seek the light,
To watch their courses through the glades
Where Ignorance spreads far its blight.

Away, then, soul! On stronger wing,
Cleave swift and high the outer air,
Roam 'mid the fields of Paradise
And bring of treasures gathered there.

M. A. CONGDON.

Washington, D. C.

TREATMENT BY HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION; or Psycho-Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D., Aberd. New York. Price $3.

This is the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, 376 pages 8vo, of a most valuable and standard work, by an acknowledged authority and expert in the science of healing by hypnotism and suggestion. The method of treatment by suggestion is clearly and exhaustively considered, and illustrated by descriptions of numerous actual cases in the author's personal experience. The work will be found a valuable auxiliary to physicians in ameliorating and curing the mental and physical ills of their patients, and is worthy of most careful study not only by physicians, who should be thoroughly informed in the nature and methods of curative hypnotism or suggestion, but also by all students of hypnotism who desire to thoroughly understand the subject. It is a valuable mine of information to all who consult its pages.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results," By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty, of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

"A Plea for the New Woman." By May Collins. An address delivered before the Ohio Liberal Society. Price 10 cents.

True Papal History

Abridgment of the Letters of Charles MacArthur, the Eminent Historian, Who for 30 Years Has Made a Specialty of the Catholic Question.

BY A STUDENT.

PART TWO.

The present pope having been informed by the Holy Ghost that the heretofore accepted list of popes was incorrect—ten of them accordingly have been dropped. These are individually considered by Mr. McArthur from what Catholic history says of each.

Donus II., 974.

The next to be dropped is Donus II. There were two factions. The stronger one belonged to the party of the dead pope, Benedict VI. They elected Donus. The other party elected deacon Franco who had been excommunicated for murdering the late pope, Benedict VI. Both were consecrated, Donus retaining his own name and Franco selecting Boniface VII., but, as his party was the weaker one, he skipped with all the papal treasures and landed in Constantinople, from which place he hurled anathemas and excommunication at Donus. Ecclesiastical writers are in doubt as to which one is the true pope, as both were consecrated on the same day. But Boniface had all the cash. Donus reigned less than a year. He was poisoned. Nothing is known of him except his name and manner of death. Why he should be dropped from the list seems strange. He appears in all the early records and in even that of Darras, the historian selected to superintend this work.

Benedict VII., 974.

The next on the black list is Benedict VII. On the death of Donus there were two parties, as usual. Franco had returned from Constantinople, and had a strong following which elected him again, as Boniface VII. The opposition, by order of Emperor Otho, elected the bisnop of Sutri as Benedict VII., 975. He was the son of Pope John XII., (956) and a member of the powerful family of Tusculum, that had dominated the papacy for many years. His first act was to convene a council, excommunicate Franco, who had skipped again, but, as Darras admits not until "he plundered the treasury and costly furniture of the Vatican and indulged in the worst excesses."

It is not known just how long Benedict VII., reigned. Darras says from 975 to 984. However, there is every necessary evidence to prove that Franco returned to Rome, murdered him, and for the third time was elected as Boniface VII., but was again driven from the city. I make this statement based on the early records and the official history of the popes by Cardinal Baronius.—In all these Boniface VII., is recorded as succeeding Benedict VIII. Of late years he has been quietly dropped from the list. In proof, Boniface VI. appears in 896; Boniface VIII., in 1294; there is no Boniface VII. Why? Simply because the records show him to have been a murderer, a thief and an all-round scoundrel, and to cover the hiatus, Benedict VII. is made to reign from 975 to 984.

On the death of Benedict VI., Peter, bishop of Pavia, was elected as John XIV., 984. He reigned only eight months, as Franco returned from exile, imprisoned him in the castle of San Angelo, where he was strangled. The body was exposed in the streets to assure the people that he was dead. Again, and for the fourth time, Franco was elected as Boniface VII., 985. But he acted in such a tyrannical manner that he was poisoned, his body thrown into the street, where the populace mutilated it and then stripping off the clothes, dragged it through the streets. Some of the clergy buried it privately. An immediate election was held and a Roman named John was selected. He was poisoned before consecration and appears as John XV., 985. The chronicles of St. Maxentius say that three popes died (murdered) in Rome in 985. "John XIV., Boniface VII., (Franco), and John the elect, (XV.)" thus making Franco a "true pope." Franco, four times a murderer; three times a thief!

John XVI., 986.

The next on the black list is John 986. He excommunicated Gerbert, Archbishop of Rheims, who afterward became Pope Sylvester II., (999). Gerbert paid no attention to the papal bull and issued this manifesto to his clergy: "The judgment of the pope is not so much to bo dreaded as the judgment of God. Should the pope sin against his brother and not obey the church, after repeated admonitions ought to be looked upon, without any regard to his station, as a heathen and a publican. He can cut no man off, much less his fellow bishops, from the communion of the church for not approving what they believe to be contrary to the gospel. Bishops and other pastors of the church are to regulate their conduct by the scriptures, by the canons of the church Universal, and by the decrees of the Apostolic See, when agreeable to them!"

Possibly he is dropped because John did not excommunicate Arnold, bishop of Orleans, who testified at a church council that the Roman church was governed "by the most worthless wretches of the whole human race, by monsters rather than men; abandoned to all manner of wickedness and void of all manner of knowledge, both sacred and profane." But I think John deserved better treatment at the hands of the present Vicar of Christ, as he is credited with the conversion (?) of Russia; with the first recorded act of canonization, and with having instituted prayers to Holy Mary. Darras credits him with having reigned just ten years.

John XIX., 1004.

The next on the black list is John XIX. But it is uncertain who he is.

The numbers of the various Johns have been changed and matters have become so mixed that there is no determining which is which. There are three Johns mixed up in this muddle, XVIII., XIX., and XX., and I had better review all of them so as to get the right one. And they are a healthy lot of vicars of Christ. John XVIII. was elected in 1003. Historians differ as to his name. Some say he was called Sicco, others that he was Mr. Fasanus, but all agree that he was the son of a priest. He was driven into exile, was reinstated by the emperor, and then he arrested and executed all the opposition leaders. The method of execution in those days depended entirely upon the mood of the Holy Father. We have a fair example of it in a description by Darras of how one vicar of Christ murdered another vicar of Christ. Speaking of this pope, John XVIII., Darras says: "This pontiff is reckoned the eighteenth of the name, since it has become customary to number in the catalogue of the soverign pontiffs the antipope Philagathos (John XVII.) of whom mention was made in the pontificate of Gregory V. John was imprisoned by Gregory and as Darras says: "They cut off his nose and tongue and burned out his eyes," and he died "a wretched death." Yet this John was true pope, and a vicar of Christ. And so was Gregory.

Query, what was the fate of the leaders of the opposition, made prisoners and executed by Holy John XVIII? It is said John abdicated, retired to a monastery, where he died in "full odor of sanctity." The chronicles state that he was murdered by the friends of his victims, after he had reigned four months, when Crescentius, the political boss of Rome, nominated and elected a personal friend as John XIX. He reigned five years and then was murdered in a street brawl. Darras says he was a very holy man and was surrounded by holy men and still holier women. In proof, he cites the legend of "The Hermit of St. Nilus."

Alduin, abbot of St. Jean d'Angely, found a stone chest sealed up in the wall of his church. It bore the inscription: "Here rests the head of the Precursor of Christ." Darras says that immense crowds, from all parts of Europe flocked to "venerate this unquestioned and unquestionable relic." Now there was, and still is another head of John the Baptist, on exhibition in Rome. It is authenticated as the veritable one of the Herodias episode It performs miracles every day. But the new one was considerably smaller than the old one. It has never been determined at exactly what stage of life John the Baptist "shed" it.

Mayhap John XIX., is the one to be dropped from the list. But there is still another to choose from; John XX., elected in 1024. He was the youngest brother of his predecessor, Benedict VIII., who was elected in 1012, while his predecessor, Sergius IV., was still alive. John was the son of the Count of Tusculum, the gentleman who wanted to give away all his property to holy Nilus. When elected he was a prefect of Rome, a senator and a layman. He was created deacon, priest, bishop and vicar of Christ within an hour. It is said he was married, but there is no certainty about this, as he was very young, scarcely 20. However, he had a mistress and two children. John was always short of cash, so he sold the title of "Universal Bishop" and the "primacy" of Rome to the Patriarch of Constantinople. For this, the people drove him into exile. Emperor Conrad re-instated him. John squared himself with the Romans by declaring that he had only been "fooling" the Patriarch. He sent a polite note to his "dear brother in Christ" at Constantinople to the effect that he had reconsidered his decision and would retain the title. He retained the money also. This title, on which Rome bases her claims for universal spiritual sovereignty was purpurchased by Boniface III., (606), from the usurper and murderer, Phocas. John now endeared himself to all true believers by discovering a new apostle. Church circles had been rent from center to circumference by a dispute in regard to the status of St. Martial. No one really knew anything about the gentleman, only that a very rich monastery at Limoges had been named after him. Hugo, the abbot, claimed that Martial was one of the apostles. A council was convened at Limoges to decide this momentous question. No decision. Then another council at Poictiers, and still another at Paris, with like result. Anathemas were freely hurled on all sides and many holy men swore themselves black in the face in support of or in opposition to the claim. The monastery sent a deputation to Rome. They returned lighter than when they went. John decided that Martial was one of the twelve apostles. To commemorate this event a feast was instituted which was celebrated every seven years, when the relics of the new apostle were exhibited for seven weeks and numerous indulgences were granted pilgrims to the holy shrine. John reigned nine years. I wonder which of these Johns is blacklisted?

(To be continued.)

Franklin, Neb., Camp.

The camp-meeting opened here Saturday evening, July 30, with a fair attendance. Owing to the lack of sufficient help the opening was delayed one day. The address of welcome was given by the writer, followed by Mrs. Walker of Hastings, Neb., with tests. The music is furnished by the Hart family of Mankato, Kansas. Their music is of a very pleasing nature and gives excellent satisfaction.

On Sunday morning a conference was held, and in the afternoon at 2:30 the meeting was presided over by Mr. Moody who will act as president during the remainder of the camp.

The lecture was given by J. M. White, on Ancient and Modern Spiritualism, and was followed by improvisation of poems on nine subjects given by the audience. In the evening Mrs. Walker, the writer and Mr. Moody addressed the audience and a number of tests were given. The evening audience was large and the people of the town are showing every courtesy. During the nine years that the camp has been held here nothing but the best of treatment has been given by the residents to those attending the camp.

Mr. D. L. Haines, the secretary, and his wife are doing all in their power to make the camp attractive.

Now I wish to call the attention of the Spiritualists of Nebraska to the fact that they can assist very materially by sending donations to Mr. Haines for the support of the camp for future years. When Mr. Haines' house burned, all but two of the camp tents burned with it and all the records of the camp and much of the camp fixtures went up. His house has been rebuilt, but it is under extremely great difficulties that the camp has been held here.

Spiritualists of Nebraska, if you wish to see the cause grow, and see a permanent camp-meeting established in the state, if you cannot come in person, send what you can in money, bedding or tent material to Mr. D. L. Haines, F. R. D. No. 2, Franklin, Neb., and it will be gratefully received and you will feel better for the act.

Mrs. Walker of Hastings, Neb., and J. M. White are the only mediums on the grounds, but several more are expected, and indications point to a very successful camp this season.

J. M. WHITE.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

Life In the Spirit Realms.

A Series of Letters from Spirit Carlyle Petersilea, Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, Medium.

LETTER NUMBER TWO.

I started up. "Great God!" I exclaimed in my surprise, "Is it really you?"

"And why not?" he asked with a smile. "To be sure it is I," and we grasped each the other's hand warmly.

"Well, here we are, Petersilea," he said; "and I never was more glad to see anyone in my life. Well, do you find this life to your taste?" he asked, as he took a seat near me.

"I find it almost precisely as I thought it would be," I answered. "But, how about yourself, my dear old Doctor? You are a little disappointed, I take it."

He was leaning forward with his arms resting upon his legs, and apparently twirling a little black skullcap in his hands between his knees, as I had seen him do a thousand times on earth when he was in deep thought and slightly mortified or disappointed.

"Well; this life is not what I supposed it would be," he replied. "Petersilea," he went on impetuously, grasping my hand once more, "forgive me—forgive me, I pray! I thought I was right—thought I was doing just the right thing—and sincerely thought that you were going straight to the devil, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."

I laughed. "Why, my dear old friend," I said, "I have not even seen the devil, have you?" and I laughed again, somewhat triumphantly I fear, as I stuck my thumbs into the edge of my pockets, after a fashion I had on earth. "You see, Tourgee, the scales of justice have at last turned in my favor. I was down and you were up; now I am up, but I hope you are not down very far."

"Oh, you can afford to laugh at me, I know; but I was sincere; I can tell you that."

"I know you were, dear old boy; but I never could understand how you could believe what you professed to."

"Early teaching—early teaching!" he exclaimed. "I was taught it at my mother's knee, and afterward all the way up by the church, and left the earth fully established in the faith. Well, Petersilea, you were right and I was wrong. It is somewhat humiliating for me to admit it, you see."

"Tourgee, what have you been doing all these years since I saw you last? How have you managed to live away from the New England Conservatory? for I, together with all who knew you, were well aware that you put your very life and soul into it."

"I have not lived away from it," he replied. "I have lived in, and with it, the most of the time since I left the body; but, at last, I became weary of it, especially when things did not go to suit me, and now I think I feel no further interest in it. Gradually my spirit has let go of it, and all those errors are slipping away from me. Really, I cannot now understand how I ever could believe that which I once did. How excessively narrow my views were; and yet, I thought for quite a little time after leaving the body, that my ideas were correct."

"Well, how did you discover your mistake?"

"My friends and relatives met me and took me with them; and after my transports were over at meeting those whom I had loved so well, I said with great solemnity: 'I suppose you are sent by God, to conduct me into his presence, where I expect to be judged?' 'O no,' they answered, 'this is where we live, and we do not know anything more about God, heaven, hell, and the evil one, than we did when on the earth plane. Some here, still think that they exist and we shall go to them sometime. Others do not believe so; but some of us have been here a long time and nothing of the kind ever happens.' Petersilea, if you will believe me, my mind went directly to you, and I said, 'Can it be possible that he was right, after all?' Then, as you know, I visited with you in spirit, and through your mediumistic wife, talked with you, and she saw me distinctly with her inner or spiritual vision. I tried to write through you, but did not succeed. Then I went back to the conservatory and remained there much of the time when I was not with the dear ones I had left—my wife and my son. I could not make my wife understand, but I feel sure that my boy realized my presence. I found him very sensitive and mediumistic and was able to influence him a great deal."

"Are you very much disappointed, Doctor, at not finding things as you expected?"

"I was at first, but now I think I should feel very badly to know that any human beings, had they been ever so wicked, were roasting in hell. And now I cannot conceive of a personal God or a personal devil; and since I have been roaming around through the vastness of much of this realm, heaven and hell have become to me like the small toys of my childhood, little mimic playhouses."

"Well, truly, Doctor, you are getting on."

"How is it, Petersilea, that you never accepted these doctrines? You must have been taught them, when a child, the same as myself."

"Not by my father," I answered. "You know he was a materialist, and believed, and also taught me, that death ended all. This I never could believe; not even when I was very young. Like most boys, I thought I knew better than my father, and whenever I thought upon the subject at all, I tried to study out the problem for myself, and, Tourgee, although I had never, at that time, heard of Spiritualism, yet I came to the same conclusions that I afterward found agreed entirely with Spiritualism; and now I find that Spiritualists, as well as myself, are very nearly right."

"You want to start another conservatory here in the spirit world, do you?" asked the Doctor.

"Yes, that is precisely what I want to do."

"Suppose we go in together once more," he said. "Our religious views cannot separate us again, for now it is not a matter of faith but of knowledge. We know now that we are immortal, and are neither in heaven nor hell, and we have not seen God nor yet Satan. Really, Petersilea," he continued, "I cannot now conceive of a happier heaven than a musical heaven that we together are capable of forming. They were forever singing and playing harps in the heaven of my former faith. I think that was why I was so much in love with it. Now, we can found a little heaven of our own, where all sorts of musical instruments are brought into play. How does that strike you?"

"Very favorably," I replied. "I have been thinking deeply of starting a conservatory of my own. This spiritual world is filled with children and youths of both sexes, all eager to learn; and music has even greater charms here than on earth, for we are higher up the scale of being and do not have to plod in the material as formerly; and, better yet, no one is deterred from learning music because of poverty—not being able to pay for tuition."

"Just so! Just so! Had you thought of erecting a building yourself?"

"Well, yes. What is your opinion about it?"

"We should save time by taking one already built. I know of one exceedingly fine building, not far away, that is now nearly deserted. It was erected by a large concourse of strictly orthodox spirits who, on coming here, would not give up their faith, those who believed in the atoning blood of Christ and infant damnation; but as the earthly world does not send so many spirits here now that believe that hell is paved with the skulls of babes, and as the spirits who did so believe are becoming wiser and learning better, this particular edifice is now nearly deserted. Suppose we take this building and turn it to better use? The few who are still there will readily give it up—in fact, they care nothing more for it."

"All right, Tourgee. You were always a fine business manager. Truly that will be much the best way. Here's my hand, and we will start once more higher up the scale."

"Agreed!" And we sealed the compact with a brotherly grip.

"We can fill the building in the shortest possible space of time," he said, "with teachers and pupils and musical instruments of all kinds. You shall take your former position at the head of the musical department, and I will soon find those who are capable of filling the other departments of elocution, languages and art."

Well, now, dear friends and readers of The Progressive Thinker, I was a very happy man indeed. Reconciled to my old friend and coadjutor, Eben Tourgee, the scales of justice now being evenly balanced, he by a natural law being obliged to render me justice; and glad enough he was to do so. Ah! my heart was singing with contentment and joy. In former years he had caused me much unhappiness; now, all was restored—the bill paid in full—and by the very man who had been unjust to me. And I want right here to say to all who read this: There is a law in nature—and there is no mistake about it—that compels all persons who have been in the least unjust to others, to return to them in full measure, shaken together and running over, all and every farthing of which they have robbed them, every unjust thought they have sent forth. This, in spirit life, cannot be returned in money, but money is simply a symbol or representative of justice or value, and these are of the soul. If a man in earth life robs another of so much as one farthing, that he must restore, here in the spirit world, spiritually. Sooner or later the scales of justice must balance evenly. This is a spiritual natural law that no one can escape.

"Come," said Tourgee, "we will go and look at the edifice," and we went.

The building was a very large and elegant structure, surmounted by a belfry and small spire. Now we have bells here the same as you do on earth, but they are not of iron; they resemble silver and give forth a silvery, musical sound. Of course they are not metal bells, but spiritual bells. Mr. Denton could tell you the various chemicals that enter into their construction. As I am not a chemist but a musician, I am unable to do so. This bell seemed as real to me as any bell of earth, and as I said, the sound was sweet and silvery.

"We can call our classes together by ringing that bell," said Tourgee.

"So we can," I assented. "You are the same good manager as of yore, I perceive."

"Is it not strange," he continued, "that you, the Spiritualist, whom they held in contempt, should now make use of one of their abandoned church edifices? And do you know that some of those very ministers who helped me to manage the New England Conservatory, belonged to this society of spirits? for many of those ministers passed on some years ago."

"Retributive justice!" I murmured. "No one can escape the law. They are nearly all fast abandoning their old creeds and dogmas, and their church edifices will be turned into establishments where truth in its highest form will be taught."

To enter into all the details of our getting the school under way is not my present purpose. Enough, that we were not long in getting together a flourishing school of teachers and pupils. Old earthly teachers were again attracted to us, and wanted to work with us, and we were exceedingly glad to have them.

Strange, how very strange that I now find myself, as in my palmy days on earth, once more joined to my old comrade and co-worker, Dr. Eben Tourgee, at the head of a large conservatory of music; almost identically like the one on earth—one scale higher up in being, the spiritual instead of the material.

I forgot to mention that we soon had a banner, or flag, flying from the spire, on which were the words:

"Petersilea Music School and Academy of Languages and Art." Almost the same sign that I had used so many years on earth. And over the front entrance, "Dr. Eben Tourgee, Manager."

Now I enter into all these details to show to those of earth how it is here in the spheres, and what we do and how we do it, and to let you know that every one will find his or her rightful place and be employed in that which he loves best and is best adapted to perform. Every one will find his or her rightful vocation.

Many pupils came saying: "Mr Petersilea, how we did want to study music with you when we were on earth, but were too poor and could not pay for lessons. Now we can come and study with you without money and without price. Oh, how glad we are that our wishes, at last, are to meet with fulfillment." And thus all are recompensed. I would gladly have given them lessons for the pleasure of teaching them, when on earth, but I was obliged to have money wherewith to pay my own expenses.

(To be continued.)

KING DOLLAR.

I'm a dollar, just a dollar, as your eyes can plainly see,
Though in silver or in paper, man has shaped and fashioned me.
A hundred cents is my true value, though I'm often squeezed below,
And from bar and store and pulpit, into banks and out I go.

Oft I'm pinched so hard my metal gives beneath the miser's thumb;
Sometimes covered with tobacco, or exchanged for beer or rum.
Sometimes stolen, sometimes taken to the courts for fees or fines;
Always loved and always wanted, always used as man inclines.

Oft I buy the souls of beings, purchase manhood, sorrow bring,
And am worshiped as divinely by the peasant as by king.
I oft buy virtue, dethrone reason, hold religion in my hand;
Have the power of upbuilding, and of ruining the land.

I fix prices on all labor, cramp the consciences of men,
Buy up justice, own and use it, and abuse it now and then.
I am King o'er all the nations, and make all men fall in line;
Incite murder, war and famine; I am It! The World is Mine!

DR. T. WILKINS.

STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Report of the President of the State Association.

In my last letter, I promised to write of my travels in eastern Washington. I lectured for the Spokane society on the 24th of April, found the work rather at a standstill, owing to internal troubles, the same that has affected so many other and older societies. I remained here until the last of July. I found a warm-hearted, progressive, generous people. During my stay I had the pleasure of ordaining their president, Mrs. Dr. Jennie French; administered spiritual baptism to Rev. Mrs. Connell's son, a bright little lad of some 14 summers. Some people who have been Spiritualists for more than twenty years, said as the flowers fell from my hand's over the young lad's head, with the words of advice given to him from the controlling influence, they felt as though they themselves had received a new baptism from the spiritual world. Our orthodox friends paid us the compliment of saying it was the most beautiful service they had ever had the pleasure of seeing. The hall was beautifully decorated for the occasion.

We organized a lyceum which bids fair to be the banner lyceum of the state. The officers are wide-awake, up-to-date people. One happy feature is, the older people are taking as much interest as the children. The teachers propose meeting once a week to study the lesson, in this way coming to their classes prepared to teach. Under the leadership of Mrs. Beauchamp and her able corps of assistants, this lyceum is bound to grow. During my stay with this society we had what looked almost like a Methodist revival; thirty-eight came forward one night to declare themselves Spiritualists and to become members of the society. Over fifty joined during my stay.

The last night of my stay the society tendered me a reception at the home of Brother and Sister Armstrong, which was enjoyed by all, especially myself. The host and hostess seemed to put forth special efforts to make their guests enjoy themselves.

Short speeches by the president, Mrs. French, Dr. Parks, Mrs. Corselius, Mr. Clark and many others, your humble servant responding to the many good wishes expressed. The music was furnished by the host and hostess, which was no small feature of the evening's pleasure.

I cannot refrain from quoting one remark from the president's address, because it did me so much good and made me feel that I can return to these dear people the first Sunday in September to labor with them for the next year, with more courage and a determination to try and measure up to the standard she has already placed for me. The remark was, "While Sister Sheldon has increased our membership, she has done one thing that I think is of far more importance than that, and that is she has helped us to grow more spiritually. A number have admitted to me that she has enabled them to overcome some of their antagonism, and they feel more love and tolerance for others' feelings than they had ever experienced before."

I was sorry that I could not remain one day longer, for I did want to attend Sister Clark's birthday party. I hear good reports, and may she have many more as enjoyable. She is a dear good worker.

During my stay in Spokane I had the pleasure of performing the marriage ceremony of A. G. Wheeler to Mrs. Louis Williams. May their lives be one round of joy.

Letters came to me from Walla Walla asking are there any Spiritualists in that city. If any one knows of the address, I hope they will be kind enough to communicate that fact to me.

Owing to the near approach of our state encampment, I had to cut out Ellensburg, North Yakima, also Lind.

Spiritualism is progressing, people are not so much afraid to let others know they are with us, and they now can see the necessity of systematic organized work. In order to have harmony we must have system, in order to have the world respect us we must organize.

Everything looks bright for the success of our state encampment; the mediums as well as the lay workers are putting their shoulder to the wheel, the result will be apparent when we close the encampment with state convention and the last leaf is turned the books are closed for this year. It is then we will be able to see what it is to have loyal workers—not a face absent through any inharmonious feelings.

For the present and up to the closing of the camp my address will be Edgewood Spiritual Camp, Rural Free Delivery. After that Spokane, Wash., where I go to serve that society for the coming year. Our camp opens July 31, closes Aug. 21. The convention will be held August 22 and 23.

I am visiting for a few days with Rev. Flora Heckman, who would be pleased to correspond with societies in the east. Her address is 913 S. 11th street, Tacoma, Washington.

FRANCES A. SHELDON,
President W. S. S. A.

IF HIS MOTHER KNEW.

Hold on, young man; one moment, please,
Before you pass that door to-night:
You say you mean no harm, you say
You'll bring a sinless heart away,
You say that you are strong, that Right
Shall guard you from the wiles of Wrong,
That to yourself you will be true,
But would you still seek pleasure there—
Come, answer truly and be fair—
If you could know your mother knew?

We always tell ourselves before
We weakly yield that we are strong;
We always, ere we enter in,
Expect to leave still free from sin,
And still the armored foes of Wrong.
But few would fall and few would sign,
Remorse would gnaw the hearts of few
If each, when Conscience cries "Beware!"
Would ask himself if he would care
To do it if his mother knew.

—S. E. Kiser.

An Easy Way to Make Money.

I have made $560.00 in 80 days selling Dish-washers. I did my housework at the same time. I don't canvass. People come or send for the Dish-washers. I handle the Mound City Dish-washer. It is the best on the market. It is lovely to sell. It washes and dries the dishes perfectly in two minutes. Every lady who sees it wants one. I will devote all my future time to the business and expect to clear $4,000.00 this year. Any intelligent person can do as well as I have done. Write for particulars to the Mound City Dish-Washer Co., St Louis, Mo.

MRS. W. B.

"Social Upbuilding, Including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistis Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

A PRACTICAL COURSE
FOR Physicians and Students
of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to

MISS NETTIE WINTER,
466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PUBLICATIONS
OF
Hudson Tuttle.

Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.

This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.

In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRIT AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.

English edition. Price, $1.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF MAN.

Containing the latest investigations and discoveries, and a thorough presentation of this interesting subject. English edition. Price $1.

THE SECRETS OF THE CONVENT OF THE SACRED HEART.

This book was written for an object, and has been pronounced equal in its exposure of the diabolical methods of Catholicism to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Price, 25 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.

A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

How to investigate. How to form circles, and develop and cultivate mediumship. Names of eminent Spiritualists. Their testimony. Eight-page tract for mission work. Singles copies, 5 cents; 100 for $1.25.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.

By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best peoms of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE.

For the home, the lyceum and societies. A manual of physical, intellectual and spiritual culture. By Emma Rood Tuttle. A book by the aid of which a progressive lyceum, a spiritual or liberal society may be organized and conducted without other assistance. Price, 50 cents; by the dozen, 40 cents. Express charges unpaid.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.

For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.

All books sent postpaid. Address
HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

THE WIDOW'S MITE,
AND
OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value. 538 octavo pages. Price, cloth. $2.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pear Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1904.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

We Insist: Don't Do It.

The Progressive Thinker, in its issue of July 23, had a brief editorial, fourth page, first column, near the bottom, headed "Don't Do It," to which a learned correspondent takes exceptions. He maintains, in substance, that the text in I. Cor. 7:36, which we declined to quote, conveys a different meaning from that which is accepted by the ordinary reader. The great German critics, he assures us, place a different construction on the text from that we have done.

We own to being shocked as we read King James' translation, so we opened the revised translation, and found "daughter," following the word virgin. This was supplied by the revisers. Now, as we write, we have opened the Douay version, and there the change in language is but slight. Next we consulted both the Greek and Latin text, and we are sure no fault can be found in the common rendering.

It seems to be a fact, whenever texts are found which do not agree with church teaching, educated clergymen attempt to correct the renderings so as to agree with their wishes in the premises. A thousand variant sects have sprung into being, each quoting the "Holy Bible" as authority for their faith. If God inspired the compilation of books, as churchmen allege, it is regretable he was so careless in expression as to convey in many cases the opposite to that he desired to teach.

We strongly suspicion God had nothing to do in the production of the book. It came from the hands of finite men, and most of it was written in an unlettered age, and all by priests in furtherance of their priestly interests. This accounts for its contradictions, and its crude ethical inculcations.

The Spiritualist Camps.

The Spiritualist camp-meetings during the summer season are the center of attraction, and are instrumental in doing a grand work. A report from one is a report of all, as the speakers and mediums in point of doing excellent work, are about the same. The camp represents what can be found in Chicago in any week of the year—eloquent speakers, first-class test mediums, spirit pictures of undoubted genuineness, trumpet mediums of a high order and of unquestionable honesty. Besides, the following interesting phenomena are taking place in Chicago, not found at any camp-meeting: At the house of Mr. Thessman, clothing, neck-ties, money, etc., are being brought by the spirits. His little girl, while at school, had money placed by unseen hands on her desk. In fact Chicago has all the phenomena presented at the camp-meetings, and more. It has a broader expanse of water; it has magnificent parks to charm the visitor, and its attractions are almost equivalent to a World's Fair. But notwithstanding this fact Chicago has the kindest feeling towards all the camps and wishes them abundant success, and they are having it in all respects.

A Wonderful Concession.

Now the announcement comes that the pope has given consent for priests to wear beards. What a wondrous concession! It would be well if the same august personage would issue a bull allowing the same class of persons to entertain an honest thought. Instead, they expose themselves to expulsion from church, to death itself, and to the pains of hell forever, if they entertain an opinion contrary to the so-called Augustan creed.

And how much short of this is the fate of a Protestant who does not indorse the dogmas of his church? A pure life does not count for anything in the absence of belief. Will it always be so?

Who Are Christians?

"These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Jesus—Mark 16:17, 18 and 19.

That is a test of Christian faith which is practical, and can be depended upon. Dr. Isaac A. Estey, the well-known faith doctor of Maine, lately tried it. He was not a Christian. It killed him! Who next will try? Are those who refuse the test Infidels? That is just the information we want.

Practical Science.

Down South, the cotton crop is threatened with destruction by an insignificant little bug, called the boll-weevil. The mighty scientists of the Agricultural Department at Washington have experimented exhaustively and have found no enemy, no poison, no toxin, that will destroy the pest. They stood aghast at the ravages of the bug, and acknowledged their powerlessness. Suddenly one arose and his words were received with shouts of joy. He informed the Secretary of Agriculture that in Patagonia were red ants, whose business is to kill boll-weevils. They were strenuous in the slaughter, and all that would be necessary to free the country of weevil, was to send him after a few boxes of ants! In many southern pulpits prayers were made for his success.

Now comes a Texas scientist, and says that there are about all of these red ants in the South that can get an honest or dishonest living. Their name is Solenopsis debilis texana, and they are identical with the Patagonian species. He says they kill many weevil, in the larva and pupa state, but never attack the mature bug. The weevil has the advantage of them, and after feeding all the ants there is enough left to supply every cotton-boll with a boarder.

There is something sublime in the picture of one of the big battle ships, sailing with a party of "scientists" to the bleak coasts of Patagonia, and returning with a few colonies of red ants! When they call them Solenopsis Patagonia, the boll-weevil ought to curl up and die. The sublimity is taken out of this expedition by the Texan who declares there are swarms of red ants in his state, that may be had by experimenters for the gathering.

Scientists have been mistaken and perhaps this Texan does not distinguish between the native and foreign. Perhaps the Patagonian ant is as much more "strenuous" than the Texas species, as a tiger is fiercer than a jack rabbit. Perhaps! And when these strenuous ants multiply, what shall be done with them?

Most sapient scientists advised the importation of the sparrow. These have become a pest a thousand fold more objectionable than the worms the sparrows were supposed to devour, but which they did not.

There cannot be a doubt that any of the cultivated toxins would kill a boll-weevil, at any time of life, from the egg to the grey sinners that lay the eggs. Why not have the government send a squad of vivisection doctors into the cotton fields, and have every weevil given a dose? Some trouble! Yes, and so it will be to send a battle-ship to Patagonia, and to nurse the red ants after they are turned loose in the South. Of the two it will be the least troublesome.

The Cause of Hot Weather.

A new lesson in biblical exegesis was given by Dowie to his flock in Zion City, on a recent Sunday.

He gave a new solution for the cause of warm weather, in his sermon to the faithful. It is a solution that has escaped the ken of the meteorologists and weather prognosticators, and more wonderful still it has escaped the ken of Bible commentators and exegesists. And really our modern Elijah has more of a Bible foundation for his theory than many Bible expounders have for their dogmas of faith.

Listen! He said the humid and oppressive heat was due to the presence in the air of millions of little devils, sent here by the evil one to annoy sinners.

The good spirits, the spirits of the upper regions, he said, were chased away by the little devils until Christ rebukes the evil spirits and sends them to hell, thus permitting good spirits to return to the realm where they roam.

In substantiation of this claim, he pointed out Christ's experience on Gallilee. Christ rebuked the waves because the people were oppressed, and in so doing chased away the little devils who created the storm.

Dowie might have quoted in further confirmation of his theory what Paul wrote to the Ephesians (chap. 2:2) about "the prince of the power of the air," etc., which prince is supposed to be the chief potentate of all the little devils who make it hot for sinners not only here and now but also in the hotter climate they will find in the world to come.

If the little devils can outdo Dowie in making it hot for those he classifies as sinners—verily, the poor sinners are to be commiserated.

Yet Another Church.

Another church has been discovered, to add to the number. A cable dispatch to the Inter Ocean relates that the British commissioners who have been in the interior for the demarcation of the boundary of British Guiana, met with some strange experiences.

At Roraima the commissioners found King Jeremiah had a church built, in which he conducted three times a day a curious service, attended by all the Indians in the vicinity.

Jeremiah, in his capacity of priest, robed himself in some ancient European garments and took up his position at the east end of the building, facing the worshipers, who all knelt devoutly.

The men occupied one side of the church and the women and children the other. The worshipers, unlike their priest, were entirely unclothed.

The service consisted of counting from one to ten and saying the alphabet in English, each being recited first by the priest and then repeated by the congregation.

Both having been gone through ten times, the priest ran through a lot of names, among which Jesus Christ and God frequently occurred, the congregation reverently repeating these, also. Jeremiah cannot read or write, and teaches the people nothing more than this curious ritual, but evidently he has considerable authority over his people, which he wields for good. He possesses three wives, many children, and three or four houses in different parts of the country.

Whether this peculiar church will find followers in our country may be doubtful, but their ritual and form of worship are scarcely less senseless and barren of uplifting spiritual tendency than the practices, methods and beliefs of more pretentious churches of our land. And what shall we say of our "Holy Rollers," etc., etc?

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

A Plea for Honesty

The man who reads only one side of an important question, anchoring himself firmly there, refusing to look beyond the very limited horizon that he has constructed for himself, is only half-developed, a lop-sided individual, and in some respects is a monstrosity.

This thought arises from a letter which we received from a lady who did not want The Progressive Thinker, because there were at times serious controversies and disputations therein between master minds—she did not like controversy, poor woman, but preferred, of course, to live in the little narrow horizon of her own mental superficial sphere—only half-developed, a sort of intellectual and spiritual nondescript, dreaming her life away outside of controversy and the disputations arising therefrom. She is to be pitied.

"Is Spiritualism a Religion?" "The Great Psychological Crime" Book, "The Blue Book" and "Deception in Mediumship," are questions that have FORCED THEMSELVES TO THE FRONT in The Progressive Thinker, and DEMANDED A HEARING, pro and con.

This paper is for brainy Spiritualists, for Spiritualists who want to hear ALL SIDES OF A QUESTION, and who have analytical minds, and who are not anchored beyond removal on any question of importance, but who want the TRUTH, THE WHOLE TRUTH, AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH. Those not in harmony with this standpoint, have no use for The Progressive Thinker.

"The Great Psychological Crime" book—alas! how many thought it would injure Spiritualism, and The Progressive Thinker was roundly upbraided, scolded and condemned for presenting it to the public. In some respects the discussion of the nature of the book was composed of sharp-pointed arrows dipped in poison, wormwood and gall, and many saw therein the ruin of our cause. But strange to say, the clouds cleared away, the lightnings ceased to flash and the thunders to roar, AND FINALLY ALL WERE WILLING TO CONCEDE THAT GREAT GOOD HAD BEEN DONE TO THE CAUSE OF TRUTH BY THE DISCUSSION IN THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. The controversy now going on in reference to the Blue Book and the materializing monstrosities that dress themselves in artificial toggery and pretend to represent your angel friends, will no doubt, result in great good also.

When Spiritualists fully realize that there are two sides to spirit manifestations—one side beautiful, soul-elevating and in all respects angelic; the other side dark, dismal, degrading and soul-destroying—when they realize that these two sides exist in perfect contrast in our ranks to-day, then they will be prepared for a discussion in regard to the Blue Book and deception as practiced by mortals and immortals. Here is a case in point, related by J. I. Hollingsworth: "While visiting the family of Mr. Clinton H. Sprinkle, in the adjoining town of Berkley, W. Va., there was also visiting the family a trance and independent slate-writing medium from Baltimore, Md., Mr. Joseph Sewell, and at times when in a trance, his physical body would be taken possession of by his Indian guide, 'Toby;' and as soon as he would be in possession of Sewell's body his Indian appetite would return to him and he would call for pound cake and whiskey, and upon it being given to him, would stay his enormous Indian appetite, at the expense of Sewell's body, and when he Sewell would again get in possession of his physical body he would be in misery for several days."

In the above we have the DARK SIDE of Spiritualism, while the ANGELIC SIDE is nobly represented by hundreds of rostrum-speakers and honest mediums whose homes are heaven and whose lives are angelic. As Mr. Buchanan well says in New Thought:

"THE FIRST STEP LEADING TO THE SHRINE IS HONESTY. IN ITS HIGHEST MEANING HONESTY STANDS AS THE EXPRESSION OF JUSTICE. THE WORLD NEEDS THIS PRINCIPLE MORE THAN ANY CREED. IN SO FAR AS MAN CULTIVATES HONESTY HE BUILDS FOR GREATNESS. STRAIGHTFORWARD THOUGHT, COUPLED WITH A STRONG BRAIN, A DETERMINED WILL, AND ONENESS OF PURPOSE, WILL LEAD TO THE HIGHEST ACHIEVEMENT. COMPROMISE WITH DECEIT OR STRATAGEM WEAKENS THE WILL AND DESTROYS SELF-CONFIDENCE. TO STAND FIRM UPON THE SUMMIT OF TRUTH REQUIRES STRENGTH OF CHARACTER AND FAITH IN THE JUSTICE OF LAW."

The dark side of Spiritualism as represented by fakes and the Blue Book, is the dishonest side, the side of trickery, crookedness, deception and falsehood. The one who gives a fake test, is a receiver of stolen goods, and should be sent to the penitentiary.

"THE MAN GIVEN TO LYING, TO TRICKERY, AND DECEPTION DWINDLES AS TIME PASSES; THE LIAR IS DESTROYED BY HIS OWN LIES, THE TRICKSTER BY HIS OWN TRICKS," hence it is only a question of time when such people will become spiritual dwarfs, for every evil act will brings its own punishment, even as one prominent speaker asserts, to the extent of ANNIHILATION.

"JUSTICE IS MORAL HEALTH, BRINGING HAPPINESS; WRONG IS MORAL DISEASE, BRINGING MORAL DEATH."

That wrong—whatever its nature or kind—which will bring moral death to an individual, will bring moral death eventually to any denomination, sect or cult, that says, "Let it alone; to continually expose it will injure our cause." That is the word sent forth by many well-meaning Spiritualists. It gives fraud of all kinds condemnation, and then condemns those who have been deceived by fakes, for crying fraud.

Is not "wrong" a moral disease, and is not any State Association in a bad way when it says unequivocally that you should on the rostrum make no reference to it, nor condemn it in the press, for fear that the trickery embraced in that moral disease will attract others in our ranks to practice fraud.

The State Association of New York, in giving expression to the wish that fakers be let entirely alone, forgot the fundamental fact that WEEDS UNMOLESTED WILL SPREAD RAPIDLY, and at the same time placed itself in direct opposition to the State Association of Washington.

RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Washington State Spiritualist Association, held in the city of Seattle, Wash., the following preamble and resolutions were introduced and passed unanimously as their official attitude in the matter set forth in said resolutions, viz.:

Whereas, Spiritualism in its purity relates to, and deals with the highest interests of humanity; teaching and demonstrating the truth of the doctrine of a continued conscious existence after the change called death—and,

Whereas, There are certain persons in our leading cities throughout our land, who advertise themselves as adherents and representatives of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, but who are simply practicing upon the credulity and honesty of the general public, never identifying themselves with any well organized movement among intelligent and conscientious Spiritualists—and,

Whereas, These well known fakes and frauds often claim for themselves, the protection of our laws, both in city and state, and the prestige of well organized movements among our people, but who by deception and charlatanry bring a most worthy cause into ill-repute and mislead the public in its estimate of the basic principles of the philosophy of Spiritualism. Therefore be it

Resolved: 1. That the Washington State Spiritualist Association is not in favor of making merchandise of the sacred gift of mediumship for sordid and personal considerations, but that all so favored should regard as a solemn responsibility such spiritual attainments, and should use them for the upbuilding of humanity.

2. That we have no sympathy for, or connection with, the many advertising agencies, either in our cities or state, purporting to be bona-fide representatives of Spiritualism, but who are simply impostors deceiving the credulous and debasing a worthy cause to the level of the trickster for the purposes of gain and sordid self-interest.

3. That we will most heartily co-operate with the duly recognized authorities of our state, in preventing these impostors from longer preying upon the honest investigator of our phenomena and philosophy and beguiling the unwary into compensating them for promises that cannot be kept and for statements easily proven to be false.

4. That as an Association, we desire to teach the Truth, the whole Truth and nothing but the Truth, in relation to the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism and upon this foundation we place ourselves, confidently awaiting the just verdict of approval that the Truth ultimately secures.

5. That one thousand copies of these resolutions be printed and issued to the general public, and all practical methods be employed to promulgate the statements and truths therein contained.

Signed: P. C. MILLS, President.
JULIAN SMITH, Secretary.
Washington State Spiritual Association.

Here we have a plea for honesty, for everything that is clean, pure, and uplifting. As the immortal Ingersoll said, "Let us be honest."

Spirits Invading the Church.

SPIRIT RETURN IS THE COMMON HERITAGE OF ALL. NO SPIRITUALIST CAMP-MEETING, NO SPIRITUALIST CIRCLE, NO CLUB, CULT OR SOCIETY OWNS IT EXCLUSIVELY. WHILE SPIRITUALISTS ARE DISCUSSING LEADING QUESTIONS IN THE OPEN COURT, THE SPIRITS COME TO AN HUMBLE INDIVIDUAL OF THE CHURCH, AND CONDUCT HIM TO THE REALM OF SOULS, AND DEVELOP WITHIN HIM REMARKABLE INTUITIVE POWERS. TWO LIGHTS GUIDE AND DIRECT HIM IN THE RIGHT PATH. TO SAY THE LEAST, MR. CASE IS A REMARKABLE MAN, DEMONSTRATING THE FACT THAT SPIRITS CAN AND DO COMMUNICATE WITH MORTALS, IN AND OUT OF THE CHURCH. AND HERE IS WHAT WILL EVENTUALLY COME TO PASS. THE CHURCHES, THOROUGHLY LIBERALIZED, WILL INCORPORATE SPIRIT RETURN IN THEIR CODE OF BELIEF. MEDIUMSHIP WILL BE HELD SACRED.

OUTSIDE OF SPIRITUALISM.

And Yet a Remarkable Medium—His Gifts Are Most Wonderful, Coming, as He Thinks, From God.

Toledo, Ohio., Aug. 1.—A sermon preached at the East Broadway United Brethren Church, Toledo, Ohio, by its regular pastor, the Rev. W. C. Shupp, one of the city's most substantial and conservative ministers, has created a tremendous sensation. His subject was: "Revelation From the Lord Through Ernest Case."

Case, it will be remembered, is the man whose spiritual visions have startled press, pulpit and public alike during the past several days. He said in part:

"The vast panorama of heaven and hell God has permitted Ernest Case to gaze upon. I have tested this man in every conceivable manner. He never misses anything in general and seldom a minor detail. He is not a religious fanatic, and never took much interest in religion. His warnings from visions were terrible—horrible. He thoroughly destroys and precludes every argument that would indicate this phenomena could be attributed to any other than divine causes.

Direct Messenger of God.

"I am forced to believe that God has drawn a veil over the five senses of this man temporarily and developed his spiritual sense in such a manner that he speaks as the direct messenger from God. I tested him, a plain, uneducated man, carefully. With eyes closed, so ill he could not rise from his bed normally, I would cause the Bible to be removed from beneath his pillow and hidden in dark, out-of-the-way places. Suddenly, with eyes closed, he would point to me, or whoever took it, slowly rise, walk with eyes closed direct to where the Bible was hidden, seize it, mutter a prayer, then collapse.

"I am in a hard place this morning, but must do my duty. What I saw, what others saw, we must believe. He can tell what and who a visitor is as soon as he comes near the house. He read to me revelations of past lives of many whom he did not know till I begged of him to desist.

"He is calm, cool and collected. He says he is always guided by two lights which lead him.

Decribed Heaven and Hell.

"He told many visions of heaven and revelations of hell. The latter place is where the victim is kept in constant terror of some terrible danger. He receives and translates wonderful messages. He says—and I am now convinced it is true—that God has selected this man of all to warn the world to repent.

"He told wonderful things of the planets and their past. His ability to find that Bible surpasses all knowledge. He can read the most abject stranger at once through and through and has revealed some startling local characters."

Pastor Shupp also stated that he made a careful investigation of the man's early history and his every-day life. Case is general foreman for the Massillon Bridge Company. Among other big contracts of which he had charge was the Eads Bridge at St. Louis.

Most Wonderful Man.

"Here," said the minister, "his employers inform me that they were astounded at the work of the man. He had under him about 150 of the hardest men to control that were perhaps ever together on one piece of work. He had absolute control over them and never had occasion to reprimand them.

"But the most wonderful feature of this job was that, when the plans were shown him at the office, he looked them over carefully and never again referred to them, not even footing up the long columns of measurements and adjustments. This all came to him in some unaccountable manner through the entire contract.—Chicago American.

Ernest Case of No 1209 Greenwood avenue, Toledo, Ohio has been in condition of trance for six days and can only find relief from pain by having his Bible and Testament under his pillow all the time. The family has given opportunity for tests, which have been made by Dr. A. C. White, the Rev. W. C. Shupe of the East Broadway United Brethren Church, and local newspaper men.

In every case after the books were removed from under the pillow Case roused from his stupor as if in pain, pointed an accusing finger at his wife and went painfully and with difficulty, but directly, to whatever place in the house the books had been removed. He then uttered a brief and inarticulate prayer and in each case fell over unconscious. Removed to his bed and the Bible and Testament placed under his pillow, he relapsed peacefully into the comatose condition.

He has traced with his fingers in the air several times as follows: "Ernest Case, died 27," and during a moment of consciousness this afternoon told his wife than an angel would visit him to-morrow and inform him when he was to die. He described in detail the manner of his death, which he says will not be long delayed.

Case is 35 years old. He was born in Olentangy, Ohio. He is foreman of a big bridge construction gang for the Massillon Bridge Company, and this summer had charge of 150 men engaged in repairing the Eads bridge at St. Louis. He returned home ill, and the physician there said he had an abscess of the stomach. Doctors here said it was an ulcer of the stomach, and he has been under constant medical tratment. He was in bed about a month, but recovered partially and went into the trance on Thursday last while sitting beside the bed of his wife, who had been attending him.

Mrs. Case is a very intelligent woman, the daughter of Superintendent Robert Swede of the Massillon Bridge Company. She does not attempt to explain her husband's condition. She says he was no believer in the supernatural, but hard-working, honest, intelligent man and a member of the United Brethren Church. She firmly believes that he is doomed to die, and that the date will be revealed to him to-day as he predicted. She has had both clergymen and physicians make tests of his condition and of his peculiar trend to the Bibles under his pillow and with unvarying result.

The patient takes no nourishment, and at long intervals has moments of semi-consciousness, when his wife contrives to converse with him. He told her to-day that he would die suddenly and while reclining in her arms, but that the exact date would not be revealed until to-morrow. He takes no onurishment whatever, and seems to need none. He experiences pain only when the Bible and Testament are removed, and then is seized with something resembling spasms He will be closely watched to-day for the visitation of the angel.—New York Press.

Meat and Milk.

To the Editor:—I do not want to miss any number of The Progressive Thinker, as I am practically a reading Spiritualist, and have never witnessed but little of the phenomena. I can read of much that has been builded, and much that is torn down—the pros and cons; "The Great Psychological Crime," and some that support it, while many long-experienced and reliable mediums that condemn it; Blue Book and the variety of opinions on other subjects, that sometimes I don't know "where I am at"; but all die, and do our good friends live after death? It does seem that the real thing must continue, and if the theory and fact of spirit return is true and the experiences of H. W. Beecher and Carlyle Petersilea are correct, that testimony settles the whole question, and this wordy wrangle is a superfluity.

I enjoyed the messages published in The Progressive Thinker from H. W. Beecher, through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea, very much; there was so much of Beecher in them; having read years ago Beecher's Thursday lecture talks, published weekly in the New York Independent. It helped strengthen my opinion of their genuineness. Could I have my preferences I would have more of the "genuine stuff"—that right from headquarters if it can be obtained through good, reliable mediums, than the vaporings and speculations of theorists. Information and facts are what is wanted concerning a condition that must be met by all, and modern up-to-date methods, conditions and facts are what is wanted. Consequently I read all communications from the other life, and learn all I can, digest and utilize what seems probable, and am interested in all such, and if they are the real thing, then we have something to tie to. H. NETTERTON.

Our friend must recognize the great fact that agitation of thought is the forerunner and cause of mental and spiritual growth. Without agitation of thought the mind becomes stagnant—agitation is necessary to mental health. The mind, like the body, must have exercise, to maintain a normal state and proper standard of attainment and excellence.

Furthermore the reading of the pros and cons, looking at both sides and every side of a subject, and weighing the views of variant thinkers, broadens one's mind and cultivates a philosophic disposition and a habit of careful judgment.

Readers of The Progressive Thinker can never become mentally torpid, nor lose their minds' faculties because of disuse—as is the law of evolution in animal being.

It will be the work of The Progressive Thinker to agitate not merely the shallow surface of mentality, but to stir the depths of our readers' spiritual natures, that there may be a healthy development in all things that go to make well-rounded character in all the essentials of true manhood and womanhood as related to this present life and the higher spirit realm.

To this end there must be variety of mental pabulum, to meet the varied wants of individual readers—meat for the strong, milk for babes.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price 25 cents.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

Endorses the Open Court.

The Open Court affords an excellent opportunity for the free expression of opinion on the part of Spiritualists. Here is a venerable Spiritualist, Dr. Schellhous, a man of large and varied experience, of great scientific knowledge, who feels thankful that the Open Court has been instituted, and is now in session, discussing important questions. Those who are opposed to a free and open discussion as manifested in the Open Court, better go and join the Catholic Church, where rottenness is never allowed to be aired; where evil doings are carefully concealed; where free criticism is not tolerated. If the Catholic Church would allow an Open Court in its organs, and permit its members to read free-thought literature, it would not survive six month. We will never follow in the footsteps of that church, but will allow the freest discussion in the Open Court, that will still remain in session a short time only, and Truth will come out uppermost, and honest mediums will rejoice, and Spiritualism will advance.

To the Editor:—You have wisely instituted an Open Court in your LIVELY AND EXCELLENT PAPER that promises to clear the spiritual atmosphere that is vitiated by fraud—"a consummation most devoutly to be wished."

I have been a silent but interested spectator, and now I wish to come as a witness to the fact of materialization with which so much of fraud is charged. I have been a witness to these manifestations in W. W. Aber's seances, attending every one for more than three years, nearly two in Spring Hill, and the others in Kansas City, Mo. I speak of Mr. Aber's seances because I know of them by experience, though I have no doubt there are other mediums equally as honest and productice of as good results.

I was acquainted with Prof. Denton in earth life, and it was by his request that I should be present as a permanent member of the Intellectual seances. (See Beyond the Vail, par 392 (a) and (b).) For this reason and the expressed desire of Dr. Reed, I have attended these seances.

In them I have met more than a thousand visitors, among whom were physicians, lawyers, judges, editors and legislators who made it their special business to investigate the phenomena, the medium cheerfully submitting to the tests required by them; and not one left without expressing his satisfaction in regard to the genuineness of the materializations they witnessed.

I have seen many thousands of materialized spirit forms who were recognized by the visitors, and with whom they conversed; though a few at their first seance were unable to recognize their spirit friends, but were more successful afterwards. I have freely given my attendance at these seances at my own expense, and without asking or receiving a single cent. The subject is so vast in significance and interest that I gladly give my time and attention to it.

In regard to fraud in materialization, nothing can be simulated without disguises and confederates which can surely be detected by an ordinary observer. It is true, that conditions must be right; they are means, and can be preserved or vitiated by mental, as well as by physical causes. I hope the Open Court will cleanse the "Augean Stables"—a service of inestimable value to the cause of Spiritualism.

E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

APPROVING WORDS FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

To the Editor: I must express my opinion to you. I wish to say that Sar'gis' articles alone are worth ten times the price of the paper, which alone is grand, and the price too low for value received.

Provincetown, Mass. DAVID P. COOK.

I choose the nobler part of Emerson, when, after various disenchantments, he exclaims: "I covet truth." The gladness of true heroism visits the heart of him who is really competent to say this. —John Tyndall.

The highest honor we can pay to truth is to show our confidence in it, and our desire to have it sifted and analyzed by how rough a process soever. —Dr. Robert Taylor.

Better than councils, better than sermons, better than Parliament, is that free discussion through a free press, which is the fittest instrument for the discovery of truth and the most effectual means of preserving it.—J. Anthony Froude.

What is fanaticism to-day is the fashionable creed to-morrow, and trite as the multiplication table a week after.—Wendell Phillips.

Our Eclectic Magazine.

The Cream of the Secular and Spiritualist Press.

IT IS REFRESHING TO KNOW THAT WONDERFUL SPIRIT MANIFESTATIONS, UNDER STRICT TEST CONDITIONS, ARE OCCURRING IN THE OLD WORLD. AT MILAN, ITALY, THE SOCIETY OF PSYCHICAL STUDIES ARE EXPERIMENTING WITH THE AUSTRALIAN MEDIUM, MR. BAILEY, WITH THE MOST SATISFACTORY RESULTS. UNATTENDED, HE WILL GO INTO ANY HOUSE THAT A COMMITTEE MAY SELECT, AND SUBMIT TO ANY TEST WHICH THE HUMAN MIND CAN INVENT. IT IS INDEED REFRESHING TO FIND SUCH A MEDIUM. IF IN THIS COUNTRY, HE WOULD SOON CAPTURE BROTHER HALE'S $1,000, AND THEREBY WIN A GLORIOUS VICTORY FOR SPIRITUALISM. MR. BAILEY'S CAREER HAS BEEN MOST REMARKABLE AND WE HOPE SOMETIME TO CHRONICLE HIS APPEARANCE IN THIS COUNTRY.

(Translated from "Luce e Ombra.")

The Society of Psychical Studies at Milan have ended their experiments with the medium Bailey—experiments which caused, before and during their progress, so lively an interest in all who are interested in psychical studies.

Bailey came to us from Australia, preceded by an extraordinary reputation; and the nature of the phenomena attributed to his mediumship left us perplexed and hesitating, although they were attested by superior and cultured persons. Well, taking into account the change of surroundings and the short time accorded to the investigation in Milan, we may say that the reality and the characteristic features of his phenomena as recorded, have not been contradicted by our own experiences.

For the scientific value of investigation a more complete control might have been desirable. The impossibility of imposing conditions on these phenomena has always been deplored by all serious experimenters. But at the same time we are forced to acknowledge that it would be absurd to claim the right to impose conditions on phenomena of whose nature and laws we know nothing. Everyone knows to what patient and minute observations we owe the greater part of our discoveries, and the savant's art does not consist in a preconceived method, but in making the best possible observations according to the nature of the experimental phenomena.

The committee had decided to proceed with method, and to divide its work into three periods:

1. Experiments limited to members of the committee in order to constitute a stable center; and to form a just notion of the medium's power.

2. Afterwards to proceed to the invitation of eminent personalities and those belonging to the press.

3. To admit, in the last place, after proportional contribution and on recommendation by a member of the society, amateurs of these researches.

In order to carry out this programme, the committee thought it would require at least three months, which is even too short a time, if we remember that the medium could only give two seances a week.

The Societies of Psychical Studies at Milan had, in a series of preceding experiments, adopted a method of very severe control, with a system of binding which resulted from long previous experience, and which put the medium under absolute conditions of control. Now, at the first seance, it happened that this method was of no use, for Bailey's mediumship was presented with features altogether different from those of other mediums with whom the society has experimented. The personalities which manifested through his mediumship (and there were many in the course of each seance), presented diverse features, which necessitated full liberty of movement; from the sacred orator who spoke with much gesticulation, as though before a tribunal, to the Indian who, in order to express his characteristics, required a table and a fan, to the brigand, who simulated assaults and battles with a startling realism. Even the apports, which consisted of fragile articles, such as eggs, birds, clay tablets, by the way in which they arrived, required the free use of the medium's hands. Therefore we were obliged to follow other methods; and the first three seances, in which impromptu control only was possible, had, for the committee, a relative value only.

At the fourth seance Bailey declared that he could not work for us for more than two months, inclusive of the days of rest which the committee had deemed proper to accord him after his long journey. The work, consequently, would have been much reduced, and the order of experiments changed, as, from the outset, the personalities manifesting through the medium insisted on having a larger number of spectators, and particularly of ladies; the latter constituting—said the personalities—a necessary element for the formation of good "fluid." But we accorded this concession very tardily, and with much regret, and only on trial, because the statutes of the society opposed it. The medium insisted very much on having music and singing, in order to provoke a harmonious direction of thought. But this was not accorded him.

At the fourth seance the committee considered they had found the best mode of control compatible with the exigencies of the medium. They issued invitations; and the circle was now composed of persons who were not au courant (accustomed to these phenomena), and who were renewed at each seance. Under these conditions of constantly changing elements the circle became very difficult to manage, and the phenomena appeared to diminish in intensity.

The following are the names of the members of the committee: Baccigaluppi, Angelo, merchant; Brioschi Achille, manufacturer; Clericetti, Emilio, doctor; Cipriani, Oreste, writer; Ferrari, Francesco, doctor; Marzorati, Angelo, writer; Odorico, Odorico, engineer; Redaelli, Giacomo, secretary for the society; Griffini, Eugenio, doctor of law, and professor of languages.

Spontaneous Phenomena.

Let us give here the particulars of two phenomena which took place out of seance hours, without attributing to them more value than to facts attested by individual witnesses.

We ought to add that other similar phenomena were obtained under analogous conditions in Dr. C.'s study at Sydney, and in Mr. Smith's office at Melbourne.

On March 5, towards eight o'clock in the evening, while the members of the committee were still at table, towards the close of the repast, and the medium standing up reading a newspaper, there fell violently on the table, under a vivid gaslight, a kind of stone. Upon examination it was found to be a small clay tablet, covered with a thick coating of sand, which we were obliged to scrape off with a spatula. This tablet fell in front of the medium, and on to the newspaper which he was reading; in its fall it broke a glass. The undersigned, present at this phenomena, believe the possibility of direct action on the part of the medium must be excluded. At the moment of the apport, the medium turned slightly pale, and showed symptoms of trance, without falling into trance completely.

Signed:
DOCTOR FRANCESCO FERRARI,
ANGELO MARZORATI,
ANTONIO PIRLA.

On April 21, towards eight o'clock in the evening, I was in my study, standing in front of a closed window. Bailey was before me—to my right, at about one metre (three feet) from me. While we spoke with one another I watched him closely, and in such a way that not a movement escaped me. All at once (nothing in our conversation could have suggested such an effect), in broad daylight, there fell, between me and the window, an object which, at first sight, appeared to be a plaster, and which, picked up and examined, was found, in reality, to be a parchment folded in four, with evident signs of great antiquity. I had the impression of something being formed there, before me, on a level with my chest, and the object, in falling, took a direction which started from my left hand, that is to say, on the oppsite side to where the medium was standing. The parchment folded in four, was as though pasted together in reddish-colored sand, which seemed to have filtered into the folds of the parchment, and proved, consequently, that it had been in this state for a long time.

This object has not yet been opened, for this operation necessitates special precautions; it ought to be done in the presence of professionals, who may be able to establish the authenticity of the document. In the next number we will reproduce the contents, if—as the entities speaking through the medium affirm—the document really bears symbols and hieroglyphic characters.

When it is folded the parchment measures twenty-two by eight centimetres, and appears to be made of goat's skin.

The Seance Room.

The room is rectangular (5m.40 long, 3m.55 wide, 3m.65 high). At the far end is a large bay window, without curtains. The medium's chair is before a small table.

In front of the medium is a net curtain, running right across the room, and capable of being raised and lowered—from the ceiling to the floor—as a theatre curtain. This curtain is fixed everywhere, so that once lowered the medium is isolated, and can hold no communication with anyone. The mesh is but two centimetres in diameter. There is only one door in the room—at the end opposite to the medium's chair. A small alcove is near the door, which serves as a depository for garments, etc., (sitters' garments).

Two groups of electric lights are suspended from the ceiling; one is at one side of the netting, in the part of the room reserved for the sitters; the other is in the part reserved for the medium. The first has one bright red and two white lamps, the second one dull red lamp and the white lamp of opaque glass. The switches are in the alcove, and one of the sitters has the special mission to look after and work the lights. Each lamp is independent, so that we can have every gradation of light.

In front of the medium, at about one metre's distance from the netting, four rows of chairs are arranged for the sitters. In an angle to the left, at a height of two metres from the ground, is a ventilator in case the heat should make its use necessary.

The Medium's Dress.

At the third seance, a sack was given to the medium, and also for all the succeeding seances except one and the three last, in which (the three last) no phenomena were forthcoming, as it was known there would be none. * * * Before examining the room we proceeded to examine the medium. We took off his jacket, we kept it in a safe place during the seance, and his pockets were thoroughly searched and emptied. The search on his body was conducted by thorough and strong pressure everywhere, special attention being paid to parts where objects might be concealed. The medium changed his boots and socks, and insisted that the examination should be carefully and minutely made.

The sack, with sleeves, was made of thin black satin; it was fastened very exactly at the neck and wrists with small running cords. The three cords were tied and sealed with the society's seal.

The curtain is lowered and the seance begins. In the next number we will publish the result.

A. MARZORATI.

The following is a summary of the official account of the first three sittings with Mr. Bailey, the celebrated Australian medium, conducted by a committee appointed by the Milan Society for Psychical Studies. The committee consisted of seven gentlemen, including doctors, an engineer, and others of scientific attainments. On one occasion three other gentlemen were present by invitation.

The first sitting, held on Friday, February 26, was a preliminary one, and the phenomena consisted merely in speeches by the controls.

At the second sitting, on Tuesday, March 1, the doors being locked, and the room illuminated by a dull red lamp, the medium went into trance, and the control asked that he be searched. His coat, vest and shoes having been removed, one of the committee passed his hand carefully over the medium's body, with firm pressure, while others examined the contents of his pockets. His garments were then replaced, and the company were asked to seat themselves in a semi-circle, about two yards from the medium. The control suggested that the medium should be enveloped in a bag with sleeves, leaving his hands alone projecting, and free. (This suggestion was renewed at the third sitting, because the removal of his clothes during the search made the medium feel the cold painfully. On the latter occasion it is stated that this first control, who superintended the preliminary arrangements, was "Dr. Whitcombe.") The control asked that strict attention be paid to requests as to light, and stated that female influence was of value among the sitters, but that persons of advanced years were not so suitable.

"Abdul" was the next control, and spoke in broken English, with Hindostani phrases, which he explained in English. He requested that the light should be put out, and after a long wait, first some, then all, of the sitters saw a vague, uncertain phosphorescent light, that approached and retreated from them, and placed itself on the level of the table; its movements were irregular, following a zigzag line, with sudden starts and jerks. Three of the sitters were under the impression that the light approached quite near, almost touching them; whereas to another it appeared never to move further than about a yard away from the medium.

The form of this faint greenish light, during the appearance of which the medium clapped his hands to show that they were free, varied considerably, as did also the strength of it, which never surpassed that of an exceedingly faint phosphorescence, disappearing and reappearing several times. Writing was obtained from "Professor Denton," and "Mr. White" spoke and recited some verses.

"Abdul" now returned, and asked for a table-cloth and a fan. The former was provided, and the fan promised for the next sitting. "Abdul" asked for darkness, then for the red light, and those present observed in his left hand a small bird's nest, about 2½ inches in diameter, and 1½ inches deep, woven out of small straws or grass stems, mixed with tufts of cotton. Three gentlemen ascertained that the nest was warm to the touch; it contained a small egg, the size of a hazel nut, which the medium took between his fingers and showed to the company. The control explained that it was the nest of the "munia"—a little white Australian bird, known also in India.

The nest having been placed on the table-cover, another personality came and spoke for twenty minutes; then "Adbul" returned, and, thinking that the egg might better be hatched than destroyed, took away the apport. "Dr. Robinson" came and spoke of the great value of Bailey's mediumship, and on the reality of the spirit world as a higher and more stable expression of the human personality. The report of this sitting is signed by the seven members of the committee.

At the third sitting, Friday, March 4, after similar preliminaries the search being a very careful one, with not the slightest trace of the presence of any hidden object, "Abdul" came and announced that "Professor Robinson" had gone to Babylonia to bring an inscribed tablet; that "Professor Denton" and the Indian, "Selim," were present. He asked for darkness, saying that "Selim" would bring twelve small precious stones, uncut, from his own country in the Himalaya mountains.

Darkness being produced, a greenish light was observed moving about, brighter and farther from the medium than the one seen on the last occasion. "Abdul" spoke in an unknown tongue to "Selim," and in broken English to "Professor Denton," who, it was explained, was represented by the light. At one time the light rose nearly to the ceiling of the room, which was twelve feet high; the control asked "Denton" to come down and the light descended on the table, covered with a cloth, which stood in front of the medium. The light was round, or egg shaped, about four inches across, but now changed to a streak about eight inches long by one inch across. The medium asked if those present saw "Denton's" hand. They said "No;" then the streak seemed to condense to form a rude figure of a hand with fore-finger extended; this was observed by all present. The luminosity then disappeared, and the control asked for the red light, and showed some small stones on the Japanese fan which lay on the table, from which he caused them to patter down without touching them with his hand, onto a sheet of paper which he laid down on the floor to his right. After the seance there were found to be eleven small stones, which, on examination by an expert, proved to be genuine rubies. (A photograph of the stones is given.)

"Professor Denton" then announced himself, and said that the room was not sufficiently well ventilated, which was indispensable for the production of spirit phenomena. Then he spoke of the intended apport, saying that although thousands of tablets had been discovered, there were as many more not yet found; in Melbourne there were hundreds of tablets which had been brought by spirit agency, and which had been found to be different from any yet dug up. He explained what the tablets were, and said they must beware of preconceived notions as to the possibility of matter passing through matter. After a time a smart thud was heard as though a stone had been carelessly flung on the table, and when light was obtained a tablet was found, still enveloped in a hard coating of sand. Directions were given by "Professor Robinson" as to its being carefully cleaned, and how this best could be done, after it had been dried, by two or three days' exposure to the air; but now the Professor stood up, and delivered a lecture on the tablet, going through the motions of carefully examining the writing, stopping to pick and blow away particles of dirt (the coating, however, was not really disturbed) and translating the inscription, saying it was in commemoration of an expedition by Sargon the Second, in the eighth century B. C. (A photograph of the tablet is given, taken after it had been cleaned, and showing the cuneiform characters.)

Another control, named Abdallah, sang a Bengali song, some questions were asked and answered, and the sitting closed.

The account of the fourth seance is not given in this number. A note at the end states that Mr. Bailey left Italy rather unexpectedly, on account of his health, after two sittings at Rome, of which only the first gave appreciable results. Some disappointment is expressed, as it was hoped that the results there and elsewhere would have supplemented those obtained at Milan, which are spoken of as only of "comparative" value.

At the fourth sitting, the committee, who had come to the conclusion that the character of the phenomena displayed "did not lend itself to those direct proofs which would serve to establish the nature of the phenomena according to known scientific laws," decided to confine themselves to a statement of the facts under such test conditions as were possible.

The medium was brought into the room, which was fully illuminated with white light, and the door was at once locked. The medium was completely enveloped in a sleeved bag, having only three openings for the head and hands, which alone remained outside the bag; these openings were carefully tied and sealed. The first entity who controlled the medium said that the atmospheric conditions were not satisfactory, and that no great results were to be expected. He asked that the bag be used at every seance, to avoid the trouble and delay of searching the medium.

The Hindoo "Sdlim" asked if the flower-pot, asked for on the previous occasion, was ready; there was some disturbance in getting it, and it was requested that in future everything should be kept in readiness, to avoid "breaking the chain." The flower-pot, filled with soil, was placed on the table in front of the medium who examined it. The control said he was planting a seed of the bo-tree, and asked for a handkerchief to cover it with.

"Selim" now asked for darkness for an instant, then for the red light. Dr. Clericetti, who was one of those nearest the medium, rose at a sign from the latter, and, approaching, observed projecting from the closed right hand of the medium the dark, almost black head of a little bird, which seemed warm to the touch. He also observed that the movement of its eyes gave an indubitable sign of life. From another part of the same hand there issued from under the fingers a little black wing marked with yellow. The room was illuminated with bright red light. At this moment one of the sitters, at the request of others, opened the door to put out the light in the ante-room, which had been left on by forgetfulness, and which shone through the ventilators of the door. The medium started irritably on his chair, with some impatient words, then settled himself again so as to turn his back to the light and the door, which was not open more than fifteen seconds. Dr. Clericetti asserts that at the instant of the increase of light, and during several seconds, the bird, which while still in the medium's hand, had been constantly watched by him, suddenly disappeared and vaished from the hand, without removal or flight of any kind.

Order being reestablished, "Selim" asked for a bottle of water, and said he had planted a seed in the soil (already prepared in the flower-pot and ascertained to be pure) and would make it grow little by little; the plant was to be placed by those present in the wall-cupboard, and not touched until the next sitting, during which he would cause it to grow again to a considerable height. Darkness was requested for some minutes, during which nothing was observed except that "Selim" took leave and announced the arrival of "Denton." On the red light being turned on, the medium raised the handkerchief, and all observed a seedling about three-quarters of an inch high, which had sprouted from the seed placed in the earth by "Selim."

"Denton" then gave an address on the various spheres into which the spirit world was divided; then "Abdallah" sang some verses, and "Selim" came again, promising "a plenty of birds" for another time. He again raised the handkerchief which covered the pot, and the plant was found to have grown, in about forty minutes since the last observation, to a height of ever three inches with proportional development of leaves, which were five in number, of a dark shiny green, the largest being about two inches long by an inch wide. There was also a bud.

"Selim" promised to bring at the next sitting some mango seeds which would be planted by Dr. Clericetti and caused to grow during the sitting; some would put forth roots, others a small stalk.

The fifth sitting was held on Friday, March 11. The medium took off his coat and was searched by repeated pressure of the hands of several persons; the bag was then put on and sealed. The net was let down, and only raised at intervals to permit of objects being passed to and fro. After "Professor Denton" had spoken a few words, a Hindoo control asked for the fan, the flower-pot, and a cage. The pot was taken from the cupboard in which it had been shut up and sealed at the last sitting, and handed to the medium without lifting the handkerchief. The cage was also passed to the medium by raising the net.

After darkness, during which the Hindoo said he had received a bird and nest, the red light was turned on, and all present observed a little bird asleep on a nest in the hand of the medium. The control, in reply to questions, said that the bird belonged to the munia family, and another Hindoo control gave directions as to how the birds were to be fed and kept alive in the cage. "Denton" then spoke for fifteen minutes in defense of Spiritualism.

The medium was heard to breathe laboriously for a few seconds, and then a sharp blow was heard by all, as of something falling. The Hindoo explained that it was a mango seed, and promised that he would materialize, turban and all, at a future seance. The nest and cage, with the bird, were passed under the net and examined, then returned to the medium. Then the mango seed was passed under the net to Signor Cipriani, who was asked to examine it without cutting or injury, and to keep it by him until the following Friday.

"Abdallah" then came and requested for the next sitting a small basket and a pot of larger size than had been previously furnished, for the mango plant which would be grown from the seed now received. "Abdallah" said that at a future sitting "Dr. Robinson" would speak about ancient Assyrian coins, and then asked for darkness. Those present asked the control to choose for apport some object or animals not existing in Italy; he replied that he could bring a small tiger or a cobra, on condition that the medium was not to be told, otherwise he would refuse to continue the seances.

On the red light being turned on, it was observed that the plant had grown about twice the size it was at the end of the previous sitting, that is, about six inches in height. As there was no basket, the control asked for a newspaper to cover the pot and plant. The paper was furnished by Signor Cipriani, and passed under the net to the medium, who enveloped the pot completely in it. For the next sitting, he asked for a hen's egg on a small plate, and a piece of ribbon, saying that he would perform a feat of the Yogis of India, that of making the ribbon enter the egg without breaking the shell. Another control remarked that the phenomena were increasing in importance, although slowly.—Light, London, Eng.

HYPNOTIC TRANCE WAS AN ACCIDENT.

Isabelle Gilbert of Denver, who is the only woman manager Pueblo's summer resort theaters at Lake Minnequa have seen, was in a serious condition yesterday afternoon, due to hypnotism. For six hours she remained as if dead, and all efforts of physicians and members of the company to awaken her proved fruitless. The resort is some distance from the city and for a while there was a small-sized panic among the women of the company and employes of the park in an effort to summon medical assistance.

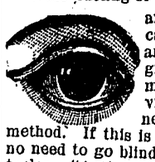
Miss Gilbert had a sick headache yesterday morning, due to her work in putting on "The Two Orphans." She has been overworked during the summer and is suffering from neurasthenia. She was lying on a couch after lunch when she asked a member of the company, Harry Wilson, to rub her head. She had not suspected before that she was such a hypnotic subject, but she fell into a deep sleep. Mr. Wilson is not supposed to be a hypnotist. The doctors think her case is a strange one. After six hours' sleep Miss Gilbert was awakened by Mr. Wilson lightly touching her head.—Denver (Col.) News.

THE VALUE AND POWER OF CONCENTRATION.

The value and power of concentration [Light, London], are strikingly illustrated in a story lately told by Colonel Olcott respecting Sir Edwin Arnold, who told him that one of the most touching parts of "The Light of Asia" was written in a compartment of a railway carriage, in the company of salesmen belonging to Billingsgate market, who were loudly discussing the price of fish. But perhaps the contrast helped him. Is it not a fact that some of the most pathetic songs about home have been written by wanderers, and that some of the loveliest descriptions of natural beauty have been penned in attics and in city streets?

A SERIOUS CHARGE.

"I charge the church with making millions of men, and more millions of women, insane—at least, as far as one set, the 'religious' set, of their faculties are concerned. I charge her with sowing centuries of discord, and with having deluged the earth with rivers of blood. And, is this curse of mankind to be dealt with as coldly, and formally, as if we were discussing a sane and legitimate subject, like Nominalism and Realism, Individualism and Socialism, Free Trade and Protection? I trow not. Why, each time you deal with Sacerdotalism, as if she possibly could be your honorable opponent in formal dialectics, you give her a new life. The church is utterly beneath reason; and she never even pretended to appeal to reason till she lost the power to assert her dogmas by brute force. Her reply to Vanini was with pincers to tear out his tongue by the roots. She answered Galileo with the dungeon. She met Savonarola and Bruno, and tens of thousands of others, with the fierce argument of fire. For this line of argument she has the same sanction now as when she used it so ruthlessly. The one set of orthodoxists have an infallible church, the other an infallible book. A plague on both their houses."—Saladin in Agnostic Journal.



REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one inerested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.
Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address
DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

768

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

In the World Celestial.

By DR. T. A. BLAND.

"It is inexpressibly delightful."—Hon. C. A. Windle.

"It lifts the reader into enchanting realms."—Medical Gleanor.

"It is intensely interesting."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

"Three things make this book remarkable. Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.

"It will give us courage to pass through the deep shadows of death to the sun-lit clime of the World Celestial."—Rev. H. W. Thomas.

"Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great Spiritual book, but a most beautiful romance of two worlds."—Banner of Light.

It is Printed in elegant style and bound in cloth and gold. Price $1.00.

The Mystic Thesaurus,

Or Initiation in the Theoretical and Practical secrets of Astral Truth and Occult Art. By WILLIS F. WHITEHEAD, Editor Agrippa's "Natural Magic." The book treats of The Symbol of the Cross, Spiritual Gifts, Inspirational Conception, Initiative Exposition, The Astral Brotherhood, Message of the Brotherhood, The Magic Mirror, and Celestial Companionship. It is a good text book for students of the Mystic, and will be sent postpaid, in paper, for $1.00.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Will C. Hodge has completed his engagements in Oakland and San Francisco, and has returned to San Diego, where he expects to spend the winter. All letters should be addressed to San Diego, Cal., care of The Willard.

The Chesterfield camp grounds, one of nature's beauty spots, is now the mecca of thousands weekly who are in attendance at the camp meetings now in progress, the others are there because of their interest in the mystic phenomena which has gained such a foothold in Indiana. To the uninitiated the presence of the mediums, indicated by numerous cards on the cottages, with the spirit photographer producing the alleged features of the dead friends and relatives, a feeling of awe is caused. To those who are believers in the faith of the Spiritualists, however, this is the gala occasion of the year. Day and night the long distance communication with the departed is carried on through the intervention of mediums who have been subjected to all the crucial tests. These tests include the tying of hands while the medium is in the cabinet, placing their feet in pans of flour and then requiring them to materialize the spirits of those who have passed away. Among the residents of the camp are Dr. J. H. Mendenhall, of Muncie, the oldest Spiritualist, both in belief and age in the state. His brother, A. Mendenhall, of Winchester, is with him. Dr. Mendenhall claims to have embraced Spiritualism when the faith was but six years old. This was March 31, 1848. Chesterfield camp includes several streets with pretty vine-covered red cottages, shady nooks and rustic bridges. It is a favorite summer resort. No more ideal spot could be found in which to spend a day or a week, and the geat number of visitors it has attests its popularity. The camp meeting lasts six weeks, beginning July 14. Judge Levi Mock, of Bluffton, is president of the Indiana association.—Star, Terre Haute, Ind.

Two neat ghost stories come by cable from London. Rider Haggard is confident that the spirit of his dog appeared to him. He needs a dose of calomel. But the experiences of Stephen Phillips, the poet dramatist, are more important. He says he lived in a houes near Windsor, frequented by supernatural visitors who were continually meddling with the peace of the family. Although an unbeliever, I will confess that I have lived in two houses that certainly were spooky. Noises that could not be explained were constantly heard. The most remarkable house of the two is on H street, Washington, near Fourteenth. I lived there an entire winter. Anybody inclined to investigate Spiritualism ought to take the house. It is to let. It might be converted into a spirit club. Its ghostly tenant was a little woman in a brown calico dress, wearing a poke bonnet of the same material. She never annoyed me, and I became accustomed to passing her on the stairway.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

W. F. Schumacher writes: "The Germans of the West Side Spiritualist Society held their annual picnic at Reisig's grove, July 31. A very elaborate program had been provided by the president, R. Binder. The afternoon service was opened with an invocation by Sister Schumacher, followed by Sister Gartelman with words of welcome. Many mediums were present to aid in spreading the beautiful gospel of Spiritualism. Seven hundred or more were in attendance, and were treated to a feast of spiritual food. The physical body was not forgotten. A number of tables were spread most bountifully with everything necessary to tickle the palate, and when the natural wants of man were satisfied we were ready for the glories of the camp-fire, which was celebrated in honor of the American Indian and his camp worship. Bro. W. Schumacher gave a sketch of the original Indian fire dance, while under the influence of his chief Eha."

Dr. Ravlin passed through the city last week on his way to the Freeville (N. Y.) camp. After two weeks at that camp he will go to Parkland, Pa., for two Sundays. The Doctor is looking well, and is capable of doing a grand work.

C. Kirchner writes: "On Sunday evening, July 31, the Rising Sun Spiritualist mission were given a treat by the veteran Spiritualist, Dr. J. A. MacFarland. His lecture was brimful of good sound spiritual logic, and he held the large audience spellbound during his entire discourse. Although the weather was warm our hall was filled to overflowing. Our singing is a feature of all our meetings, and is appreciated by all. A number of spirit messages were given by Sister Kirchner, which were all recognized. On Sunday evening, August 14, our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, will be the speaker. A large audience is expected."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

E. W. Sprague and wife, the U. S. A. missionaries, will make Battle Creek, Mich., their headquarters during the month of September, holding meetings there on the Sundays of that month. Individuals and societies wishing their services for week-day evenings during the month may address them at Vicksburg, Mich.

Joseph A. Shoemaker writes from Smith's Cove, Digby, Nova Scotia, Canada: "I have recently built a log cabin out of fir trees—size 14 x 16, in which I hold circles for physical manifestation. I do not allow myself to go into a trance but have independent writing, trumpet speaking (full voice), bell ringing and full form materialization, and all this with an audience of crude and ignorant natives. Recently I held a seance for a few tourists and the higher class of citizens, with wonderful results. Now if spirits can manifest and demonstrate under such environments, what could they not do under better conditions? I do not seek notoriety, neither do I want to make merchandise out of this glorious gift, as I neither charge, nor receive donations, yet I have no income other than a U. S. pension. I should be much pleased to have some of the better class of Spiritualists come and spend a season here and help me investigate. With this end in view I will give privilege for pitching several tents free; also good water and air and other facilities for camp life."

As the British ship Mohican made for the Delaware breakwater at Philadelphia, Pa., it encountered a strange phenomenon. A cloud of phosphorus enveloped the vessel, magnetizing everything on board. Captain Urquhart tells the story and the crew vouch for the details. "I noticed a strange gray cloud at a distance, and watched it as it came closer. The vessel and crew were given a fiery coating before the sailors saw it," said the captain. "They rushed about the deck in consternation. I looked at the needle and it was flyng around like an electric fan. I ordered several of the crew to move the iron chains lying on the deck, thinking that it would divert their attention. But the sailors could not budge the chains, although they did not weigh more than seventy-five pounds. Everything was magnetized, and chains, bolts, spikes and bars were as tight to the deck as if they had been riveted. The cloud was so dense that it was impossible for the vessel to proceed. I could not see beyond the decks, and it appeared as if the whole world was a mass of glowing fire. The frightened sailors fell on the decks and prayed. The hair of our heads and beards stuck out like bristles. It became difficult to move arms and legs. Suddenly the cloud began to lift. The phosphorescent glow of the ship and crew began to fade. Gradually the magnetism of the steel died. At the same time the stiffness left our hair. In a few minutes the cloud had passed over the vessel and we saw it move off over the sea."

For a week two young girls, May Power of 47 Glass avenue, and her cousin, Nellie Murphy of 128 Phelps street, Cleveland, Ohio, have been in a strange mental condition. They have convinced relatives that there is some mental bond between them and that they can converse with each other over a distance of a mile or more. At the same time each girl claims to have a mental picture of the other girl and knows at all times just what the other are mystified. Nellie Murphy to-day are mystifiied. Nellie Murphy to-day seemed insensible to pain. When needles were forced into her hands and arms she gave no sign that she felt them. The many questions of the doctors, police and relatives were answered intelligently. She said she had been hypnotized, but would not give the young man's name. May, she said, had been put under "the influence" in the same way. It is related that on Friday night Nellie Murphy in one of her trances saw May on a street car coming from Euclid Beach. May's father, she said, was standing on the platform. Power said Saturday that he had taken his daughter to Euclid Beach and was returning at the time and under the exact circumstances described.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley is at Genoa, Ill. Orrin Merritt writes: "It is with pleasure I send you a report of a meeting held here under the auspices of the First Spiritual Investigating Association of Genoa, on Saturday and Sunday, July 3 and 31. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley had the platform and I can assure you we had a grand meeting. Mrs. Cooley, who is always good, seemed at her best. Her lecture was elevating and convincing; her messages and tests fine, all being acknowledged as genuine and all recognized. Her work here at this time was never surpassed by any thing we ever had in Genoa. There was a good number of Methodists in the hall for the first time. They expressed themselves as being greatly pleased and interested, many saying they would not have missed the meeting for anything. The hall was well filled Sunday afternoon and evening. Though the hall has a seating capacity of 200 we will need a much larger hall when Mrs. Cooley comes again, as she surely will. Methodist friends were so elated and enthused over Mrs. Cooley's work that they wanted to entertain her while here. This is the first time any one outside our ranks ever offered to entertain one of our speakers. We are progressing nicely and feel greatly encouraged."

Mrs. F. V. Jackson writes: "After filling a successful engagement at Indianapolis, in conjunction with Mrs. Buhland, I am here at Chesterfield camp-meeting and making ready for coming year's work, and will be pleased to hear from any locality needing a speaker, test-medium and organizer."

L. Worthen writes from Blodgett's Landing, N. H.: "Lake Sunapee camp-meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., was opened July 31, by Mr. John Gage, the president, who made a few remarks, and then he introduced Mrs. Sadie L. Hand, who made the opening address, which was well received by all. At 1 o'clock p. m., a seance was held in the hall which was well attended; at 2:15 a lecture by Mrs. Hand, which was well received, this ending the first day's work at Lake Sunapee camp-meeting." week prior with little effect, but on Sunday came the crowning effort of the previous week's labor. We had a grove meeting and a spiritual baptism. I have been a Spiritualist for the past forty years, but I was never more surprised than I was to see how different was the construction she placed upon the Bible, totally different from anything I had heard in all my experience. She gave us one of the grandest lectures it has been my good fortune to hear and held her audience spellbound for two hours, following with several tests. One man arose after the services closed, consenting to all she had given him as being correct in the minutest detail. She had described the home of his childhood, almost all the members of the family now in spirit life; location of buildings, streams, roads, etc, also a particular turn in the road passing the house. He also stated that it was located 4,000 miles from here."

H. Brady writes from Thorpe, Iowa: "Our little hamlet met with a grand surprise on the last Sunday of July in the way of a spiritual lecture delivered by Mrs. Virginia Bryan of Chicago. She had been laboring among us for a

T. W. Sherk writes: "Dr. Randall will lecture at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, next Sunday, Aug. 14. Subject: The Spiritualism of Paul, the Jew, Interpreter of Christ. One interesting feature of last Sunday's meeting was the exposition of a spirit portrait received by Miss Sherk through the mediumship of Mr. Coates. Miss Sherk told how she examined the canvas thoroughly before the sitting began and that it never left her sight or presence until it was completed. The portrait is of a friend of hers who passed on several years ago, of whom there was no picture and yet, she says, the likeness is perfect. While the picture was being precipitated the materialized artist was plainly visible; she could see his form and features even the lines on his face. To those holding the old fantastic views of spirit life such things as painting portraits seem trivial but thoughtful, enlightened persons know that such experiences constantly tend to make real to us the unbroken continuity of life, and that as the spiritual becomes real to men so will men learn to view the things of this life correctly and order their lives accordingly. This material life, viewed alone, is inexplicable, but viewed in conjunction with that which is to come its mysteries mostly vanish, and many things most discouraging are seen to be opportunities and blessings in disguise."

W. C. Tilton writes from Seattle, Wash.: "Let your good work go on, for it is just what is needed."

Mrs. A. E. Kibby writes: "The friends will please address all mail to me at my home during the month of August, No. 4, River View, Mt. Adams, Cincinnati, Ohio."

Mrs. Nell Trafton writes: "Mrs. Irene Smith, of Tacoma, Wash., has just left Chicago for her home. It is long since Chicago Spiritualists have been visited by one more appreciated, or whose departure is more regretted. On two Sunday evenings she addressed the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, the hall in both instances being crowded by a highly appreciative audience. She is certainly an extraordinary speaker, and those who were present at her ministrations were highly pleased. She conducted also two occult classes during her stay of a few months, and those who attended them spoke of her work as of the highest order. Her return to us will be warmly welcomed, should chance or duty again bring her this way."

B. Falkenstetin writes from Dallas, Texas: "I wish to note in the columns of your paper the recent critical illness of our most worthy and highly esteemed pastor. After one month's critical illness, with skillful nursing, she is slowly recovering, and will soon start north to fill camp engagements. Master Milton Baker, the boy orator, has returned from six weeks' work in southern Texas. He acceptably lectured to appreciative audiences in our hall the last two Sunday nights. The Truth Seekers' Society has now closed its meetings until the return of our pastor, Mrs. Alice Baker, in September, when we will again open our meeting. Mrs. Baker is an inspirational speaker of rare ability, intellect, culture and refinement; an earnest, royal worker in the cause of the higher spiritual philosophy, and we are glad that she and her son have decided to return to us in the sunny South at least for a time, for with her we have not only a speaker and medium, but a teacher that the higher intelligences of wisdom and knowledge can use to disseminate the truth that is the emancipation of the human race."

Mrs. Henry writes: "On Wednesday evening, July 20, the Ladies' Auxiliary connected with the Universal Occult Society held a lawn social at the residence of the president, Mrs. Marian Hunt Davenport. Quite a number attended. All enjoyed the music and singing by Mr. Caldwell and children, also a song by Mr. Coe. Miss Anna Sekinger, a talented vocal teacher, favored us with a solo. The young people enoyed the fishing in the fish pond, where they found all kinds of useful articles as well as toys. Little Miss May Hitchcock found a pair of black kids. Mrs. Bowls held the lucky number that drew the hand painted china bon bon dish, presented by our president. The gypsies were well patronized. On August 17 our next social will be held in Mrs. Blondin's lawn, at 2901 Groveland avenue. Admission free. Ice cream and cake, 15 cents. Mediums in gypsy costumes will give palm readings. All are welcome."

Emily E. Philp writes: "On July 10 the Englewood Spiritual Union held the annual business meeting, at which the following officers were elected: Mrs. I. M. Powderly, president; Mr. Norman Speight, vice-president; Mrs. Al Smith, financial secretary; Mr. D. M. Graham, treasurer; Mrs. Emily E. Philp, secretary. We still hold meetings every Sunday night, and the Ladies' Auxiliary Thursday afternoons. Mr. Russell, Mr. Smith and Mr. Delphin were elected trustees. In September, Harry J. Moore comes to us for the month."

Mrs. Le Sieur writes: "The seventh benefit Band of Harmony was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rockwell, 814 Emmit street, Thursday, August 4. Needless to say that every moment was a pleasure from start to finish. We are doing a good work this summer as many strangers come among us, and are of the substantial kind, so the good work goes on. The next social will take place at the home (Maplenook) of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Goodrich, 634 East avenue, Oak Park, Thursday, August

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

18. To reach their home, take Lake street cars, going west to 48th avenue, transferring at 48th avenue on Chicago avenue cars to East avenue; then north to the number."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "It gives me great pleasure to write that the Hyde Park Occult Society is to be favored by the presence of two of our West Side workers, Mr. and Mrs. Kirchner of the Rising Sun Mission. It has been requested that we have one evening of messages, and not much talk, so on Sunday evening, August 14, we will have scarcely any talk, and let the mediums have the floor, and Mrs. Kline and Mrs. Kirchner, and others, if they be there, will give messages enough for all. Meeting held at 319 E. 55th street, at 8 p. m. We will also hold a card party at the same hall on Friday evening, August 12, progressive euchre, and the prizes will be fine linen, different pieces, drawn work, center pieces, lunch cloth, etc. Come and help the society out by your presence."

Dr. Beverly writes: "We have the only hall on the South Side that holds meetings on Sunday afternoon, so you can make no mistake in visiting us. We have from five to fifteen mediums, and so we are in a position to promise every one a test. We have a very cool hall, and it is being cleaned and decorated, so it will be fresh and free from germs."

V. A. Tambling writes from Fruitvale, Cal.: "It is with pleasure I herewith renew my subscription for your (to me) valuable paper. Truly the value increases with each issue and I am led to wonder why there are so many Spiritualists who do not take any Spiritualist paper. Since our minster left us for her vacation, Will C. Hodge has occupied our platform, and it is a matter of regret that he now leaves for his home in San Diego, so that now we seem to be obliged to suspend our meetings until Mrs. Lillie returns."

Marie Jacobsen writes: "I beg to call your attention to the Church of the Spirit, 301 Schiller Building, 109 Randolph street, conducted by Prof. Wm. Fitch Ruffie. The attendance at services steadily increases, and we look forward to a large attendance as the church progresses. At the services tests and messages are given to all. Mr. Ruffie's psychometric and telepathic demonstrations give general satisfaction. His lecture last Sunday was on The Continuity of Life, and in which he denounced the fraud committed in the name of Spiritualism. It was received with great applause."

J. M. White writes from Franklin, Neb.: "After August 15, those desiring my services as a missionary in Nebraska, can secure terms by writing me at Atlanta, Neb., care of Mr. W. M. Shelburn. Up to that date letters will reach me at the Spiritualist camp at this point. I will make reasonable terms, as I wish constant work after the close of the camp-meeting."

Eva McCoy writes from Marshalltown, Iowa: "After returning from the West—Montana—I want to say a word of praise in regard to the good work that is being done in the different localities. There is Brother and Sister Hicks of Anaconda. Mr. Hicks is doing wonderful work as a medium in healing the sick, and doing it free. Both are doing a good work for the society. Others also in Butte, are doing good work for the cause. In Livingston I met many people who are in earnest and seeking the truths of Spiritualism. The society in Billings, Mont., is a bee-hive, ever striving to cull the sweet flowers of truth. I met many noble souls that in some future day, will be listed as mouthpieces for the spirit world."

Annie B. Lainhart writes from Denver, Colo.: "I wish to say a few words for your paper in regard to Mrs. Alice Gehring, formerly of Chicago. She is a very fine medium, and is rapidly winning her way among the people and Spiritualists of this city. Her trumpet seances are grand. She sits under test conditions, which leave no room for the skeptics to doubt; she has different phases, such as materializing hands, faces and forms; also independent voices, and independent slate-writing, often with spirit pictures of our loved ones engraved upon them. She is patronized by the best and wealthiest class of people in the city."

It has been decided to tear down the old walls of the house said to be haunted by the ghost of Marat, the most execrable figure of the revolution. The house is situated at Boudry, France, a small village near Nuefchatel, and a number of curious travelers every year visit the home in which the so-called "friend of the people" was born. On the wall of this room hangs one portrait of Marat and another of Charlotte Corday. The house had until some time ago been used as a hotel, but stories were spread that ever since the portrait of the maiden who murdered the most bloodthirsty demon of 1789 was hung in the room the place has been haunted and was uninhabitable for anybody.

C. H. Moody writes from the Franklin (Neb.) Spiritualist camp-meeting: "Our camp commenced on July 29 and will close Aug. 15. The afternoon and evening meetings are well attended. This is our ninth annual encampment. This year Brother Haines secured the services of J. M. White of Kansas City, who gives splendid satisfaction as an honest, earnest worker on the platform. He gives good public readings, but the most wonderful is his fire test, in which he handles a lamp globe heated as hot as the blaze of the lamp can make it. He rubs it, and holds the heated globe to his lips, tongue, face and neck. He also takes off the globe and puts his hands and feet into the blazing fire, until the flames will come up between his toes and fingers. We cordially recommend Brother White to any camp as a good, faithful worker."

THE ROSE.

Come, my Mignonne, let us go—
Let us see if yonder rose,
That this morning did disclose
Robes of crimson to the sun,
Now that evening has begun,
Still with tints like yours does glow.

Ah, my Mignonne, look and see—
Look there, underneath the bough;
Short the space from then till now,
But its beauties all are past!
Scarce from morn till eve they last—
Such is nature's harsh decree,
Ah, my Mignonne, trust to me,
While your youth as yet is seen
In its freshest, fairest green,
Seize the moments to enjoy;
Old age hastens to destroy
Roses, beauty, youth and thee.

—Pierre Ronsard.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

Vicksburg, (Mich.) Camp.

As set forth in the "Wolverine Crank," a paper published at Vicksburg, the Rev. Dr. Austin, of Rochester, N. Y., spoke at the Vicksburg Spiritual camp on Sunday morning to a very interested and appreciative audience, from the theme, "Make Yourself Over."

It was a discourse embodying the new thought teaching of to-day, and illustrating the wonderful powers and possibilities of the human soul.

He pointed out forcibly and with wealth of illustration, the power of thought in the amendment and reorganization of character, holding that a man's salvation was self-wrought, and that every man, by awaking the soul powers within him, could throw off disease worry, anxiety, fear, and make himself over into a new and stronger and better man. The power of man to overcome disease, vice, bad habits, poverty and pain, by thought and will power, was clearly set forth. He closed with an appeal to his hearers to correct the errors, mistakes and weaknesses of their lives, and seek the Christ baptism of the spirit, that would enable them to become saviors to their fellow men.

In the afternoon, Dr. Austin paid a tribute to the character and work of Col. Ingersoll, sketching his life and giving many eloquent passages from his lectures. He claims that Ingersoll was not an infidel in the true meaning of that term, which implies a person unfaithful, untrue to his inmost convictions.

No man spoke more honestly or more eloquently the sentiments of his heart, than did Col. Ingersoll. Neither was he an infidel in the popular sense, as denying the existence of God. He questioned, but never denied the existence of God, and paid an eloquent tribute to the man Jesus, who was an infidel in his time (in the same sense that Ingersoll was—that of denying church teachings) and a reformer, and his life was destroyed by priestly hypocrites. Ingersoll was more than an iconoclast. He preached and practiced a gospel of liberty, of love, of truth, of honesty, of industry, of justice, of innocent enjoyment, and his teachings on marriage, home life and sanctity, on childhood and womanhood, are among the most eloquent and valuable teachings of to-day.

Ingersoll was much misunderstood and misrepresented. He was one of the most generous and sympathetic of men, and in his family life presented a pattern which most of his detractors might have followed with profit. Each year is adding to his fame, and every man, orthodox or liberal, is enjoying a wider freedom to-day for his life and work. Future ages will crown him as one of the world's emancipators.

Unity Camp, Saugus Center, Mass.

The Lynn Spiritualists' Association has been holding highly successful meetings at this camp since June 1. We have had as speakers Mrs. Ida Whitlock, Albert P. Blinn, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, Mrs. Mamie Helyett, Rev. Mrs. Pepper, Mrs. Kate M. Ham, and a large number of other good speakers and mediums. The railroads were taxed to their utmost capacity in transporting the large crowds that were present on July 24, when Mrs Pepper was present, and July 31 with Mrs. Ham.

The popularity of this camp increases every season, visitors being present every Sunday from all parts of New England. The services are in charge of Alex Caird, M. D., president of the association, assisted by vice-president Samuel Merchant.

The music is of the very highest order and an entertaining program is presented every Sunday. A variety of refreshments can always be procured at the restaurant on the grounds.

The association has just concluded a four-days' bazaar (an out of doors fair) which has added over two hundred dollars to the building fund.

Mrs. Ida Whitlock will be present August 14; Miss Annie Foley of Haverhill, a remarkably fine test medium, August 21. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates will be with us during the month of September. A test seance is held every Wednesday afternoon, in charge of Mrs. Dr. Caird, president of the Ladies' Social Union. Admission to all meetings free. A. A. AVERILL.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Annette E. Nichols Stowell, of Prophetstown, Ill., passed to the higher life, July 29, 1904, in her 80th year. She had been an avowed Spiritualist for forty-seven years, being one of the oldest settlers in Prophetstown. Services were conducted by the writer.

DR. J. A. BAILEY.

Passed to spirit life, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Grace Salzeider, Pembina, Mich., Samuel F. Clark, aged 69 years. Mr. Clark was a veteran of First Wisconsin Infantry, three months' service, and first lieutenant of the Sixth Wisconsin Light Battery Independent Artillery. He has been a firm believer in Spiritualism for many years and passed peacefully to sleep firm in its teachings. The Masonic fraternity conducted the services according to their ritual, at Norway, Sunday, July 31, 1904.

J. D. HATHAWAY.

EXPERIENCE.

We rise in our fancy on jubilant wings,
When the promising future we scan,
But the heart-breaking things
That stern destiny brings,
Are never the ways that we plan.

Our best aspirations reach up toward the skies,
Ambition oft leads in the van
But the blessings we prize
Always come in disguise,
They are never the things that we plan.

We build our bright castles from rainbows of hope,
With the limited wisdom of man,
But the "powers" decide
What the fates shall provide,
And they're never the things that we plan.

We struggle for riches and hunger for rest,
And conquer—whatever we can,
But a higher behest
Orders all for the best,
On a wise and beneficent plan.

S. M. KINGSLEY.

Lily Dale, N. Y.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked lives. Price, by mail, $1.

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price, 25 cents.

"The Commandments Analyzed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analyzed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 25 cents

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

The World Beautiful. Series One, Two and Three. Choice volumes of restful and educational reading, uniting the ideal and the real in this life. By Lilian Whiting. Price, each volume, $1.

The World's Sixteen Saviors, or Christianity Before Christ. A key to all the sacred mysteries of the present religions and their Oriental formation. By Kersey Graves. Price $1.50; postage 10 cents.

Three Journeys Around the World. By the renowned lecturer and traveler, Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price, $1.50.

Three Jubilee Lectures. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 35 cents.

Thomas Paine's Examination of the Prophecies. A consideration of the passages in the New Testament, quoted from the Old and called Prophecies concerning Jesus Christ. Price, 15 cents.

Tree and Serpent Worship. Showing up the ridiculous side of the old, old story of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. By A. S. Hudson, M. D. Price 15 cents.

Truths of Spiritualism. This book narrates many of the striking experiences of its author as a lecturer and test medium in the earlier days of Spiritualism. By E. V. Wilson. Price $1.

Twentieth Century Guide to Palmistry. By the Zanzigs. A good book for all those interested in this study. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 25c.

Two In One. A compendium of Biblical Spiritualism. A combination of "The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" into one volume. By Moses Hull. Price $1.

Unique Bible Picture-Book. Old Testament stories comically illustrated. Exposure by ridicule; exposure by facts. The stories humorously told. By Watson Heston. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Vaccination a Curse. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Treating on a subject of vital importance to every one. Price, $1.25.

Vedanta Philosophy. By Swami Vivekananda. Price $1.50.

Views of Our Heavenly Home. This book is a word-picture by one of our best artists, Andrew Jackson Davis. A highly interesting work. Price 60 cents; postage 5 cents.

Voices. The Voices contain poems of remarkable beauty and force. They are most excellent inspirations. Neatly printed and nicely bound. By Warren Sumner Barlow. Price $1.

Volney's Ruins and the Law of Nature. This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Voltaire's Romances. A new edition, profusely illustrated. A delightful reproduction, unique and refreshing. 480 pages, with portrait and 82 illustrations. Price, cloth, $1.50; postage 15 cents.

Warfare of Science With Theology. Information not procurable in the libraries of the world in a half century, showing the opposition of the church to science. Two vols., 900 pages. Price $5.

Wayside Jottings. Composed of Essays, Sketches, Poems and Songs, gathered from the highways, by-ways and hedges of life, from the inspirational pen of Mattie E. Hull. Price 75 cents.

Wedding Chimes. By Delpha P. Hughes. A dainty white book, giving a marriage ceremony. Price 75 cents.

Were You Born Under a Lucky Star? A book on astrology that every one can understand. Price, $1.

Wisdom of the Ages. By Dr. Geo. Fuller. A book of rare merit. Price, $1.

What All the World's A-Seeking. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price, $1.25.

What Would Follow on the Effacement of Christianity? A concise treatise on this popular subject. By George Jacob Holyoake. Price, one copy, 10 cents; twelve for $1.

Who Are These Spiritualists, and What Is Spiritualism? By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 35 cents.

Why I Am a Vegetarian. By H. J. Moore. Price, 25 cents.

Woman. A lecture delivered to ladies only, by Mrs. Dr. Hulburt, on the present status of woman, physically, mentally, morally and spiritually, marriage and divorce. Price 10 cents.

Womanly Beauty of Form and Feature. By Albert Turner. Price, $1.

Woman's Bible. Parts I. and II. The Pentateuch. A galaxy of scholarly comments by many of our brightest minds regarding much of the Old Testament, and the slight given the women. Price 50 cts. each.

Woman, Church and State. A historical account of the status of woman throughout the Christian ages, with reminiscences of the Matriarchate. By Matilda Joslyn Gage. Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, 75 cents.

Woman. Four Centuries of Progress. Showing her gradual rise from slavery and bondage of ancient times. By Susan H. Wixon. A lecture of great value. Price 10 cents.

Works of E. D. Babbitt, LL. D. M. D. "Human Culture and Cure." Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. Price, board cover, 75 cents.

"Human Culture and Cure." Part Second. Marriage, Sexual Development and Upbuilding. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

"Human Culture and Cure." Parts Third and Fourth. In one volume. Part Third being devoted to Mental and Psychological Forces, and Part Fourth to the Nervous System and Insanity. Price, $1.

"Human Culture and Cure." Part Fifth. The Bodily Organs, Their Diseases and the Great Natural Methods for Their Cure. Price, $1.

"Health and Power." A Handbook of Cure, Etc. Price, leather, 35 cents.

"Principles of Light and Color." One of the greatest books of the age. Price, $5; by mail, 32 cents extra.

"Religion." Most thoughtful, spiritual and excellent. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents. Postage 10 cents.

"Social Upbuilding," including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennobling of Humanity. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Zodiacal Influences. Know thyself. This little pamphlet teaches how to use the powers derived at birth from the position and influence of the planets. By Charles H. Mackay. Price 25 cents.

"THE GOSPEL OF BUDDHA"—A WORK OF GREAT MERIT.

By Dr. Paul Carus. Seventh edition. 275 pages. Cloth, $1.

Accepted as authoritative by numerous Buddhistic sects, and translated into ten different Asiatic and European languages.

"Admirably fitted to be a handbook for the single reader or for classes."—The Critic, New York.

"A HISTORY OF THE DEVIL."—A MOST REMARKABLE WORK.

The history of the Devil and the idea of evil from the earliest times to the present day. By Dr. Paul Carus. Printed in two colors from large type on fine paper. Bound in cloth, illuminated with cover stamp from Dore. Five hundred 8vo pages, with 311 illustrations in black and tint. Price $6.

"It is seldom that a more intensely absorbing study of this kind has been made, and it can be safely asserted that the subject has never before been so comprehensively treated.....Neither public nor private libraries can afford to be without this book, for it is a well of information upon a subject fascinating to both students and casual readers."—Chicago Israelite.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Thomas Harding: Q. What is the difference between killing in battle and murder?

A. Murder is the premeditated killing of a human being, for personal motives, as gratification of hate, revenge or anger.

The soldier goes into battle not to gratify any of these passions, although they may be aroused by the conflict.

In law, the motive is of first importance and decides in many a case whether the accused be a criminal or not. It is not the act of killing which makes the crime, but the motive.

It will thus be seen that the cases are entirely different, and it is erroneous use of the word to apply it to the killing in war.

Geo. B. Moore: Q. I understood from a late Progressive Thinker that the N. S. A. had a temple at the exposition in St. Louis, for the promulgation of the cause of Spiritualism. I failed to find it on my recent visit to the fair. Was the information correct?

A. The National Spiritualists Association has not a temple at St. Louis, and any effort made to represent Spiritualism at the fair has not been by its sanction or under its control. The subject was not brought before the last convention at Washington, and this is the only way the matter could be made the work of the association. Its officers cannot go forward in such a movement unless empowered to do so by the delegates. An equally important thing is the necessity of an adequate fund.

The N. S. A. is constantly expending for the cause to the last limit the funds at its disposal. If it had a million dollars, it would not be sufficient to carry out all the plans and suggestions made persistently by those who claim to be devoted to the cause. And yet those who are most urgent and most faultfinding, who demand to take up schemes which will absorb thousands of dollars, have never given a single cent into its treasury!

N. C. Miller: Q. Suppose by a concussion a man becomes unconscious, his mind being a perfect blank until he recovers, what becomes of the spirit during the time, or if he does not recover, but passes away, what then?

A. This question in various forms, has been repeatedly asked and answered according to the teachings of Spiritualism. The obscuration of the spirit by disease; the fading of the mental powers at the coming of old age; the change in intellectual and moral character with disturbances of the brain, as by accidental injuries or the more subtile changes leading to insanity, have furnished plausible evidence that the mind in its broad aspect termed spirit, depends entirely on the physical body, and is a resultant of physical changes.

The relation of spirit and body are so closely blended and interdependent during earth life, the body being the instrument by which it comes in contact with the physical world, and through which it expresses itself, the failure of the body limits the manifestation of the spirit. The pure light of a lamp becomes the color of the shade which encloses it. The shade may become so opaque as to prevent a ray of light passing, and by the appearance it would be said the light of the lamp had gone out. But it would be shining all the time with equal brightness, the obscuration being in the environing shade. Independent of the body, the spirit cannot have a period of unconsciousness. This comes from reflex influence of the body.

If in this "unconscious" state the spirit leaves the body (meaning death) it has no "perfect blank," in memory. Its life goes right on in complete continuity.

When death approaches, between the time that the physical powers fail, and the spiritual awaken, there is usually, but not always, a period of longer or shorter duration, of comatose insensibility, like profound sleep, and this state is the same with all, and is not different from that produced by a "concussion" of the brain.

Joseph Challand: Q. I read in a medical book: "There is more plasm (protoplasm) in one egg, or one cup of milk than in ten gallons of any kind of soup or beef tea."

A. Every little while some unknown doctor, tired of waiting for patients, makes a bizarre statement; the press heralds it far and wide, and the doctor awakes next morning famous, with a string of patients at his office door. If he publishes his "discovery" in the medical journals, he becomes "an eminent medical authority;" if he advertises directly, he is a "quack." One finds the cause of cancer in tomatoes, another in flesh, and another is sure the mosquito bite causes malarial and yellow fever. A score or so have come into notice by means of toxins and anti-toxins they have specialized and with which they propose to eliminate various diseases by introducing into the blood virus from fermenting and putrid blood of animals.

The physician introduced by this correspondent has a fad and that is dislike of soup. He would make dietetic rules according to this fad. This correspondent, who is convalescent from a severe sickness, cannot endure the menu of his doctor of raw eggs and milk. He has to take cathartics because of torpidity of the intestines. And this trouble increases. Of course this is to be expected of a food that is wholly digested and absorbed, leaving nothing to act in clearing the intestines of their natural secretions. Soup alone would be subject to the same objection as milk, but not to that of innutrition. The doctor's objection is exceedingly vague. A soup may be made with a pound of flesh and ten gallons of water, or with ten pounds of flesh and a gallon of water. As soup he would hold one no more nutritious than the other.

Soup rightly made contains the best portion of the flesh from which it is prepared, yet it is not a complete food. Vegetables should go into it, and be cooked until thoroughly blended. Then with fruits and whole wheat bread, pure water and air, the conditions of health and recuperation are fully met.

N. P. C.: Q. What is the condition of Mormons in spirit life? Have they the same opposition there that they have here?

A. According to the fundamental principles of the spiritual philosophy, the devout Mormons unite in a closed community in spirit life, where they can fully carry out their purpose of keeping free from the contact of the outside world of spirits, just as they attempted in this to free themselves from the influence of the national government, and modern civilization. The "opposition" there is not like that the Mormon people meet here, for there is no political reasons making it essential that they conform to the prevailing customs and usages of the people by whom they are surrounded. As a reversion to the ancient patriarchal life, that taught and exemplified by the Bible, polygamy is held to with tenacity, as it is by the Mormon church in Utah, and although here there is apparent concession to the inexorable demands of government, the belief is as strongly held, and considered a vital precept of their religion.

Although in spirit life the uses of sex is not carried, there is a lingering desire—a ghost of earthly things—which may remain for ages. And this serves to maintain the movement in organic form, and make the Mormon church in the hereafter, a reflection of the church on earth. Its deceased leaders hold their places and receive the same adoration and submissive devotion.

Oscar A. Edgerly at the Camps.

To the Editor:—After a most delightful visit at beautiful Lily Dale, I took my departure on July 22 for Freeville, N. Y. I found at that place the nucleus of grand possibilities in the way of a camp ground. Nature has been very lavish in dispensing her beauties there, and it only needs, in my estimation, the continued earnest work of the present management to make it one of the finest assembly places for Spiritualists in the United States.

Mr. W. W. Kelsey, president of the Freeville association, is a host in himself, and if this year's meeting does not prove a success it will not be his fault.

I gave five lectures at Freeville camp, and judging from the loud expression of the people, I feel sure the work of my guides was appreciated.

On Sunday, July 31, I began a four weeks' engagement at the Grand Ledge camp, Michigan. I am to act as chairman during the entire meeting, but on the first Sunday and during the first week I am both speaker and chairman. On Sunday evening we had a very fine audiences for the first day. My guides seemed to meet the approbation of the people at both forenoon and afternoon meetings.

We were all greatly pleased on Sunday afternoon to have Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets with us on the platform, and we only regret that her health is not such as to allow her to fill her usual place as presiding officer here. We all hope that her health will soon improve so that she can again be with us as she has been in the past.

I feel confident that we are to have a grand and successful meeting here at Grand Ledge this year, and may it redound to the glory and uplift of Spiritualism, is my prayer.

OSCAR A. EDGERLY.

Onset Camp, Mass.

This beautiful camp is once more holding its annual meetingss and the meetings are better attended than last season, and the friends are very enthusiastic over the mediums.

We have had most interesting lectures during the sessions. Dr. G. A. Fuller's address at the opening of the meeting was a grand and masterly one, and of profit to the people.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. Carrie F. Loring, Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, Mr. Thos Cross, and Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond have been doing grand work. Mrs. Richmond has been attending to class work, teaching the higher psychology, and these classes have been well attended.

Miss Margaret Gaule has been doing excellent work, and she has created a revival in our phenomena.

Mr. A. J. Maxham, our musician, is always greeted with enthusiasm, his clear enunciation and appropriate selections, accompanied with his melodious voice is a great acquisition to our camp, and we are glad to have him.

Our conferences have been well attended and have been very spicy, and altogether we have had an enjoyable camp so far.

Onset sends greetings to all the readers of The Progressive Thinker and invites all to come and pay us a visit. It is cool and comfortable at this delightful place, and it is one of the best places to gain health and strength.

HATCH.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure." (Including Methods and Instruments." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. Price 75 cents.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In "Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Sunday morning, July 24, dawned cool and comfortable, and incoming trains left a crowd of happy people at Lily Dale station, who joyfully wended their way to the gates of the City of Light. Exclamations of glad surprise and admiration were heard on every side as the improved appearance of the beautiful grounds met the eye and filled the heart with delight. Eulogies of appreciation for President Pettengill fell from many lips as they realized the countless opportunities for enjoyment so bountifully provided.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of Haydenville, Mass., made the address of the morning, and spoke eloquently on the subject, "How Do Men Grow?" The speaker said in part: "We are on the threshold of a new era of human life. Songs of the yet-to-be are being sung by dreamers. Scientists are telling us of new powers and possibilities and what may be done with them. But we only appreciate as fast and as far as we have grown, and must come down to the common-place things of life to avoid disappointments. Men grow from two forces and in two directions—from his outer environments the force of the must, and from the awakened sensibilities of his inner life." She made strong the point that men grow through their habits. In the operation of the law of self-preservation, protection from cold, want and hunger, drawn together by kindred motives and purposes, habits are formed that are common to all as the result of concerted action, doing things continuously and from necessity. Men have learned to modify and rearrange conditions of society till we talk of the art of living, and have developed an abnormal selfishness, craving more than we need. This has resulted in tragedies all along the line of the past. Men have been forced to think diligently and tenaciously in favor of higher and better living, but the man living on the animal plane does not like to change, and resents the disturbing power.

People from the cities are rapidly making their headquarters here for the season. Miss Leavins of New York, with Madam Mandoras and her little boy Blue, are at the Leolyn. Madam M. is a psychic of rare ability, and will give readings daily.

Sunday afternoon, Prof. Lillie opened the exercises by singing a beautiful solo, "The Loom of Life."

A packed audience greeted the Rev. Ford Fisher who addressed a Spiritualistic audience for the first time. Mr. Fisher has outgrown his theology, and is looking toward the liberal cult for a realization of his high hopes and honest desires. He expressed the deep appreciation he felt for the "Welcome" that adorns our platform, and standing under "Old Glory," and seeing the display of foreign flags, rejoiced that all the nations of the world are represented here, adding: "I feel that the ground on which I stand is holy ground. Sensing the presence of the sainted Ingersoll, and of Mayor Jones, who was to have been here to-day, I feel like saying, Beloved, let us reason together along the lines of eternal truth." His theme was, "The True and False in Theology."

A spirited conference was held on Sunday evening, in which the best talent on the ground participated. "The Uses of Wealth" was the leading topic which led to the expression of a variety of opinions along radical lines, and lasted to a late hour.

More people are coming daily. Mr. Bonnell and wife of Pittsburg, are at the Leolyn. Mr. B. is a valuable acquisition, and contributes to the mirth and merriment on many occasions. Our obliging Postmaster Griswold is doing land-office business.

Prof. Lockwood met his large and attentive class on Monday morning, and with the use of his magnet and bar demonstrated the corelation of forces which constitute the invisible infinities on the material plane, and their remarkable correspondence in human nature with the psychic relationship we cannot see. As divergency in structure produces the differing expressions of power and energy in mechanical inventions, so the varying organizations of individuals result in attraction, repulsion and other manifestations. His exhibition of the high rate of vibration, capable of producing transparency, clearly illustrates the statement that the higher the vibration the more radiant are the forms of nature.

Professor Lockwood labors to enable the student to know that he knows, and explains that the sense perceptions of clairvoyance and the action of the X-ray are identical, and that electro-corelation, the subtleties of nature and her attributes, when understood, explain many occult manifestations. That molecular activity that lies behind all manifestations of matter, and the life principle in all nature is enduring and eternal. He displayed plates showing the formation of the brain, the cortex of which has two thousand millions of cells capable of sensation that corresponds to the receiver in wireless telegraphy. Forty million fibres connected with these brain cells can be stimulated into activity by the thoughts and suggestions used as curative methods by the mental science healer. The thrill from the hand of friendship that expresses fraternal feeling vibrates through these forty million avenues an element helpful to mind and body.

Tuesday, Mr. Wright gave the regular class lecture to an assemblage of eager listeners. Mr. Wright's thought is always elucidated by ready illustrations. "The purposeful cause of all phenomena is the 'reason why' that lies back in of the strong hand that applies the force to the pump that yields the water." He said the faculty of causation is innate, a constitutional faculty.

Holding the deserted skull of a man in his hand, he pointed to the large convolutions lying on each side of the brain, to show the location of the organ of causality. Men in whom it is small cannot trace causes. Large intellects sometimes give large perceptions without power to co-ordinate, with no benevolence or moral quality, and this is the organization lying back of the man who kills somebody. Spirit life will have power to expunge these conditions, but the soul will hold the consequences. Causality is a great necessity in the strategies of war, and is seen in every department of life from the money-lender to the gambler. A blow struck at the organ of causality will produce a loss of personality, and the perfect overthrow of intellectual power. Reason is a conscious recognition of the harmony of perception and ideality. Veneration is not an emotion, but there is an intoxication of veneration that comes from religious excitement as well as intoxication of the appetites, and both are a hindrance to the operation of the faculty of causality. Mr. Wright quoted freely from Kant, Herbert Spencer, Edmund Burke and Carlyle, and deplored the cramming processes of colleges that turn out educated fools instead of independent thinkers, who express what comes from within.

Prof. Lockwood, who spoke in the afternoon, read from the writings of Zoroaster, the founder of the ancient Persian religion who lived 600 years before Plato in the days of Moses. He went back in retrospection to the time when tradition and allegory tell of the teachers who lived in ancient India thousands and thousands of years ago. This school of thinkers taught the Messianic principle which was typical of the Christ. Jesus was born in a period so remote that we have only a traditional knowledge of him, and many of his sayings have been misinterpreted because they have been given an exoteric instead of an esoteric meaning. The Messianic principle was taught years before Christ was born, and under its influence men were persuaded to bridle the appetite and lay aside sensual proclivities which meant the cross in experience. Mr. Lockwood made copious extracts from the New Testament, and furnished a new interpretation by substituting this Messianic principle for the personality or Christ. He said, referring to the putting of new wines into old bottles, "We, as Spiritualists, have been trying to put the grandest truth in the world into the old bottles of theology. The wine of spiritual truth into the bottles of ecclesiasticism. The exoteric interpretation of Christ's teachings have resulted in innumerable creeds that fill the world. Paganism has been blazed into the teachings of Christ. The cross is the sign of Constantine and the Phallic worship. The woman who brought the alabaster ointment for Christ was forgiven, and her sins were many. The woman who errs to-day through her heart's deepest sympathies is treated as an outcast."

Wednesday evening brought light showers which cooled the air and gave spice and zest to the regular dance at the auditorium, which was largely attended.

W. J. Colville will be here the first week in August, and give a series of class lessons on very interesting subjects of a new order.

Miss Harlow took Spiritualism for her subject Wednesday afternoon, and the words of Emerson for her text: "Your summit will be as high as your base is broad." Many workers in the cause have had great expectations and have been disappointed because the base on which they built has not been broad enough, and there is agitation in the minds of the great majority as to just what position Spiritualism really ought to occupy. If it be a science of a religion? Spiritualism is not a religion in the sense of organization, but it has taught high moral principles and unlocked the truth of the continuity of life. We sometimes feel the need of a higher teacher and counsellor and so we seek to mingle with those who have had experience in life, and have been invited into the larger chamber of the beyond. Science means to study and relate the results to man's work in the sphere of actuality. Poets and religionists have caught wonderful visions but they did not know the truth till someone had tested it in the crucible of analysis. Spiritualism teaches us to rely on the revelations of the now. Authority is not truth, but truth is authority, for it is the same yesterday, to-day and to-morrow. Spiritualism is a reformer but not an aggressive iconoclast. When we speak the truth vindictively we fail to have power. Spiritualism has lighted up the hidden ways, inspired our hopes and broken our shackles, and is the grandest pearl of great price that was ever placed in the diadem of human nature. Let us learn liberality in liberty, and spirituality in practicality, let us make our base so broad that no fence can encompass it, and the summit will rise before our vision so high that all men will journey towards it.

Thursday brought the first unpleasant day of the season, but the parched grass and flowers were in serious need of the refreshing baptism, and the light rainfall did not prevent the gathering of a goodly audience at the auditorium.

A choice vocal solo was rendered by Mrs. Lawrence, of of Dunkirk.

The speaker of the hour was Swami Rama of India, whose mellow voice and benevolent smile are in pleasing harmony with his quaint costume, and help to constitute a striking personality. He sounded in prolonged musical intonations the word Ohm-m-m-m, the God of the Vedanta philosophy, and said, "Beloved friends, noble ladies and gentlemen:—When I first came to Seattle I was received by Spiritualists who accorded my first welcome to America. My best friends in Portland, who arranged for my lectures, were Spiritualists, and among them I met the sweetest souls, broad-minded, liberal, sympathetic Christian souls I have ever known, and I am delighted to be among Spiritualists once more. We are all heathen, for a heathen is one who lives on the heath, and under the free canopy of heaven; so I am proud to address my heathen brothers again. The ancient Spiritualism of India is not like organized societies here, but we read, write and dictate, under what is known as the "inner light." A Guru, or preceptor, sitting at the distance of one hundred miles can see what is transpiring on a battle-field. Books have been written several hundred years before the actual occurrences took place. One of these greatest books no one can read without becoming one with the All. Education should be purified by weeding out all but the one thing needful—love, which makes us realize our oneness with the All. Walt Whitman said, 'Unless you feel all you cannot know all.'" He dilated on the power and significance of the word Ohm, and its natural and universal application to nearly all religions. Those who seek to rise above local consciousness and receive the higher inspiration, the "God-vision," must derive their light from the Ohm. It is not only a chant of the lips, the mind chants it intellectually, the heart chants it, and threefold expression brings us in unison with all life. The soul of our soul, the life of our life, is Ohm. It has its origin in the Sanskrit of the Hindoos. It is not subject to grammatical change. It is nature's syllable and belongs to all languages. It is an elementary sound with which every child is born. The sufferings of the sick find relief in its tone. In it the joy and ecstasy of happy children find expression. It presents a state of mind lifted far above the limited consciousness of mortal life, the egotistical consciousness, and in all the languages of the world it is the natural name of God.

Every Friday morning affords an opportunity of seeing the lyceum children carrying flags and marching to the time of exhilarating music. They make a beautiful panoramic picture and suggest promise for the future.

Nothing is lost sight of in the line of attractions here at this wonderful City of Light. Its royal president is on the outlook and ever-mindful of the needs that exist in every department of the broad sphere of operations.

Mr. and Mrs. Archie Clark, and their pretty daughter Josephine, with Miss Leolyn Everett of Cleveland, have been the guests of Mrs. Pettengill during the past week.

P. L. O. A. Keeler is always busy giving slate-writings, tests and seances that seldom fail to convert the skeptics. On Saturday evening, July 30, the denizens of the City of Light flocked in great numbers to Lily Dale Station, for the incoming train from Buffalo was to bring Mrs. R. S. Lillie, who was compelled by ill health to say good-bye to an innumerable host of friends seven years ago, and seek a milder climate on the Pacific coast. The change accomplished much, and she has faithfully served the Progressive Society, the largest in San Francisco, and a smaller one in Oakland for a succession of years. The people sitting under her ministrations affirm that she grows better and better every season. Cheers and shouts of glad welcome filled the air, as she alighted from the train, and was escorted to the grounds, suggesting the truth of the trite old saying, that "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

Almost perfect weather has been vouchsafed for more than two weeks, and Sunday promised to be no exception, and visitors came from all directions to hear the speaker of the morning. Mrs. R. S. Lillie was introduced by Chairman Barrett, who made tender reference to the value of the fraternal words of sympathy and encouragement to go forward in his work, which she expressed to him seventeen years ago, when he introduced her for the first time on the Lily Dale platform.

In the afternoon, Mr. Wiggin of Boston, opened the exercises with the reading of "Black Sheep," a poem by Carrie E. S. Twing, and an invocation. He selected his text from the gospel of Matthew, "And behold also there came a leper."

Sunday evening an entertainment was given at the auditorium for the benefit of the class work of Messrs Wright and Lockwood, which netted some thirty dollars. Songs and recitations made a varied program, a notable feature of which was Prof. Bonell's unique performance on the autoharp, with harmonic accompaniment.

W. J. Colville arrived on Tuesday morning, and devotes nearly all of the short week of his stay to lectures and classes at Library Hall. On Wednesday afternoon he was introduced to an enthusiastic audience at the auditorium by Chairman Barrett, as Rev. Colville, the globe-trotter of the world.

S. M. KINGSLEY.

New Era, Oregon, Camp-meeting.

The First Spiritual Religious Association of Clackamas county, Oregon, began its sessions, July 1, and Sunday, July 24, witnessed the closing of the session. The officers were on the alert, and the grounds, hotel and tabernacle received needed improvements, adding to the beauty and comfort of all who attended the camp during the meeting.

There were many enjoyable features of the camp and the board did all they could to make the camp a success.

Saturday, July 23, the association held its business session and elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Rev. G. C. Love, Portland; vice-president, Ben F. Atherton, Portland; recording secretary, Mrs. Lorena Mendell; treasurer, ———, Burgoyne; corresponding secretary, George W. Lazelle, all of Clackamas county, Oregon.

The society has for many years held camp-meetings in the grove whose beauty must be seen and enjoyed to be appreciated, for it is truly spiritual or holy ground, and while some of the fir trees that adorn the grounds are as babies compared to others on the western coast, yet they seem as giants of the forest to many coming from the prairies of the East.

The Woman's Union has done much in past years with their bazaar to assist the camp, and give promise of good results for next year in their zeal to make the camp of 1905 a grand success.

As president of the association I am going to keep them in a guessing mood as to which will bring into the treasury the greatest amount because of articles to be offered for sale for the cash received, and to do this without interfering with them in their efforts, I am going to ask the ladies, yes, and gentlemen, too, if disposed to do so, to send me all kinds of articles they may deem suitable for the purpose of helping along the work of our camp. Aprons, ties, napins, quilt blocks 12 inches square—and everything useful and ornamental, and I will see to it that every article is disposed of to the best advantage for the benefit of the association. This, remember, is independent of the Woman's Union, and all who wish to give into the hands of the Union may do so by sending the articles to the Union in my care or in the care of any other officer of the association. If sent to me without other instructions, I will consider said articles a part of my collection to be considered against the efforts of the Woman's Union.

Remember this is just a friendly contest with the Woman's Union, so send along your articles to them or to me, and at the next camp-meeting it will be seen which has the largest collection of articles, the Woman's Union or myself.

As too much cannot be done for the success of the coming camp-meeting, I shall, as you see, begin immediately, and only cease working when the next camp-meeting is over. This is my style of making a camp-meeting successful.

Next year is to be a grand year for the west coast, as the Lewis and Clarke Exposition is to take place in Portland, Oregon, and with the low rates from all points east, we expect thousands of people here from all points in the east, among them many mediums and speakers, and as the Spiritualist campground is only 22 miles from Portland, with 45 cents fare, we hope to see many of the eastern workers for the cause at the camp grounds during the meeting.

We would be glad indeed to hear from them that contemplate visiting Portland at that time. We also expect many Spiritualists to visit Portland during 1905 exposition and hope they, too, will not return east without visiting the camp-meeting at New Era, for an earnest invitation is extended to them. Neither would we slight the readers and other friends of The Progressive Thinker, and they, too, are cordially invited to the camp-meeting of the First Spiritual Religious Association of Clackamas county, Oregon, and may it be indeed a grand camp-meeting, giving each one cause to say, "It was indeed good to be there."

REV. G. C. LOVE.

Portland, Oregon.

Have You Hay-Fever or Asthma in Any Form?

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous.

Miss A. E. Frye, Lakenan, Mo., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever after several years suffering, altho' physicians had said a cure was impossible. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, writes March 8th, that he used Himalya (the Kola Compound) on numbers of Hay-Fever cases with satisfactory results in every case. Hon. L. C. Clute, Greeley, Iowa, testifies that he was cured by it after eighteen years of suffering with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Physicians or change of climate did him no good. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the Importers, copies of which they will be glad to send you.

To prove beyond a doubt its wonderful curative power the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

The past week has marked the opening for the twenty-second time, of the annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association, at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

For twenty-two years the officers and members of this association labored to make the grounds of Mt. Pleasant Park the scene of a yearly spiritual feast surpassed by none. How well the earnest and untiring efforts of the workers of the past have succeeded may best be shown by calling attention to the large gatherings which each season throng to Mt. Pleasant Park.

Considering the vastly greater number of competitors in the camp-meeting and Chautauqua field to-day Clinton camp is to be congratulated at having held so well the vigor and enthusiasm of its youth. Indeed it may safely be said to be more prosperous at this time than at any other period of its existence.

Certainly prospects were never brighter. During the last year many improvements have been carried forward and the park lawns and driveways put in good condition for the season. Nothing is more pleasing to the eye than the works of nature untrammelled, set off by the handicraft of man. This effect is truly exemplified in Mt. Pleasant Park. The many beauties which Nature has bestowed upon our grounds have not been meddled with, but many cozy cottages have been erected, and a fine pavilion, auditorium and hotel have arisen at fitting points during the last twenty years, until to-day the visitor at Mt. Pleasant Park finds himself surrounded, in the heart of nature, by all modern conveniences and improvements.

In addition to natural advantages Mt. Pleasant Park possesses an absolutely free platform, filled only by the very best talent obtainable. To convince your readers of this I have only to mention the names of such workers as Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, Mrs. J. A. Murtha, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, Willard J. Hull and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, who, with others of equal talent and standing, will entertain Mt. Pleasant's visitors with the best exposition of the truths of Modern Spiritualism that is possible upon any platform.

Since the flag-raising, at 9 a. m., Sunday, July 31, the camp has been taken by storm by the masterly logic and convincing eloquence of Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, whose engagement terminated Wednesday afternoon. Words can but poorly convey the impression which this speaker has made upon our visitors. Many of The Progressive Thinker readers are undoubtedly already familiar with her work. To those who are not we must say that as a lecturer, medium, and lyceum worker she has few equals and no superior. The sparkling brilliancy of her wit, the clear-cut incisive logic of her arguments and her remarkable faculty for teaching and drilling the children can not be too highly commended. It is the sincere wish of all who have heard her that the management will hasten to secure her services for the next year if possible, and the regret of all that she was not to remain with us longer this season.

Another most estimable worker who has served us during the past is Mrs. J. A. Murtha. Those who have been long in the work know the need of such mediums as Mrs. Murtha, and can appreciate one when her work is presented to them. It is safe to say that there never has been a medium upon the platform at Clinton who has given better satisfaction than Mrs. Murtha. Her success as a test medium is phenomenal. Message after message falls from her lips in rapid succession, and never a failure. The minuteness of her descriptions of the departed ones and the attention paid to detail makes recognition of her tests almost instant.

Truly in Mrs. Murtha and Mrs. Gillespie Spiritualism has acquired two workers of whom it may well be proud.

The past week has been an enjoyable one in more ways than one. Not only have the visitors been delighted with the platform work, but the first camp dance, held Tuesday night, was a source of enjoyment to young and old.

Before this article is closed something must be said of the program for the coming week. It is one of especial interest. Among the talent secured are Dr. George B. Warne, one lecture; Willard J. Hull, four lectures; Harry J. Moore, two lectures, and Max Hoffmann, two test seances.

In conclusion, as a visitor at the park, let me say that a more enjoyable spot to spend a vacation or outing cannot be located. The park is within a mile of the grand old Mississippi, where boating and fishing abound. The city of Clinton is as pretty a town as could be found in the state and easily reached from all points. The Western Passenger Association has granted a fare and a third rate from all points in Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin, and the northern peninsula of Michigan, making it possible for all to attend.

Let us hope that many will attend and render this, the twenty-second camp-meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association, a record breaker.

EUGENE R. COOPER.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

On Tuesday, July 26, the Ladies' Aid Society met at Mrs. E. McDowell's. The machine as well as the needles flew to prepare articles for the coming fair. It would not have been a Spiritualistic Aid had not the medium and the guide been present. The guides desired to say, "We are not dead." Mrs. Emma Ruttman medicated the illness in health of four present, in a way that was a "little tearful to her," but pleasing to them, for it said, the dead are here.

On Wednesday, July 27, a number of the Lake Brady campers met at the auditorium to commemorate the dead of the camp association. The usual form was not followed, as the family circle was not of its usual size. Near relatives of the dead being not present, the order was adjourned.

Sunday, July 31, Mrs. Mattie Hull began the day's course of lectures by giving a little talk. The thought she gave to us was, Spiritualistic school of thought rises above the material.

Rev. Harry Moore of Chicago, now presented his thought. He mirrored Spiritualism of the past to his audience and proved spirit return of the present through a chain of reasoning by phenomena known to himself and others. Mr. Moore's thought was very clearly presented. Mrs. Hull invocationed before the afternoon lecture by Mr. Moore, by requesting the overthought to reason not for us. "Lead us to be true to our own thought—to be truth, love and kindness to all mankind."

Mr. Moore's subject was Joan of Arc. He made many clear points that she was a mediator in thought. His witticisms to make clear the right thought in his reasoning were applauded, showing the appreciation of his presentation of the subject. Mr. Moore remained until Monday morning, and Mrs. Hull until Tuesday. She will spend a few days at the Mantua camp.

MRS. LYDIE L. CURTIS.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

Read This List of PREMIUMS.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

1. The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, our leading Premium Book this year. Price 25 cents.

2. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Price 25 cents.

3. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Price 25 cents.

4. Seers of the Ages, by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 25 cents.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 40 cents each.

We have only ELEVEN Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any two of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Lastly, all of these ELEVEN Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.35, something never before equelled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

OUR ELEVEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.35.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
6.—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Transcribed by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.
11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Address all orders to

J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Illinois.

KEEP POSTED

In Current Spiritualistic and Occult News.

You can do it by reading each week The Progressive Thinker. The Philosophy and the Spiritualistic and Occult phenomena it contains each week, is the marvel of the age. No one can afford to be without the paper. Its price is within the reach of all.

Present Criticism of the Bible

As Analyzed by Rev. R. Heber Newton.

In a pleasant studio in West Thirty-third street—that of his son, an artist whose work is already known in ecclesiastical as well as secular circles—the Rev. R. Heber Newton smilingly assented to an interview for The Sun.

"There are many things I might touch on," he said. "I am greatly interested in the Society for Psychical Research. I might speak on the Sunday baseball games. Can you suggest any other topic?"

"Perhaps you have noticed the meetings of the American Bible League convention in this city this week?"

"Most certainly I have, and I have watched the programme and discussion with great interest."

"What do you think of the aims and objects of the convention?"

"The formation of the league is certainly one of the signs of the times, and a most significant sign it is. Alike in the number of men who have identified themselves with the league and in the ecclesiastical position, intellectual ability and character of some of these representative men, the convention is very important.

"There are men among the officers and upon the list of speakers who are of national reputation. There can be no question that from their point of view there is an urgent demand for some such action.

"They note the drift of educated opinion away from the traditional view of the Bible, alike among the clergy and the laity, and this fills them with consternation and dismay. The call for such a league is an admission of the seriousness of the situation from the standpoint of the traditional believer.

"He feels that the battle is going against him, that the tide of public opinion is setting away from him. The league is an attempt to re-enforce the courage of the traditionalists and to stem the tide of public opinion, if possible. It reminds one, however, of the famous attitude of Mrs. Partington and her broom, or of the fulmination of the Pope's bull against the comet.

"No one can fail to have profound sympathy with an effort to reawaken public interest in the Bible and to prevent the growing disuse of the Bible, alike in private reading, in family devotions and in educational institutions. But the very question in dispute is as to what is the cause of the modern disinclination to use the Bible.

"The traditionalist puts it all down to the growth of skepticism as the sequence of Biblical criticism. He who follows intelligently the movements of our Biblical critics will be likely to put it down to the lack of courage on the part of the clergy in failing to admit the facts of the situation and in not changing front with the changed outlook of knowledge.

"If half of what our Biblical critics say is true, there is a thoroughgoing revolution under way concerning the traditional view of the Bible. To deny this or seek to cover it up, ostrich fashion, is perhaps the real root of the widespread indifference to the Bible on the part of the intelligent laity.

They suspect our clergy of lack of honesty—perhaps they suspect most strongly some of those who are beating the tom-toms in such conventions as this of New York. It seems to them unreal. They cannot understand how educated clergymen, professors and pastors, can fail to recognize the changed situation.

"The talk that has been indulged in at this convention confirms this unfortunate impression. This perhaps is the real crux of the case."

"How did the programme of the convention strike you?"

"Most curiously. The programme illustrates what I have just said.

"One topic is, 'The Present Assault on the Bible.' There is no assault on the Bible that I am aware of, except as the steady and remorseless push of criticism constitutes in the minds of the traditionalists an assault on their position, which they identify with the truth of the Bible. The critics are for the most part as honest and sincere, as reverent and religious as those who construe their criticism into an assault.

"Another topic was: 'The Practical Consequence of the Attack on the Bible—in the Demoralization of Conduct and Education.' This seems to me to be a complete begging of the question.

"If there is any demoralization of conduct and education at present traceable to man's attitude to the Bible, it seems to me to link itself in with the persistent refusal of educated men to admit the facts of the situation, and the consequent suspicion thrown upon the intellectual integrity of the ministry.

"'The Groundlessness of the Present Rationalistic Claims.' This is not a subject for vehement platform pronouncement; it is a subject for calm and scholarly consideration. If the present critical claims are groundless it ought to be possible to show the fact. Let this be shown, and we all will acknowledge it.

"'The Identity of the Present Views With Those Propagated One Hundred Years Ago.' Shades of all the great critics from Ewald to Cheyne!

"Of course Mr. Thomas Paine—always called 'Tom' Paine by the courteous Christian—with his keen common sense, discerned the mathematical and moral difficulties of the Old Testament; but what conception had he of our modern Biblical criticism? This is a brand new science, practically of our generation, the outgrowth of literary, historic and philological criticism in every department, an application of the scientific temper and spirit to the question of Biblical literature.

"'The Unscientific Character of the Prevailing Higher Criticism.' Well, gentlemen, we would say to these distinguished professors and pastors, by all means establish the unscientific character of the Higher Criticism, and when the task is done we will troop to your side. But that is a large contract to undertake by busy men."

"How do the addresses that were given at the league strike you?"

"Just as might have been expected. There would seem to have been a superabundance of platform oratory and a minimum of calm and clear scholarship. Certain things that I noticed in the addresses are worth a moment's attention.

"Dr. Burrell seemed to state very frankly his conviction that those who follow the critics use such a word as 'inspiration' in a sense wholly contrary to any recognized meaning that it has had. He seems to charge them with dishonesty in such use of the term.

"This is all beside the mark. There never has been a definition which has been acceptable. Dr. Burrell must know that, as well as any one else.

"Every theory of inspiration that has been propounded has been 'holed' worse than the Russian ships in Port Arthur. The spiritual thought involved in any definition of inspiration—the reality of an influence from the unseen world upon the mind and soul of man, quickening his thought, communicating ideas, suggesting a message to be brought to mankind—this the followers of Biblical criticism hold just as strongly as Dr. Burrell, only they do not make such spiritual inspiration synonymous with intellectual inerrancy. They do not conceive the inspired man as a mere puppet, pulled by strings from the other side.

"Dr. Burrell talks again about the higher criticism causing a desertion from the churches where it is preached. How about the desertion from the churches where the traditionalists' view of the Bible is preached, to the affront of the intelligence of the congregation and to the impeachment of the veracity of the preacher?

"Dr. Burrell seems to think that the falling off in numbers in our divinity schools is the result of Biblical criticism. Would it not be far more truly conceived to be the result of the failure of the institutions to square themselves by the results of criticism? Is it not more likely that intelligent young men are kept away from theological seminaries by the failure of those institutions to admit frankly the changed point of view which is the result of criticism, and to make room for the new thought?

"Dr. Booth seems to be under the belief that the issue of the present situation will be a vast exodus of Protestants to Roman Catholicism. Does he imagine that there is no conflict going on in the Roman Catholic church between the traditionalists and the critics?

"Has he never heard of Abbe Loisy? Does he not know that there are hosts of priests in the Catholic church who are following sympathetically the movements of Biblical criticism, and who are earnestly striving to adjust the church to the intellectual change resulting therefrom?

"Dr. Booth seems more than to imply that some of the higher critics laugh at their own professions and mean one thing when they say another. Names, please, Dr. Booth. It would make a most interesting article if these parties should be described, identified and held up to public condemnation. By all means, let us know who they are.

"Dr. Booth affirms that the learned men of the age stand five to one against the thought that the Bible is not the word of God. A matter of fact, this, to be easily settled by the statistics of scholarship. Will the good doctor give us a statistical article, arraying on one side the names of the five hundred who are opposed to Biblical criticism and on the other those of the one hundred who accept it—all alike being men of scholarship?"

"What do you think of Dr. William Phillips Hall's statement of the general aim of the league—'to organize the friends of the Bible, to promote a more reverential and constructive study of the sacred volume, and to maintain the historic faith of the church in its divine inspiration and supreme authority as the word of God'?"

"I was under the impression that the newly formed Association for the Advancement of Religious Education was distinctly organized by the friends of the Bible to promote a more reverential and constructive study of the sacred volume. That is an aim in which we all must agree. The other portion of his affimation is altogether a different matter.

"The great body of Biblical critics would unite most heartily in every effort to maintain the historic faith of the church as to the reality of a divine inspiration of the Bible. They recognize this inspiration in all the great ethical and spiritual truths of the Old and New Testaments. They believe that those are genuine inspirations.

"But it is wholly another matter to go on and affirm the need of upholding the historic faith of the church in the 'supreme authority of the Bible' as 'the Word of God.' That is an antiquated and obsolete conception, stated in archaic and outgrown terms.

"The supreme authority in matters of morals and religion can by no intelligent man be recognized as a book. It must lie in the ethical and spiritual nature of man, his reason and his conscience, illumined by the spiritual consensus of mankind, the great affirmations of the ethical and spiritual nature of humanity.

"No book or series of books can be 'the Word of God.' That Logos, or Thought-Word, is the intelligence and life of God embodied in the universe, in man, in the great spiritual heroes of mankind, supremely in Jesus of Nazareth. No book is big enough or true enough or up-to-date enough to be identified with the 'Word of God.'

"It is juggling with terms to go on repeating an outgrown conception in outworn language. One of the speakers in the convention referred to the critics as fooling themselves and then fooling the people. This is a forcible, if not a very polite expression. Is it not quite as capable of application to the men who go on juggling with phrases of the past?"

"Does there seem to you to be any such 'crisis' in the religious situation as is indicated by the formation of this league?"

"Yes, there is indeed a crisis. It is a square, clear-cut issue between the scientific literary criticism of the books of the Bible and the traditional view which has been re-enunciated with all the old-time fervor and blissful ignorance of facts in the present convention.

"There is no reconciliation possible between the traditional view of the Bible and the critical view of the Bible. One or the other must come out on top.

"If the traditionalists can reclaim the intelligence of the people and persuade educated men that criticism is all an empty unreality, a colossal mistake, the crisis will be ended in favor of the traditionalists. Religion may be stifled by this recovery of faith, so-called, but the crisis will be ended—perhaps in the way that crisis of fever is sometimes ended, by death.

"As the critics persuade the intelligent, educated men of the church of the substantiality of their processes and the validity of their general conclusions, the crisis will be ended in another way. Men will recognize that the Bible is not what it was taken to be, and they will readjust their religious feelings to the accepted facts. That is being done in myriads of instances by the clergy and laity, and the crisis is coming to an end.

"This means nothing less than a revolution. To the traditionalists it seems wholly destructive.

"The infallible, oracular book, the supreme authority of man, is gone forever. With it goes the infallible, oracular church. With it goes also the infallible, oracular body of theology. All of the false authoritative foundations of religion in Christianity are being swept away.

"This is nothing less than a crisis, surely, which to the traditionalists must seem utterly the work of the devil. To the traditionalists there seems no way for the preservation of faith amid such sweeping revolution.

"Yet, as a matter of fact, faith is finding a way to maintain itself and to renew itself. The destructive influences of criticism are being followed by constructive influences.

"The Bible is losing none of its charm—rather it is increasing its charm over the intellect and the heart of man. It is losing none of its power over the life—rather it is renewing its power.

"Men can come now with honest minds and untroubled consciences, perplexed by no quibbles of the theologian, offended by no theories of inspiration, and be free to drink in its ethical and spiritual inspirings and to live by them. The Old Testament, seen as a record of real revelations coming to men, shapes itself into a natural evolution of the spiritual history of a race, which becomes an organic process, flowering and culminating in the historic life of Jesus.

"That historic life becomes more unquestionably certain, more indubitably real, as the result of the winnowing process of New Testament criticism. The New Testament is seen now, as never before, to center in the life and teachings of Jesus.

"The evolution of Christian thought, as outworked in the New Testament literature, is taking an historic clearness and scientific naturalness, and thus appealing to the mind of man as it has never done before. The Church, as the institute of religion, is seen to be a natural product of human history, but clothed with the truly supernatural authority which invests all the great human institutes.

"It has the authority of man behind it—that is the true authority of God. Christian theology is seen to be now no mere development of one little period in the history of the human race, nothing 'local and small'—it is seen to be, in the light of historic criticism, the crown and consummation of the spiritual experiences, the intellectual questionings, the ethical aspirations, the worshipful adorations of mankind. The great Catholic creeds are human creeds.

"Yes, the wheel goes round, and as the result of the destructive Biblical criticism, a reconstruction of Christian faith concerning the Bible and theology is forcing itself upon Christendom and a new faith, rational and reverent at once, is emerging. A faith as authoritative as human consciousness, as catholic as the ardent and massive experiences of mankind."—New York Sun.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send in Your Dates and Names of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper corrections as to dates, etc., can be made.

Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

The camp session of the M. V. S. A., Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, will open July 31 and close Aug. 28. For programmes address Mollie B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

Maple Dell Park, Ohio.

The American Spiritual, Religious and Science Union will hold a camp session at Maple Dell, commencing July 24 and closing Sept. 1. F. H. Sherwood, secretary, Mantua, Ohio. The grounds will be open for family reunions, Sunday-school picnics, and Sunday meetings, etc., from June 1 to Sept. 15.

Lily Dale Camp, N. Y.

This favorite place of resort opens July 15 and closes September 14. For full programmes address the president, Mrs. Abby L. Pettengill, Lily Dale, N. Y.

Lake Sunapee Camp, N. H.

Lake Sunapee Spiritualist camp-meeting commences July 31 and closes August 28—four weeks and five Sundays, at Blodgett's Landing, N. H. For programmes address Lorenzo Worthen, secretary, Hillsboro Bridge, N. H., until July 25; after then at Blodgett's Landing, N. H.

Chesterfield, Ind.

Chesterfield (Ind.) camp-meeting opens July 14 and closes August 28. For programs and other information address Lydia Jessup, secretary, Chesterfield, Ind.

Unity Camp-Meeting.

The Lynn Spiritualists Association will hold meetings every Sunday at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, Mass., commencing June 5 and ending Sept. 25. For full particulars address Mrs. A. A. Averill, 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

Freeville, N. Y.

The dates for the Central New York Spiritual Association Camp-meeting, at Freeville, N. Y., are from July 23 to Aug. 22, four weeks and five Sundays. Owing to the protracted and severe illness of our secretary, Miss Victoria C. Moore, I am acting secretary, to whom all letters pertaining to the camp should be addressed. W. W. Kelsey, President, Cortland, N. Y.

Lake Brady, Ohio.

The Lake Brady Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 3 and closes Sept. 4. For full programme address A. G. Keck, Akron, Ohio.

Delphos Camp, Kans.

This camp-meeting will begin August 5, closing August 22. Address all communications to I. N. Richardson, secretary, Delphos, Kans.

Grand Ledge, Mich.

The Grand Ledge (Mich.) camp opens July 31 and closes August 28. For full programme address D. W. Ewing, Grand Ledge, Mich.

Island Lake, Mich.

The Island Lake Camp, at Island Lake, Mich., 42 miles from Detroit, on the Flint and Pere Marquette railroad, commences July 10 and extends through the month of August. For full programmes address H. R. LaGrange, secretary, 84 East Montcalm street, Detroit, Mich.

Waterloo Camp, Iowa.

The Central Iowa Spiritualist Association will hold its camp at Waterloo, Iowa, from August 21 to September 11, including four Sundays. For particulars address J. F. Andrew, 205 E. Linn street, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Forest Home, Mich.

This camp-meeting, located at Snowflake, Antrim county, Mich., will open July 30, and continue till Aug. 22. For full programs address Mrs. Ruth Eastman, Secretary, Box 69, Mancelona, Mich.

Franklin, Neb.

This camp commences July 29 and closes August 15. For full particulars address D. L. Haines, secretary, Franklin, Neb.

Onset Camp.

Commences July 24 and ends August 28. For full programme and particulars address the secretary of the camp, Onset, Mass.

Wonewoc, Wis.

The camp-meeting of the Western Wisconsin Camp Association will open Aug. 4, 1904, and will close Aug. 22. For full particulars write Miss Gertrude Spooner, secretary, Wonewoc, Wis.

Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass.

This excellent camp opens July 31, and continues for 30 consecutive days. For full programmes address Albert P. Blinn, 61 Dartmouth street, Boston, Mass.

Southern Cassadaga Camp.

The Southern Cassadaga camp at Lake Helen, Florida, will open the first Sunday in February and close the 26th of March. For information regarding rooms in Apartment House or in cottages, also for programmes, write to Mrs. J. D. Palmer, corresponding secretary, Willoughby, Ohio.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

The dates for Vicksburg camp-meeting are July 31 to August 22. For full particulars, address J. Fraser, manager, Vicksburg, Mich.

Haslett Park, Mich.

This old and popular camp opens July 30 and closes Aug. 28. For full programs address J. D. Richmond, secretary, St. Johns, Mich.

Edgewood Camp, Wash.

Edgewood camp, Washington, opens July 31, and will continue three weeks, ending August 22 and 23 with their eighth annual convention. For full particulars address Julian W. Smith, 1115 North Fife street, Tacoma, Wash.

Ashley, Ohio, Camp.

The Spiritualist camp-meeting at Ashley, Ohio will open August 7 and close August 28. For full particulars address W. F. Randolph, secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

Parkland Heights Camp-Meeting.

This camp will remain open Sundays only until September 1. For further particulars, address Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary, Floral Heights, Parkland, Pa.

Temple Heights, Camp, Me.

The Temple Heights Spiritual Corporation will hold its annual session, this being the twenty-second, at their beautiful grounds, on the banks of Penobscot Bay, in the good old state of Maine, on the dates of August 13th to 21st inclusive. Arrangements have been made for a very interesting session of camp-meeting and it is expected that a large attendance will be the outcome. For full programs address Orrin J. Dickey, Belfast, Maine.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building.
Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 15.
Admittance without examination.
Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week.. .. .. 1.75

Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease to all who will send their name, age, sex, and give leading symptoms, and all who will send $2.00 (Two Dollars) with their request for a diagnosis, I will diagnose their disease free, and will send them for the $2.00 two weeks' treatment, and the best book published on Spiritualism,

Free of Charge,

"The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism."
BY EPES SARGENT.

Cancers Cured or No Pay.
We Have the Best Method.

DR. C. E. WATKINS,
"THE WESTLAND,"
(Next to Symphony Hall.)
Boston, Mass.

FOR RENT.

Furnished room at 222 Irving Ave., near Van Buren Street Cars. Spiritualist family.

MISS MAE HUNT,

Trance Medium and Lecturer, is located at 205 Park st., San Francisco, Cal. Readings including three questions by mail, $1.00. 761tf

ELTON E. HEDRICK,

ASTROLOGER.—Vocation, business speculation, matrimony, changes, travel, all affairs of life. Fee $2.00. Send date of birth as near the hour as possible. Address, 2021 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. 775

DON'T READ THIS.

If sick write to me, and I will give you a free examination. I want no leading symptom. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Send name, age, sex, complexion, weight and 10 cts. in stamps or silver, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth many dollars to you. Be sure and write your own letter. Address.
FRANCES L. LOUCKS,
85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address
MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

YOUR FORTUNE

Typewritten and sent FREE if you will send your birth-date and three stamps for mailing expenses. I have astonished thousands with my wonderfully correct reading of their life, past and future. I correctly reveal your future love affairs, business success, marriage mate, etc., and give advice on all affairs. Address, SHAGREN, Dept. T.B., 2152, San Francisco, Cal.

Institute of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics: can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to E. R. BABBITT, M. D., Geneva, N. Y.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

The oldest and best known physician now in practice. His cures are wonderful; his examinations free to all who send him name, age, sex and lock of hair, and six cents in stamps. He doesn't require any leading symptoms. He cures weak men. Address,
DR. J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
Lock Box 1203, Stoneham, Mass.

MILLER'S MAGIC MIRRORS

A Successful Road to Mediumship.

Indorsed by leading Spiritualists as developers of different phases of mediumship, especially Clairvoyance. Our mirrors are chemically treated and very sensitive to spiritual elements. With a little patience you can not fail to develop your phase of mediumship. Price, $3.00. Horoscopes written for $1.00. Give date of birth, year, and where born. W. H. MILLER, P. O. Box 169, Canton, Ohio. 756m3

TRUMPETS.

The infallible Fibre Trumpet is guaranteed better than metal. No. 1.—36x5 in.—insulated top and bottom, cardinal colored enamel, $1.50. No. 2, $1.25. 33 x 4 inches, plain, with no insulation, brown color. Pamphlet with instructions for all kinds of development will be mailed on receipt of 12 cents in stamps. Trumpets will be sent on receipt of price. Manufactured by
JAS. NEWTON, 423 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

FRANK N. FOSTER,

The Noted Psychic for

Spirit Photography

Send name and address for circular. Sittings by mail. 91 Fitzhugh St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

BIOCHEMISTRY.

The Natural Law of Cure.
BIOPLASMA.
The Life of the Blood.
By DR. GEO. W. CAREY,

"The Biochemic System of Medicine." New course of instructions in the science of Biochemistry, now ready. Send 2 cent stamp for circular. Address,
The Chemistry of Life Co.,
337 Summer St., W. Somerville, Mass

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth. $1.00.

WOMAN; A Lecture Delivered to Ladies Only, by Mrs. Dr. Hulburt. On the present status of woman, physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. The divine law of true harmonial marriage, etc. Price, 10c.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

Apollonius of Tyana Identified as the Christian Jesus. A wonderful communication, explaining how his life and teachings were utilized to formulate Christianity. Price 15 cents.

HEALING, Causes and Effects, By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Deals with the finer mental and spiritual forces as applied to healing. Price, 50 cents.

C. WALTER LYNN
THE Eminent Healer
and
Gifted Psychic.

Health Restored by Common Sense Methods.

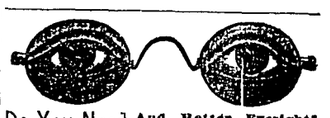
For the Cure of Mental and Physical Ailments.

OBSESSION CURED

For Free Diagnosis of Disease, send five two-cent stamps, age, name, sex, and own handwriting.

Readings and Business Advice, $1, and Two Stamps.

Address 784 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.



Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,
230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal.

Do You Need Spectacles And Better Eyesight I can help you. I will fit your eyes by Clairvoyance and spirit assistance at your own home with the improved melted pebble lense, to see near and at a distance. Please write for illustrated circular, showing styles and prices. Also, my spirit method of treating that restores lost vision and impaired eyesight. I guarantee to fit your eyes, and safe delivery by mail. SAMPLE FREE.—Sufficient magnetized Compound for four oz. cures sore eyes, restores the eyes to normal vision. Ten cents for postage.
E. F. POOLE.
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). It teaches you how to penetrate the veil of sense and matter, converse with spirits, read the crystal, see the future, prophesy and attain illumination, and be a Yogis. "All students will do well to study this excellent volume.—W. J. Colville. "It is a revelation."—Light. "Best work on the subject."—Mind. "Marvelous—Epoch-making."—Lilian Whiting.

SPIRIT WORLD, by Gaffield, cloth, 50 cents.

AURAS AND COLORS—With exhaustive dictionary of color meanings. A unique book for unique people. Price 50 cents.

PSYCHOMETRY—The first and only book which teaches the science so that you can practice it. Price, 50 cents.

EASY LESSONS in Inspiration Clairvoyance and Psychometry. Price, 50 cents.

REALIZATION—How to enter the super-consciousness and be a Yogis. Price, 25 cents.

DIVINATION—A Ms. series on how to divine hidden things, find lost treasures, become a seer. Price, $1.00.

CRYSTALS for crystal-gazing, a new lot at $2.25 each, postage prepaid.

HOW TO REMEMBER PAST LIVES—A Ms. series on this fascinating subject. Price, $1.00.

Send for Prospectus of "The College of Divine Science and Realization of Divinity." Reduced tuition. The only one of its kind in the world.

J. C. F. GRUMBINE,
1285 Commonwealth Ave.,
Boston, Mass.

THE VOICES By Warren Sumner Barlow. The Voices contain poems of remarkable beauty and force. They are most excellent. Price $1.00.

DEATH and the AFTER LIFE By A. J. Davis. An instructive and interesting work for all to read. Price 60 cents.

CONFLICT Between Religion and Science. Just the book for progressive thinkers. A book that is very interesting to people who have a taste for the past religious history. By John W. Draper. Price, cloth, $1.75.

A. P. A. MANUAL A complete expose of the principles and objects of the American Protective Association. A book for all patriotic American citizens. Price, 15 cents, or two for 25 cents.

THE HARMONIC SERIES.

Harmonics of Evolution (Florence Huntley),	Vol. I.,	$2.00
THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME,	Vol. II.,	2.00
The Dream Child,		75

These works have made a profound impression on the most advanced and progressive intelligence of the age. In the field of Psychical Research it can be said truthfully that they have created a veritable "Cyclone" of interest and discussion. Their subject matter and simplicity of expression make them intensely interesting and fascinatingly attractive to every one who can understand the simplest English. They have made simple and clear the most difficult problems of human life, and carry a special message to all who love the truth.

The Great Psychological Crime—Contents—Part I.

Psychological Crime; New Definitions; Pertinent Admissions; What Is Hypnotism; The Deadly Parallel; Man and His Two Organisms; Physiology and Pathology of Hypnotism; "Auto-Hypnotism," a Misnomer; "Suggestion," a Lexicological Libel; Independent Suggestion, a Fact; Hypnotism and the Three Brains; Does Hypnotism Cure? A Violation of Natural Law; True Suggestion and Therapeutic Faith; Post-Mortem Hypnotism; What of the Hypnotist?

Part II.

A Risk and a Duty; Other Definitions; Significant Admissions; Facts Demonstrated; Spiritual Mediumship Analyzed and Classified; The Principle Involved; "Automatic, Physical Mediumship" Impossible; Neither a "Gift" Nor a "Power"; The Destructive Principle in Mediumship; Mediumship and Morality; Mediumship and Martyrdom; Mediumship and "Affinity"; Mediumship and Emotionalism; Mediums and Their Motives; Mediumship and Insanity.

Part III.

The Genesis of "Hell"; The Way of Death; In Perspective; Individual Immortality; On What It Depends; Self-Control, the Application; The Line of Despair and the Powers of Darkness; The Law of Spiritual Gravity; Admonitions and Suggestions.

Supplemental.

The Value of "Theories"; Differences and Distinctions; Transmigration; Transubstantiation; Reincarnation; Metempsychosis; Self-Perpetuation; Conditional Immortality; Inherent Immortality; Individual Extinction; Psychical Reinvesture.

Harmonics of Evolution—Contents.

Preliminary Statement; There Is No Death; Life After Physical Death Is Scientifically Demonstrable; Life Here and Hereafter Has a Common Development and a Common Purpose; The Scope, Method and Purpose; The Genesis of Physical Life; The Spiritual Basis of Evolution; The "Law of Natural Selection"; The Natural Law of Selection; A Question in Science; The Completion of an Individual; Masculine Will and Feminine Desire; The Struggle for Happiness; Masculine Reason and Feminine Intuition; The Spiritual Basis of Love; Natural Science Corroborated; Natural Marriage; Legal Marriage; Divorce; True Marriage, Mathematics, Harmonics, Ethics.

Handsomely Bound.

Send for Circular.
Address all orders to
THE INDO-AMERICAN BOOK CO.,
19 to 27 North Kedzie Ave., Chicago.

YOU CANNOT AFford to miss an issue of this paper, with its wealth of SPIRITUAL LITERATURE.

The Progressive Thinker.

SEND YOUR SUBscription in at once, and keep pace with all that is transpiring in the ranks.

VOL. 30 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 20, 1904. NO. 769

SPIRITUALISM IS A TRUTH.

"One truth is clear--whatever is, is right." Pope.

"I long to know the truth hereof at large." Shakespeare.

"Let us make truth catching instead of falsehood and disease." Ingersoll.

"Truth depends on, or is only arrived at by a legitimate deduction from all the facts which are truly material." Coleridge.

"Plows, to go true, depend much upon the truth of the iron." Mortimer.

"Truth bears the torch in the search for truth." Lucretius.

Let us love our cause and dare to advocate its truth and decry fraud. If we have the pure it cannot be destroyed in the crucible of reason and fair discussion. It will only thrive, and expand more rapidly.

TRUTH IS IMPERISHABLE.

"My mouth shall speak the truth." Prov. viii., 7.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." William Cullen Bryant.

"To have truth and not live it is like having lungs and refusing to breathe."

"However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully frequently, and fearlessly discussed it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth." John Stuart Mill.

THREE VISIONS,

And the Lessons They Conveyed.

On the night of February 28, 1903, as I lay wide awake on my pillow, immediately after retiring, it was my sweet privilege to enjoy the blessed experience of a happy vision. It appeared in three phases—first, a halo or ring of light so often seen before, encircling my brow, in that same evening hour; second, this soon changed into a heart-shaped disc of silver color, at the same time rising toward a point above my head. There this heart-shaped disc was gradually though quickly changed into a brilliant golden hue and assumed the shape of a crown.

This crown was beautifully simple in shape, being devoid of ornamental finish, yet with just that number and variety of harmonious curves and that symmetry of top outlined, which gave the whole a beauty beyond that of any metallic crown ever yet represented to me.

A feature which adds value to the vision, for its very truthfulness, is the fact that this crown was not perfect or complete. Only a little more than half of it showed plainly, so as to indicate that my crown of gold is now in the process of construction.

In like manner the perfect shape of the silver heart plainly suggests that a course of discipline even in this world may be so rigidly severe on the one hand, and so patiently studied on the other hand, that the elements of love may become perfected in one respect, namely, its relation to the entire race of man.

I cannot be so vain as to arrogate to myself a monopoly of this degree of perfection, thus making myself a model, and the only model for the rest of mankind—as far from it as the east is from the west. Yet indeed I have arrived at the stage indicated in the above hint, by a process, which has become to me unique.

Many years ago I reached the conclusion that the highest form of love is that which is most purely philanthropic, or that which aims to include the whole world of humanity in its grasp. At first such a form or phase of love seemed purely theoretical, not to say unattainable; but by degrees, the mind dwelling upon it a certain portion of each day, such a love becomes normal; that is to say, perfect in itself even as a perfect shape, apple; so that it may very properly be represented by the silver-colored heart shown in the vision. All who are conscious of this love carry the blessed consolation within themselves. The vision may or may not come, to present the fact as it were, in demonstration.

Vision No. 2.—On Sunday evening, July 10, 1904, immediately on lying down for the night, an ether light, or rather two of them, appeared very plainly to me; one a white light, a little to my left, nearly the size of the human face, the other a red disc scarcely as large as the palm of my hand.

These two lights gradually approached each other, growing brighter and smaller till they merged into one another. Each remained distinct, just as the rainbow colors are distinct from one another, yet all blend in one form of splendor inimitable.

This living light—for these etherealizations are to me all living entities—developed into surpassing brightness and a beauty unparalleled by anything material that my eyes ever beheld. In its ultimate shape it was a perfect picture of the dawn in its resplendent glory, yet the whole, but little larger than the palm of my hand!

A vision so definite as this, is never without symbolic meaning to me. Moreover it is so striking in character that it never seemed intended for my benefit alone. It seems to belong through me to the world, and for this reason I should be culpable if I did not thus describe it for the readers' benefit. To me the symbolic meaning is that a new day is dawning for me, and not for me alone, but for many another earnest life as well.

This vision came not to me in a dream, but when I was as wide awake as at the moment of this writing.

Vision No. 3.—On Tuesday, nine days after the experience last described, I was sitting in my room looking into the evening twilight, as I often do, when the numbers 1886, 1896, and 1806 successively appeared in luminous brilliancy, each figure as a gem set in the evening sky. They were of the most perfect symmetry in shape, the vertical diameter or length of each being about one foot.

The meaning of this symbol to me is very definite and clear. It referred to my angel wife. The date of our marriage was 1886; that of her birth into the higher life was 1896. By an accident this last date was made to read 1806 in my narration as given in The Progressive Thinker of July 9, a difference of 90 years; my spirit friends thus giving me a strong hint that greater importance attaches to this correction than I was aware of. The reason of this peculiar significance is that in the paper referred to, "A Revelation of Healing Power," all that is set forth is fact. Not one word of it is fiction. It can only be of value to the earnest, thoughtful reader, and this value depends chiefly on the accuracy of the statement of these facts.

THOS. H. B. COTTON.

Edenvale, Cal.

THE VOICE.

I sought to write a lofty theme,
Some sweet and righteous poet's dream;
When quick there came from out my heart
A ghastly voice that made me start:
"Such work is for the just," it said,
"Thy heart and soul are almost dead;
If thou wouldst lead men to the light,
First bring thyself from out the night."
—Max Ehrmann.

We cannot lead simple lives before we have simple wants and thoughts.—Godfrey Blount.

The Demonism of the Ages, and Spirit Obsessions.

SPIRITUALISM REPRESENTS THE GRANDEST TRUTH EVER PRESENTED TO THE WORLD. IT IS NOBLY REPRESENTED BY HUNDREDS OF HONEST MEDIUMS AND ELOQUENT SPEAKERS. IT HAS SPREAD BROADCAST THE SEEDS OF LIBERALISM, AND MADE THE WORLD BETTER IN MANY RESPECTS. IT WOULD BE FOLLY, HOWEVER, TO DENY THE FACT THAT THERE IS HERE AND THERE DISORDERLY MEDIUMSHIP OF VARIOUS DEGREES, SOMETIMES BORDERING ON DEMONISM, AND IT IS WELL THAT EVERY SPIRITUALIST SHOULD KNOW THIS FACT. IT WILL NOT DO TO SUPPRESS UNWHOLESOME TRUTHS. THEY SHOULD ALWAYS BE SPREAD BROADCAST, AND A REMEDY DEVISED. IF OBSESSION BY EVILLY DISPOSED SPIRITS IS A POSSIBILITY, THEN A SYSTEM OF CARE SHOULD BE ADOPTED. AS WELL SUPPRESS A KNOWLEDGE OF DISEASE, AS TO TRY TO SUPPRESS FACTS IN REGARD TO OBSESSION THAT ARE COMING TO THE FRONT ALL THE TIME. A KNOWLEDGE THAT TUBERCULOSIS (A TERRIBLE DISEASE) EXISTS, DOES NOT IN THE LEAST SPREAD THE DISEASE, BUT ENABLES PEOPLE, BY TIMELY WARNING TO PREPARE AGAINST ITS RAVAGES. IT IS THE SAME WITH DISORDERLY SPIRIT CONTROLS—THEY CAN BE PREVENTED BY TIMELY WARNING AND PROPER CAUTION, AND THAT IS WHAT IS GIVEN IN DR. PEEBLES' LATE BOOK ON OBSESSION, A REVIEW OF WHICH FOLLOWS:

"The Demonism of the Ages and Spirit Obsessions."

It is only very recently that in our review column we noticed a booklet from Dr. Peebles upon the subject of Reincarnation, or the "Soul's Successive Embodiments." It was really a symposium by Mrs. Dr. Densmore, W. J. Colville and Dr. Peebles, with quotations from Mrs. Richmond. And now there is laid upon our book-table a handsomely bound volume of 400 pages, treating of Demonism in China, India, Korea, Judea, Greece, Rome, and of manifestations of evil-disposed or evil spirits in the ranks of American Spiritism.

This is new ground for a book by a Spiritualist. We do not recollect of seeing any previous volume by a Spiritualist author upon the subject of "evil spirits" and their dangerous and deleterious influence upon mortals. It is making a new move on the chessboard of Spiritualism and will doubtless receive pungent criticisms from those who believe in no evil, or evil spirits in the spirit world.

In this bulky volume the Doctor takes it for granted that Spiritism is a fact—a well-established fact, doubted by no careful and conscientious investigator.

The several pages of "introduction" specify the general belief and teachings of the Spiritists and in the following preface he says:

"In the preparation of this volume, I have given more attention to the facts of trustworthy witnesses than to mere artistic expressions. It has been my sole aim to lift the mystic veil and sound the occult to its very depths; to ascertain by whom we are compassed about. Are they our loved relatives, or are they angels or devils?

"Is it safe to investigate the mist-shrouded occult? I it wise to plunge into the unexplored realms of the invisible? If these unseen planes of being are peopled, by whom are they peopled? Are they saints, sylphs or demons? Can they affect mortals? Have they the power to hypnotize? Do they at times obsess and possess sensitive intermediaries? In exploring this vast territory, in entering this comparatively new harbor, what pilot is to be trusted?

"Should one individuality ever be transferred or usurped by another? Should conscious, rational man ever be hypnotically controlled by unseen intelligences, incarnate or discarnate? Would not such a result be the merest, abject slavery? Is physical or mental slavery ever justifiable? Is the practice of promiscuous spiritism, which is only another name for necromancy, ever safe? Does it better the sensitive? Are well-balanced supersensitives, earnest saints and savants absolutely immune from evil influences? What the results of physical mediumship? Why not lift the veil?

"Does converse with invisible entities conduce to the enlightenment, to the uplifting and moral betterment of its devoted patrons? Is not this a fair question? Do the Hindus and Chinese, who have believed in and practiced necromancy and spiritistic magic from time immemorial, excel all other nations in wisdom, virtue and the progressive enfoldment of all that constitutes goodness, purity and royal-souled greatness?

"What does spiritism stand for? Is it demoniac? Is it only destructive and irreligious? Is its keynote iconoclasm? Is it anything more than necromancy—obsession, external, internal and infernal? If it has redeeming qualities, what are they? Are Spiritism and Spiritualism synonyms? What is to be the final outcome of this movement that has stirred alike the thinking minds of the American materialist and religionist for the last half century?"

After quoting from Andrew Jackson Davis' "Diakka," on page 16, the Doctor says on page 19, "In considering this subject, let us go to the foundation. Did a hand after being amputated by a surgeon ever burn a building? Did a putrefying corpse ever disrobe itself of shroud and coffin and commit a bank robbery? But why not? Plainly, because the causative man, the real, conscious spiritual man had, at death, left the perishing corpse (body) which was only a temporary appendage.

"Rivet the fact in your mind as we proceed with the argument, that no act, good or bad, originated in the physical body. But the real man "over there," is still embodied, though the old mortal body has returned to dust. In the spirit world man is dual, but finite; and being finite, taking with him into the invisible world consciousness, emotion, desire, why should he not manifest from both the higher and lower states of his selfhood good and evil?

"No solid thinker will affirm that the drunkard's craving is wholly of the material body; if so, the cadaver, while being dissected, might inquire why such unfeeling surgical slashings; and in consequence, might crave, if not demand alcoholic stimulants to better bear dissection. No, these desires were from the interwoven essences, elements, auras, blind forces and inter-related inharmonies pertaining to the soul-body, and not from or of the incorruptible spirit, which functions through the imperfect soul-organism."

Hudson Tuttle thus wrote awhile since in The Progressive Thinker: "All spiritual beings were once human beings, and by passing through the gateway of Death have met with no change except such as they have gained by growth. Hence, they are as good and as evil as they were here, no more, no less. When they return and manifest their identity, we note the individual characteristics retained and carried into their spiritual lives. The lover of falsehood and deceit, the envious and hating, retain those qualities, until eradicated by years and ages of advancement."

This volume treats of Chinese obsessions, Hindu obsessions, Korean obsessions, the Black Magic of India, New Testament demonism, witchcraft demonism, and the obsessional influences of evil spirits upon many mediums.

"It was perfectly reasonable that the communing with perverse, obsessing spirits of old should be denounced. Voluntary communications with evil-disposed spirits whether in the body or out, is to be deprecated. Those nowadays who seek such communications are the patrons of necromancy and sorcery as much as those in Babylonian and Old Testament times. No change of law or condition can make evil communications for evil purposes any less than evil. True, there is a little knot of egotistic, sophistic, spiritists in the world who deny the existence of a vestige of evil in the universe. Everything is lovely. A pigsty is just as sweet as a rose garden. They cannot comprehend that the qualities of good and evil are just as opposite as are the properties of heat and cold in physics. Briefly put, to these unfledged pedagogues, vice and virtue are when "properly understood" synonyms. Rape is just as divine as religion; hell just as holy as heaven, and concentrated malice and murder are but the expressions of "undeveloped good." Whether this class of sophists is nearest to senility or insanity, it is difficult to decide. But when practically brought face to face with their pet dogma, and forced to take their own medicine, these quasi-optimistic sophists excel in fault-finding, criticising and gruesome grumbling at the ever-recurring ills of life."

The fifteenth chapter of this book bears this heading, "Pitiful Letters from the Obsessed." Then follow about fifty pages of these pitiful letters abounding in experiences of mediums, among which are such well-known writers as J. W. Dennis, of Buffalo, Dr. Robert Greer of Chicago, Miss Nora Batchelor, the brilliant writer. Here follows a quotation from Miss Sarah C——, New York: "Five years ago I was loved for my genial, womanly disposition. I went to the Cassadaga camp-meeting and attended a seance. The night after coming home from the seance I lay in bed nervous, half-conscious, and half-entranced all night. When I came home I found myself clairvoyant and clairaudient, and I had a great many remarkable things given me. I was very glad for a time to be mediumistic, and I could tell you a great deal if I could personally talk with you. * * The scene soon changed. I became obsessed. I shall get deranged if I can't stop these spirits hurting me. I suffer the tortures of a burning hell, and I get but two or three hours sleep out of the night. I am getting so thin that I know they will kill me if I can't get help. I try to drive these vile infesting spirits away, but they turn upon me and swear at me and talk their obscene talk. Oh, my God, Dr. Peebles, I can't think of a worse hell than I endure, so do drive these demons away from hurting both my body and my soul. There are two vicious youths and one low female with them. I can see them clairvoyantly. The leader is a witty, devilish spirit, liking to make fun. They will mock me and sometimes will hurt me that I cry out for pain. They have injured my health. Can you, will you help me?"

On pages 180-191 are accounts of Roman Catholic obsessions.

Chapter XX treats of obsessions under the following heading, "Psychological Crimes Instigated by Vicious Spirits." "The statement so often repeated that 'like attracts like,' does not belong to the logician's realm of the universals. It has definite limits. The two positive poles in electricity come under the word 'like,' and yet they quickly repel. Human beings under all skies are of like origin, like species, and gifted with the innate like—or love of happiness; and yet dislikes, and fierce, brutal wars have occurred, or are occurring in many lands, the strong oppressing the weak, the powerful forcing the feeble against their wills. Might, in the lower spheres, as on earth, makes right. The will is potent. Vice may dominate for a time. Mobs may temporarily govern. The hells are boastful and spiteful. The once crowned heads, the mighty sovereigns, princely social rulers, the potentates of prize rings, continue their proclivities when stripped of their fleshly garments. The law of spiritual gravity brings them into our daily employments and environments. They suggest, they hypnotize, they control, they may and do force sensitives, subversive as it may seem of moral order, to go wrong, doubtless leading them to the commission of criminal acts. Many clear, well-substantiated cases of this kind are on record. Possibly this may be denied. Negations, however, are cheap, and of little consequence. It is affirmations, coupled with demonstrations and experiences that tell—and tell to convince.

"The soft palliative sometimes advanced by the psychically uneducated, that an evil-inclined spirit can harm no one unless there is active or latent evil within attracting the evil from without, is not only false and illogical, but absolutely silly. "How can we reason but from what we know?' asked Socrates. The wild savage that with hatchet brains the babe, gives the lie to this theory. Where the highwayman knocks down and robs the kindly bearer of foods and a few coins to a poor widow, is it because of the evil within this benevolent reformer's nature? Perish such presumption! The suggestion is contemptible!

"But why do not the good spirits and the angels stop the hypnotic obsessions of these depraved spirits?

"A fair question! Why do not senators, congressmen, marshals and policemen, clothed with authority, stop drunkenness, gambling, robbery and murder in this world?

"Is it said, 'They do what they can?'

"That is just the point! Good spirits and the good angels of mercy do what they can. They are not absolutely Almighty. They are not infinite in power. They are limited by law. They minister so far as they can in consonance with their refinement, with moral law, moral duty, and a righteous responsibility."

The chapter commencing on page 337 entitled "Rescue Work on the Border Land of the Invisible World," is most interesting. It is from the pen of H. Forbes Kiddle son of the illustrious Professor Henry Kiddle, who for years was the superintendent of the New York City schools.

The last chapters of this book teach the method of being immune from the influence of obsessing spirits. They are also decidedly optimistic. These are some stirring words on page 381: "When Spiritualism the handmaid of Science, with its Divine Fatherhood, its brotherhood, its higher heavenly ministries, its open-heartedness towards all reforms, its self-mastery of the passions, its ideals unattained, its sweet charity for human misfortunes, its parlor seances and orders of worship, its sacred home influences, its tender messages from the loved ones who have crossed Death's silent river into those calmer seas, those holier realms—when this Spiritualism becomes a practical power, then will dawn the glories of heaven on earth."

In fact this work of the staunch old Spiritualist, Dr. J. M. Peebles, is one of his best, and is bound to be of great interest to all who are students of the occult, in that it will point out the dangerous as well as the safe road upon which to study and investigate. It comes to Spiritualism and to mediums as a "lamp to the feet and a light to the pathway," and blazes the way for the coming generations, and should immortalize the name of the author.

It is positively known that obsession exists sometimes where mediumship is claimed and supposed to be, and this work will serve its purpose in helping to educate those who desire to enter into the work either as mediums or lecturers, by showing how to proceed to do the most good and yet escape the annihilation of self-hood, how to evade being captured by evil influences.

Since it has so often been shown, that Spiritualism has this awful thing of obsession to contend with, and since it is proven to be easier for those seeking medial unfoldment to fall into the power of ignorant, designing, evil influences from spirit life than it is for them to get away from that power; since it has been pointed out in article after article where the honest, conscientious seeker for development has been caught and hounded to the verge of self-destruction, it is time Spiritualists were placing such books as this before the new converts. In fact, it is time many of the old-timers post themselves upon its subject matter, and be ready at all times to advise new beginners.

The following article from the pen of an M. D., who has had considerable experience with obsession in the last ten years will serve to illustrate just what is occurring every day and how cautiously mediumship should be guarded from evil influences. It is only one of many instances recorded and sent to this office:

CAN MORTALS BE OBSESSED?

A Lesson From the Experience of a Chicago Physician

I have read several articles in the Spiritual press lately commenting on obsession, some writers affirming the possibility and occurrence of obsession, others denying or professing disbelief in such occurrences, and consider the belief in obsession as merely a remnant of past superstitions, and unworthy even of thoughtful or serious consideration by thinking people of to-day.

I think it was Socrates who said, "How can we reason, but from what we know?"

The same I would say to those who profess disbelief in obsession occurring in our so-called enlightened era.

They certainly have not had the often sad, but necessary experience, for if they had had only a few such experiences, they would no more be able to deny the truth of their occurrence than they could deny their own existence.

And what is more, instead of it being difficult to obtain proof of obsession, it is in my own experience extremely easy, in fact, to my mind too dangerously easy, when dabbled in by thoughtless mortals, unconscious of the many unseen forces around them.

I am perhaps in better position to obtain data on obsession—my own wife being a trance medium—than many other investigators might be; our work also, being, to a great extent, missionary work for, or among so-called earth-bound, or spirits in darkness.

My individual experience in this work covers a period of nearly ten years, and the many pathetic as well as comical scenes that I—as well as quite a few readers of The Progressive Thinker—have witnessed during this time, would, I know, fill a good-sized volume with intensely interesting reading matter, if there had been a record kept of them.

But I am ashamed to acknowledge that I have neglected it, contrary to our spirit friends' wishes and constant urging to take notes of and give out to the world our many experiences with the unfortunate ones in spiritual darkness, for the benefit of humanity. But to-day's experience compels me to write, for I feel that the world should know all that possibly can be known of the unseen world that lies around us, that they may be warned of what might become their punishment in the life to come, unless they heed the dictates of their consciences, and do what is right while in this mundane sphere.

And let it be understood by any one that might want to bring up the "like attracts like" theory, that our work is missionary work, for spirits, good, bad or otherwise, as well as for mortals, and we therefore are not the choosers as to who shall come, but any and all can come—whom the guiding spirits see fit to allow to come, that they think can be benefited by it. And I am happy and proud to say that we have, during the ten years' labor, been successful in bringing every one that has come to better understanding, except in two instances, where the spirits said that they were not ready.

And to-day's experience certainly was one of the hardest cases we have had yet.

For some weeks past we have noticed some mischief-loving influence about our home. But from the nature of our work, we are so used to such transitory influences that we did not give it so much thought as those differently situated might do. Until to-day, when I came home from an outside call, when my wife was very suddenly seized by a very mischievous influence. From previous experience I knew at once that we had a stranger to deal with, so I took hold of her—as I always do at such times—when she immediately became entranced. She is a so-called dead trance medium.

It is not necessary to state the many antics the controlling spirit went through. Suffice it to say, that I put my arms around her, and took hold of her right hand with my left and her left with my right, and so held her, or rather him, for fully fifteen minutes, my hold acting as a straight jacket before I succeeded in getting the spirit to say a word, or answer my questions, while the spirit in the meantime made the most frantic efforts to get away from my hold; but it finally said, "I will tire you out"—which it nearly did before I got through with it. Although my wife is a very slender woman, when thus controlled she is as strong as an ordinary man.

And so I kept holding the spirit—my wife's body—until an hour had passed by, I in the meantime talking to the spirit, trying to get some right sense into it, without the slightest success, until at last the spirit's attention seemed to be attracted to some other spirit present, when the controlling spirit began to give some vigorous kicks and made faces, and said repeatedly, "Don't you come." When I asked who it was talking to, it said, "It is my wife; I killed her. She was such a mean thing. She would always scald me. But I scalded her too, and one day I got so angry at her that I shot her, and then shot myself. And I have been running away or hiding from the police ever since."

The spirit gave the year 1899, and also its name—which I do not deem proper to mention here; they had lived at No. —— West Madison street, this city. The shooting had taken place in the street.

I reasoned with the spirit and told him that he should not hate his wife, but make up with her, and "turn a new leaf," as it were, and acknowledge that they were both wrong, and probably equally to blame in their past acts, etc., when he said, "All is humbug and fraud, and life is only a mockery."

The spirit related how he had come to Chicago with honest intentions, had gone into business, joined a church, etc., and had been cheated in all kinds of ways, until he became despondent and began drinking, failed in business and ended in the above tragedy. And now all he cared for was to go around and make mischief and all the devilment he could, etc.

After long and persistent reasoning with the spirit, on the folly of its ways, I got it partially subdued, when his attention was attracted to some other spirit present, and the "controlling" spirit put his hands out in a warding-off manner, and cried out, "Don't you come; oh! mother, don't you come! I am too wicked, but you were my best friend." Then finally the ice was broken; the spirit began to relent and realize the folly of its way, and after further reasoning he at last agreed to turn to the spirit side of existence, and strive for understanding and spiritual unfoldment.

The spirit asked my pardon for having been so rude, and thanked me for having been patient with him, and said that we should not be unrewarded for our efforts to save such as he from their condition of misery and despair. The spirit finally left, anxious to go with his mother.

I have left out many minor points or happenings in connection with this spirit, not wishing to occupy too much valuable space.

I may, in a later article, relate my strange experience with spirits—also through my wife's organism—while dissecting their bodies during my medical studies at college. CARL A. WICKLAND, M. D.

Chicago, Ill.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

Clever people are the best encyclopedias.—Dr. Stuart Robinson.

Character, good or bad, has a tendency to perpetuate itself.—Prof. Van Dyke.

Adversity links men together, while prosperity is apt to scatter them.—Dr. W. F. Hunter.

If you have any faith, give me, for heaven's sake, a share of it! Your doubts you may keep to yourself, for I have plenty of my own.—Goethe.

Wealth is just so much baggage to carry around and to be taken care of in this world, but a cultivated brain is easy to carry and a continual source of pleasure and profit.—Phillips Brooks.

Death, early death, altogether too fashionable, accompanied with extravagant funerals, is abnormal. Life, the reverse of death, is natural, and should be with us all, not only beautiful, but golden, with joy and as serene and abiding as the stars.—Dr. J. M. Peebles.

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

It Is a Safety Valve.

THE OPEN COURT IS A SAFETY VALVE WHEREIN VARIOUS OPINIONS CAN BE EXPRESSED BY SPIRITUALISTS THEMSELVES. THE ANALYTICAL MIND WILL READ THE SAME, AND IN SO DOING WILL HAVE AN ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE EXACT STATUS OF OUR CAUSE. THE ONE WHO KNOWS THE FALSE AS WELL AS THE TRUE, IS WELL PREPARED TO FORM A CORRECT OPINION, WHILE THE ONE WHO KNOWS NOTHING BUT THE FALSE, IS ONE-SIDED, IS IGNORANT, AND INCAPABLE OF FORMING A CORRECT OPINION. HE, TOO, WHO HAS THE TRUTH ALONE, AND KNOWS NOTHING OF THE DECEPTION GOING ON IN OUR RANKS, CAN NOT CORRECTLY JUDGE OF THE CONDITION OF OUR CAUSE. IT IS NECESSARY TO KNOW THE BAD AS WELL AS THE GOOD, AND THEN A CORRECT ESTIMATE CAN BE MADE. THE OPEN COURT PRESENTS BOTH SIDES, AND IF YOU WILL CAREFULLY READ THE SAME, YOU WILL BE THE WISER AND BETTER THEREFOR. REALIZING FULLY BOTH THE GOOD AND THE BAD, THE TRUE AND THE FALSE, YOU CAN ACT UNDERSTANDINGLY IN FORMING AN OPINION, BUT NOT OTHERWISE.

SOME AXIOMS IN ETHICS IN THE EXPLANATION OF FRAUD.

There are two primal elements of the human mind that give rise to all the contents of life itself, and embrace all and include every interest of mankind. All theories, opinions, beliefs, the acceptance of all dogmas, all schemes of life are founded on these two elements. They form the basis of every consideration in life. No voluntary rational act is possible without the employment of these two primal factors.

These two primal elements are Sensation and Consciousness.

Sensation is essentially life—that in which we move and have our being. It is desire ever seeking satisfaction—the persistent, irrepressible desire to live, to enjoy, to be happy. It gives rise to a concern for our well-being and that of those whom we love. Well-being is well-feeling, and well-feeling is enjoyment, happiness—the end and aim of life. We are constantly pursuing pleasant sensations and avoiding unpleasant ones. Sensation (feeling) is the source, the sole cause of all human activities; and those which are voluntary and rational, are efforts to secure enjoyment, happiness.

Consciousness is that state of mind in which we are aware of our being, feeling, thinking, acting, and of the conception of facts, events and principles. It is the light that illumines the pathway of life and gives rise to knowledge, judgment, reason. These two primal elements are always inseparable in voluntary, rational activities. Sensation could not act voluntarily nor rationally, without consciousness; and consciousness would be of no use without sensation.

Sensation (in some form, as desire or feeling) gives rise to the sense of reality in what is felt. There is no sense of reality only in conscious feeling. That sense of reality we call truth, and accept it as such, and act upon it accordingly. It has its rise in feeling that has been aroused by some outward event. The feelings are unconsciously developed during infancy, childhood, youth and adolescence—feelings, the germs of which are innate in every well-born child. Let no one feel confident that he could have escaped the development of any feeling, however delusive or preposterous, had he lived at the time when it prevailed, and was respected by the community. The feelings thus unconsciously developed, give rise to the sense of reality in what is felt. Feeling is the basis of judgment, opinion, belief, which are accepted as reality, and acted upon as such.

The feelings are unconsciously developed by the stimulus of environment, either indirectly through prenatal influences, or directly by environment that attend the individual in subsequent life. Since the feelings give rise to the sense of reality in what is felt, by arousing consciousness, that sense is taken for the reality; and all opinions, beliefs and conclusions are founded on that sense. The feelings are developed by their exercise, and since they are as readily aroused by the unreal which is conceived to be real, as by the real, the sense of reality is unreal, or real, according to that which arouses it. Truth, in this matter, depends on the reality of that which arouses the feeling. Besides, the feelings themselves, may be vicious, giving rise to vicious action which is justified by the actor, or founded on unreality conceived to be real. For instance, the devout churchman feels the sense of reality in the atoning blood of Christ, and acts upon it as such. This law of mental action is universal, invariable, eternal.

These axiomatic statements are offered with a view of throwing some light on the question of fraud in mediumship. When they are applied, they afford the means by which all modes of conduct can be explained. The factors in the solution of any problem must be understood and rightly applied. Since feeling gives rise to the sense of reality in what is felt, there is no proof of its being reality; for others equally as intelligent and honest, and having equal opportunities to investigate, arrive at opposite and antagonistic conclusions on the same subject, in ethical matters, simply because they have opposite and antagonistic feelings on the same subject, and all will accept opinions and beliefs in accordance with their feelings, and refuse and repel all others. Truly, "the wish is the father to the thought."

The question of truth or error, of the genuineness or fraud is determined by that of the thing which arouses the feeling, giving rise to the sense of its reality; since in the matter of ethics no two systems extant agree, it is evident that error accepted as truth is far more prevalent than truth; for moral philosophy is confessedly speculative. Now since feeling gives rise to the sense of reality in what is felt, and all conceptions that accord with the feelings are accepted as true (though they are far more likely to be false) and there is no guarantee that that which arouses the feelings is true, it is evident that no remedy against fraud is available; and since the great majority feel (and therefore think) that Spiritualism is founded on error, they will resist it, and on every occasion when fraud is affirmed, they will rejoice, and lend their support to sustain the affirmation of fraud.

Those who know that Spiritualism is true are not disturbed by the cry of fraud. The reason why so many Spiritualists are so greatly excited about fraud, is because they fear that Spiritualism will be ruined by fraud, and their dearly cherished hopes will prove false. If fraud can arrest the advance of Spiritualism, it only proves that the world is not yet ready to accept it, and that error conceived as truth still prevails. When the people are sufficiently enlightened, fraud will disappear. It has prevailed for ages, and suppressed Spiritualism; but the dawn is approaching, and its birth-travail is the struggle for its permanent establishment among mortals.

It has been already pointed out that feeling impels action; and it goes without saying that the stronger feeling dominates the weaker. We find that greed is one of the stronger feelings that impel to action. To those dominated by it their stock in trade is the prurient desire of so many to know what is to be their future destiny, coupled with credulity and faith in those who profess to reveal the future. To explain them is their object, and since it is easily and successfully done by fraud, that is the method pursued. The two factors are greed to instigate fraudulent acts, and the condition of prurient curiosity of so many of the masses to pry into the future—hence, fraud.

It is said, and the saying is accepted, that "Truth wears no mask; it bows at no shrine, and only asks a hearing." But there are two things to consider here. Who is to determine what truth is, and who are to listen to it? Says Lowell:

"Truth is on the scaffold,
And Error on the throne."

The idea that truth is a power, per se, is a misapprehension. The power is in the feelings and the consciousness of that power gives rise to the conception that the power is in the truth. We take the conception for the reality instead of the feeling that gives rise to it. The power is in the feelings of the individual; and not until he realizes the sense of it, there can be no action in regard to it. The only thing that reveals truth is reason—demonstration; but reason does not always reveal it, for it is often employed to fortify error, and always, when special interests, inimical to the general interests, have gained control. Neither does demonstration demonstrate when the thing demonstrated is not acceptable.

The world of mankind have been hearing truth for thousands of years. Socrates drank the hemlock. Jesus was lifted upon the cross, Bruno and Servetus were burned at the stake; and thousands of others have suffered at the hands of those who have been hearing the truth. The above saying of truth is a fine poetic conception; there is more poetry than truth in it. We all love truth, or what we desire and conceive to be the truth, but otherwise, we have but little relish for it. The Mohammedan and the Christian alike love the truth; no one loves error for its own sake; and few, indeed, love truth for truth's sake. Ill fares the truth while error holds the sway.

Now let us apply these principles to the question at issue. It will be seen that existing conditions in regard to Spiritualism are the necessary results of existing causes; and so long as they continue fraud will be practiced. The assets furnished by the prying curiosity and credulity of so many of the masses, are too tempting to be resisted. Greed is the acting cause and the acceptance of error conceived to be truth, is the fruitful asset—hence, the mischief.

One word as to the detection of fraud. It is getting to be well understood that so-called fraud is perpetrated by spirits controlling some mediums; for we are told on good authority, that the return and communion of spirits with mortals is opposed on the spirit side of life. But such manifestation is not fraud; it is genuine; but it is to assist the fraud-hunters to denounce it as fraud.

There are certain phases of mediumship that are easily imitated by mortals, and when claimed to be genuine, are readily believed to be genuine by the ignorant and credulous. But there are other phases in which fraud, if attempted, is easily detected. As one of our most experienced Spiritualists said, "He who cannot detect fraud, or is deceived by it, needs a guardian," and stupid indeed are those who are deceived by it. Materialization is a phase that can be easily detected if fraud is attempted. If a materializing medium refuses any reasonable test that would satisfy the investigator, it may be considered as prima facie evidence of fraud. There is one kind of so-called materialization, that is, in which the medium is so transformed as to present the appearance and character of the spirit seen. This phase, though genuine, is but little understood, and if the spirit is grabbed, the medium is caught, and great is the cry of fraud!

A little careful inspection will satisfy any reasonable person in regard to fraud. Masks and toggery cannot be concealed. Those who are already satisfied with their state of feeling, will refuse to investigate or accept the opinions of others, and will be delighted if they are proclaimed to be false. So Error is kept on the throne. All that we can do is to make right conditions; and the spirits will do the rest, but neither right conditions nor the means of communicating with mortals are well enough understood, thus making fraud more easy and profitable.

E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

FAKE MEDIUMSHIP.

Some Practical Suggestions Towards Its Elimination.

In your issue of July 16, there appeared an article over the signature of the veteran Spiritualist, Prof. J. S. Loveland, that should receive careful perusal from Spiritualists who have the good of the cause at heart. Prof. Loveland pertinently asks, "Can fraud be prevented? Will the fraud and cheatery so rampant in the Spiritist ranks be cured?" To this he answers, "No!" assigning as a reason that the organizations of Spiritualism in their mode of action, and the professional (?) developers of mediums will prevent it.

Prof. Loveland, I think, has taken the correct view of the situation as it pertains to this extended craze for development of mediums, which, just now, is placing the cause of Spiritualism in jeopardy of its very existence.

Ordinarily, I believe, mediums are born, not made. Spiritualists are, as we know, and properly so, too, persistently maintaining that proper conditions must obtain for the presentation of Spiritualistic phenomena. This demand exists to such an extent that skeptics deride the claim. In order for the production of any phenomena, be it on the physical plane or be it from the spirit side of life, true conditions must be present. And so it is with those entering upon the work of mediumship, proper conditions, both physical and psychical must obtain, or qualities for the work can never be developed.

What can you possibly develop when there is no innate germ to unfold? Proper conditions for development of mediumistic powers do not exist in every human being. How often in my own case have mediums insisted that I possess latent powers for various phases of their work, when all the time I knew what such powers are entirely lacking in my psychical endowment.

I have had those who were mediums (?) and others who were in the progressive ordeal of becoming so, affect great surprise that I had been a believer so long and yet had never developed any phase for platform show. I do claim that I am a student of psychical phenomena and of the laws by which they are produced—but only as a student.

I have frequently had readings purporting to come from the spirit side, which I positively knew emanated from spirits, but spirits clothed with flesh. The mediums giving those readings were honest in their belief that the messages came from beyond the veil.

In ordinary platform test work, how often it occurs that the medium gives readings which are affected by thought-waves sent out by human batteries, sometimes unconsciously to be sure, but frequently trained on the medium for the purpose of testing the strength of the battery in its effect upon the work on the rostrum.

In this connection I herewith relate an incident which recently occurred at an afternoon test service held in this city by the Jumpers. In company with five others I sat upon the seat and we united in positive thought-force against the effect of the sermon. The preacher, a lady, grew very indignant with our little company, shook her forefinger at me and my wicked fellows, though our behavior, other than the silent projection of our united, positive thought, was the pink of perfection. So marked was her treatment of us that the entire audience directed their attention to us. The preacher said that she would not proffer an altar-call, that it was no use for the devil's minions were present, and she made a sweeping gesture at our band.

In view of these facts, is it any wonder that messages purporting to come from higher sources so frequently are shorn of all elements of tests, of little or no avail, misleading, nay, more, to the conscientious believer often fraught with disastrous effects?

Why go on seeking to develop seven-sevenths of believers as public mediums, when the fact is patent from experience and observation that perhaps fewer than one-seventh of human beings possess psychical powers sufficient to enable them to use their gifts for the good of humanity?

Should not some other qualifications obtain than the production of phenomena? Is this the only training necessary? Should not the intellect be trained so that the mediums be a more fitting instrument in the hands of beings possessing a subtle power? Nor is this all. Should it not be required that mediums understand the various phases of psychology and the avenues through which those individual phases may be affected by influences from beings and conditions present?

Should they not understand human nature, its wants, its demands, its joys and its sorrows, in order to administer comfort, consolation and advice to those seeking good? Should not mediums be efficient enough to know in which department of an ever-expanding field of work they are engaged, rather than an ever-enticing vista of pulling the purse-strings of a deluded public by readings and tests weakened in their effect by the ulterior object of personal gains, and totally shorn of any due recompense to the seeker?

Is the highest object of Spiritualism a mere search for the sinews of material aggrandizement? If so, then it is but supplementing the already too great amount of avarice in the world, by calling from other spheres their denizens to aid and abet in a nefarious object.

Thoughts are powerful factors in their formative influences upon character, for those thoughts most persistently indulged, tend in time to become permanently fixed, and eventually the realities of consciousness are controlled by thoughts so held. So a medium for "revenue only" consulted by the dear public with a view that life exists upon this plane for greed and gain, possesses a soul of purpose and of action in common, and so long as this state of affairs exists among Spiritualists, commercial mediumship with its gold-polluted clutch upon a cause which should be one of sacredness and love and of true material and spiritual advancement, will continue to inflict its blight.

But, unlike Prof. Loveland, I believe there is a method of cure, and thus of divesting the cause of this octopus, commercial mediumship, and its attendant evils, fraud, fake and ignorance. Let me make a few suggestions.

Let the various organizations, National, state and local, ordain no one to the responsible position of medium unless he or she possesses a sufficiently strong sensitiveness to properly present the phase under fair, but thorough, conditions of test. Let other qualifications hinted in this article be just as persistently required. No local society should employ a medium to preside in its services unless convinced that the candidate is strongly endowed for the purpose.

Next, do away with the fee system by paying the ministering pastor a fair compensation for services rendered.

Let circles be formed, and if any voluntary contributions are made they should flow into the treasury of the society, and thus at every point effectually guard against incentives to fraud for personal gain.

With these safeguards, individual Spiritualists will be better informed, for more time could be spent in intellectual lectures upon the philosophy of Spiritualism, and thus be better enabled to detect imposition, and desire the highest.

Spiritualism must make some movement to rid itself of fake and imposition now committed in its name, or civil courts and legislative proceedings will step in and, in time, effectually prevent fraud by requiring mediums to cease entirely from producing phenomena.

There are just two reasons that Spiritualism should inaugurate an effectual crusade against fraud, one is that we naturally demand truth and the second is that the very existence of the cause requires it. If we adopt some method to prevent the evil the public will not be slow to observe that the cause is placed upon a higher plane and naturally additions to its membership would be greatly increased.

J. L. MERRITT.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Solid Food for Thought.

To the Editor:—I have read with considerable interest the various expressions of opinion by prominent Spiritualists and those of lesser note, in your Open Court, and would like to notice briefly one or two of the points made by the writers.

The Banner of Light, Hudson Tuttle, and some others, have raised the question of legal proof, and the burden of their song is that the charges of fraudulent work among mediums should not be considered unless the guilty ones are named and proofs furnished that will stand in courts of law. That is correct, as far as it goes. But will these parties kindly specify about how much proof it will take to satisfy them? During the past few years many phenomenal mediums have been publicly exposed, and their names, with all particulars, published in the newspapers. In no cases that I can recall have the allegations so published been disproved or the newspapers been called to account for making false statements. More recently certain of the Spiritualist papers, knowing that fraud was becoming so prevalent and hoping to open the eyes of their readers to the dangers that thereby menaced Spiritualism, have also opened their columns and stated the facts as they occurred, thus co-operating with those who were striving to stamp out the disgrace to our cause. If these people who clamor for names and proof so loudly will peruse the files of The Progressive Thinker for a few years back I think they will find enough names and particulars, with names of reputable witnesses, to hold their attention for awhile. And if that is not enough, the files of almost any of the city papers will give them more food for thought. It will not do to entirely discredit the secular papers' reports of these exposures. They may be colored and exaggerated, but the facts are there and can be substantiated.

As to the alleged fraudulent work of mental or "test" mediums, many prominent mediums are on record admitting that such fraudulent work is done to their certain knowledge. They know it to be a fact, and every intelligent Spiritualist who has taken pains to investigate the matter, also knows it to be a fact. And there is hardly a medium of prominence in platform work anywhere who cannot if they would, give some valuable information regarding the existence of the "blue book," or a similar device for the transmission of stock tests from one medium to another. They will tell you, if they are brave enough to own the truth, that every test medium of any note is frequently given an opportunity to use this system of test-getting, as there are those in every city who make that a business. Of course, from the very nature of the business (for it is a business) and the manner in which it is worked, it is almost impossible to obtain positive evidence regarding it. "I do not allege that ALL test mediums give fraudulent tests, or that those who do give them do not at times give the genuine. The existence or non-existence of a "blue book" cuts no figure of importance in the fraud questions. A simple memoranda of facts gathered here and there, from sitters, conversations, directories, newspaper obituary columns, and from other mediums, answers the same purpose, and amounts to the same thing. And I affirm that more mediums than our critical friends would imagine to be capable of such dishonesty use the aids I have mentioned.

Now, as to fraud-hunters, let me say just a few words. One of your correspondents gives them this shot: "Are our fraud-hunters honest? Are they clear-headed? Do they think they are making martyrs of themselves? If am the ruling and inspiring motives are not the ruling and inspiring motives of their efforts, will they be so kind as to go to the bottom of this subject and give us the whole truth?"

Who are the fraud hunters?

Some of us who have, to our surprise and bitter disappointment, while honestly seeking for light and for evidences of a future life, found that only here and there among the vast army of so-called mediums is there one who can give anything that is true and reliable; who have gone in all good faith to a materializing medium—to dozens of them in fact—hoping to meet and greet the loved form of some dear one who has passed to the other life, and in every case found that dear one to be personated by the medium or a confederate; who have then investigated and found the most glaring and persistent fraud permeating all the seances given by professional mediums, beyond the shadow of a doubt—these are they whom your correspondent styles "fraud hunters." I am one of these, and I affirm that if there has been any agreeable notoriety or worldy gain for me in it I have not yet discovered it. Neither have I any anxiety to become a martyr.

Spiritualism is my religion. I have found it a good enough religion to live by and to die by. I have but a few more years of earthly life to expect, but as long as I am on this side of life I shall protest against the encouragement of commercialism and sensationalism in mediumship, a system which turns many of our meetings into monkey shows and brings deserved ridicule upon our cause; a system which enables conscienceless scalawags and scoundrels under the cloak of Spiritualism to fleece the credulous and the inquiring investigator, that they may live in palatial apartments, wear diamonds and play the races, while the real medium, the one who is honest and true, suffers for the bare necessities of life; a system which gives every encouragement to fraud and rascality. And I think these are the sentiments of the great majority of those who are with me in this fight.

It is quite customary among a certain class of writers to speak in terms of reproach about "fraud-hunters," and they also have another stock remark, or alleged argument, that is equally silly and absurd. It is this: "Is there not fraud also in the churches and elsewhere?" As though that proposition had anything to do with the question under consideration. What we are to consider is whether Spiritualists shall continue to uphold and defend fraudulent practices among their mediums, or stamp it out. There is no question as to the right or wrong of it. Deceit and fraud are ALWAYS wrong wherever found, and those who defend and uphold it are more guilty than the frauds themselves.

Now, as to "going to the bottom and giving the whole truth," that is for the Spiritualists themselves to do. We "fraud-hunters," if you please to call us that, have pointed out to you that the fraud exists, and how the tricks are done. You cannot expect a few individuals here and there over this broad land to do your house-cleaning for you, track down each individual fakir and stand the brunt of everything. Let us, if we must discuss this question indefinitely, have sensible, clean-cut ideas and argument (if they have any) from the other side, and less silly twaddle.

Boston, Mass. FORREST.

FAKE MEDIUMS.

They Live Upon the Credulity of Their Patrons.

The world has always had impostors, and until human nature changes, always will have. They have not been confined to any one nation or to any one association, but have been scattered here, there and everywhere. It is true that Spiritualism has had its full share of impostors, of one kind and another, but probably has not been blessed or cursed, as the case may be, more than other associations of men. There will always be an army of fake mediums, just so long as they receive encouragement and support, and no longer. They live upon the want of due caution and the credulity of their patrons.

If a person is sick, and desires the services of a doctor, he or his friends send for a reputable phsician if he wants the aid of a good lawyer he does not seek a shyster or pettifogger; if he wants to build a railroad he employs skillful engineers; or, if he wants his watch repaired he does not engage a blacksmith to repair it.

Now, he should use the same caution, in the selection of a medium when he wishes to consult one. It goes without saying, that there are plenty of good, reliable mediums in the country—men and women of character and ability; and, by use of reasonable caution in selecting one, there is no reason for being the victim of imposition very much during the pilgrimage of life.

Let Spiritualists use good business common sense, in the selection of the mediums for consultation, and the frauds and fakes will soon find that their occupation is gone. The fault is largely the result of the want of proper care by spiritualists themselves, that unworthy mediums prosper and thrive.

There is no necessity of saying much about the fake mediums. They will be with us just so long as we patronize them, and no longer.

How is the public to know whether a medium is reliable or otherwise? Just as it ascertains the reliability of a merchant, manufacturer or builder. There are plenty of Spiritualists in every city, village and town, in the civilized world, who know whether a medium, located in such city, village or town is trustworthy or not; and such Spiritualists should be occasionally taken in, but that we must expect, in this imperfect world in which we live.

There can be nothing gained in saying much about the disreputable camp followers of the grand army of Spiritualists. They are not worth talking about very much.

If the newspapers would take as much pains to ferret out the shortcomings of the teachers of the religious dogmas of the country, as they do to unearth disreputable mediums, they would never lack for sensational scandal with which to regale their readers.

CARL C. POPE.

Black River Falls, Wis.

PREPARED TESTS.

What a Worker Has Seen and Known.

To the Editor:—It is more than ten years since a copy of your well-named paper first fell into my hands, and never has it seemed more truly progressive than at the present time in its noble efforts to defend genuine mediumship and protect it from calumny by pointing out the spurious article wherever found.

Much has been said pro and con about the "Blue Book;" its color, however, is of little moment, the fact remains that there are books of prepared tests. Not only books but many other ways by which "watered stock" gets into the test market.

We know whereof we speak.

While acting as official reporter for Spiritualism, your correspondent was shown one picked up on a camp ground. The color was not blue; it was a little blank book, with a brown back, and contained the names of many people well known to the writer, together with the name, which is not a nom de plume, signed to this article.

We have never seen the famous "Blue Book," but have seen other books and methods by which prepared tests were made acceptable as genuine. The color of the book is of no importance whatever.

One seen last was a small blank book with a brown imitation leather back containing imitation tests. One was addressed to the writer, and many others to well-known people.

Here is a sample of them: "Mrs. Blank, widow, one husband dead, one divorced. Father, mother, one sister and two brothers in spirit life. Has also buried one child and has three living. All by first (dead) husband." Names, dates and details follow.

Many of the persons to whom these tests were addressed were labeled as follows: "Easily fooled," "hard to fool," "won't squeal," "will squeal," "gullible," "sharp," etc. Have also seen cipher letters, fans and other articles with jottings on to assist mediums in packing or piecing out their revelations.

These statements are not made with the idea of injuring genuine mediumship. The object is to sustain it.

The supply is far short of the demand, and we believe this is largely due to the fact that the spurious article crowds it out. It is a lamentable fact that real communications from the spirit world are often interlocked as it were with the rendering of these questionable communications.

The wheat and the tares grow together and it takes a careful husbandman to separate the interlacings of their roots. In this commercial age mediums, sensitives, should be protected if possible from the temptation to give more than comes directly through their psychic powers.

But what are we to do when politics, religion, etc., are mere matters of business.

A promising young medium once said to the writer: "When I first discovered I had this sacred gift, I dedicated it to the spirit world as something sacred, holy. I vowed to live a purer, better life, a fit mediator between earth and heaven. But people who paid me money insisted on more than I could conscientiously give them. Misfortune overtook me. I was reduced almost to a state of starvation. At last I threw my scruples to the winds, and soon after that I could afford to keep a secretary."

These were his very words after admitting when detected, that his work was not all genuine.

The time may come when mediumship will be supported in such a manner that this heavenly telephone need not be switched off into the by-ways of corruption.

Let us work to that end, and God speed the day.

MRS. M. M'CASLIN.

Suppress the False, Uphold the True—Personal Experiences.

The cry of "fire" is often heard when it proves to be only a false alarm. The cry of "fraud" is often raised when there is no evidence of it, except in the mind of the ignorant crier. "Stop thief!" is often shouted upon the merest suspicion.

Upon a "hue and cry," first started by some degenerate, many a man has been lynched, who was afterwards found to be innocent.

Thus the cry of fraud, or of this or that falsity, proves nothing. There are individuals who "cry aloud and spare not" on any and all occasions, and certain newspapers are quick to joyously repeat the sad refrain. It does not follow, however, that every "cry" has fact to warrant it.

What proportion of false alarms there are to the realities, I know not; and question if any one does. But though numerous are the instances where the charge of fraud has been made when there was an entire absence of it, it is likewise true, without doubt, that many a manifestation has been given and received as genuine which was entirely manufactured. But even where it has been honestly supposed to exist, it has proved only supposition after all.

It is anticipated that some good will result from the present cry of fraud, in connection with mediumship.

Spiritualists, however, are as easily psychologized by a popular, persistent public cry, as any other class. Hence the "cry of fraud" in every instance when an I where it does not actually exist, is specially reprehensible.

On the other hand, when and where it is proven to be deliberately practiced, no condemnation is too severe. But just here it is pertinent to remark—than the ignorance of the subject of mediumship by the average self-constituted fraud specialist, the professional spirit detective—what is there so measureless?

The rational, candid investigator who seeks to know the truth by a comprehension of the laws of mediumship, or mediumistic susceptibility, wisely eliminates all personal prejudice, and the domination of preconceived opinions in order to study the matter temperately and judicially. But in lieu of this, what do we usually have?

In this connection nothing is more true than what Brother Loveland has said: "The most enthusiastic opponents of fraud are the ones who are doing the most to uphold it. Their earnest work is a stupendous mistake, and a wide departure from the true conditions of genuine mediumship."

Every proven case of fraudulent mediumship needs to be promptly, justly, wisely punished. And Spiritualists generally are quick to demand this. No one likes to be imposed upon, especially in matters of sacred affection. But to charge an honest, genuine medium with fraud, on mere suspicion, on premature evidence, or uncertain knowledge, is equivalent to assassination of character. I yield to no one in the condemnation of fraud in mediumship, but after many years' experience, I know right well that the simple say-so of this one, or the supposition of that one, or the parrot cry of many who know nothing themselves about it—does not constitute proof of fraud.

Intelligent personal experience goes for much. Let me specify: I have had presented to me by a stranger medium, what resembled at its first appearance, an empty mask-like face.

The feeling of repulsion it naturally aroused, I need not mention here. It would not sound well. The effigy retreated several feet, I watching it closely all the time; then presented itself a second time, being full and round, but still mask-like; again it withdrew a pace, all within my vision, when on its third approach, lo! a human face, recognizable, palpitating with life and intelligence.

Suppose I had passed judgment on its first unformed appearance and declared the lady medium who sat within the curtain at arm's reach, an infamous impostor?

Again: I have weighed the phantom, or figure, or materialized form, that came and spoke to me, and in the presence of a dozen persons, among whom were judges, doctors and others of high degree, with whom the form conversed, and within from seven to ten minutes, it reduced its weight 25 per cent, then 50 per cent. That is to say, the third time it stepped upon the platform scales, it weighed only one-half what it did the first time.

Still again: With the late distinguished editor of the Banner of Light, Luther Colby, I purchased a slate at a country store, and took it to a certain medium, who without even taking off the paper in which it was originally wrapped, and without the slate leaving my hands, had me place it on my head, when for a few minutes I heard a cutting or scratching noise. On taking the slate down and removing the wrapper, there was a nicely executed picture of a man seated at a table on which lay a thick book, and underneath or at the bottom of the picture, the words, "Spread the light." The whole was finely engraved or etched into the slate.

Lastly: By special invitation, I was one of a party of twenty-five to witness the physical manifestations of a young medium, then in Boston. The parlors were large and well-filled. On one side of the front parlor, the medium sat beside a table at his right, on which were several musical instruments. He was securely tied to his chair as if he had been a noted criminal. Shortly after the lights were extinguished, the instruments began to play. After a while, when the guitar was being thrummed and floated overhead, a sudden flash of light was revealed from one who proved to be a detective, and who sat directly in front of the medium, and but two or three removes from where I sat. What was the result? Those in front saw the counterpart of the medium—his spirit body—standing apparently on top of his chair, with outstretched hands holding aloft the guitar, which instantly dropped to the table, and the materialized spirit or figure, really or apparently, sank immediately within the form of the medium, which all the while was seated in the chair, the only one present seemingly unconcerned at the episode. Those who saw only the materialized figure, dressed as was the medium, violently denounced the manifestations as palpable fraud.

Those who with better opportunities, saw the whole proceeding, knew that nothing could have better demonstrated the genuineness of the mediumship. He was found bound hand and foot, intact, while his pulse was the same as before anything took place.

In each and all of these cases, the "cry of fraud" publicly followed these wondrously endowed mediums. Without personal warrants or knowledge, others took up the cry, echoed and re-echoed it over the land ad nauseam.

If only those cries fraud who knew it for a certainty, its volume would be greatly lessened. If every case of actual fraud were promptly and justly dealt with, its manufacture would soon cease.

Of the mediums herein referred to, one died shortly after these public charges were made. One, out of self-respect, was unwilling to constantly serve as a target for treatment irrational as it was persistent, voluntarily abandoned his glorious mission; and one was imprisoned on the chargeof obtaining money under false pretenses. Comment is unnecessary.

GEORGE A. BACON.

Washington, D. C.

God and My Neighbor

By ROBERT BLATCHFORD

Author of "Merrie England"; editor of the London "Clarion."

The book of the day in England. Scores of ministers are preaching it. Bishops and workingmen are discussing it.

Have you a religion?
Then read "God and My Neighbor" and find out what you really believe.
Have you no religion?
Then read "God and My Neighbor" and learn of the best substitute yet devised.

Cloth $1.00; Paper 50c., Postpaid.

CHAS. H. KERR & CO., 54 5th Ave., Chicago

TREATMENT BY HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION; or Psycho-Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D., Aberd. New York. Price $3.

This is the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, 376 pages 8vo, of a most valuable and standard work, by an acknowledged authority and expert in the science of healing by hypnotism and suggestion. The method of treatment by suggestion is clearly and exhaustively considered, and illustrated by descriptions of numerous actual cases in the author's personal experience. The work will be found a valuable auxiliary to physicians in ameliorating and curing the mental and physical ills of their patients, and is worthy of most careful study not only by physicians, who should be thoroughly informed in the nature and methods of curative hypnotism or suggestion, but also by all students of hypnotism who desire to thoroughly understand the subject. It is a valuable mine of information to all who consult its pages.

THE LEADING WORKS OF E. D. BABBITT, M. D.

The Principles of Light and Color.

Superbly issued, royal 8vo, with over 200 engravings and colored plates. Price, $5.00; in massive binding, imitating half Russia, 50c. extra. "An imposing volume of nearly 600 pages. Shows a great amount of research on the part of the author. Will prove a great acquisition to Scientific Libraries."—N. Y. Herald.

Human Culture and Cure.

In six parts, five parts being already issued.

PART I. The Philosophy of Cure, including Methods and Instruments; 75 cents.

"The Principles of Light and Color" is in every respect masterly, and 'Human Culture and Cure' appears to be not less remarkable."—Dr. Pascal, 12 Rue Picot, Toulon, France.

PARTS II and IV in one volume; $1.00. Part III treats of Mental and Psychological forces; Part IV of the Nervous System and Insanity.

"This work discloses for the first time the chemical mystery of mental phenomena, throws the first clear light upon the nature and processes of hypnotism and all kindred psychological phenomena which have never before been explained or understood. Dr. Babbitt has here not only given the rationale of hypnotism, psychometry, clairvoyance and mental science, including the mysterious subject of memory, but has furnished abundant illustrations of their working. The subject of Phreno-physiognomy alone is of priceless value as enabling us to understand our fellow beings around us."—Prof. W. C. Bowman.

PART V. "The Bodily Organs, their Diseases and the Great Natural Methods for Their Cure," aims to be the most practical work on healing thus far given to the public. Price, $1.

Health and Power.

Brief Natural Treatment for 110 Diseases. Price, 25 cents. "Worth its weight in diamonds."

SOCIAL UPBUILDING. Paper, 15 cents.

RELIGION.—A most thoughtful and expellent work. Price, cloth, $1.10; paper, 60 cents.

PUBLICATIONS OF CARLYLE PETERSILEA,

Given by automatic writing through the author's mediumship.

THE DISCOVERED COUNTRY,

A narrative of the personal experience in spirit life of the author's father, who had been a natural philosopher and a materialist. An extremely interesting book. Price, $1.00.

MARY ANNE CAREW,

This work consists of the experiences of the author's mother in spirit life. Price, cloth, $1.00 paper, 40c.

PHILIP CARLISLIE,

A philosophical romance by the guides, the subject of the title being a scientific young philosopher, who is a medium; his chief opponents being a clergyman and a materialist. Cloth, $1.

OCEANIDES.

A scientific novel, based on the philosophy of life, as seen from the spirit side. Paper, 50c.

MARK CHESTER,

Or "A Mill and a Million." This is one of Carlyle Petersilea's most interesting works. It is purely a psychical romance such as the author is noted for producing. paper, 40c.

The Religion of Science.

By Dr. Paul Carus. Ver thoughtful and interesting. Price, 25 cents.

Why I Am a Vegetarian.

An address delivered before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. By J. Howard Moore. Price, 25 cents.

SOUL VIBRATIONS.

As They Emanate from a Profound Thinker.

"The Voyage of the Best Ship is a Zigzag Line of a Hundred Tacks. This Is Microscopic Criticism. See the Line From a Sufficient Distance, and It Straightens Itself to the Average Tendency."

Primitive people are honest. The virgin soil that never has been disturbed bears no weeds. Civilization carries in its bosom the seeds of its own destruction. This seems absurd and inconsistent. Great men are always inconsistent, contradictory and hard to understand. Genius is elemental. It gathers strength from nature and not from art. It drinks from the fountain-head of knowledge and not from every rivulet that flows in farther down the stream.

Some animals burrow in the ground, others live in the sunlight. There are birds that light upon the bushes, low trees and fences, while others perch only on the loftiest trees and high mountain peaks. In the mental as in the physical realm there are dwellers in the valleys as well as dwellers on the mountains. But there is as much demand in the world for weakness as there is for strength; for men of mediocre ability as for giant intellects. It requires only one queen bee for a million workers. China produced her confucius; Persia, her Zoroaster; India, her Buddha; Arabia, her Mahomet; Greece, her Homer, her Demosthenes; Italy, her Dante; France, her Napoleon; Germany, her Bismarck; and England, her Shakspeare.

Such men are kingdom builders, empire founders, thought molders;—men who plant seed that in time ripen into laws, constitutions and republics. Not every generation can produce these characters. It requires centuries for a nation to bring forth a great man. The United States is yet too young to have a long historic background. She has produced only three presidents of commanding stature—Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln. Roosevelt is able, brilliant, and daring, but he would never be able on any great moral, social or political question to transform the thought of a nation.

It makes no difference on what line a great man acts—he leaves a memorial for all time. Whether it is Bismarck, unifying an empire, or Jefferson writing the Declaration of Independence, or Lincoln signing the Proclamation of Emancipation, and thereby placing the final crown upon the brow of liberty and making those immortal words true in spirit as well as in letter, "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness;"—the act will ever remain a landmark in national progress as long as history is written. A few strokes of the pen seals the argument of years.

After the storm comes the calm; after the battle comes the declaration of peace. Continents are born out of the throes, and upheavals and movements of nature. Mighty institutions are built up and vital truths re-animated upon the ruins of social and political disorder. The French revolution put new life into the spirit of liberty and equality among men that will never be drowned and will forever exert itself more and more powerfully until darkness again covers the earth.

Nature is always trying to restore order in her kingdom. Sometimes she destroys in order to rebuild. There is always a spirit of truth abroad in the land which never entirely loses its power and continually works for justice and righteousness. Humanity in mass is more reliable than it is individually. "* * * by a special law of Providence which it is impossible to mistake, a law analogous to that which rules the natural world, there is a certain degree of order, of intelligence, of justice, indispensible to the duration of human society. From the simple fact of its duration we may argue, that society is not completely irrational, savage or iniquitous; that it is not altogether destitute of intelligence, truth and justice, for without these society cannot hold together."

People often act better than they talk, better than they think; otherwise community would not hold together. Men would not dare put in operation all the vagaries of their mind.

Responsibility sobers men and gives them a balance of character which otherwise they would not possess. The condemnation of the public weighs more with people than the condemnation of conscience. It is difficult to analyze all the factors and forces that help to maintain law and order and hold public sentiment together. Some people have strong individuality, some have none; some have strong will power, others are weak. The strength of a man's prejudices is always in proportion to his ignorance and intellectual weakness.

People would be wiser if they would listen and think more and talk less. You cannot substitute words for ideas. There are no secrets. One can neither cover up his ignorance by words or by silence. Every word, look and gesture betrays the amount of mental and intellectual resources we have at our command. The great mass of mankind are led, guided and directed—in fact often deceived by those whom they follow. But the world loves illusion, it loves romance, deception—it really loves a little wickedness.

Too much goodness becomes insipid—colorless. It lacks vitality and a certain flavor of animal life. Men become morally and religiously hidebound—their whole life and soul shriveled up into a creed. A man can be morbidly good as well as morbidly bad. Everything in nature and life is dual.

Two principles are always at work. Progression and retrogression move side by side. Progress doesn't mean happiness,—it doesn't mean righteousness. The higher the culture and refinement the greater the suffering. It is in the large cities and centers of learning, intelligence and wealth that sin and iniquity most abound, not in the ruder and more uncultivated communities.

The pleasures, the luxuries, the conveniences and privileges of civilization carry with them terrible penalties. We cannot harmonize or explain all the conditions we find in the world. Was not Judas as necessary in the plan of salvation as Christ; the serpent as Eve; the tempter as the tempted? Every man you meet, every animal you see, all objects in nature, the insects that fly through the air, and the worms that we crush beneath our feet—are subjects of study and matters of interest to the wise and thoughtful.

We cannot eliminate evil from the world and retain the good. All birth comes through travail—knowledge comes through suffering. Joy and sorrow are so near akin that one cannot exist without the other. "Of suffering and sorrow were born all life's beauty. The hope of immortality came from breaking hearts. Nations rise through a mist of tears. Every great life work is an agony. Behind every song lurks a sign." Man's surroundings color and shape all he speaks, feels or writes. One would not compose the same article upon the prairie that he would upon the mountain, he would not write the same speech in the valley that he would upon the hills.

Theory amounts to nothing—experience is all that counts. Every grand and beautiful thought that was ever spoken, has been ground out of some soul who has lived, felt, and been made to realize the full meaning of the thought, feeling and sentiment expressed. Some writer in speaking of Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress says, "The allegory is the life of its author cast in imaginative form Every step in Christian's journey had been first trodden by Bunyan himself; every pang of fear and shame, every spasm of despair, every breath of hope and consolation, which is there described, is but a reflex mirror from personal experience."

It is only after we have passed through, and from a distance can look back upon an experience that its full bearing and influence upon our lives can be seen; —never in the storm and conflict of the moment. Perspective adds interest to most objects, conditions and scenes. Time gives luster to character and distance adds beauty to paintings, landscapes and clouds. We know nothing about the real Washington, the real Jefferson, the real Lincoln, or the real Grant;—they are nothing but myths as far as our actual knowledge goes; and the same is true of all great men in all ages.

The sunrise, the sunsets and the distant landscapes are beautiful to behold, but it is the intervening distances that give the charm. There is no scene, object or character that will bear too close an examination. In the distance all hues, shades and tints become united and blend together as one color. No two persons think, feel or act alike, yet on the great lines of life they agree and act as one body.

While the multitude are always inarticulate, still there is a certain unison of hopes, aspirations and feelings that cling to an age and a people. And occasionally a single soul endowed with marvelous sympathy, intuition and genius gathers up and voices the universal sentiment and history of human hearts for a thousand years. Every picture must have a background. All that is grand and beautiful, whether in nature or life, is only grand and beautiful because of its background, because of the history that precedes it. Neither art, literature or life come spontaneous or by arbitrary command; each has a long preparation.

How beautifully have these thoughts been expressed by another. "Formerly a few men and women wrote the books of the world. They were the voices of the silent world; as we listen we seem at first to hear no other words than theirs. We might hastily conclude that there were no thoughts in those old times but those * * * But as we listen more intently and patiently, these puissant tones seem to issue from a world-wide inarticulate murmur; they are no longer solitary; they interpret that which lies unspoken in countless hearts. How solitary Job sits among his griefs as we look back upon him! All the races who dwelt about him have vanished; the world activity and thought in which he lived has perished utterly; but there stands the immortal singer with that marvelous song * * * But this sublime argument * * * is not the thought of Job alone; it is the groping, doubting aspiration of the East finding voice and measure for itself; * * * it is the spiritual history of a race. The lonely thinker * * * has made himself the interpreter of the lost world which he alone had survived. Back of the great poem there is an unwritten history greater and more pathetic than the poem itself."

Sometimes all there is left of an age is the voice of a single man.

HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

Norwich, N. Y.

THE JOURNEY OF A SOUL.

She held life's fairest garlands in her hands.
Youth, fame and beauty, and before the shrine
Of the immortal Nine had bent her knee
Receiving on her brow their awful chrism.
Then Life spoke to her sternly, crying, Yield
All this." And she went forth with empty hands
And passed into a desert place—but held
One dream a little longer in her heart,
And called on Fate with passionate wild words,
Demanding yet to stand and front the stars
At her full stature on the unsteady earth—
Not glad, but quiet and at peace with life.
The stony lips of Fate made answer, "Bow."

She held life's bitterest cup and shrinking, prayed,
"Not this, O God, not this. I am too weak.
All have I yielded, all save this to Thee,
The warm love centered in my deepest soul.
I pray Thee let this pass." God answered, "Drink."

Her pallid lips sobbed in the acrid draught
Till pain itself benumbed the sense of pain
As she before Love's desolate altar knelt
Alone forever. And she blindly held
Her hands to the dumb heavens and prayed for death,
Since from her life dear love was sent away.
Death thrust her hands aside and passed her by.

Then she arose and looked upon the world;
And at her feet a wailing cry crept up.
The moaning of the human struck her ear
And forced its piteous meaning on her soul.
Naked, bereft of youth, hope, fame and love
She turned to help humanity's despair
And bind the burden of a sad world's woe
Upon her heart, accepting patiently
The lesson she had learned in bitter pain.
Nor asked she aught again of Fate or God
But bound the wounds of many; casting down
All thought of self and luxury of grief
Since joy and pain were one. She had no tears
For in her heart the tears of all the earth
Surged in salt flood, and the rebellious cry
Of her own human nature was too weak
To ring above the sobbing of the world.

And where she walked the thorny way grew soft
With whitest blossoms—lotus-buds of hope—
All nature felt and answered to her touch;
The very stones were happier for her feet.

Selfless and helpful thus she lived and wrought
A little time, ere she from Death passed out
Into that dawn of Life where self-hood lost
Means God-hood won.

BEATRICE ST. GEORGE.

TO MY WINGLESS GOD.

True, but we spoil thy wisdom by our doubt,
Yet, wilt thou not this feathery shrub weed out?
Spotless art thou, clad in the morning light,
When at my couch thy form appears at night
Where dost thou gather thy fresh gown so free?
Tell, wingless God, thy secret unto me.
Vain would I mould my soul as thou hast thine,
Wrapped in sweet heavenly garments so divine,
Indulge not wish impure, nor sigh for gain,
Yet 'tis impossible—I seek in vain.
Glorious archangel, gift me with thy lore,
Teach me to grow while on the mortal shore.
Veil me to growth which must be all undone,
Give me thy probing power to grow divine,
Else will I come to thee unfit and sore
Gnarled and ungainly, ghastly and impure.
Gather me freshness from the wealth of soul
To grow like thee and thus to be made whole.

REV. CORA BENTON.

Toledo, Ohio.

Life In the Spirit Realms.

A Series of Letters from Spirit Carlyle Petersilea, Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, Medium.

LETTER NUMBER THREE.

Now, some may ask, "Mr. Petersilea, how is it about sin, wickedness, evil? Are not the wicked punished?"

My reply is: The law of justice is sure. All will suffer for each and every wrong committed; but I would like to give those of earth a little advice. The less one thinks about sin and evil the better. If one makes a mistake and does that which may be wrong, forget it as quickly as possible and try with all your might to think only of good. If you keep thinking about evil, or wrong, one sends out these thought vibrations continually, and the evil grows and increases thereby. Thus it is with all thoughts, sad or otherwise. Think only of good. Forget all evil as quickly as you can. Kill it out entirely with good thoughts and good intentions. Like a little child, if you fall, through a mistake, or lack of strength, regain your feet, or retrieve yourself quickly; forget the fall as soon as possible, and run on with a joyful, hopeful smile. If you stand crying and thinking of your fall, and fearing that you will fall again, you surely will. Forget it—forget it, I say! Think only of the good—and that is the true meaning of the words, "overcome evil with good."

It is very wrong to publish evil deeds in newspapers, and fill the whole world with evil vibrations, thereby increasing the one evil deed a thousand fold. Stamp out the evil quickly, as one would fire, before it spreads. Do not give it a chance to spread—and now I want to say a few words about obsession:

I agree with Mr. Hudson Tuttle, wholly and entirely. His exposition of it is the true one; but I will not repeat it here. Read it, and ponder it well. Very few wicked spirits are able to obsess any one. Spirits do not remain very wicked long, either. If you overcome a wicked spirit with good, it will either become good or leave you. If one absolutely refuses to harbor an evil thought, or to do an evil deed, no evil spirit can harm one in the least; but evil is simply the child of error and ignorance. As soon as a spirit, either in or out of the body, becomes enlightened, it ceases to be evil.

False religious ideas have very much to do with so-called sin; and, now, what are sins? Murder, covetousness, evil-speaking, jealousy, greed, lying, fraud, deception, hate, envy, drunkenness in all its various forms, gluttony, uncleanness, and, as Mr. Hudson Tuttle says, perversions of that which should be true sexual relations. Now who would commit murder if they were wholly and fully enlightened—if they really understood that to murder a man did not kill him but that it gave him tenfold more power to retaliate, if he were so disposed; that instead of putting a supposed enemy out of the way they were giving him the power to remain with the murderer at all times and places and render his life too horrible to contemplate, if so disposed? But, of course, the victims are not always revengefully disposed. Many think, or soon learn, that it is better to forgive.

Who would be covetous if they knew that that which they unlawfully coveted would forever be a thorn in the spirit or flesh, continually piercing and torturing them? Who would speak evil if they knew that the evil would return and find lodgment within their own breast to lacerate and harass them at all times? And none would be jealous if they knew that which by natural spiritual law belonged to another could by no possible means belong to them. As no two faces, or forms, or souls, or spirits, are ever exactly alike, and as no two ever attain to exactly the same degree in art, or music, or in any gift whatever, neither in beauty nor grace, but that each must be his or her individual self, and can by no possible means be any other—knowing this, none would or could be jealous—and that at last each will develop into the perfect God-like angel, forming the particular part of that which is called God, and filling the particular position in the great universal scale of harmony that none other could fill.

And greed: How foolish it is to desire more than enough to be comfortable, refined and happy, with a little surplus for old age; and enough to be benevolent and generous to those who are unfortunate or in poverty.

Lying: Who would tell falsehoods when under all and any circumstances the truth is better; and this brings me to the lying deceptions practiced by so-called mediums. Real mediums are not liars. They may, ignorantly, make some mistakes, thinking themselves right, but they will not knowingly commit fraud. What can be said of those liars and deceivers, who with foreknowledge and premeditation, dress themselves up and personate spirits, make use of confederates, trap doors, phosphorescent robes, illuminated paper crowns, and waving telescopic wands tipped with phosphorus?

And now I want to show up a few of these so-called materializers:

When I was in the form, my wife and myself visited a number of these tricksters. Mrs. Petersilea was once one of a committee of ladies who examined a so-called medium, to make sure that she had nothing about her but black—that each article of apparel she wore was entirely black—not a white thread upon her. The ladies examined her thoroughly, as they thought, when one of them discovered that the facings of her black skirt were not sewed to the skirt underneath, except at the lengthwise seams. This facing extended from the knees downward, making five or six great pockets on the inner side of the skirt next to the body, the outer surface of the skirt being perfect. Now the lady pulled out from these deep pockets, which extended entirely around the skirt, wigs, masks, illuminated draperies, and other things painted with illuluminated paint.

Now that poor woman will have to make amends to every person she deceived through a long career of deception, in spirit, until she has entirely balanced accounts—a long and weary road, surely. And another: A man, who is still practicing his nefarious business, pretending that he is extremely benevolent, giving seances occasionally for so-called benevolent purposes, vilely deceiving those who so implicitly trust him.

Mrs. Petersilea some years ago visited his seances, not as a skeptic, but fully believing that he was a genuine materializing medium, and this is what she saw: It was supposed by the visitors that what they saw within the cabinet was the spirit of a little golden-haired child materialized, and most would exclaim on looking into the cabinet: "Oh! what a beautiful golden-haired darling!"

Mrs. Petersilea was the last to go up to the cabinet. The golden-haired darling had become disarranged in some way, and the painted rubber head had partly collapsed or lost the air with which it had been blown up, the golden wig hung loosely on the shrunken head, the painted blue eyes had become exceedingly oblong, and the mouth, and red lips drooped horribly. An old umbrella was used to form the body of the so-called "lovely darling," the head being stuck on the point of the umbrella; the umbrella being partly open that formed the body of the same covered with white drapery. The drapery had become disarranged and the ribs of the old umbrella were plainly visible, the drapery having been accidentally pushed away from them.

Now that man has been for years deceiving thousands of people, and he is still at his nefarious business; but, if he knew positively, as I now know, that he will be obliged to make restitution to each and every one he has thus deceived, even to the last hair of weight in the scales of justice, he would never deceive another human being, and would never give another so-called materialization.

That man—and he himself knows who is meant and who he is—will now, very soon, be here in the spirit world. He will read this. Now, let me tell him, for I know, I can see already within him what will surely cause his departure from earth life; that very soon indeed will commence the work of restitution, and he will have to render to the last hair in the scales of spiritual justice.

My wife together with myself witnessed very many more so-called materializations, but all that we were privileged to see were carried on by fraud very like the two instances cited.

I, being a spirit, know positively that no spirit ever yet took on again a body of flesh, blood and bones together with all the organs appertaining to the body. This is utterly impossible to a spirit. Such a body must be developed and grow by the slow and natural process; neither can it be done at seances at a dollar a head for the visitors; but that spirits can and do make themselves visible, at times when conditions permit, is true. These appear as apparitions. That spirits can and do form the semblance of hands and so forth, is also true. These hands are not flesh and blood but they are formed through what may be called chemical affinity.

My friend, William Denton, could explain it to you better than I can, and he hopes to write a series of letters, through my wife, sometime. I hope to understand chemistry myself better, for I am attending a course of lectures given at his chemical college. My own conservatory of music holds me a good part of the time, but not all by any means. I live in my own earthly home, with my wife, very much as I did before I left the body of flesh; but, when living in the body of flesh, I had a similar school, also my earthly home, living with my wife at our home, going and coming to and from the conservatory. I now go and come in the same way except that now I am a spirit and go home to my wife from my spiritual school. I also have plenty of time to go where I please, attend spiritual lectures, visit the grand old masters in music; in fact, there is no end to that which I wish to see and understand, and as soon as I thoroughly comprehend a subject then I must, by a natural law, teach it and show it to others; this forms the endless chain of progression.

But I here and now wish to say that I do not stand at the elbow of some aspiring earthly pupil every instant of my life and theirs as a guide. My time is not wasted in any such manner. That I occasionally visit a pupil, to whom on account of their unusual talent I am very much attracted, to help them, is true.

My wife is receiving many letters from such aspirants telling her that I have constituted myself their especial guide, and they expect, on that account, that she will render them pecuniary assistance. Now this is a mistake. That I am with and do control my wife to write is true and most natural, but that I spend my entire time at the elbow of some young person, who wishes to become a good performer, is not true. I most gladly assist all those whom I can—those to whom I am naturally attracted—but I am no one's especial guide in the way that they understand it—that I am with them at all times ready to respond to every whim or question they may ask.

Here in the spirit realms, I teach mostly by class lessons. We grade our pupils and form classes. I spend very little of my valuable time, exclusively with one pupil. It would be a waste of time and force when I can, by the graded class system, teach twenty or thirty, or even a hundred or more at the same time. Sometimes we have the body of the former church filled with youthful new beginners, requiring but one lesson from me at each time.

It seems a little strange to me, sometimes, when I think of it, that I should be situated almost exactly as I was before my departure from the physical body. Here I am at the head of a large and thriving school, receiving many visitors as I was accustomed to on the earthly plane, and many of these visitors I was well acquainted with when they and I dwelt within the material; and how glad we all are to see each other.

All those in whom I was much interested, or to whom I was deeply attached, that had passed out of the body all along the years of my earth life, here they come, one by one, to visit me, just as I visited Denton and Franz Liszt; and then how joyfully we greet each other, how warmly we clasp hands. Friends, I can not express to you the joy we feel as we meet, to realize that we were not dead any of us, simply changed our dull and sodden garments for light, ethereal and exquisitely beautiful ones.

(To be continued.)

HOW DID YOU DIE?

Did you tackle the trouble that came your way
With a resolute heart and cheerful?
Or did you hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?
Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
Or a trouble is what you make it,
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only how did you take it?

You're beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?
Come up with a smiling face.
It's nothing against you to fall down flat,
But to lie there—that's disgrace.
The harder you're thrown, why, the higher you bounce;
Be proud of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're licked that counts;
It's how did you fight—and why?

And though you be done to death, what then?
If you battled the best you could,
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, The Critic will call it good.
Death comes with a crawl, or comes with a pounce,
And whether he's slow or spry,
It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,
But only how did you die?

—Edmund Vance Cook.

A fool, indeed, has great need of a title; it teaches men to call him count or duke, and thus forget his proper name of fool.—J. Crown.

What's gone and past help should be past grief.—Shakspeare.

Individuals may form communities, but it is institutions alone that can create a nation.—Disraeli.

Modesty is proportioned to the occasions of life, and strongest in youth when passion is so too.—Collier.

Man cannot make principles; he can only discover them.—Thomas Paine.

A PRACTICAL COURSE FOR Physicians and Students of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to

MISS NETTIE WINTER,
466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PUBLICATIONS OF Hudson Tuttle.

Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.

This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.

In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRIT AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.

English edition. Price, $1.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF MAN.

Containing the latest investigations and discoveries, and a thorough presentation of this interesting subject. English edition. Price $1.

THE SECRETS OF THE CONVENT OF THE SACRED HEART.

This book was written for an object, and has been pronounced equal in its exposure of the diabolical methods of Catholicism to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Price, 25 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.

A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

How to investigate. How to form circles, and develop and cultivate mediumship. Names of eminent Spiritualists. Their testimony. Eight-page tract for mission work. Singles copies, 5 cents; 100 for $1.25.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.

By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best poems of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE.

For the home, the lyceum and societies. A manual of physical, intellectual and spiritual culture. By Emma Rood Tuttle. A book by the aid of which a progressive lyceum, a spiritual or liberal society may be organized and conducted without other assistance. Price, 50 cents; by the dozen, 40 cents. Express charges unpaid.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.

For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.

All books sent postpaid. Address

HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

THE WIDOW'S MITE,

AND

OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value. 538 octavo pages. Price, cloth. $2.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year..... $1 00
Six Months..... 50cts
Thirteen Weeks..... 25cts
Single Copy..... 5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1904.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

A Church Movement to Render Liquor-Selling Respectable.

It appears from the daily papers that the "Subway Tavern," where one may drink either soda water or good old Kentucky rye, was dedicated in New York, August 2. The tavern has for its purpose the lessening of the evils of intemperance and the viciousness of the American saloon. The Right Rev. Henry Codman Potter, Bishop of the New York diocese, came all the way from his summer home in Cooperstown, N. Y., to assist in the dedication.

The Subway Tavern is located at the corner of Mulberry and Bleecker strets and is owned by a stock company of prominent citizens, who have followed with much interest the scheme started in England by Earl Grey, known as the Central Public House Trust. In the front of the tavern is a large soda water fountain. Behind a partition in the rear room is the tavern proper. Here may be found the regulation American bar where all sorts of drinks may be bought. A lunch counter is against the wall and down stairs are long tables where workingmen may eat their lunches with what they wish to drink.

Joseph Johnson, Jr., the chief promoter of the tavern, in opening the proceedings said that the company was capitalized for $10,000 and that anything made over five per cent would be turned into a surplus fund for the building of other taverns.

He said that liquor would not be sold to minors or to women and that nothing but the pure article in beer or whisky would be sold.

A large audience was in the tavern when Bishop Potter began to speak. He called attention to the Guttenberg system in Norway where liquor is sold by the state, and the ideas and plans of the Central House Trust in England.

Speaking of the vast army of workingmen, Bishop Potter said: "When their day of toil is done, what is to become of them? I can go to the Century, Metropolitan and other clubs, but what is to become of my friends in the two-room flat with five or six children. The workingman must go to the saloon and the efforts to close the saloon makes it the most tragic or comic thing in history."

Bishop Potter told of his visit to the Tivoli Gardens in Copenhagen where the whole population of the city might be found any evening sitting around the tables and drinking and listening to good music and where drunkenness was unknown. The audience sang the Doxology, and the thirstily inclined went and had a drink.

Any reformatory movement will receive the approval of all rightminded people, and undoubtedly there is wide room for reform in the matter of intoxicating beverages and the ways and places of their sale. The saloon as it commonly exists is notoriously a breeder of intemperance and other associated evils. Saloons are the natural haunts of drunkards and all classes of criminals. It is here they find congenial company, associations and environments. It is to the saloon they gravitate to find their affinities. And it is in the saloon that many a non-criminal and non-drunkard has gradually become affinitized with such—having taken gradual lessons and made gradual approaches to drunkenness and crime.

The stamp of evil is so thoroughly affixed upon and branded into the saloon business that it is doubtful that any priestly process of blessing the institution or place can suffice to remove the curse or sanctify the business. It is doubtful that "good music," sacred or non-sacred, will overcome or drive out the devil lurking in the drink habit that is fostered by the saloon.

If this "tavern" enterprise shall conduce to lessen the evils of intemperance, so far so good but is it not probable that in another direction it will result in evil that will more than counterbalance the good—that is, by affixing to saloon liquor-selling the tag of respectability—and not only mere respectability, but respectability with a sacred, churchly, aroma?

Probably the "blessed" whisky would "go down" with a sweeter relish to some churchly or piously-inclined patrons, for having the blessing of the church upon its sale; but the devil will lurk and linger in it just the same, and evil results will as surely follow with the blessing as without the doxology and priestly benediction.

The saloon will not do less harm, for being rendered respectable or tinctured with piety.

Adulterations, Material and Spiritual.

It appears from the Chicago Inter Ocean that war on adulterated food products has been commenced by the Illinois state pure food commission. Two hundred suits have been filed by Alfred H. Jones, the state commissioner, against retail dealers for selling adulterated foods, foodstuffs, and extracts. One hundred of these cases were brought in Justice John Richardson's court against retail dealers in Chicago and various Cook county towns and villages. The charges upon which these dealers will be prosecuted embrace violations of the label law, selling impure vinegar, adulterated flavoring extracts, adulterated and imitation butter, and process butter.

Inspectors from the state pure food office, 315 Dearborn street, have been quietly working on these cases for several months past. The inspectors, when buying each article intended for investigation, always asked the dealer, "Is this article pure?" If an affirmative reply was given the article would be purchased, taken to the commissmission's room and thoroughly analyzed by State Chemist E. N. Eaton and his assistant, Miss Lucy Doggett. When the article was found to be spurious or adulterated prosecution would be determined on. The evidence, after being properly secured and made ready, would be laid before the state's attorney in each county where the violation was made or where the dealer conducted his business.

Adulterated vinegar, flavoring extracts, maple sirups, and process butter, as well as many other adulterated foods, had been found by the state inspectors in large quantities upon local markets, and the state commission determined to commence operations in every portion of the state where violations were believed to exist. Most of the vinegar sold throughout the state is from St. Louis, Mo., Louisville, Ky. It is labeled "Pure Cider Vinegar." Analysis shows it to be a low wine or colored distilled article. The commission is unable to reach the manufacturers owing to their non-residence. But it is hoped that the vigorous prosecution of these violations locally will discourage their sale in Illinois, and eventually find no market here.

The adulteration of flavoring extracts, especially during the heated season, is of serious consequence. Thousands who daily use and buy soda waters and other soft drinks do not realize what they are drinking until sickness ensues, resulting oftentimes in death.

Scores of these violators have been located in Chicago, and in other cities, towns, and even villages.

The work of Commissioner Jones and Assistant Commissioner Patterson during the past three years has been of a very strenuous nature, and resulted in more than 1,000 inspections of milk and dairy farms and depots. Detailed accounts of these investigations, with thorough recommendations in each case, appear in the annual report of the commission. It is claimed by dairy and stock men generally to be the most thorough report of all dairy industries ever issued by any state food commission.

The world is moving along the lines of special analysis. Chemical analysis steps boldly to the front, and if poison is secreted in a cup of coffee, or is incorporated with a dose of medicine, it can find it. If a grain of arsenic is in your stomach after death occurs, chemical analysis can bring it to the light of day. Adulterated food confronts us on all sides, and what makes its promoters wince, is the chemical analysis that brings forth the poisonous ingredients. No one will oppose the chemical analysis of food, fearing it will injure the sale of the genuine article.

What is true with reference to adulterated food is also true with reference to spirit return and its proper analysis.

Here let us reiterate again, the stubborn fact irresistibly confronts us that spirit return doesn't belong to Spiritualists exclusively. That which is named Spiritualism belongs to the whole world, just the same as sunshine, rain, the atmosphere, water, etc. Here is a case of spirit return in the church, alluded to last week, as related by the Chicago American: Long before time for services to begin on Sunday, night, Aug. 7, at Toledo, Ohio, the East Broadway Church was packed to the doors. Outside a crowd was waiting for even an opportunity to see Ernest Case, the wonderful "man of visions," come. Every car brought more and pedestrians flocked from all points of the compass. But they were in a measure doomed to disappointment.

Ernest Case is just recovering from a severe illness and is a common workingman. He was so nervous and ill he dared not undertake to address the people, but promised to do so in two weeks. At the last moment he feared to face so large a crowd in his weakened condition.

A wonderful thing occurred a few days ago, as related by the Rev. Dr. Shupp in the pulpit, and vouched for by several ministers and others.

While sitting at the home of a friend, Case remarked that a certain man, naming him, whom he had not seen in many years, was just taking the train at Fostoria, thirty-five miles distant, to come to Toledo, to see him. He related just what conversation he had with the brakeman and conductor on entering the train, which yesterday was verified to a word.

He says there is a light that points out all these strange things to him. One local paper sent five separate reporters to see him, thinking there was some trickery. Every one came away thoroughly convinced of the genuineness of the man's wonderful visions and his phenomenal powers of discernment. In each instance he was put to the severest tests in the presence of scientists, ministers and theosophists.

He has been examined by insanity experts, theosophists, Spiritualists, hypnotists, newspaper experts, ministers and lawyers, but they do not vary in opinion or diagnosis an iota.

Thus spirit return is kaleidoscopic in its character, and no one has a cinch on it, and it is always in order to analyze it with the most painstaking care. The dozen or more materializing mediums of national reputation that have lately had the spirits they manufactured disclosed one after another to the astonished gaze of the world, dressed in fancy attire made by mortal hands, were able to go on with their nefarious work because the "spirits" were not, like adulterated food, carefully analyzed. An analysis brought most astonishing results—results that were horribly appalling! In every case the analysis brought to light the lamentable fact that the "spirit" in every instance consisted of the medium or a confederate dressed in an artificial costume.

Only a Little Cripple, But Big Life's Work Done.

Agnes Neal is dead. You do not know of Agnes Neal? No matter; she was one of those few to whom it is given to accomplish a life work before young life goes out.

Agnes Neal was a Chicago cripple and she was only 12 years old when she died the other day in Seattle. But she had completed her mission. She had traced her wandering father alone across the country. She had found him. She had reawakened in him a longing for his family, and then she had made a home and brought mother and father and children together once more in happiness. Then she died.

This was the news which came to the crippled children's home yesterday. Or, more properly, it came to Mrs. Emma S. Haskell, principal of the school, and most of the little lame folk will not know it till the long vacation is ended.

Agnes was a cripple from infancy. Before she could creep about the floor they had put her little body in a brace and when she learned to walk she had to learn on crutches. Agnes could not go to school and she even shrank from playing in the street because the boys and girls were likely to make fun of her lameness. She staid indoors with her mother all day in the little Carpenter street cottage in which the family lived, but her special delight was to play with her father evenings when he came home from his day's toil.

To Agnes' great sorrow, however, the father did not always come home at night, at least before her bed time. She heard her mother say that her father drank and sometimes she herself noticed that he acted queerly. Then came a night when the father did not return at all. Day after day Agnes watched for him, but all in vain. The disappearance of John Neal was reported to the police, but nothing came of it and after a time the family settled down to get along without him. Mrs. Neal took in washing and William, the eldest son, got a job which paid $8 a week.

About this time the family met with a new calamity. Little Joey, next in age to Agnes, was killed one day by a cable car. After the funeral expenses had been paid the family was in sorer straits than ever. The claim agent of the street car company called on Mrs. Neal and finally paid her $200 for the loss of her boy. In the legal adjustment of the matter it fell out that the share of each of the children in the indemnity was $33.33.

Not long after this a woman connected with the public school system called at the house to see Agnes. The next day the bus of the crippled children's school backed up at the door and Agnes was taken away to begin her education with the other lame boys and girls. This was two years ago. One day Agnes, who had made remarkable progress in her studies, went to Mrs. Haskell and asked that she might have a desk near the window. She informed the principal that she wanted to sit where she might see her father if he should ever go walking past. Her request was granted.

Thereafter, through the days and weeks and months Agnes watched for the father that never came. She knew just what she would do if she ever saw him down there in the street. She would jump up and clatter down the stairs and catch her father before he could get away.

On another day last winter Agnes sought out Mrs. Haskell with a proposition over which she had been pondering a long time. She said that word had come that her father had been seen in Seattle. She proposed to go in search of him herself, and to pay her way she would take the $33.33 which the street car company had paid her for the death of little Joey. The earnestness of the forlorn little cripple so impressed itself upon her teacher that Mrs. Haskell finally wrote to the chief of police in Seattle.

Within two weeks Agnes was bound for Seattle. To her frock was pinned a tag consigning her to the chief of police, and in her purse was a pass on the railroad and the $33.33. Agnes and the chief of police got on famously, according to the letters the cripple wrote back to Mrs. Haskell. She became the guest of the city in the big hospital and she and the chief lost no time in starting the search for her father. In this they collaborated with rare congeniality. The chief advertised for John Neal in the newspapers and everyday he took Agnes for a search of a new part of the town.

In the course of a week a man appeared at the hospital who said his name was John Neal. He had seen the advertisement. The meeting between the father and his crippled daughter was turned into a celebration by the whole hospital, with the assistance of the chief of police.

The father, it turned out had a good position and did not want to return to Chicago. But the mere sight of Agnes made him want his family back. A letter was soon speeding to Mrs. Haskell, and two weeks from that date the mother and four children at home were on their way to Seattle with all their possessions. Agnes and her father had a cottage ready for them when they arrived.

Agnes went to school again in Seattle, but when summer came on it was noticed that she was not looking as well as usual. She had a cough and once she fainted on her way to school. When it came vacation time she had laid aside her crutches and was in bed, growing paler day by day. The father now came home every night, but Agnes was too weak to put her arms about his neck. One night last week he came home earlier than usual, but Agnes had died in the afternoon.

The above incidents related in the Chicago Tribune, convey an important lesson, illustrating the development of angelic qualities in a crippled little girl. And is it not the great wish of angelic beings that Spiritualists become missionaries for doing good, assisting all the time in alleviating the misfortunes of others? If a little cripple can do such work, does it not afford a divine lesson to others, to also do something in a humanitarian line for the world?

POOR LITTLE "YELLOW HEATHEN."

As Portrayed in the Japanese-American Weekly.

Prince Pu Lun, of China, has been traveling in this country in the most extravagant manner. It was not only at the Mound City that the royal personage surprised a hotel keeper with extraordinarily generous gifts given to his employes. Poor Prince! He is everywhere welcomed and flattered by hotel clerks, bellboys, telephone girls, waiters, and so forth, simply because he gives away his money in a reckless and foolish way.

At one inland city, where Prince Pu Lun was royally entertained by society leaders, whose highly illuminated illustrations of the material and other charms of their progressive metropolis was confined to things outside the church, a heated discussion over "The Sacrilegious Desecration of the Sabbath," was indiscreetly inprecipitated by some disappointed members of the clergy, which threatened to disorganize society, and which placed the hasty complainants in a most unenviable position, in as much as Prince Pu Lun is well provided with a recognized religion of his own, far antedating in popular acceptance and consistent philosophy, as well as in sacred importance to its 400,000,000 devotees, the newer system now reduced to withering fractions by the competitions of creeds.

One of our friends, Mr. Geo. E. Bowen of Chicago, composed a poem on this unhappy event, and kindly allowed us to print it in this column. In a short preface the author says:

"Prince Pu Lun was not invited to attend service in any of the 'magnificent churches' of Indianapolis, while a guest of that city, and a mighty wail is heard from the officially pious. The responsibility for the oversight is still undetermined, but the scandal smarts."

The poem runs as follows:

Poor little "yellow heathen,"
Poor little Christian creeds,
How have the gates of mercy
Closed to your equal needs!
Some one has slept on duty,
Some one has kept the keys,
And so, has the hope of heaven
Been closed to the "least of these."

When was my brother's keeper
Given the special right,
Unto his close communion,
Infidels to invite?
When was the seal of mercy
Put in his hand to keep,
While pagans, bound for perdition,
Noticed him, fast asleep?

When was the grace of heaven
Tied with a caveat,
Held from the heart's desire
Under a bishop's hat?
When was the human yearning,
Only its God can know,
Barred from the consecration
Calling it, high or low?

When was this soul exclusion
Planned, or by what device
Have we achieved expansion
Governing Paradise?
How shall our trust be treated,
When, on the Judgment Day,
Those of the wasted talents
Surely are cast away?

How shall the growing hunger
Wide as the land and sea,
Locked from a gilded chapel,
Find Immortality?
How shall we know our fellows,
Where the annointed meet,
If we are left to wander
Paths of profane deceit.

Poor little meek Celestial,
Poor little stupid creed,
The Voice of the Great Compassion
Both of your wants shall plead,
And keep, in the Newer Kingdom,
No keys to the welcome shrine,
Where Puritans kneel with Pagans,
And drink of a common wine.

Churches, mosques and temples,
Mountains and clouds and streams,
Lead us to God's own glory
Just as our conscience dreams,
Poor little "foreign heathen,"
We, of the empty creed,
Much of your gracious spirit,
More of your wisdom need.

GEO E. BOWEN.

Woman Suffrage in Colorado.

Mrs. Elmer Wixon, one of the ladies from Colorado who attended the National Republican Convention in Chicago, in an interview regarding woman suffrage in her state said:

"There are between 30,000 and 40,000 more men than women in Colorado; and yet in spite of this difference in the population, the woman's vote is all the way from 41 to 53 per cent of the entire registration.

"In some elections the issues are more important than in others. Whenever there is a matter of vital importance it has the effect of bringing out the women voters in great numbers. With us the women who vote are largely the better class. There are very few clergymen in Denver whose wives do not go with their husbands to the polls. Mrs. Peabody, the wife of the chief justice, the teachers in the public schools, the wives and mothers in the home—these are our chief constituency. Our strong opponents are the machine politicians, who cannot manipulate the women's vote as they expected to do, foreigners who look upon women as inferiors, and above all, the liquor dealers. Everywhere they are the most active of our enemies, because they have the money with which to buy the legislatures. This they did in California and the state of Washington.

"When delegates to the convention were chosen to frame the new charter for Denver, after the county was divided last year, the women on Capitol Hill, the principal residence quarter, cast nine elevenths of the vote in that district. You see that charter meant the moral and sanitary regulation of Denver, the saloons, the police, the care of the streets. The men voters either were not much interested, or they felt that it could be safely left to women, and they did so."

Mrs. Wixon declared there was not the least danger of woman suffrage ever being repealed in Colorado.

"Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL.D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Color of Voices.

A blow on the head often gives rise to luminous sensations (for luminousness is a sensation and not, as is popularly supposed, a thing per se) and, under the influence of the shock, the person seems to see a multitude of sparks. Describing the effect of a fall on the ice, boys say it made them "see stars." Frequently there is great variety and brilliancy of colors thus seen.

Vibrations which, affecting the auditory nerve, produce the sensation of sound, in some cases have the power of causing the sensation of luminousness. Indeed, there are persons who, whenever they hear a sound, also perceive a color, one sound corresponding with red, another with blue, another with green, etc.

Dr. Nussbaumer of Vienna, relates that when a child, in playing with his brother, he struck a fork against a glass to hear the ringing, and while he heard the sound, he discerned colors. He says that when he stopped his ears, he could tell by the colors how loud was the sound produced by the contact of the fork with the glass.

Very much the same were the experiences of the brother. The doctor relates the observations of a medical student in Zurich, to whom notes of music were translated by certain fixed colors, the high notes by clear, the low ones by dull colors.

M. Pedrona, an opthalmologist of Nantes, states that he had a friend who was accustomed to the simultaneous perception of sounds and colors, but he avoided speaking of it, not wishing to be thought strange or to be an object of curiosity or a subject of discussion.

At one time a number of persons were repeating a slang expression, which occurred in some popular story, "That is as fine as a yellow dog," applying it in a jocular manner to all kinds of things and actions. One of the company said of another person, "Have you noticed his voice? It is as fine as yellow dog." M. Pedrona's friend replied seriously and with emphasis, "His voice is not yellow; it is pure red."

The downright earnestness with which the remark was made, caused the whole company to laugh outrigh. "What," said they, "a red voice? What do you mean?"

The gentleman had to explain the peculiar faculty which he possessed of seeing the color of voices. When he had done this each person present desired to be informed of the color of his own voice. The voices were characterized as blue, red, green, etc. The joke was on a young man who happened to have a yellow voice.

M. Pedrona says that his friend had perfect sight and hearing and that he was in the best of health. With him a luminous impression seemed to be made before he experienced the sonorous impression.

So keen was the chromatic sensitiveness that he knew whether the sound was blue, red, yellow, or of other color, before he could judge of its quality and intensity. He differed in one respect from the Zurich student—he did not perceive a change of color with every modification of tone. A sharp note was only brighter, while the flat one was duller than the natural. The same piece of music played upon different instruments produced different sensations. A melody played on a clarionet was red and on a piano blue. The color was intense in proportion to the energy of the sound. The colored appearances of the sound were perceived on the vibrating body, for instance, on the strings of the guitar or over the keys of the piano.

"The seat of color," said the person who experienced these impressions, "appears to me to be principally where the sound is made, above the person who is singing. The impression is the same if I do not see any one. There is no sensation in the eye, for I think of the same color with my eyes shut. It is the same when the sound comes from the street, through the walls and partitions. When I hear a choir of several voices, a host of colors seem to shine like little points over the choristers; I do not see them but I am impelled to look toward them and sometimes, while looking toward them, I am surprised not to see them."

This association of colors with sounds is more common than has hitherto been thought by the few persons who have called attention to the phenomena. It has been assumed that the experiences were hallucinations. It is more probable that they result from some connection between the auditory and visual nervous fibres.

It is now known that there are motor nerve-centers which perform particular functions, and it will probably be found that near the acoustic centers are also chromatic centers, and that, in such cases as have been described above, they echo to each other, or as Doctors Luys and Rosenthal and other eminent authorities claim, the eye-gate may serve as the ear-gate, and vice-versa. The fibres of the nerve of hearing may, thus produce vibrations at different periods of the chromatic fibres, causing the phenomenon of color-hearing.

The eye does not see, the ear does not hear. Back of these are the internal eye and ear in the brain and the discrimination between color and sound is by the central apparatus and not by outward nerve termination.

According to the doctrine of evolution all the other senses have come slowly into existence as so many modifications of feeling. Indeed, hearing and sight, as well as taste, are modes of feeling. Differentiation of feeling has, in the evolutionary processes, corresponded with the differentiation of physical structure.

In the lowest forms of life there are no developed and defined parts like the organs of hearing, sight, smell, and none such as in the higher animals make possible variety and sensitiveness through touch alone. "The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine," exclaims Pope. What a difference in the sensation of touch between the speck of living jelly, homogeneous so far as it appears to the eye, and a man with his differentiated structure, his several senses and acute sensibilities.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

CARD FROM DR. PEEBLES—CORRECTIONS.

In this late booklet of mine, 100 pages, embodying the pro and con of Reincarnation, or "The Soul's Successive Embodiments," the price marked in the advertisement was fifty cents. This was a mistake. It should have been thirty cents, and the postage five cents.

In this last book of mine, 400 pages, just from the press, entitled, "The Demonism of the Ages and Spirit Obsession," the price of postage, I regret to say, was omitted. The book is $1, and postage 19 cents.

Already a thunderbolt has fallen. L. S. Ditson of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes me (I quote him verbatim): "Though doubtless this book of yours on 'Obsession' was on your part well meant, and is exceedingly interesting, it will, I fear, hurt our blessed Spiritualism, because making so prominent the shady side of the movement which you call Obsession."

My pointed reply was in part, "If the exposing of frauds," I said, "if solid facts relating to spirit influences; if the plain positive truth will hurt Spiritualism, then let it be hurt. My motto is, 'The truth at all hazards.'"

We have had (so it seems to me) for the last dozen years quite too much from the press and from the platform, that there is "no hell or hells," no "devils or demons," no "evil in the world," and no "evil spirits in the spirit world." The "hells beyond, if there be any are said to bloom immediately into heavens." "Malevolence is pronounced undeveloped benevolence," and "rape undeveloped righteousness;" "all is good;" "there is no matter, all is mind; there are no frauds among mediums, or, if there be any they only call attention to the phenomena of Spiritism," and so on, ad nauseam. These teachings, violating every principle of equity and moral justice as related to reason and a cultured conscience, have become morally sickening to not only sound thinkers, but to every man and woman of moral fibre. The consequences of these things are, that many Spiritualists during the past years have "retired;" others, not exactly retiring, attend the liberal churches. Who so dull that he cannot discern the signs of the times?

This sophistry of no frauds, no evil, no evil spirits, sometimes called "philosophy," amounts to just this: Conceal the festering wrong. Say nothing of the bad; nothing about that growing fibroid tumor; nothing about that syphilitic blood sure to poison and deform the offspring; nothing about pre-natal murder; nothing about those counterfeit bank notes; nothing about the dynamite that in a midnight hour the incendiary is seen to throw under your neighbor's house; nothing about these frauds, these audacious frauds that blacken and disgrace the seance-room—that seance-room which should be sacred to honesty, integrity, purity, spirituality, immortality and heaven itself; but "all is mind," "all is lovely," "all is right!" I never swear—never; but occasionally use emphatic language, possibly more emphatic than euphonious; but when I see these silly theories advanced, these horrible frauds committed in the great name of Spiritualism, language fails me!

Spiritualism, rooted and enzoned in spirit, pure, essential, and immutable, with its genuine gifts, its heavenly teachings and its necessary and natural soul-unfoldment, is the greatest and the grandest cult in the universe, and the only cult which gives the world the most irrefragable and the most positive proof of a future conscious existence.

Personally I am conscious of the presence of spirit intelligences every day of my life. These later days are my happiest days. My vision of subjective realties is absolutely priceless; and appreciating, I drink in the grand, the glorious and uplifting truths that daily stream from those heaven-inspired lips of the wise, over death's divide, as I do on a more material plane, the shimmering sunbeams of June's loveliest morning.

Remember, reader, that letters or postal cards designed for my personal consideration, relating to books, pamphlets or obsessions, should be directed not to Dr. Peebles' Medical Institute, but to Dr. J. M. Peebles, 36 Bennett street, Battle Creek, Mich.

DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

CORRECTION—LIFE MEMBERS IN THE N. S. A.

To the Editor:—Kindly allow me to correct a statement published in The Progressive Thinker of August 6, occurring in a letter from James L. Dow, on your 7th page. The article refers to State and local societies and contains the following sentence:

"I understand that any person can become a member of the National Spiritualists Association for life, by paying twenty-five dollars, and have all the rights and privileges of a regularly elected delegate, and thus it may be seen that by the payment of this small sum by an antagonist the wishes of a majority of the state associations might be defeated."

All of this statement, Mr. Editor, is erroneous, as all chartered societies know, and the editors of our spiritual papers are aware. The N. S. A. HAS NO INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS OF ANY CLASS. Neither twenty-five dollars or one thousand can purchase individual membership in the National Spiritualists Association, even contributing membership, which never gave a contributor any right or title to vote in this association, was abolished years ago. Representation can only come through our chartered societies.

The public ought to know all this, as it has been repeated in all of our spiritual papers a number of times. It is true, that at two former conventions, an amendment was introduced, providing for individual life membership, but at each session it was lost by a large majority of votes.

I make this statement in justice to the N. S. A., and would add that while some state associations have individual members, each member is by no means entitled to a representation at the N. S. A. convention. Each state association can send one delegate for its charter, and one for each fifty members; that is, lay members, each chartered society of a state association can send a delegate, by paying $2 to the N. S. A. through the state secretary, provided that local is in good standing with its state association at the time. If our Spiritualists would carefully read the reports of the N. S. A. conventions published in The Progressive Thinker and other spiritual journals, just after the convenions each October, they would have a correct idea of this National body and its rules and work.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

Spirits Bring Her Presents.

Mamie E. Thessmann, who resides with her parents at 1148 W. 13th street, continues to receive attention from the spirit side of life. Her spirit friends have brought her numerous presents. She writes:

"I sincerely thank you for the name you gave me in The Progressive Thinker, "A Lucky Girl," for indeed I am very lucky. Yesterday was my sixteenth birthday and we had a very joyous time. Twenty-nine friends attended the party and I received forty-two beautiful useful presents, and I also received a message from my sister Maggie who passed to spirit life many years ago. The message reads as follows: 'You will get a present from us the end of this week or beginning of next week. Maggie and All.'"

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

As an Educated Jap Views Them.

The Chicago Record-Herald gave place to the following special, which seems to give the opinion of one Jap at least, of missionaries. He does not war on Christianity, but on those who misrepresent it. Unfortunately, he formed his opinion of American women from those with whom he probably associated. We quote:

"New Haven, Conn.—Vulgar, ignorant, brainless, self-conceited—these are the attributes of the American missionaries, according to Jitaro Mori, wealthy Japanese, who has studied science at Yale for the past three years. His strictures both on the missionaries and the character of American women, have raised a storm, and the American Board of Foreign Missions has taken official notice of his views. These views were printed recently in a Japanese journal and Rev. J. H. DeForrest, an American missionary in Japan and a graduate of Yale, sent the translation to this country.

"In his article Mr. Mori declares there are 400 houses in New Haven that should not be tolerated. He pays his respect to the American navy by declaring that in it there 'is a lack of daring heroes.' His crowning insult, in the opinion of the board, is the broad insinuation that American women are of a 'widely immoral character.'

In his reference to the missionaries Mr. Mori is especially vitriolic. "There are some missionaries who venture to think they jumped right out of the Deity,' he declares, 'but this comes from their self-conceit. Indeed there is none with such a pitiable future as missionaries. It seems to me that the failure of their work is because the missionaries and their satellites are nothing but vulgar fellows, ignorant and without brains. It is my conviction that not until we drive them out will pure Christianity flourish."

All Prodigies Are Mediums.

The following relating to prodigies, past and present, illustrates the universality of spirit influence. They owe their remarkable powers to interested parties in the spirit realm. Blind Tom is a medium and his spirit control has been seen. James Edward McCall, a negro boy of Montgomery, Ala., like Blind Tom, is in close touch with the Spirit World. His parents were ignorant slaves.

According to E. A. Baughan in the London Outlook, the musical season which has just come to an end in that far away city, has been more remarkable for the number of prodigies than for anything else. The sisters Hegner, one a pianist and the other a singer; Miss May Harrison, a fourteen-year-old violinist, and her sister Marion, a ten-year-old 'cellist; Franz von Veesey and Florizel von Reuter, both extraordinary geniuses, make up a very formidable list. The public never seems to lose its interest in these prodigies; indeed, their popularity has a bad effect on the drawing powers of mature artists. IT WOULD BE WELL IF EXPERTS WERE TO EXAMINE THE PHYSIOLOGICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL QUESTIONS RAISED BY THE MENTAL AND EMOTIONAL PRECOCITY OF THESE YOUNG "FREAKS."

At the same time it must not be forgotten that there always have been musical prodigies, and I dare say it could be proved that the number of them is not really out of proportion to the increase of population of the Western world, nor, considering the facilities, for musical education of to-day, is there any reason for supposing that the increase of prodigies is unaccountable. Rubinstein, Mme. Schumann, Lizst, Joachim, Sarasate and, in this way, Mendelssohn were musical prodigies. And the most remarkable of all was Mozart. We see a Florizel von Reuter conduct a well-written and well-conceived symphony and we marvel that a lad of twelve should be able to do such things. Yet Mozart was commissioned to write an opera when he was fourteen years of age, and before that he had made a European reputation.

A newspaper announcement thus introduced the prodigy to the public: "The boy, who is not yet seven, will perform on the Clavecin or harpsichord; he will also play a concerto for the violin, and will accompany symphonies on the clavier, the manual or keyboard being covered with a cloth, with as much facility as if he could see the keys; he will instantly name all notes played at a distance, whether singly or in chords on the clavier or any other instrument, bell, glass or clock. He will finally, both on the harpsichord and the organ, improvise as long as may be desired and in any key, thus proving that he is as thoroughly acquainted with the one instrument as with the other, great as is the difference between them."

One can imagine the shocked condition with which such an announcement would be received nowadays. Grave critics would speak of the child of seven as a charlatan, and would stigmatize poor old Leopold Mozart as a monster of avarice working his tender slip of a son to death for the sake of a few pounds. Of course the prodigy appearances of Mozart in public may have helped to kill him at an early age; but to the plain man it is difficult to understand how any composer could have written more than Mozart wrote. His creative life at any rate did not suffer. Nor did the other prodigies suffer as far as we can tell. But nowadays there is certainly more chance that a prodigy will be permanently harmed. If he conquers London, as Veesey and Reuter have conquered it, he has to give four or five recitals, and in addition he is engaged to play in private during the season—a part of his career which, I should think, is much more harmful than his appearance in public. Then there is always the inevitable American tour to be taken into account. Its hardships try the staying powers of even mature artists. Young Veesey has been engaged to give a number of recitals in America in the winter, and the press has been teeming with paragraphs hinting at the extraordinary fees that are to be paid. Those extraordinary fees mean that the boy will have to play more often than can be good for him.

Whatever the future of music may be on its creative side, it is clear that we shall not lack great violinists and pianists if the prodigies grow to man's estate. Veesey, by temperament and training, is of the Joachim school, and Von Reuter is just as clearly of the Ysaye. The first plays with a sturdy calm, master of himself and his instrument; Von Reuter is more a boy of moods. His intonation is not as certain, and he is more liable to make slips; but he certainly has more life, more emotion, more genius. Veesey plays as if he had been well taught; the other as if he felt the music, young as he is. Still it is perhaps a mistake to compare the two, for both are wonderful children, and each shows a naturally musical mind. If they develop they will be more wonderful players than either Joachim or Ysaye, and there is everything to show that they have just as much genius for music. Indeed, I am inclined to look on Florizel von Reuter as a modern Mozart. His "Symphonie Royale," if it is all his own work, and there is no reason to suppose that it is not, is a wonderful achievement for a boy of twelve.

And now comes the important announcement that a colored boy, the son of old slaves, has bloomed forth as a remarkable poet. The report sets forth that what Blind Tom was and is to music, James Edward McCall, a negro boy of Montgomery, Ala., promises to be to versification. He is remarkable in several respects, and has developed talents that many believe will make him, with maturity, a rival of Paul Dunbar, the well-advertised negro poet. A son of parents who were both slaves, the boy, now twenty-four years old and blind, has written some beautiful verses and attracted to himself the attention of many men and women of learning.

McCall is a graduate of the Negro Normal School at Montgomery, receiving his education before losing his sight. He desired to be a physician, and studied medicine half a year at Howard University, Washington, D. C. An attack of typhoid fever left him with his eyes in bad condition. In spite of warning, he continued study, and as a consequence he is almost blind. He can see to walk around, but not to read, or even distinguish faces.

From early life he evinced a passion for both poetry and music, and he is a fine violinist at this time. After losing his sight, however, he became more infatigued with the poetic muse, and has spent much of his time composing verses which his sister, who is a teacher in the Normal School at which her brother graduated, copied for him. Some of these have made profound impressions, one of which, entitled "Meditations," aroused some question as to its being his production. Investigation, however, proved that it was. This poem was printed in a local paper, and was talked of by the people of his home city for weeks after.

The young fellow does not grieve over his misfortune. Rather, he looks to the bright and happy in life. He says he finds no time to grow despondent over his misfortune. His range of thought is wide, and he shows more than ordinary scope in his reading. After his sister had read pages of mythology to him, he wrote a poem of seventeen stanzas, of which the following is the first:

Aft' Penelope's ill marriage
Earth had sped but once in joy
'Round Apollo's golden carriage,
Ere Mars called her lord to Troy;
Oh, what piercing pains went darting
Through their hearts—hot tear-drops starting—
At the warrior's cruel parting
From his wife and infant boy.

In another, "The Telltale Face," he expresses the following sentiment:

Not e'en the fairest face can long withstand
The poison vapors from a vile soul shed—
The coarsest visage soon finds beauty's charm
When by the breath of a pure spirit fed.

Some idea of the beauty of the poem, "Meditation," referred to above, may be gathered from the following lines taken at random from it:

Consider, too, the insignificance
Of mortal happiness and mortal pain
When placed within the balance scales against Eternal torture and eternal joy!
Contemplate well, now, man, many ways
Lie in thy power to render precious aid
Unto thy neighbor's soul, as, faint and sick,
It groans beneath its load of human flesh.
How mightily a gentle word inspires!
A friendly smile—how it doth soothe and cheer!
And how a generous and noble deed
Can waken joy within a downcast soul!

Again, in a selection entitled "A Two-fold Prayer," he says:

Oh, loving friend, while yet I dwell
In sorrow here,
Will you not kindly help dispel
The griefs I bear?
And wait not till my funeral knell
To shed your tear?

As touching the principle of work and merit, the young writer gives voice to this expression in his "Song to the Faint":

Not he who flies with golden wings
Up to the lofty heights of fame,
But he who climbs unaided there
Is worthy of a hero's name.

Has the Dog a Spirit?

Extracts from the following letter written by H. Rider Haggard to the London Times have appeared in American papers, but the communication is of sufficient interest to warrant reproducing in full:

Sir:—Perhaps you will think with me that the following circumstances are worthy of record, if only for their scientific interest. It is principally because of this interest that, as such stories should not be told anonymously, after some hesitation I have made up my mind to publish them over my own name, although I am well aware that by so doing I may expose myself to a certain amount of ridicule and disbelief.

On the night of Saturday, July 9, I went to bed about 12:30, and suffered from what I took to be a nightmare. I was awakened by my wife's voice calling to me from her own bed upon the other side of the room. As I awoke, the nightmare itself, which had been long and vivid, faded from my brain. All I could remember of it was a sense of awful oppression and of desperate and terrified struggling for life such as the act of drowning would probably involve. But between the time that I heard my wife's voice and the time that my consciousness answered it, or so it seemed to me, I had another dream. I dreamed that a black retriever dog, a most amiable and intelligent beast named Bob, which was the property of my eldest daughter, was lying on its side among brushwood, or rough growth of some sort, by water. My own personality in some mysterious way seemed to me to be arising from the body of the dog, which I knew quite surely to be Bob and no other, so much so that my head was against its head, which was lifted up at an unnatural angle. In my vision the dog was trying to speak to me in words, and, failing, transmitted to my mind in an undefined fashion the knowledge that it was dying. Then everything vanished, and I woke to hear my wife asking me why on earth I was making those horrible and weird noises. I replied that I had had a nightmare about a fearful struggle and that I had dreamed that old Bob was in a dreadful way and was trying to talk to me and to tell me about it. Finally, seeing that it was still quite dark, I asked what the time was. She said she did not know, and shortly afterward I went to sleep again and was disturbed no more.

On the Sunday morning Mrs. Rider Haggard told the tale at breakfast, and I repeated my story in a few words. This I need not do here, as the annexed statements set out what occurred quite clearly.

Thought It a Dream.

Thinking that the whole thing was nothing more than a disagreeable dream, I made no inquiries about the dog and never learned even that it was missing until that Sunday night, when my little girl, who is in the habit of feeding it, told me so. At breakfast time, I may add, nobody knew it was gone, as it had been seen late on the previous evening. Then I remembered my dream, and the following day inquiries were set on foot.

To be brief, on the morning of Thursday, the 14th, my servant, Charles Bedingfield, and I discovered the body of a dog floating in the Waveney against a weir about a mile and a quarter away. The two certificates of the veterinary surgeon, Mr. Mullane, are inclosed herewith. They sufficiently describe its condition.

On Friday, the 15th, I was going in to Bungay to offer a reward for the discovery of the persons who were supposed to have destroyed the dog in the fashion suggested in Mr. Mullane's first certificate, when at the level crossing on the Bungay road I was hailed by two platelayers, who are named respectively George Arterton and Harry Algar. These men informed me that the dog had been killed by a train, and took me on a trolley down to a certain openwork bridge which crosses the water between Ditchingham and Bungay, where they showed me evidences of its death. This is the sum of its evidence:

Sum of the Evidence.

It appears that about 7 o'clock upon the Monday morning, very shortly after the first train had passed, in the course of his duties, Harry Algar was on the bridge, where he found a dog's collar torn off and broken by the engine (since produced and positively identified as that worn by Bob), coagulated blood and bits of flesh, of which remnants he cleaned the rails. On search also I personally found portions of black hair from the coat of a dog. On the Monday afternoon and subsequently his mate saw the body of a dog floating down to the weir, it having risen with the natural expansion of gases, such as, in this hot weather, might be expected to occur within about forty-eight hours of death.

It would seem that the animal must have been killed by an excursion train that left Ditchingham at 10:25 on Saturday night, returning empty from Harleston a little after 11. This was the last train which ran that night. No trains run on Sunday, and it is practically certain that it cannot have been killed on the Monday morning, for then the blood would have been still fluid. Also men who were working around when the 6:30 train passed must have seen the dog on the line (they were questioned by Algar at the time and had seen nothing), and the engine driver in broad daylight would also have witnessed and made a report of the accident, of which in a dark night he would probably know nothing. Further, if it was living, the dog would almost certainly have come home during Sunday, and its body would not have risen so quickly from the bottom of the river, or presented the appearance it did on Thursday morning. From traces left upon the piers of the bridge it appears that the animal was knocked or carried along some yards by the train and fell into the brink of the water where reeds grow. Here, if it were still living, and, although the veterinary thinks that death was practically instantaneous, its life may perhaps have lingered for a few minutes, it must have suffocated and sunk, undergoing, I imagine, much the same sensations as I did in my dream, and in very similar surroundings to those that I saw therein—namely, among a scrubby growth at the edge of water.

A Few Conclusions.

Both in a judicial and a private capacity I have been accustomed all my life to the investigation of evidence, and, if we may put aside our familiar friend, "the long arm of coincidence," which in this case would surely be strained to dislocation, I confess that that available upon this matter forces me to the following conclusions:

The dog Bob, between whom and myself there existed a mutual attachment, either at the moment of his death, if his existence can conceivably have been prolonged till after 1 in the morning, or, as seems more probable, about three hours after that event, did succeed in calling my attention to its actual or recent plight by placing whatever portion of my being is capable of receiving such impulses when enchained by sleep, into its own terrible position. That subsequently, as that chain of sleep was being broken by the voice of my wife calling me back to a normal condition of our human existence, with some last despairing effort, while that indefinable part of me was being withdrawn from it (it will be remembered that in the dream I seemed to rise from the dog), it spoke to me, first trying to make use of my own tongue, and, failing therein, by some subtle means of communication whereof I have no knowledge telling me that it was dying, for I saw no blood or wounds which would suggest this to my mind.

I recognized, further, that, if its dissolution took place at the moment when I dreamt, this communication must have been a form of that telepathy which is now very generally acknowledged to occur between human beings from time to time and under special circumstances, but which I have never heard of as occurring between a human being and one of the lower animals. If, on the other hand, that dissolution happened, as I believe, over three hours previously—what am I to say? Then it would seem that it must have been some non-bodily but surviving part of the life or of the spirit of the dog which, so soon as my deep sleep gave it an opportunity, reproduced those things in my mind, as they had already occurred, I presume, to advise me of the manner of its end or to bid me farewell.

A Third Possibility.

There is a third possibility which I will quote, although the evidence seems to me to be overwhelmingly against it, and, for the reasons already given, it is inherently most improbable—namely, that the dog was really killed about half-past six on the Monday morning, in which case my dream was nothing but a shadow of its forthcoming fate.

Personally, however, I do not for a moment believe this to have been the case, especially as the veterinary's certificate states that the animal's body must have been "over three days" in the water at the time of its discovery.

On the remarkable issues opened up by this occurrence I cannot venture to speak further than to say that, although it is dangerous to generalize from a particular instance, however striking and well supported by evidence, which is so rarely obtainable in such obscure cases, it does seem to suggest that there is a more intimate ghostly connection between all members of the animal world, including man, than has hitherto been believed, at any rate by western peoples; that they may be, in short, all of them different manifestations of some central, informing life, though inhabiting the universe in such varied forms. The matter, however, is one for the consideration of learned people who have made a study of these mysterious questions. I will only add that I ask you to publish the annexed documents with this letter, as they constitute the written testimony at present available to the accuracy of what I state. Further, I may say that I shall welcome any investigation by competent persons.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1143, Detroit, Mich.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.
Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address
DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

769

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

In the World Celestial.

By DR. T. A. BLAND.

"It is inexpressibly delightful."—Hon. C. A. Windle.

"It lifts the reader into enchanting realms."—Medical Gleanor.

"It is intensely interesting."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

"Three things make this book remarkable. Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.

"It will give us courage to pass through the deep shadows of death to the sun-lit clime of the World Celestial."—Rev. H. W. Thomas.

"Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great Spiritual book, but a most beautiful romance of two worlds."—Banner of Light.

It is Printed in elegant style and bound in cloth and gold. Price $1.00.

The Mystic Thesaurus,

Or Initiation in the Theoretical and Practical secrets of Astral Truth and Occult Art. By WILLIS F. WHITEHEAD, Editor Agrippa's "Natural Magic." The book treats of The Symbol of the Cross, Spiritual Gifts, Inspirational Conception, Initiative Exposition, The Astral Brotherhood, Message of the Brotherhood, The Magic Mirror, and Celestial Companionship. It is a good text book for students of the Mystic, and will be sent postpaid, in paper, for $1.00.

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

ANTIQUITY UNVEILED.

The most important revelations concerning the true origin of Christianity. Reader, in bringing to your notice "Antiquity Unveiled," it is with the sincere hope that you are earnestly looking for the truth, regardless of any other consideration. If such is the case, this advertisement will deeply interest you, and after reading this brief description you will doubtless wish to give the work a careful perusal. Price, $1.50.

WANTS INFORMATION.

Let Us Have Light on the Errors as Well as the Facts of Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—When I read the article "Reincarnation" in No. 747 of your paper, I thought I had at least come across some one who could throw a little light on that puzzling subject; for how can anyone write with the cool assurance displayed throughout that article without possessing proof positive of the truth of the statements he makes? I see, however, that it was a false hope. After making a weak answer to my review of his article, the author seems to have made up his mind to drop the subject. I am really surprised at that, because, as I have lately discovered, he is a prolific writer and he should be able to defend properly any cause he may espouse.

I wonder if perchance he has discovered that there is more to be said in favor of reincarnation than he first thought. If so, the greater the reason, I believe, to keep up this discussion, especially if he desires us to take him seriously when he says: "Let us have light upon the errors as well as facts of Spiritualism," as he does in his last article.

Are we, or not, reincarnated spirits, is a question of the greatest importance. Its true solution would, I believe, let a flood of light on most of the "facts of Spiritualism."

If by "facts" we simply mean the control of human organism by dis-incarnated spirits, then I will admit that we need not solve the question of reincarnation to prove or disprove that fact, but if by "facts" we mean also the doings and sayings of those disincarnated spirits, then I fear that we will never explain those "facts," never be able to prove or disprove them, until we study them in the light of reincarnation. Let us pass in review some of those "facts":

First, I will say it is a fact, a positive fact, that spirits are often unreliable; many of them assuming great names, ill-fitted to their school-boy talk.

It is a fact that even when spirits with great names say something good, they never say anything better, seldom as good as that which they did say or write while on this earth. The only exception I know of to this is the continuation of the story of Edwin Drood by Dickens.

It is a fact that in their descriptions of their mode of living, their occupations and their surroundings in the other world, spirits often flatly contradict one another.

It is a fact that intercourse with spirits seldom benefits the mediums spiritually, rather the contrary. There seems to be no reason to claim that mediums who live a good life do so only through the influence exerted upon them by their spirit friends; while there seems to be some ground for the belief that when the medium has any sort of a taint in his or her make-up, spirits will often, through selfish motives, lead him or her from the path of virtue. I could keep on enumerating facts, but I think these will do for the present.

Of course, I will not ask the writer of the sentence, "Let us have light on the errors as well as facts of Spiritualism" to explain those "facts." I see he does not like to face criticisms, and for that reason I will trouble him no more. Indeed, I almost feel like apologizing for taking notice of his writings again. I had just begun this article when the sentence quoted above accidentally fell under my eyes. It is so well adapted to introduce the thoughts I desired to present that I could not resist the temptation to make use of it.

In my previous communication I appealed to all the Spiritualist leaders for light. But so far I have received no answer. The appeal was too general, I suppose. This time I will restrict it to the lecturers of the N. S. A. These are men who devote their time to the good of the cause. It is to the interest of Spiritualism that some light be thrown upon the "facts" I have pointed out; and for that reason I have hopes that some one of these lecturers will volunteer to undertake the job.

The very fact that spirits contradict one another on such a salient point as reincarnation vitiates the truth of all the information they are supposed to furnish us concerning their condition in the other world.

How can any lecturer feel sure that his or her guides (?) can be trusted to describe things properly when no two spirits seem to see things in the same light?

For one, I believe it would be a good thing for the N. S. A. to call in all the lecturers and have every one of their guides (?) put through a severe course of examinations and cross examinations, by some sharp lawyer and see if, after a thorough sifting process, enough will be left of the information thus received to formulate a creed worthy of the Twentieth Century.

I suppose I am not the only Spiritualist who has been asked, "What do you Spiritualists believe in, anyway?" What am I to answer to this if the question is put to me again? Of course, I can say we believe that spirits can make themselves visible to us and can communicate with us under proper conditions. But when I have said this I have gone as far as I dare go. Can any lecturer of the N. S. A. do any more? I am afraid no one can who has a proper respect for the truth.

What advance, then, have we Spiritualists made during the last fifty years? Is it not about time our leaders should come together and study a way to enable us to take a step or two on the road of knowledge? Will we ever be able to find out before we pass on to the other side whether or not we are reincarnated spirits? Will we ever be able to find out if spirit control (obsession; what it be for, good or for evil) is injurious or not, to both the medium and the spirit? Will we ever be able to find out how to detect truth from error in the maze of informations supposed to come from the spirits? Will we ever be able to find out how much in those informations come from the spirits and how much is due to the imagination of the medium? Individual initiative is not strong enough to push to a satisfactory end, investigations along those lines. Moreover, the publication of the results of such investigations would have no weight on public opinion. It would take the united efforts of the N. S. A. to obtain some satisfactory results, if they are obtainable, and their findings would be more likely to attract the attention of thinking people. Can we hope that they will undertake the work?

We seem to be entirely at sea concerning the value of spirit communications and it seems to me a shame for any lecturer to go on instructing the public on points, the truth of which he cannot vouch for.

Had I a seat in the council of Spiritualists I would certainly propose that a large number of spirits be questioned and cross-questioned, by men with legal training; that a number of clairvoyants be made to describe in writing the scenes they would see at a given time around a man or woman sitting in the same room with them. I would also propose that a certain number of trance mediums be requested to visit in spirit the church where Abbot Liszt plays the organ (see Petersilea's articles) and describe minutely that wonderful organ, to see if out of the several descriptions we could arrive to know if it is made of rosewood or of common pine.

It may be that these notions of mine are very crude. If so, let anyone who has better ideas bring them forward and then let us all go to work and try to find the truth about the "facts" of Spiritualism. We need not mind throwing "light upon the errors." They will disappear, of course, as soon as the truth is known.

Peoria, Ill. G. P. BENEZET.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

HOT TIMES FOR BISHOP POTTER.

Threatened by the Dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church.

The appearance of an article from the Publishers Press Dispatch, seems rather a great big bluff than anything to be considered seriously, although the guns mentioned behind the hot fire to be discharged are all of the large calibre, namely, Cardinal Gibbons, Cardinal Satolli, Archbishop Ireland, Archbishop Redwood and other distinguished prelates of the Roman Catholic church.

Now why should the Roman Catholic church turn these big guns and threaten to fire them off at the poor, helpless Bishop Potter, whom the Protestant people have already beaten, and cast out for dead, because he had pronounced his blessing on one particular saloon in New York, simply as an experiment in saloon reform, when 85 per cent of the saloon keepers and bar tenders of the United States belong to the Roman Catholic church, receive mass, the blessings and sanction of the bishops and priests in charge. Why should not the Roman church turn these big guns on its own interior and blow up the bishops and priests who are committing the high crime of offering masses and blessings for these heads of institutions of debauchery and sin?

When the Roman Catholic church clears itself of this and other evils, then we can stand by and see it turn these big guns full charged, on Bishop Potter, providing they have any ammunition left, and if that has all been exploded, then they might be permitted to hurl a few empty barrels at least at the poor Bishop Potter. But until the old church has gotten rid of the saloon evil in its own sanctum, we would rather see it take the same stand as it did in the Mormon fight in Washington, and say nothing. W. E. LANSFORD.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

A HERO.

He is a hero who when sorely tried
Hath yet a firm control
O'er his passions as they strongly rise
To battle with his soul.

The silent battle which the spirit fights,
Warring against desires
Unholy and impure, if right shall win
To higher good inspires.

The soul that crucifies an evil thought,
That keeps a guarded gate
Of Christian love and brotherly good will
Between his soul and hate,

Shall stand, in all his manliness and worth,
As mightier than he
Who takes a city in his strength and pride
Or boasteth vauntingly.

The shield of purity when nobly worn,
Where faith has been confessed,
Is stronger than the cunning coat of mail
Upon a warrior's breast.

He is a hero who to truth is true,
Though lowly and obscure,
Long after earthly honors fade away
His triumphs shall endure.

—Exchange.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mrs. M. A. Congdon would notify the Spiritualists and thinkers in and around the city of Washington, for a radius of a hundred miles, that she is prepared to make enagements for lecturing from September 1, in single engagements or monthly.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Myers, who reside at Porcupine, Wis., have been attending the Freeville camp-meeting, and report it as being very fine.

Mrs. Flora M. Allen writes from Manhattan, Kans.: "Mrs. Minnie Martindale of Wichita, Kansas, recently gave five lectures for our society here, and we were much pleased with her work. The parlor lecture to ladies only was especially good and a work that is much needed."

Sarah Stone Rockhill writes from Alliance, Ohio: "I am pleased to say that the Independent church has secured the services of Sister Cora Morrill of Grand Rapids, Mich., for a month or more, when we resume in the fall. Reports from Camp Brady confirm her as being one of the very best teachers and test mediums on the Spiritualist platform to-day, as she gave perfect satisfaction and great praise."

Bishop A. Beals writes: "The Summerland Spiritualists Camp-meeting Association will open its annual meetings on September 18—Sunday—and close the 25th. Mrs. Cowell, the noted test medium and lecturer of Oakland, Cal., will be the principal attraction. There will be other speakers beside the usual local talent. Prof. J. S. Loveland, Mr. Parsons and Mr. and Mrs. Lillie are expected to participate during the meetings, and a love feast is promised to all who may attend."

Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain has been sick, we are sorry to learn, and desires her correspondents to be patient; she will answer all letters in due time.

Walter T. Remierer, a medium of Bristol, R. I., is opposed to commercial mediumship. He says: "I will go anywhere that I am called for a Sunday, if I can get back to my work on Monday morning. All I ask is my expenses."

L. Worthen writes from Lake Sunapee Camp, N. H.: "August 7, opened very nicely, with a good strong wind blowing from the west, with everything in harmony. At 10:45, the second Sunday, the meeting was called to order by our president, John Gage; opened by singing by the quire, which was spoken of very highly. The first speaker was Mrs. Sadie L. Hand. Her address was well liked. At 1 o'clock there was a seance in the hall by Edgar W. Emerson. Every test was recognized. At 2:15 he gave one of his best lectures, and it was well received by the audience."

Mrs. L. P. Gard writes: "I, like a good many other true Spiritualists, cannot afford to be without The Progressive Thinker. It feeds the mind like bread feeds the body."

The first charter ever granted to colored Spiritualists in this state was unveiled by the United Spiritual Association of Philadelphia, at their cozy hall, 1235 Pine street. The services, which were impressively beautiful, were opened with the singing of the hymn, "He Leadeth Me," after which the invocation was read by Mrs. Ada Nichols. Sister Williams read selections from the Scripture, and the famous Fowler Singers followed with a rendition of the beautiful hymn, "Hear Our Prayer." Then came the event of the evening, the unveiling of the charter. Joshua S. Williams, in a few well-chosen words, presented the charter, which was received by the president, Mrs. Cayson, and unveiled by Miss Hattie Anderson. Mr. Hill gave a very interesting lecture, and Mrs. Cayson's remarks on "What Women Could Do," were received with liberal applause, especially by the feminine portion of the audience. The organization, which has been in existence but a short time, is in a very prosperous and gratifying condition.—Philadelphia Item.

Mrs. Julia M. Beeson writes from Dimond, Cal.: "My soul rejoices over the great effort you are making through your paper, to rid the 'beautiful belief' of the frauds who are throwing a dark shadow over the bright escutcheon of Spiritualism. May your efforts be crowned with success."

C. Kirchner writes: "The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, 378 So. Western avenue had an extraordinary large attendance, having to occupy their largest hall, on Sunday, August 7, to hear the gifted orators, Hon. Judge W. L. Snell and Ex-States Attorney, Hon Chas. Hughes. Mr. Hughes' discourse was 'The Ideal Life.' In his remarks Spiritualism was a prominent factor. He said we live not only a physical life but a spiritual life, and to feed the body to that degree of satisfied hunger, and starve the soul, is indeed a pitiful sight. If our people are so situated, ciety that there is no opportunity to improve intellectually and spiritually, then we behold a sad plight.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Bear in mind we feed the soul as well as the body, on the earth plane, and to do that we must put in our time properly and be sincere, and when I see you are in sympathy with me in spirit for the good of the human race, I commune with you and you with me, while the soul lives in the body. Such I consider the philosophy of Spiritualism. Mr. Snell's topic was religious, but as time was limited, owing to the lateness of the hour, he postponed his discourse until a future date. Spirit messages followed, with the usual good singing. On Sunday, August 21, Dr. J. McFarland will lecture."

G. F. Campbell writes from Seattle, Wash.: "Sunday, July 24, the Seattle Spiritualist Association closed its year's work. It has been a grand year for us, and under the leadership of President Little, with the never-failing power of Rev. Lole F. Prior back of him, we have grown until we are stronger than ever before. Wishing to remember our growth we took this occasion to decorate our hall with flowers, ferns and evergreen, and realizing we were about to lose for a time one whose love for her chosen work is to her greater than this life's expression, and realizing that we have been blessed for the past year with a mighty band of spirits working around and through our worthy pastor, we felt the occasion should be commemorated with a gift that would at least, in part, express our gratitude and love, so just before the evening address, as President Little had arranged, four of our members presented our pastor with a large, handsome floral design, square in shape, and which represented the four corners of the universe. Inside was a seven-pointed star in bright yellow on a background of white, the star representing the seven vital principles of life. Just inside of the star was a circle of green on a white ground, representing continuity of life, eternity. Inside of the circle was a triangle in purple, representing triune man—man physical, man intellectual and man spiritual. In the center of the triangle were these words in white, 'Our Love.' This beautiful floral gift was most appropriately presented to our worthy pastyor by Rev. J. E. Pomeroy. So unlooked for was the gift that only tears at first came in response; then we received a sermon we will long remember. Mrs. Prior goes east for the month of August. Before returning she expects to visit the St. Louis Fair, resuming her work here September 4."

D. Boynton writes: "I think all readers of The Progressive Thinker feel like giving a cordial welcome to Brother Carlyle Petersilea from the higher plane of life, as he always has something of interest to talk about, which is taking place on that plane above our vision, but to which we are all tending. I enjoy reading his letters dearly, and would be much pleased to have that distinguished scientist, Prof. Denton, again resume his instruction to us poor denizens of these lower spheres, and how gladly we would greet that dear brother, Henry Ward Beecher, as we received some scientific ideas when he wrote before that we do not find in books. We also received grand instruction from his dear sister, Mrs. Stowe, and we see she still retains those instructive ideas she had on the earth plane, and no doubt much improved, as we are informed the tendency is upward to all so inclined."

G. C. Howard writes from Springdale, Col., stating that he is 81 years of age, but still wants The Progressive Thinker—couldn't well do without it.

Wm. Ruffle writes: "I desire to remind your numerous readers of the fact that we hold the only Sunday morning services where tests are given, at 11 o'clock; also at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m., in hall 301 Schiller Building, 109 Randolph street. Our Wednesday and Friday evening services are held at my residence, 3201 Indiana avenue."

Dr. F. L. Mehrtens is now holding meetings regularly in Ripon and Milwaukee, Wis. He is doing a most excellent work.

T. W. Sherk writes: "At the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, last Sunday evening, the lecture was given by Dr. Randall. It was the best lecture ever given in this hall was the enthusiastic comment of one who has been a regular attendant here for the last seven years. Next Sunday evening, August 21, Mr. E. Dierkess will deliver the address on a subject given to him under control. Mr. Dierkess is an interesting speaker and a large audience is expected. Good music and good messages are regular features. On Saturday, Aug. 20, our society will give a picnic in Jackson Park, on the south end of the wooded island. All are urgently requested to come. Bring lunches, hammocks and games, and an abundance of good spirits—unfermented."

Dr. Geo. W. Carey, a noted platform speaker of Boston, has just filled an engagement of six lectures at Onset, Mass., and is now open for engagements with spiritual societies. Address 337 Summer street, West Somerville, Station, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. L. LeSieur writes: "The eighth Band of Harmony benefit will be at the home, 'Maplenook,' of Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich, 634 East avenue North, Oak Park, Ill., Thursday, August 18. Take Lake street surface car, going west to 48th avenue, transfering to Chicago avenue car to East avenue, then going north to the number."

H. B. Hammond writes: "The people of Heuvelton, N. Y., and vicinity were recently given a treat by Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, second vice-president of our state association, who spent two evenings with us at the home of Mr. Elmer E. Best, who kindly threw open his doors to the public, and a goodly number responded to the invitation to avail themselves of the opportunity to learn something of the knowledge and aim of Spiritualism. We are glad to say that all were well pleased with Mrs. Reynolds and her mediumship. Our local society wishes to thank her for coming to us, and all extend a cordial invitation to come here again, we hope in the near future."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

An account of the illness of her daughter, Mrs. Born, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner has been compelled to cancel her camp engagements.

On the 21st of July, a little daughter blessed the union between Mary Porter Born and husband—great-grand-daughter of Mary E. and the splendid medium, Capt. E. V. Wilson, now deceased.

Priscilla E. McArther writes: "I gave a series of parlor lectures in East Saginaw, Mich., to a select company; all but one were skeptics when I began the course, but at the close all, as one voice, said, 'If that is Spiritualism, give me more light and understanding, for it feeds the soul as nothing else has ever done.' We are now holding circles at H. J. Vereg's home, LaGrange, Ind., and meeting with good results."

B. F. Spencer writes: "Mr. Loveland is noted for his correct statements, but errs in giving the year of Franklin's death. That occurred in April, 1790, not 1780, in his 85th year, his birth being in 1706."

Estella Nicum writes from the Ashley (Ohio) camp: "Sunday, August 7, was the opening day, and a more beautiful time could not be evolved out of the laboratory of nature, the crowd being larger than on any opening day for years. W. V. Nicum was the speaker of the day. In the afternoon he took for his subject a quotation from Browning, 'Progress an eternal law; man is not man as yet.' In the evening he spoke on 'Spiritual Consciousness.' Both of the addresses were well received and enjoyed by all. Dr. C. H. Figuers, of Cleveland, Ohio, followed the lectures with tests, which made a lasting impression on the audience. The writer desires to say that the medium has not lost any of his old time power. Dr. Figuers will remain over Sunday, August 14, to follow Miss Lizzie Harlow with tests; thence he goes back to Cleveland to arrange for the opening of his fall meetings."

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

At the fourth convention of the American Federation of Catholic Societies, held in Detroit, commencing August 1, the Rev. Patrick O'Brien made the opening address. His mind was so preoccupied with the one subject of public schools, that he made it the prominent feature of his sermon. He charged the Catholics with cowardice, for not taking the affairs of state into their own hands. They were twelve millions strong in the United states. They had two millions of voters, and all they had to do to get what they wanted was to demand it.

"The church," he said, "cannot sanction the present public school system of the country because it eliminates religion from the teachings. I know that is an unpopular stand, but we must make it because we are right and the state is wrong."

The arrogance of this quotation is astonishing. He makes the demand because "we are right, and the state is wrong." That is what the Inquisitors said, and every religious tyrant since history began, "We are right," and having God with us, the right to do as we please and compel you to do and believe as we demand! What religion would the priest have taught in the schools? He knows but one, the Catholic, all others are heresies. The protestant religion would be worse than the present absence of all forms. It is Catholicism that is demanded, and the Catholic religion can only be taught by the priests. Think of it, pilgrim fathers, your own religion refused admission and Catholic priests allowed to lead and sway the minds of the children of this nation!

That time is far off, but it is a menace to liberty that such infamous treason can be uttered in high places and reported by leading journals without an editorial word of rebuke. Two millions of votes thrown with either party would decide an election, and concessions may be purchased by the promise of these votes, which would be the death of liberty, and the ruin of our government. The threat is the gleam of the fangs of the tiger of theocratic despotism.

Good Excuse for Murder.

Murderers, when given opportunity to make their last apology and excuse for their crimes, have had many and plausible ones, but none have ever thought of the one given by Ray Johnson, when brought before the Superior Criminal Court in Boston. He pleaded guilty to the charge, and then his counsel asked him why he killed the woman?

He replied: "I wanted to keep her from sinning."

"How would that keep her from sinning?"

"She was going to a better world"

What gratitude should that woman feel as a spirit sitting under the shadow of the throne of grace to the man who opened the door of the new life to her. Not only opened it, but at an opportune time, and pushed her in!

Get Rich Quick Schemes.

There are many of them, and they flourish on the desire of their victims to receive something for nothing. The so-called "trusts," pushed by promoters, are an illustration. The people hate the name of trust; they clamor for legislation against their formation; they execrate the promoters, and yet are anxious to invest their hard earnings in the stock. They jostled each other in the scramble for stock in the great steel combination, and bemoaned the loss of their good money. They intended to get many times what they gave, just like the most vulgar gambler, and do not deserve pity.

The winding up in court of one of these concerns, shows of what moonshine they are made, for it is an example of all others, and ought to teach the people to let all such schemes alone. The Eastern Milling and Export Company is the high-sounding name of a trust which controlled twenty-six mills in Pennsylvania and Maryland. These mills were all doing a good business when a promoter proposed that they go into a trust company. The valuation made since the mills were taken into the hands of receiver is $1,100,000. On this valuation, $800,000 of bonds were given and $4,000,000 common stock! This common stock was sold on the market and eagerly taken by the deluded people at par. It is now not worth the paper used in printing its certificates.

At the sale ordered by the court the entire holdings of the twenty-six mills were sold for $316,000. On this foundation eight million dollars in bonds and four million dollars of stock was issued. The owners of the mills put the bonds in their pockets, and sold the stock.

They were not ambitious or they would have sold twice as much. Now the property paying well on about a quarter of a million dollars value, was unable to meet the interest on five times that sum, and the disappointed bond-holders demanded a receivership, and to completely shut out the stock owners have the property sold—to a syndicate formed of themselves. The investors cry out that they are robbed, and so they are, as effectually as ever a ruffian relieved the pockets of his victims. They gambled and lost. They might better have entered Monte Carlo, for there they would have bet against chance and chance sometimes favors the innocent, but here they staked against a certainty planned by scoundrel promoters, and purchased stock that represented absolutely nothing!

What Is Before Spiritualists?

In the General Survey, a correspondent declares that he has witnessed astounding phenomena and become a Spiritualist? Almost as easy as for a man on the scaffold to jump through the hangman's noose into heaven! Believe—on Christ—believe in the spirits!

Yet is Spiritualism the science of this universe, not only the visible cosmos, but the invisible spirit world! It sets forth to explain the source and sustenance of all things.

To the material method of explaining the phenomena of the universe it supplements the spiritual. The first sees in matter all potentialities, all possibilities, and claims that of and by itself, it passes through the changes called creation. There is no need of an external intelligence—a God. There is no spirit existence. The conception that love, justice, truth and right grew out of selfishness, are a part of it, and go out with the expiring taper, called life.

This is the philosophy of muck—the science of dirt.

Spiritualism sets out with the claim that beneath the fleeting phantasmagoria called creation, is a realm of force or energy, of which we only know by the effects we observe. Justice, right, truth and love, are adorable, not because man in the "struggle for existence"—as claimed by evolutionists—has found such most expedient as rules of conduct, but because they are wrought into the formation of things. The human being is not a wave thrown up from the seething sea of life, to fall back again into its foam, but heir to an infinite existence.

Most Spiritualists, even those who have left the churches, have sojourned for a time on the barren fields of materialism. When they lost faith in the old religion they swung to the other extreme. They were no more satisfied, and with hunger unappeased, toiled up the mountain side to the promising summit, the new Spiritualism leading the way. Reaching that summit we gaze into the remote vistas of two eternities, the past and the future. In the past we view the infinite toil and suffering by which nature has pursued her undeviating aims, and wrought her sublime purposes, until the perfect fruitage of the tree of life appears as man, with his intellectual powers and moral consciousness. Beyond, into the future, we see the escaping spirit, carrying forward into another state of existence, in unbroken continuity the individuality which has been the object of this ceaseless travail. The material scientists may talk of the morality evolved by chemical changes in the brain, the religion of the foot rule by which they attempt to measure the aspirations of the human soul; and fathom the depths of the infinite; and bow to the revelations of the crucible of dirt, the Spiritualist passes beyond the shadow to the inner reality.

Spiritualism does not, with egotistical presumption, after eliminating God, bow in servile homage to the "Unknowable," for to pronounce on what can and cannot be known, we must be all-knowing. On the contrary, it affirms that to know is the birthright of the spirit and its possibilities have no limitation. Having for its aim the development of the highest faculties of the mind, and perfection of character, uniting the present with the future, bringing the world of spirits near, and into direct relation with daily life, cheering as well as instructing by inspiration, and kindling our aspirations for the perfection and sweetness of the beyond; actualized, right here and now, Spiritualism has little in common with any other system and least of all with materialism.

Is it a religion? If complete devotion and consecration of life to right, truth, and love that embraces all things is religion, it is the foundation of all. Is it a science? If to grasp and unitize the phenomena of two worlds, the physical and spiritual, is science, it is the one science of the cosmos.

Is it a philosophy? If to resolve the accumulated facts of the ages by the power of pure reason, be philosophy, then it is the key philosophers have for ages sought, by which to unlock the secret courts of life and death.

Spiritualism is all of these so perfectly blended that it is one, a religion that is scientific, a philosophy that is morality, a science that embraces not only the world of matter but the world of spirit.

The Spiritualist has scarcely, as yet, entered this expanding field. He has everything to learn and much to unlearn. He has no time to waste in the discussion of issues dead in the times of Hume and Voltaire. He has not time to listen to tirades against Christianity and the churches, the defamation of gospel ministers, or the coarse, cheap ridicule which passes for Bible criticism. If Moses made mistakes, what of it?

A vast constructive work is before him, and he is assured that when the Spiritual temple is completed, with its foundations resting on the material world, and its dome alight with spiritual knowledge, none will go astray from its portals.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Married.

Married, August 10 at the residence of the bride's mother, by Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, Mr. Grant DePew and Miss Anna K. Rosenwinge, all of Chicago. This was a quiet home wedding, with only family friends present in the form. How many of the spirit hosts were there, we will not undertake to tell, but as all were Spiritualists, and the bride a medium, we may (and we did) know that the angel world had many delegates as witnesses and to bless.

H.

TO WOMEN WHO DREAD MOTHERHOOD

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain—Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or remain childless. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at child-birth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how it may be done absolutely free of charge. Send your name and address to Dr. J. H. Dye, 14 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you postpaid his wonderful book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure sterility. Do not delay, but write to-day.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elisabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 50 cents.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Geo. H. Wadsworth passed to spirit life, at his home in Iola, Kansas, July 27, 1904, of kidney disease. He was almost 74 years old. His wife and two children, Chas F. and Mrs. M. D. Helfrich survive him.

MRS. A. F. WADSWORTH.

Mrs. Katherine C. Ordway, wife of Wm. G. Ordway, of this city, passed to spirit life, Sunday, July 17, 1904. Mrs. Ordway was born in Leavenworth, Kansas, Sept. 17, 1863. Many years of her life was devoted to the light that shines through Spiritualism. She leaves a loving husband to mourn her departure, but with the knowledge that what seems his loss is her gain. Many friends and neighbors will miss the once sunny smile of their friend. The services were conducted by the pastor of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, with words of encouragement, to wait for the time when they would be reunited in the beautiful world beyond the mystic veil. Interment at Forest Home. N. E. H.

I have to record the transition of E. W. Smith of this city. Mr. Smith was a resident of this place for many years, but for the past few months of his life was a resident of Santa Barbara, where August 2, 1904, he passed to spirit life. Mr. Smith was a man of lovable disposition and had many friends. Being a veteran of the civil war, the funeral was held under the auspices of the G. A. R. Post of Santa Barbara. Mrs. M. H. Rood of that city conducted the services, assisted by the Rev. M. E. Taylor. Memorial service was held here, Sunday, August 7.

BISHOP A. BEALS.
Summerland, Cal.

Mrs. Myron Blakeman passed to the higher life from her home near Tekonsha, Mich., July 16, 1904. A husband, three children, an aged mother, three brothers and many other friends survive her. The funeral services were held at the home Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Mrs. Emily D. King, of Girard, assisted by Rev. F. R. Randall, of Tekonsha.

MRS. MYRTLE MORRILL.
Cement City, Mich.

July 31, at 3 o'clock, occurred the funeral service of Mrs. Isabella Patton, formerly Miss Isabella Glascow. She was born in Pike county, Ill., March 8, 1852; was married September 10, 1879. She passed to the higher life, July 30. In her early life she was first a member of the M. E. Church; afterward she united with the Presbyterian church. Finally she proved the truth of Spiritualism so fully, that for several years she and her husband dedicated a room to the spirit friends and their manifestations. As I view this room and some of the proofs of spirit return that decorated the walls, I wondered why every Spiritualist did not do likewise, for the atmosphere of that room was truly spiritual, inspiring and uplifting. "By their works ye shall know them," was well proven in the sacred influences of the room in the Patton home, where spirits could come and commune with Brother and Sister Patton, free from worldly conditions and inharmonious influences. Rev. G. C. Love conducted the services, and quite a number present had their first opportunity to listen to the teachings of Spiritualism, the only religion or philosophy of eternal life that proves itself true.

COR.

Passed to spirit life, at the home of his parents, Shelbyville, Ind., Grover D. Ross, aged 20 years. His parents have been Spiritualists for years and they instructed him in its truths from childhood. He looked upon Spiritualism as a great comfort in his last hours of earth life. The services were conducted by Harry J. Moore. COR.

Passed to spirit life, Aug. 6, at his home, Chesaning, Mich., Mr. Ed Waldron. Deceased has blessed humanity for sixty years with his genial manners and happy disposition. He was a Spiritualist in the truest and highest sense of the term, doing more each day for the truth by his practice than its teachers could do in years by precept. Chesaning will miss the bodily presence of a loyal, honest, citizen; its people a kind and sympathetic friend; its poor a generous benefactor; the spiritual association a helpful member whose place they ne'er can fill; his family a loving husband, father and brother. Services were conducted by Mrs. Margaret C. La Grange, of Detroit, Mich. COR.

Mrs. Lena A. Dellinger passed to spirit life, August 8, 1904, after an illness of over two weeks from enteritis. Born in Chicago, Nov. 10, 1873; a daughter of John and Lena Stelges (Mrs. Herman Schultz). She was married Dec. 14, 1892, to James Dellinger, to whom she was a faithful and devoted wife. Of a quiet and unassuming nature, her high character and lovely disposition won her many friends in all walks of life. She devoted much of her time to Spiritualism, being a careful student of both its science and phenomena, and will long be remembered by her many friends in its ranks as a faithful, staunch and untiring co-worker in the cause. The Rev. W. G. Smith officiated at her funeral, which took place Saturday, August 13, from the home. The floral offering from relatives and friends were profuse and very beautiful. Her mission on earth was fulfilled early, but it was undoubtedly satisfactory to Him in whose vineyard she labored. It may be truly said that this world is better for her life and example here.

GEO. E. FINK.

SEER FACES THEFT CHARGE.

Bring Mrs. Sabin From West—Clairvoyant Accused of Getting Money and Jewels from South Side Women, to Be Tried for Larceny.

Mrs. Martha Ellyson Sabin, a clairvoyant, who is charged with obtaining money and jewels from several South Side women on the pretense of making them immune from disease and evil spirits, was brought from Denver to Chicago to-day by Detective P. S. O'Connell, and will be tried here for larceny.

The complaint against Mrs. Sabin was made several months ago, and a number of women in Hyde Park and Englewood told the police they had given her their diamonds as well as money, in order to have the protection of her art. The woman was unable to give the immunity to her patrons she promised, and was likewise unable to prevent her own arrest, through her alleged mystical powers.

Although she disappeared shortly after the complaints were made the detective bureau traced her to San Francisco, where she was captured, but released on bonds. These she forfeited, and the chase was again taken up. This time she was located in Denver by means of her trunk checks.—Chicago Post, Aug. 1, 1904.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

A Conspiracy Against the Republic. By Judge C. B. Waite, author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. Price 25 cents.

A Few Words About the Devil. By Chas. Bradlaugh, the great English freethought leader, with a story of his life as told by himself and a history of his Parliamentary struggles. Price, 50 cents.

After Her Death. The Story of a Summer. Pervaded with pure and sublimely spiritual thought. Something to make the reader pause and reflect almost to entrancement. By Lilian Whiting. Price $1.

After the Sex Struck, or Zugassent's Discovery. This book is intended to teach husband and wife how to agreeably adjust their differences. Highly agreeable is its contents. By Geo. N. Miller. Price 25c.

Age of Reason. Being an investigation of true and fabulous theology. A new and complete edition, from new plates and new type; 186 pages. By Thomas Paine. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Ancient India, Its Language and Religions. Translations of the articles "Religion of the Veda," and "Buddhism." The Study of the Sanskrit. By Prof. H. Oldenberg. Price 25 cents.

A New Catechism. By M. M. Mangasarian. A book suited to express the thoughts of men, women and children living in the new times. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Angell Prize Contest Recitations. To advance Humane Education in all its phases. A book especially adapted to Lyceums. Full of enthusing ideas. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price 30 cents.

Antiquity Unveiled. Ancient Voices from the Spirit Realms. An intensely interesting work, carrying one deeply into the mysteries of the past. By J. M. Roberts. Price $1.50.

A. P. A. Manual. A complete exposition of the principles and objects of the American Protective Association, with a vivid description of Romanism as it is to-day. Price 15 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament, being all the Gospels, Epistles, and other pieces now extant, attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, His Apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Translated from the original tongues, and now collected into one volume. Price, $1.50.

Apollonius of Tyana. Identified as the Christian Jesus. A wonderful communication, explaining how his life and teachings were utilized to formulate Christianity. Price 15 cents.

Aryan Sun-Myths. The Origin of Religions. A valuable compilation of historical facts relating to the ancient conception of the necessity for saviors. By Sarah E. Titcomb. Price, cloth, $1.

A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life. By Dr. Thomson J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

A Sex Revolution. By Lois Waisbrooker, author of "Helen Harlow's Vow," "The Occult Forces of Sex," "Perfect Motherhood," and many other works. Price 25 cents.

As It Is to Be. By Cora Lynn Daniels. This is a most spiritual book and gives a beautiful account of the process of dying. Price, $1.

Asphodel Blooms and Other Offerings. A book of short poems by Emma Rood Tuttle. Neatly bound in blue cloth with silver letters. Price $1.

Astral Worship. With a chart in the front cover with signs of the Zodiac. By J. H. Hill, M. D. Price $1.

Atlantis, the Antediluvian World. By Ignatius Donnelly, is a book of rare thought, proving the existence of a continent by the name of Atlantis having existed years ago. Price $2.

Auras and Colors. An Esoteric System of Teaching Concerning Halos, Aureolas and the Nimbus. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, 50 cts.

Automatic or Spirit Writing, with other psychic experiences of the author. A book well worth the price, for its valuable suggestions to others wishing the phase. By Sara A. Underwood. Price, cloth, $1.

Behind the Veil. Written by a spirit in a most interesting manner, and describing his life in the spirit world. Price 75 cents.

Beyond the Vail. A Sequel to Rending the Vail, given through the mediumship of W. W. Aber. Price, $1.50; postage 25 cents.

Bible and Church Degrade Woman. By Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Comprises three brief essays on The Effects of Woman Suffrage on Questions of Morals and Religion. Price 10 cents.

Bible Marvel Workers, and the wondrous power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words. Personal characteristics of prophets and apostles. By Allen Putnam. Price, 75c

Bible of Bibles, or Twenty-seven Divine Revelations containing a description of twenty-seven bibles, also a delineation of the character of the principle personages of the Christian Bible, and an examination of their doctrines. By Kersey Graves. Price $1.75.

Big Bible Stories. Placed in the crucible of Mathematics, they are made too absurd for anyone who can count on his fingers, one, two, three, etc. New and unique. By W. H. Bach. Price, 50 cents.

Body and Soul. A series of lectures by J. Clegg Wright. Price, $1.

Can Telepathy Explain. By Minot J. Savage. Price $1.

Celestial Dynamics. A normal course of study in the Astro-Magnetic Forces of Nature. Just the book for mental healers or students in the science. 107 pages. Price $1.

Character Building, Thought Power. A dainty little book and helpful. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price, 35 cents.

Conflict Between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper. Price, $1.75.

Child Culture. A small book giving a treatise on how to rear children according to the laws of physiological psychology, and mental suggestion. By Newton N. Riddell. Price 60 cents.

Children's Progressive Lyceum. A manual, with directions for the organization and management of Sunday-schools. Something indispensable. By Andrew Jackson Davis. Price, 25 cents; postage, 5 cts..

Christianity a Fiction. The astronomical and astrological origins of all religions. A richly sarcastic poem, by Dr. J. H. Mendenhall. Price 50 cents.

Christs of the Past and Present. By Rev. Moses Hull. A valuable book. Price, cloth, 35 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Clairvoyance. A book of 109 neatly-printed pages, pertaining to a system of philosophy of clairvoyance, its law, nature and unfoldment. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Coming American Civil War. This excellent book is written in the interest of humanity, of liberty, and of patriotism. By Burton Ames Huntington. 300 pages. Price, paper, 50 cents, postpaid.

Common Sense. A book of the Revolution, and yet adapted to the present day. A book to inspire the reader to love his free America. By Thomas Paine. Paper, 15 cents.

Concentration. A series of six symbol cards and a valuable pamphlet on concentration, meditation and inspiration, with instructions how to conquer yourself and develop your innermost faculties. By Laura G. Fixen. Price 50 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, the well-known lecturer. Those who have had the privilege of hearing Prof. Lockwood lecture will understand and appreciate the character of this work. Price $1.

Contrasts in Spirit Life, and the Recent Experiences of Samuel Bowles. Given through the mediumship of Carrie E. S. Twing. Price, 50 cents.

Cosmian Hymn Book. A collection of original and selected hymns for liberal and ethical societies, for schools and the home. Compiled by L. K. Washburn. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Crimes of Preachers. This book is just what its title indicates—a thorough exposure of the inner life of those elect of earth. A very interesting book. Price 25 cents.

Cultivation of Personal Magnetism. By LeRoy Berrier. Price, 50c.

Death and the After-Life. An excellent work relating to the transition moment; scenes and society in Summer-land; Winter-land. By Andrew Jackson Davis. Price, cloth 55 cents; postage 5 cents.

Death Defeated, or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Cloth bound. Price $1.

Death, Its Meaning and Result. By John K. Wilson, a member of the Pennsylvania Bar. Cloth. Price, $1.25.

Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism. By A. J. Davis. Price 50 cents.

Dictionary of Dreams. One Thousand Dreams and Their Interpretations. By Dr. Robert Greer. Price, 25 cents.

Discovery of a Lost Trail. By Chas. B. Newcomb. A book that will help you see the beauty and joy of life. Price, $1.50.

Easy Lessons in Psychometry, Clairvoyance and Inspiration. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, 50 cents.

Echoes from the World of Song. A collection of new and beautiful songs, with music and chorus, in book form. By C. P. Longley. Price, $1; postage 15 cents.

Edith Bramley's Vision. A thrilling appeal to all who are interested in learning how the great forces of the Roman Catholic church are seeking to prevent the progress of liberalism. Price 15 cents.

Elsie's Little Brother Tom. An interesting story for children. Allen Thurber, author. This book fills a need for literature for small folks as there are but a few books, and we recommend this as being interesting and instructive. Price, 75 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

"A Spiritualist": An unknown friend has sent orders to have the Arcana of Spiritualism mailed to a long list of eminent scientists, to a large number of libraries, and to every foreign commissioner at the St. Louis exposition.

He has done for the book what of all things I would have done, by placing it where it will attract the greatest attention to the subject on which it treats. As I cannot privately write to him and express my obligations and profound gratitude, I make this public acknowledgment. Many have written expressing their appreciation of the book, and the desire for its wide circulation. One enthusiastically would have a copy placed in the hands of every gospel minister. This unknown friend, is unobtrusively doing a share of this work and with a generosity only excelled by his modesty.

Charles L. Waffle: Q. Isaiah 37:35-36 reads, "For I will defend this city (Jerusalem) to save it for mine own sake and for my servant David's sake.

"Then the angel of the Lord went forth and smote the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and four score and five thousand, and when they arose early in the morning, behold they were all dead corpses."

We find this account in nearly the same language in II. Kings, 19:34-35.

What reliable history have we to confirm this Bible account, and how was it possible for all of these people to arise in the morning if they were dead corpses?

A. There is nothing—absolutely nothing—aside from this account in the Bible to sustain its assertions. There is no history extant of the Jewish people except the Bible. Admitting the story to be true the only way to account for a man's waking up to find himself a "dead corpse" would be that he recognized the fact as a spirit. But it is scarcely worth while to speculate on these improbable narratives which belong to the age of myth and not history.

Ginseng: Q. What is the prospect of ginseng growing, so much advertised, and would you advise investment in stock in a company?

A. A company has been formed, ostensibly to cultivate the root, but really to root the money out of the pockets of innocent investors.

We will state the facts of the growth of this plant, and the reader can then draw his own conclusions.

Were it possible for this plant to be grown as abundantly and as easily as stated by those who advertise seed and seedlings for sale, the price would become unremunerative. There is only one market, that of China. The celestials believe it the most potent medicine, and are now willing to pay its weight in silver, or more if its root is forked in resemblance to a man. They believe its virtue as a remedy depends on this similitude, which first attracted their childlike attention.

Physicians attribute to it nothing more than mild tonic effect, and it has a pleasing aromatic taste.

Why is the price so excessive? Because the plant is scarce, and the Chinese attribute to it wonderful virtues. Because of all plants of our forest, it is the most delicate. The soil must be to its liking, and the shade not too dense, and yet sufficient to screen it from the rays of the sun. If cultivated in the garden, it must be sheltered by awnings, and carefully watered. It requires four years of the most exacting attention to reach maturity. The seed is held at fifty dollars a pound by those who have it for sale, and if the profits of its culture are as prodigious as they represent, it seems a waste of a golden opportunity for them to sell the seed, instead of planting it and reaping, or rather digging a harvest, beyond the promise of a Klondike mine.

R. W.: Q. Why were not the victims on the ill-fated General Slocum warned by their spirit friends?

A. This question has been repeatedly asked and answered in this department recently from the standpoint of Spiritualism. It is put forward as an objection—a home thrust which cannot be parried, yet in this case it has no relevancy. If a company of Spiritualists should go out on an excursion, and meet with an appalling accident, and none of their number, even the most sensitive mediums among them, had received warning, then it would be conclusive that if there are spirit friends, they are unable to foresee, or impress their thoughts on their mortal friends. During the more than fifty years past, of all the meetings, conventions, excursions, etc., of Spiritualists, there has not been an accident meriting mention. It may be good luck, it may be more. If the former, it is remarkably good luck, rarely found.

I recall one wreck which came in my own experience. It occurred many years ago, when as the guest of Luther Colby, editor of the Banner of Light, we attended an excursion of Spiritualists out of Boston to a favorite resort. The day passed pleasantly and late in the afternoon the long train pulled up at the siding. There were not cars enough for the people and every foot of standing room and the platforms were crowded. We had not reached half way when a hand-car was met on a curve, and there being no fender on the engine, there was a sudden stop and every car in the train left the track but the last one, and two hung in dangerous poise over the embankment.

As the crowd gathered on the hillside waiting for the relief train, after the first shock and fright, it was found that not a soul was injured, except one and he was not of the society. After awhile the conductor came along, and said sententiously, "I thank God I had none except Spiritualists aboard to-day."

"Why?" asked Mr. Colby.

"Why!" replied the conductor, looking over to the cars in their frightful position, "If I'd had a church picnic, we'd all been in hell this minute!"

On the other hand, the victims of the Slocum disaster were all members of the church or Sunday-school. They had duly offered prayers to God, and accepted the mediation of Jesus. The children had been so constant in attendance on Sundays, and given such good attention, they had by merit earned the excursion. If there was ever a devout community, one near to God, it was that community.

With a foreknowledge of all things, and supreme power to order, why did not God warn his people of their danger? This is the question, the pertinence of which is axiomatic. Or must we take the terrible alternative and believe that God arranged the holocaust, and betrayed this trusting company?

That God did not interfere, does this prove that he does not interfere with events, or that he does not exist?

Of the thousand or more who went on this excursion, probably not one knew what Spiritualism is, and had they had any mediumistic experience, their minister would have abjured them to cast it aside as the work of the devil. This community accepted God and the Bible—not the spirits, and from him they should have looked and received aid.

This closely united and devout community of Christian worshipers fared as ill as the inmates of the Iroquois theatre, who belonged to the ungodly world. Surely God is no respecter of persons or places. His lightning shatters a steeple of his own sanctuaries with the same destructive energy it strikes a saloon, and leaves the preacher senseless with the same unconcern it kills an animal in the pasture.

UNITY CAMP, MASS.

Delightful Weather Attracted Many to the Meetings.

The delightful weather Sunday, Aug. 7, together with the announcement that Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, one of the ablest lecturers in the country, was to appear, attracted one of the largest audiences of the season to this beautiful grove.

The services of the day were as follows:

At 11 o'clock a conference meeting was held, in charge of Vice-president Samuel Merchant.

Mr. Ripley, of Stoneham, gave a message, which he said came to him from the late Dr. H. B. Storer, and Mr. and Mrs. James Smith of Cliftondale, gave readings and messages.

At the 2 o'clock meeting which was also in charge of Vice-president Merchant, remarks and messages were given by Mr. Raymond of Boston. Mrs. Julia Davis of Boston, gave messages, and Messrs Sanborn and Waite of Boston, rendered a song in the Indian language.

Mrs. Annie Coggeshall of Lowell, gave readings, and Dr. Barnicott of Boston, made remarks and gave readings.

When the time arrived for the beginning of the 4 o'clock meeting every seat in the large pavilion was filled and many were standing outside.

President Dr. Alexander Caird presided, who introduced Mrs. Richmond, paying her a high compliment and presented her as one of the ablest and foremost lecturers before the public.

The speaker fully sustained the reputation she has gained as a lecturer, and the large audience present were given an intellectual treat that they do not often have the pleasure of listening to.

Mrs. Richmond gave her hearers an eloquent, forcible, intellectual and interesting address, and many of her pointed utterances were heartily applauded.

She reviewed Spiritualism from its early inception and came along down to the present and more modern era of the philosophy. She ably defended the Spiritualistic faith from the attacks of some of its opponents and quoted from many prominent scientists and others of renown, who have been staunch advocates and believers in Spiritualism.

She referred to the early days of Spiritualism, when it was the custom to ask the audience for a subject. To-day, the speaker said, this is not the case. We have so progressed that our belief has now become a modern one, and now we have a great "tidal wave" of Spiritualism to give to you, and which is spreading throughout the length and breadth of the land.

At the close of her lecture she spoke in a poetical way on the following subjects given to her from the audience: "Buddha," "Truth and Justice," "The Golden Rule," "The Grand Army of the Republic." All of the above subjects were gracefully responded to by the speaker.

The meeting was brought to a close by the audience singing, "God be with you till we meet again."

Previous to the address of Mrs. Richmond, William Atherly rendered a cornet solo, entitled "The Holy City," in a pleasing manner and the Unity Quartette rendered a selection.

A song service was held at 6:30 o'clock.

At seven o'clock Mrs. Richmond spoke again on a subject suggested from the audience.—Lynn (Mass.) Evening News.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In "Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

The Progressive Thinker Highly Appreciated.

F. M. Snarrenberger writes from Columbus, Ohio:—"I always advise the investigators to subscribe for the best spiritualistic publication, The Progressive Thinker, knowing that therein they will find truth more clearly presented than elsewhere. I am always pleased to start them on the proper road by giving them a sample copy, and thus I hope to disseminate the truths of Spiritualism among many inquiring minds that could not be reached by mere spoken words."

W. W. Wood, of Texarkana, Ark., writes:—"Do I not know how earnestly you are battling for truth? I, with other readers of the grandest paper published to-day, cannot help knowing this. Whether differing from you or with you, all must acknowledge this truth. For myself, I am with you, and only wish that my exchequer was as full of shekels as my heart is wishes and hopes for your success in the battles you are fighting—the greatest of which is truth and purity against fraud and deception. May the Open Court never cease its sessions until Error shall be crushed to earth, and Truth arise with healing in her wings."

Francis E. Hotsenpiller writes from Magnetic Springs, O.:—"The glorious Progressive Thinker is getting better all the time!"

Hubert Childe writes from Wichita, Kan.:—"To-day I came across a July number of The Progressive Thinker, and as the Spiritualistic house-cleaning tone of it suits me, I enclose postal order for one year's subscription."

D. Parker, of Stoneham, Mass., writes:—"I have taken The Progressive Thinker from the first number issued. Have read it constantly, and could not get along without it."

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

On Thursday, August 4, Dr. E. B. Babbitt called together a large and intelligent audience in the interest of "Chromopathy," a subject which is attracting increasing attention the world over. The Doctor is a veteran Spiritualist, and with the aid of the higher powers has discovered wonderful curative properties in the combination of "Light and Color." His elucidation of the subject was followed by Dr. Huested, who explained in glowing terms the value of his knowledge of the "finer forces," as taught by Dr. Babbitt, and made manifest in practical application at his sanitarium in Rochester.

On Friday afternoon, Mr. Colville discoursed on the "Necessity of Individuality." He said in part, there is nothing of greater importance than the need of developing an intense consciousness. But however necessary it is to unfold an individual life, it is still more so to know and understand the relationships of individuals. No one lives alone. Nature has made this universal provision that when we come into life we are supplied with shelter, protection and guardianship. Heaven itself would have no attraction if one were to be the solitary occupant. You cannot be happy without sharing your possessions with someone, and as we grow toward manhood we learn that friends are more than gold and silver or precious jewels. You may be rich in friends, however simply you live. The higher needs of humanity are all social, and it is only in association that the real joys of existence are found. Everyone has a value as an individual, but the greatest good is accomplished when harmoniously related with numberless companions. God works through all instrumentalities, through every conceivable agency for the fulfillment of divine order and divine relationships. However beautiful the work any single person can do it is not to be compared with what can be accomplished by co-operation.

Following the lecture Mr. and Mrs. Lillie were tendered a formal reception, at which Mr. Barrett spoke eloquently and feelingly of Mrs. Lillie's long years of faithful service to the cause of truth, and of Mr. Lillie's unwavering loyalty and musical contributions to the work. He assured them of the deep and sincere affection they had inspired in the hearts of young and old, and uttered a repeated and cordial welcome back to Lily Dale. Mrs. Lillie responded with an appreciative spirit, in her usual happy vein. A general hand-shaking with words of welcome, congratulation and good wishes ensued. New friends were introduced and old ones made happy in the glad reunion.

Friday evening the psychometrists and mediums congregated at the auditorium under the auspices of the Willing Workers, and gave brief readings to a crowd of eager applicants, who seemed more than willing to pay 25 cents for fifteen minutes of revelation. Refreshments were served and some $20 realized for what is known as the "Class Fund." Madam Mandoras, Maud Lord Drake, Carrie Seymour, Mrs. Greenameyer, Ella Preston, Mrs. Fenner, and Mr. Armbourg constituted the volunteer corps, and last though not least, Mr. Colville gave poetic delineations for an hour.

The Saturday morning audience was favored with an exquisite solo by Miss Adams of Toronto, who is quite young, but has a voice of marvelous power and sweetness and delighted listeners predict a brilliant future for its possessor.

Mr. Wright spoke on the evolution of the human mind, and said there is tendency in the human mind to fight. We can never be all alike. There will be narrow heads and broad heads and thick heads, but this is nature's way, and nature takes as much pains in making a fool as a philosopher. Beware of philosophers who live in the clouds with the angels. Come down to the sphere of scientific demonstrations. Lily Dale is a place to air phantasies, mud puddles of intellectual effort. But it all stands for mental action. As illustrated by a panoramic picture of the battle of Waterloo, where the old gentleman took the nickels and located the military generals. In reply to the query as to which represented Napoleon, "Any one you like; pay your money and take your choice."

On Saturday afternoon, Miss Susie C. Clark of Cambridge, Mass., made her first appearance, her text being the "Altitudes of the Soul." Miss Clark compared the difficulties of mountain climbing on the physical plane, its achievements and victories, with the efforts the soul must make in the upward path of morality and rectitude. She continued her allegory by a portrayal of the ceaseless struggle necessary to attain the Mount of Kindness, of Obedience and humility, which involves the putting aside of the mantle of self, complacency and pride. The Mount of Patience, overgrown with briars and brambles, with danger of falling into the abyss of bad temper, and beyond the mount of Justice, Sympathy and Charity, the charity that thinketh no evil. Mount Trust has a trail circuitous and long, and is the greatest of all the soul heights, and is not populous.

Saturday evening, Mr. Colville gave the last of his series of lectures at Library Hall, on "The Law of Success." It was full of optimistic suggestions, and his positive assertions carried with them such a measure of conviction that no one could fail to feel assured that success is within the reach of all.

Sunday was Peace Day at the City of Light, and everything in nature testified to its beautiful reality. The skies were bright and clear, the wonderful band music permeated the grounds with a flood of inspiration, and a spirit of glad rejoicing filled the air. The crowds came quietly, pausing under the delightful shade of the tall park trees and filling the comfortable seats in the great auditorium. "Peace Day," in large golden letters shone from a white background above the stage, and in the region of the footlights a banking of fresh ferns held the word "Peace," arranged from wild flowers of a violet hue, the artistic handiwork of Mr. Armburg.

President Pettengill, Mrs. Lillie, Eleanor Kirk and daughter occupied seats on the platform, all arrayed in white, as was also the speaker, making a most pleasing picture, surrounded by ferns and flowers. Mr. Colville sang "The Holy City," and Miss Clark was introduced as the apostle of peace. Her text: "Behold, I will lay thy foundations with sapphires." Her lecture was an appeal for practical work and unity of action to bring about the universal peace so much desired.

In the afternoon, Mr. Colville was presented as a representative of the wide, wide world. Mr. Colville said: Because we are of the wide, wide world, we may well take the subject of Universal Peace."

Mrs. Ada Davis, for many years a resident of Lily Dale, passed to spirit life just after midnight on Monday, the 8th inst. She had been a patient sufferer for many months, and met the change as a welcome release from the bondage of physical pain. Mrs. Lillie officiated at the funeral, which was held on Wednesday morning, at the home of Mrs. Helen Snee, the mother of Mrs. D. Davis. The body was taken to Buffalo for cremation.

It is a strange coincidence that the "silent reaper" has borne three of our people into the beautiful beyond on the same day. Mr. A. M. Wheeler, of Fredonia, who has filled the position of barber for a number of seasons, passed away suddenly on Tuesday morning of heart disease. He leaves a widow to mourn his loss, and many friends who will miss his genial presence and kindly services.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Nelson, who has lived at Lily Dale for many years and has been ill for several weeks, answered the summons of the death angel to leave the worn-out casket of clay and "come up higher."

On Sunday evening J. Clegg Wright talked to a well-filled house on "The Social, Political and Reformatory Condition of the Time, Viewed From a Spiritual Standpoint." The subject was handled in a facetious fashion, and kept his audience in a merry mood from start to finish.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie was the speaker for Wednesday, and took as her quaint subject, "What of It?" She reviewed Spiritualism from its advent at Hydesville to the present day, recounted its victories and failures, the shortcomings and virtues of its advocates, and urged those who have the light, to illumine the pathway of those who are stumbling in the darkness, and thought, despite our failures and imperfections, so much of real value had been wrought for the world through the agency of Spiritualism, "We could pat ourselves on the shoulder and call ourselves pretty good."

Mrs. John Duss and her pretty daughter Vera, from Economy, Pa., are visiting Lily Dale for the first time, and are delighted with its many attractions.

Editor Bach of the Sunflower is the busiest man on the grounds. He has a lively interest in all that is transpiring, and is always ready to lend a helping hand whenever and wherever it is needed. His pretty Pagoda, between the auditorium and the hotel, makes a convenient half-way house and provides the current literature on Spiritualistic lines.

Mrs. Colleep, of Jacksonville, Fla., finds the City of Light well worthy of her long journey, and is in deep sympathy with the good work that is being carried forward.

August 17 will be Woman's Day, and Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Gilman and Helen Campbell are the speakers.

On Thursday and Saturday Willard J. Hull will be with us, and on Friday, Charlotte Perkins Gilman. On Sunday, the 21st, Paul Tyner and Willard J. Hull.

People in the crowded cities are sweltering with the mercury up in the nineties; people at the City of Light are comfortably fixed in cold storage.

S. M. KINGSLEY.

Grand Ledge Camp, Mich.

Our camp at Grand Ledge, Mich., opened very auspiciously on Sunday, July 31, with Oscar A. Edgerly as speaker. Mr. Edgerly's guides have given during the last week a series of six lectures, all of which proved eminently interesting and instructive to our people. On Thursday August 4, Dr. Edson A. Titus, of Hamilton, Ont., gave an address which was well received. Geo. W. Kates and wife begin a week's engagement on Sunday, Aug. 7.

We have been favored with the presence of Mr. Geo. A. Letford, the famous "drummer" medium, who has given some exceptionally fine tests from our rostrum, "the honest kind," we are pleased to say.

The attendance is excellent, every prospect of a very successful season.

Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly is proving a very efficient chairman, and adds much to the general good feeling at camp. Mr. Edgerly solicits subscriptions for the Spiritualist papers at most every meeting. LAURA MATLOCK,

Secretary.

Thoughts on Death and Life.

(Thoughts suggested by the removal from earth life of a dear aunt, who was for years a great sufferer, but whose passing from our midst was like the coming of a peaceful restful sleep):

Why do they call thee, O Death, "The King of Terrors?"

Why is it that in all the ages, the children of earth have feared thee?

It is because you work so mysteriously and bring a change which separates that which is perishable from that which is not perishable, that which is eternal.

They have called thee conqueror, but thou art only a natural law, which has been working since life began, and will continue as long as there is life on earth.

Thou conquerest nothing, and where there is nothing to conquer, there can be no victory.

Life is eternal, death is but a change brought about, at different stages, under different conditions, to open up to the children of earth the possibilities of eternity.

Some may say, certainly the material body knows decay. That is true. We cannot always inhabit the coarser garment necessary for us while performing our mission on earth, but by a natural law it is laid aside, we are disrobed, and a garment of a finer texture, better adapted for the duties of an advanced life is given us.

We do not see the person, but the reflection of the person who has inhabited for a few years the frail tenement of clay, but when the natural change of death takes place, freeing the occupant of the house (which we have been able to behold), and not being able to behold their true spiritual body, which can never be blotted from existence, this is why we fear death.

By this natural but wonderful change, sight is given to the blind, hearing to the deaf, the use of limbs, paralyzed by age or disease, restored and all the diseases which were beyond the skill of earthly physicians are cured by this change which is so much feared and which we call death.

To me it does not seem right to call death the King of Terrors, for we believe the testimonies of those who have returned and through earthly mediums assured us of the truth of these things.

The life of man is as the green leaf of summer, with no sign of the hidden beauties which are revealed to us by the frosts of autumn.

Thus death is like the frosts; it comes so that the hidden beauties of life immortal may be revealed unto us.

Thou art only a mile-stone, to mark the progress of life eternal.

Norwich, Ct. L. M. COBB.

WAITING FOR THE BUGLE.

We wait for the bugle; the night-dews are cold,
The limbs of our soldiers feel jaded and old;
The field of our bivouac is windy and bare,
There is lead in our joints, there is frost in our hair;
The future is veiled and its fortunes unknown
As we lie with hushed breath till the bugle is blown.

At the sound of that bugle each comrade shall spring
Like an arrow released from the strain of the string.
The courage, the impulse of youth shall come back
To banish the chill of the drear bivouac,
And sorrows and losses and cares fade away
When that life-giving signal proclaims the new day.

Though the bivouac of age may put ice in our veins,
And no fiber of steel in our sinew remains;
Though the comrades of yesterday's march are not here,
And the sunlight seems pale and the branches are sere;
Though the sound of our cheering dies down to a moan,
We shall find our lost youth when the bugle is blown. —Exchange.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1.

Vicksburg (Mich.) Camp.

Sunday, Aug. 7, was a big day at the Vicksburg (Mich.) camp-meeting. Trains from the east and north brought large crowds in the morning, which were augmented through the day.

E. W. Sprague of Jamestown, N. Y., lectured at 10 a. m., his subject being "Spiritualism, Christianity and Materialism Compared." He is always a forceful and logical speaker, but Sunday morning he was at his best and all who heard it pronounced it a masterpiece.

He occupied the rostrum again in the afternoon, using for his subject, "Spiritualism a Science," quoting extensively some of the world's most respected authorities, such as Crookes, Wallace, Zollner, Flammarion and others.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague have served this camp many times, and always with perfect satisfaction, and these two lectures of Mr. Sprague are to be classed among the best of his efforts.

Mrs. Sprague followed the morning lecture with messages, and Mr. Sprague gave them in the afternoon. Every test was recognized and acknowledged, and served as proof in support of the claims made in the lectures.

The services were enlivened with sweet music by our vocalist, Mrs. Flora Russell of Alliance, Ohio, whose sweet voice has charmed the Vicksburg audiences for four successive seasons. She was assisted by Miss Grace Giverson, who sang a solo, Miss Amy Pellett acting as accompanist.

One thousand people were on the grounds and the auditorium was packed to the doors.

Saturday evening a social dance was indulged in, the Alexander family of Schoolcraft, furnishing the music. Since the auditorium has been remodeled it makes an ideal place for dancing.

Wednesday was children's day; the children were present, many taking part in the services. The music, recitations, etc., by the children were lovely, and were highly appreciated by the older ones.

Mrs. Sprague presided, and several gave short talks to the children. After the services were concluded, Miss Fraser led the children to the restaurant and treated them to ice cream. It was an enjoyable day for the children of the camp.

Friday, August 12, is N. S. A. day. E. W. Sprague and wife will have charge of the services.

Campers are all the time coming and going, consequently the personnel of the camp is constantly changing.

Prof. H. D. Barrett has canceled his engagement here, and Rev. Thomas Grimshaw, of St. Louis, Mo., who has been engaged to fill the vacancy, will arrive Friday, the 12th inst. All are looking forward to his coming with happy anticipations.

CAMP CORRESPONDENT.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

We realize in sadness that our camp-meeting is nearer to its closing than the opening day. When the day, September 4, closes the camp, many will be deprived of the pleasure of hearing the beautiful thought presented from the other side of life, and the messages from the people we hear and see and yet are not in our sphere of life, that ofttimes kisses away the tear of the earth-born people.

On Wednesday, Aug. 3, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., came to the camp and began her work here by giving a nice little talk at the mediums' meeting held on that day. It would not have been Mrs. Coffman had she not permitted herself to stand between the people of the first and second stages of life and convey the thought from the second to the first.

On Saturday, Aug. 6, Mrs. Coffman entertained the people at the auditorium by a talk, followed by an exercise of her mediumship in answering queries written to her concerning matters not known to her individually. The answers to all questions were very satisfactory.

In Mrs. Conman's lecture Sunday morning, August 7, she presented the Spiritualistic idea of right one to another. She made some charming points clothed in beautiful language. In the course of her thought she said, some sixty years ago Spiritualism had its birth in modern dress, that Spiritualism had proven the continuity of life. It has taught that man is a progressive being, Spiritualism of to-day is here to teach him how to progress.

After a solo by Mrs. Sheets, Mrs. Coffman again lectured at 2 o'clock. She began her exercise by reciting in a very pleasing manner a poem from James G. Clark. In her discourse she showed from the Bible that mediators and mediums had been in the fiery furnace and lions' den in ancient times; in modern times they had handled fire unscorched. LYDIE L. CURTIS.

State Association of Ohio.

As it may interest the readers of The Progressive Thinker to hear of the prospects for the coming season, in Ohio, I will give you a few outlines.

The president, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, and officers of the O. S. A. have succeeded in adding four more missionaries to the list of last year, who are well able to explain the philosophy of Spiritualism in lectures as well as to prove the same with the phenomena. We will be in position to provide speakers for all our auxiliaries at very little expense to them, by way of a circuit system which we adopted. The result last year was very gratifying, but we expect to do a great deal more good in spreading the truths of our glorious cause, as we are better prepared.

The constitution and by-laws, as revised and amended last May at the state convention held at Columbus, O., are in the hands of the printer and will be ready for distribution by the first of September, when all the societies reopen their meetings for the next season. C. A. SOLLINGER,

Secretary.

Good News for Hay-Fever and Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant, recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma as claimed at the time. We have received the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery.

Mr. A. L. Clark, Springfield, Mo., writes Jan. 22nd, was a sufferer of Hay-Fever and Asthma for thirty years and thought I would die every Fall but Himalya (The Kola Compound) completely cured me. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Tex., was permanently cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering. Miss D. A. Roff, Mowequa, Ills., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after several years suffering although physicians said a cure was impossible. Hundreds of others give similar testimony.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound Free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise suffers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should try it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

11 Read This List of 11 PREMIUMS.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

1. The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, our leading Premium Book this year. Price 25 cents.
2. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Price 25 cents.
3. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Price 25 cents.
4. Seers of the Ages, by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 25 cents.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 40 cents each.

We have only ELEVEN Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any two of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.
Any three of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.
Any four of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.
Any five of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.
Any six of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.
Any seven of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.
Any eight of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.
Any nine of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.
Any ten of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Lastly, all of these ELEVEN Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.35, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

OUR ELEVEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.35.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
6.—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Transcribed by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.
11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Address all orders to

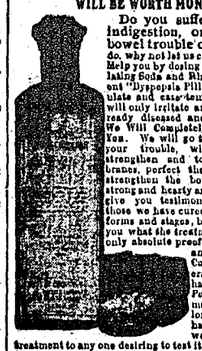
J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Illinois.

KEEP POSTED

In Current Spiritualistic and Occult News.

You can do it by reading each week The Progressive Thinker. The Philosophy and the Spiritualistic and Occult phenomena it contains each week, is the marvel of the age. No one can afford to be without the paper. Its price is within the reach of all.

Spirits Bring His Little Daughter 25 Cents.



To the Editor:—On July 3rd last, I gave my daughter 50 cents and told her she could do as she saw fit with it. She spent 2 cents for fireworks, and with the rest bought goods for a waist. On the 4th, the next day, she received this message: "Wait until to-morrow. We are glad you did not spend your money for fire works. It is better what you bought. We will bring you a quarter to-morrow. J. A. P."

We found the quarter next evening in a card receiver. CHAS. THESSMAN,

Chicago, Ill.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Medyn you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and case temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of almost every trouble in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this first treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 23 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

After Death--What?

BY CHARLES DAWBARN, SAN LEANDRO, CAL.

CHAPTER THIRD.

The spirit who has just escaped from his mortal body has been seen a myriad times by clairvoyant eye. But we must remember the limitations of that very interesting faculty. Ask the sensitive to watch the escaping of, say, a Chinese mortal, and he will soon be in trouble when he tries to describe the greetings that spirit will receive from his waiting friends and relatives. The whole scene as witnessed will be described in terms as if those of his own nationality were meeting and greeting each other, although the manners and customs of the Chinese would be very different from those of a European or American.

Yet further, if you want to hear how those Chinese spirits talk to one another, and their exact words, you will not get your curiosity satisfied. I am, of course, aware that as a rare experience a Chinese message to a mortal has been written on a slate, but we are seeking information as to how far the manners, customs and language of earth life would be exported into the spirit world. And we find the report of the clairvoyant couched in terms of his own experience, and national limitations. In a word, clairvoyants contradict one another just as common mortals do. When we seek their assistance because we really need it, as, for instance, to discover a lost friend, one may make a hit, but fifty will fail altogether, or altogether mislead us.

Mediumship, in all its forms, on account of its woeful contradictions, is interesting only as the spirit talks and tells of earth experiences. We only stop to notice that the tales and descriptions of spirit life are merely a rehash of what the medium has seen, heard or read. The more poetical the language and ideas, and idealized the descriptions of spirit life, the more fascinating becomes the narrative. But we are seeking cold facts, not fancies, and every mind trained to scientific exactness soon recognizes the impossible in most descriptions of spirit form and life.

A tremendous change has taken place. What scientists call a "critical point" has been passed when spirit man enters upon his new life. Everything in and around him has changed. So much we know. We do not have to guess, for the earth senses are left behind. They would be useless to the spirit, for his earth life of yesterday has become his spirit life of to-morrow. The first great fact is that his atmosphere is no longer the same. We assume that he still breathes, but we know nothing of the component parts of his new atmosphere. Here he is inhaling his mixture of oxygen, nitrogen, argon, etc., from which, apparently, he gains strength to exhale the poisonous carbonic acid which is left after he has extracted the nutriment from his lung food. His earth life is born, lives and dies embedded in poisons, to eliminate which elaborated forms of life are necessary, or he would soon die. His poison is food for another form of life. His food must, in its turn, give up its carbon, etc., that others may live. So life here is, at best, a clumsy succession of poisons and antidotes, through which he wends his weary way. Any mistakes or omissions and poor man grows sick and dies. But this, so far, is only a sort of kindergarten process for the mortal.

Science has discovered that his body only partially belongs to man in his earth life. Lots of other living beings share its possession, and live and die in its territories. There are friendly and necessary microbes; microbes that kill; and microbes that care nothing about him one way or the other. There are policemen corpuscles, and a vast army of scavengers keeping man's inside clean. There are independent intelligences with, we are told, different forms of life producing different kinds of living ferments for each organ. But all these necessary complications, and various personalities, belong to earth life and its conditions. Man's great task in earth life is to keep them all contented, or he soon suffers. So at this very first step of our investigation we see that these myriad forms of life within a man's body, as well as the poisons he manufactures and exhales out of both atmosphere and food, must all go with him to his new life if he is to be the same man we knew yesterday.

Here we briefly consider the nature of "critical points," for when man dies he passes a "critical point" which changes everything in and around him. A "critical point" is a change so wonderful and complete that nothing but experience would deem it possible. For instance, water plays a chief part in the appearance and preservation of life upon our little planet. Naturally it has been carefully studied from the time man began to strive to know something of both himself and his surroundings. Yet without actual experience who could have guessed that at a certain degree of temperature the water would no longer be water, but become ice, upon, or in which man would soon die. Nobody knows why there should be this tremendous change produced upon water, so the point at which the change takes place is called a "critical point." In the other direction, at another "critical point" water becomes steam, where its properties and powers are so changed that it is destruction to man to inhale, or even to touch it. There is precisely the same raw material, yet at one side this "critical point" it is an essential of man's life, whereas on the other it becomes a mode of destruction. The steam itself soon reaches another of these "critical points" at which it is no longer steam but gas, a totally different thing. Presently even the gas vanishes and man the mortal can follow it no further.

We now see that Nature in her processes is not logical. You cannot even guess what she will do next until you find out by experience. Within certain "critical points" man the mortal can go to school and learn his lesson. He will even boast him of his learning, and add certain letters to his name as marks of distinction. But suddenly he reaches a "critical point." His day's work is done, and Nature puts her children one by one to bed. That particular point we call "death." As we have seen there are lots of critical points affecting man, but this, and the other "critical point" called "death" are the two changes most important to man the mortal.

When we are now asking, "After death—what?" the student must keep in mind that the manhood we seek, and all its surroundings, are on the other side a "critical point" and therefore cannot be studied, or even judged by experience on this side. Yet since all "spirit return" is from beyond a "critical point" it is an attempt to bridge the chasm which divides the two states of manhood.

In spite of this marvelous system of "critical points" which affects man and everything he senses, or of which he can conceive, yet man has persisted in picturing life after death as just a continuance of his present experiences, but with a few very pleasing changes. And there has been little or nothing in "spirit return" to correct this impossible conception. If we are seeking a truthful answer to our question "After death—what?" we must begin by acknowledging the physical consequences that follow death, and therefore affect man, and all his surroundings.

First, the atmosphere amid which spirit man lives, moves and has his being is quite different from ours. The air mortal man breathes is as well known, and has been as carefully studied as the more solid planet it surrounds and penetrates. Man weighs, measures and analyzes it. Its various gases he separates, and at his will reduces them to liquid and solid form. But in any such changes they become unlivable for him, and apart from the necessities of his life. The air must be sufficiently condensed or he cannot breathe it. A certain number of feet above him it is so rare that he gasps, and bleeds to death. This air, so essential to his life, contains one, and perhaps more actual poisons, such as carbonic acid. Yet this is essential in its minute quantity from his cradle to his grave. But it also contains solids. Man himself, and also the planet, has only to become sufficiently broken to pieces to become dust, and float in this wonderful atmosphere. Almost everything of which we can conceive, including living beings, are found in this atmosphere, and the nearer the earth the more of them there are. And the further outward you travel the fewer you find.

The point here to notice is that though some of this atmosphere is positively injurious, yet a great deal of it, that is to say, much more than the mere oxygen, nitrogen, argon, etc., is absolutely necessary if the planet is to continue to be the abode of living beings. Some years ago a terrific volcanic explosion from Krakatoa so filled the atmosphere with broken-up planet that for several years the sunsets were gorgeous beyond the experience of any then living. In other words, there was more dust than usual, and perhaps of a different kind, in the atmosphere, and man had, therefore, more of it to breathe into and out of his lungs. But the earth itself is a living being, just as dependent upon this atmosphere and the dust in it as man himself. There must be dust in this atmosphere or both man and planet would go to pieces. Tyndall taught us long ago that every drop of water collects around a particle of dust. Water and dust thus float in our atmosphere, and some day fall as rain, without which the planet, and all things therein and thereon would presently perish. Without this dust the water, instead of falling as rain-drops, would crash down as cloud-bursts, which would wash all soil, and every trace of animal and vegetable life down into beds of our present oceans. That shows the importance of dust to the planet itself. Take it away and man's senses would become impossible, and he would drivel into impotency. Everything he sees, smells, hears, touches, is just movement of these broken-up fragments of matter, which we call "dust" for want of a better name. A little of this dust, floating in the atmosphere, just hits against a certain nerve and he exclaims, "What a beautiful sunset!" He calls the sky blue because the dust in it hits his eye, and refracts certain energies by which the sun keeps in touch with his subjects. But those energies are embedded in dust before man can recognize them. Everything he calls color, be it beauty or ugliness, is merely an effect on certain of his nerves, produced by a combination of sun's ray and dust in the air.

Every mortal is attracted or disgusted by color. The bloom on the maiden's cheek—the beauty of the flower—the verdure which bedecks nature, all depend on the dust in the atmosphere. So while we do not say with the Bible that man is made of dust, we do say that without dust man would be a very different being.

(To be continued.)

San Leandro, Cal.

WHENCE? WHY? WHERE?

"Where did I come from?" Straight from God.
Like the shell from the sea, or the sprout from the sod.
You are part of it all—no less, no more—
So stop your queries, and trust and adore.

"What did I come for?" You came for a cause,
To strengthen the purpose, to better the laws.
Like the rivet or bolt of a great machine,
You are all important, though all unseen.

"Where am I going to?" Never mind;
Just follow the signboard that says, "Be kind,"
And do the duty that nearest lies,
For that is the pathway to Paradise.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The possible stands by us ever fresh, fairer than aught which any life hath owned.—Jean Ingelow.

Blessings may appear under the shape of pains, losses and disappointments; let a man have patience and he will see them in their proper figure.—Addison.

No person will rule over me with my consent. I will rule over no man.—William Lloyd Garrison.

BOOK REVIEWS.

AFTER HEADBATH; THE STORY OF A SUMMER. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Company, Boston, Publishers. Price $1.

Anything that emanates from the mind of Lilian Whiting possesses great value. "After Her Death" will prove especially interesting. She wisely claims that when the spiritual being that has lived a certain period here slips out of its physical body, and is free from material clogs and lamentations, the readjustment in a number of ways is made. Those who still remain in this world, are far more truly recognized; some have been unduly appreciated; some have been underestimated. The risen spiritual being, now being able to discern spiritual states, and to adjust all to a new scale of values, rearranges his loves and friendships, so to speak. In fact here is a type of the judgment day.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH. Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described. By C. W. Leadbeater. Theosophical Book Concern, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

This book comprises 502 octavo pages, in clear print, durably bound in cloth. The subject matter, pertaining to the spiritual nature of man and the immortality of his essential being, is of deepest interest and intense import to all thinkers, whether Materialists, Spiritualists or Agnostics. Mr. Leadbeater is widely and favorably known as a lecturer and author. He presents the views of the advanced Theosophist, in a clear and kindly manner, entertainingly and instructively elucidating the subject from the theosophical standpoint. The special chapters are devoted to: Some Misconceptions About Death. The Evidence for Continued Life. Religious Misconceptions. Our Attitude Towards Death. The Facts as They Are. Some Examples of Astral Life. Astral Surroundings. The Desire Elemental. An Extension of Consciousness. The Work of the Helpers. Astral Visits. Visits Just Before Death. Thought-Bodies. Apparitions Announcing Death. Those Who Return to Help. Those Who Need Help. Those Desiring to Atone. The Earth-bound. Hauntings. Apparently Aimless Apparitions. Less Frequent Types. Astral Impressions. How to Meet a Ghost. Classification of Spiritualistic Phenomena. Personal Experiences. The Utilization of the Medium's Body. Clairvoyance in Spiritualism. Partial Materialization. Miscellaneous Phenomena. Visible Materializations. Our Attitude Towards Spiritualism. The Heaven World. The Nature of the Evidence. How Clairvoyance is Developed. Index. The Objects of the Theosophical Society.

THE LIFE RADIANT. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston. Price, $1.

The author sets forth in beautiful language that the Life Radiant is that transfiguration of the ordinary daily events and circumstances which lifts them to the spiritual plane, and sees them as the signs and the indications of the divine leading. Every circumstance thus becomes a part of revelation, and to constantly live in this illuminated atmosphere is to invest all experiences with a kind of magical enchantment. Life prefigures before us a spiritual drama in which we are at once the actors and the spectators.

In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration.

THE NATURE CURE BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS. Illustrated. A Bridge from the Old to the New. The Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. By M. E. Conger, M. D., Assisted by Mrs. Rosamond C. Conger, M. D. The Educator Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill. Price, bound in fine English cloth, $2; in neat, substantial cloth, $1.50.

This work presents in a plain concise manner home treatment for nearly all the diseases to which the human frame is heir. The author says:

"The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

"Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of the Nature Cure.

"The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as Nature Cure.

"Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. Nature Cure will lead the way to certain success.

"The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building.
Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 25.
Admittance without examination.
Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week 1.75

Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

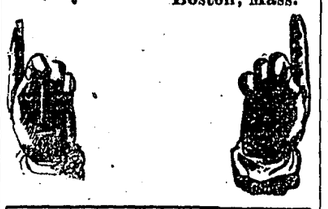
Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease



Free of Charge,

to all who will send their name, age, sex, and give leading symptoms, and all who will send $2.00 (Two Dollars) with their request for a diagnosis, I will diagnose their disease free, and will send them for the $2.00 two weeks' treatment, and the best book published on Spiritualism,

"The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism."
BY EPES SARGENT.

Cancers Cured or No Pay.
We Have the Best Method.

DR. C. E. WATKINS,
"THE WESTLAND,"
(Next to Symphony Hall.)
Boston, Mass.

SPIRITUALIST MEETINGS.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7.45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Mrs. Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, 560 East 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Light of the Truth Society meets each Sunday at the northwest corner of 47th street and Cottage Grove avenue. Conference at 3 p. m., and lecture and tests at 8 o'clock. Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union holds meetings at Hopkins' Hall, 628 West Sixty-third street, every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Conference in the afternoon at 3. The Ladies' Auxiliary meets every Thursday afternoon at same number. Harry J. Moore, lecturer.

New Thought services conducted by Julia M. Learnered, at 7:30 o'clock every Sunday evening, at 720 West Madison street, third floor.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 7:30 in Garfield Turner Hall, corner of Garfield and Larrabee streets. Mrs. Lizzie Swensen and Frank Joseph, mediums.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 962 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Church, Licht und Wahrheit, meeting every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in Wicker Park Hall, 501 W. North avenue. Lecture and tests by Mrs. Th. Loll and Mrs. J. Villroak.

Church of the Spirit Communion, Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Conference and messages at 3 p. m.; lecture at 8 p. m. Messages by H. F. Coates and others. Good music.

The Spiritual Unity Society holds meetings every Sunday at 3 and 7:30 p. m. at 207 Lincoln avenue. Lecture and tests by Prof. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Rising Sun Spiritual Mission holds its meetings every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:45. Sunday school at 1:30. Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. All welcome.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer. Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 523 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

Church of the Spirit, Schiller Building, 109 East Randolph street, conducted by Prof. Wm. Fitch Ruffle. Services every Sunday at 11 a. m. Brief address, closing with readings for all. 3 p. m., brief address, followed by tests and mental telepathic demonstrations. Speakers and mediums invited. 8 p. m., address, followed by messages.

The Universal Occult Society holds its meetings at No. 77 East Thirty-first street, Hall "C," every Sunday afternoon and evening, the Hon. Robert Gilray pastor. Good mediums to give messages. Conference at 3 p. m. Regular service at 8 p. m.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

MISS MAE HUNT.

Trance Medium and Lecturer, is located at 205 Turk st., San Francisco, Cal. Readings including three questions by mail, $1.00. 767tf

ELTON E. HEDRICK,

ASTROLOGER.—Vocation, business speculation, matrimony, changes, travel, all affairs of life. Fee $2.00. Send date of birth as near the hour as possible. Address, 2631 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. 775

Astrologist and Clairvoyant.

Send sex, date of birth (hour if possible), with 25 cts., and two cents for return postage, for partial reading. THERESE DUANE, box 87, Berkeley, Cal. Get your children's Horoscopes.

DON'T READ THIS.

If sick write to me, and I will give you a free examination. I want no leading symptom. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Send name, age, sex, complexion, weight and 10 cts. in stamps or silver, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth many dollars to you. Be sure and write your own letter. Address.

FRANCES L. LOUCKS,
85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

YOUR FORTUNE

Typewritten and sent FREE if you will send your birth-date and three stamps for mailing expenses. I have astonished thousands with my wonderfully correct reading of their life, past and future. I correctly reveal your future love affairs, business success, marriage mate, etc., and give advice on all affairs. Address, SHAGREN, Dept. T.B., 2152, San Francisco, Cal.

Institute of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics: can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to

E. D. BABBITT, M. D., Geneva, N. Y.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

The oldest and best known physician now in practice. His cures are wonderful; his examinations free to all who send him name, age, sex and lock of hair, and six cents in stamps. He doesn't require any leading symptoms. He cures weak men. Address,

DR. J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
Lock Box 1203, Stoneham, Mass.

MILLER'S MAGIC MIRRORS

A Successful Road to Mediumship.

Indorsed by leading Spiritualists as developers of different phases of mediumship, especially Clairvoyance. Our mirrors are chemically treated and very sensitive to spiritual elements. With a little patience you can not fail to develop your phase of mediumship. Price, $3.00. Horoscopes written for $1.00. Give date of birth, year, and where born. W. H. MILLER, P. O. Box 163, Canton, Ohio. 756m3

BIOCHEMISTRY.

The Natural Law of Cure.
BIOPLASMA.
The Life of the Blood.
By DR. GEO. W. CAREY,

"The Biochemic System of Medicine." New course of instructions in the science of Biochemistry, now ready. Send 2 cent stamp for circular. Address,

The Chemistry of Life Co.,
837 Summer St., W. Somerville, Mass

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual consciousness selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

Force and Matter

By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

MOLLIE FANCHER,

The Brooklyn Enigma.

An authentic statement of facts in the life of Mary J. Fancher, the psychological marvel of the nineteenth century. Unimpeachable testimony of many witnesses. By Abram H. Dailey. With illustrations. Price, cloth, $1.50.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual consciousness selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

C. WALTER LYNN,

THE Eminent Healer
and
Gifted Psychic.
Health Restored by Common Sense Methods.

For the Cure of Mental and Physical Ailments.

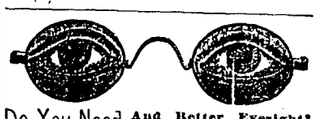
OBSESSION CURED

For Free Diagnosis of Disease, send five two-cent stamps, age, name, sex, and own handwriting.

Readings and Business Advice, $1, and Two Stamps.

Address 784 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.



Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,

230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Call

Do You Need Spectacles And Better Eyesight? I can help you. I will fit your eyes by Clairvoyance and spirit assistance at your own home with the improved melted pebble lenses, to see near and at a distance. Please write for illustrated circular, showing styles and prices. Also, my spirit method of treating that restores lost vision and impaired eyesight. I guarantee to fit your eyes, and safe delivery by mail.
SAMPLE FREE.—Sufficient magnetized Compound for four oz. cures sore eyes, restores the eyes to normal vision. Ten cents for postage.
B. F. POOLE.
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known." He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). It teaches you how to penetrate the veil of sense and matter, converse with spirits, read the crystal, see the future, prophesy and attain illumination, and be a Yogis. "All students will do well to study this excellent volume. —W. J. Colville. "It is a revelation "—Light. "Best work on the subject."—Mind. "Marvelous—Epoch-making."—Lillian Whiting.

SPIRIT WORLD, by Garfield, cloth, 50 cents.

AURAS AND COLORS—With exhaustive dictionary of color meanings. A unique book for unique people. Price 50 cents.

PSYCHOMETRY—The first and only book which teaches the science so that you can practice it. Price, 50 cents.

EASY LESSONS in Inspiration Clairvoyance and Psychometry. Price, 50 cents.

REALIZATION—How to enter the super-consciousness and be a Yogis. Price, 25 cents.

DIVINATION—A Ms. series on how to divine hidden things, find lost treasures, become a seer. Price, $1.00.

CRYSTALS for crystal-gazing, a new lot at $2.25 each, postage prepaid.

HOW TO REMEMBER PAST LIVES—A Ms. series on this fascinating subject. Price, $1.00.

Send for Prospectus of "The College of Divine Science and Realization of Divinity." Reduced tuition. The only one of its kind in the world.

J. C. F. GRUMBINE,
1285 Commonwealth Ave.,
Boston, Mass.

LISBETH.

An Interesting Story of Two Worlds.

Elevating, Fascinating, Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price $1.00.

THE HARMONIC SERIES.

Harmonics of Evolution (Florence Huntley),	Vol. I.,	$2.00
THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME,	Vol. II.,	2.00
The Dream Child,		75

These works have made a profound impression on the most advanced and progressive intelligence of the age. In the field of Psychical Research it can be said truthfully that they have created a veritable "Cyclone" of interest and discussion. Their subject matter and simplicity of expression make them intensely interesting and fascinatingly attractive to every one who can understand the simplest English. They have made simple and clear the most difficult problems of human life, and carry a special message to all who love the truth.

The Great Psychological Crime—Contents—Part I.

Psychological Crime; New Definitions; Pertinent Admissions; What Is Hypnotism; The Deadly Parallel; Man and His Two Organisms; Physiology and Pathology of Hypnotism; "Auto-Hypnotism," a Misnomer; "Suggestion," a Lexicological Libel; Independent Suggestion, a Fact; Hypnotism and the Three Brains; Does Hypnotism Cure? A Violation of Natural Law; True Suggestion and Therapeutic Faith; Post-Mortem Hypnotism; What of the Hypnotist?

Part II.

A Risk and a Duty; Other Definitions; Significant Admissions; Facts Demonstrated; Spiritual Mediumship Analyzed and Classified; The Principle Involved; "Automatic, Physical Mediumship" Impossible; Neither a "Gift" Nor a "Power"; The Destructive Principle in Mediumship; Mediumship and Morality; Mediumship and Martyrdom; Mediumship and "Affinity"; Mediumship and Emotionalism; Mediums and Their Motives; Mediumship and Insanity.

Part III.

The Genesis of "Hell"; The Way of Death; In Perspective; Individual Immortality; On What It Depends; Self-Control, the Application; The Line of Despair and the Powers of Darkness; The Law of Spiritual Gravity; Admonitions and Suggestions.

Supplemental.

The Value of "Theories"; Differences and Distinctions; Transmigration; Transubstantiation; Reincarnation; Metempsychosis; Self-Perpetuation; Conditional Immortality; Inherent Immortality; Individual Extinction; Psychical Reinvesture.

Harmonics of Evolution—Contents.

Preliminary Statement; There Is No Death; Life After Physical Death Is Scientifically Demonstrable; Life Here and Hereafter Has a Common Development and a Common Purpose; The Scope, Method and Purpose; The Genesis of Physical Life; The Spiritual Basis of Evolution; The "Law of Natural Selection"; The Natural Law of Selection; A Question in Science; The Completion of an Individual; Masculine Will and Feminine Desire; The Struggle for Happiness; Masculine Reason and Feminine Intuition; The Spiritual Basis of Love; Natural Science Corroborated; Natural Marriage; Legal Marriage; Divorce; True Marriage, Mathematics, Harmonics, Ethics.

Handsomely Bound.

Send for Circular.

Address all orders to
THE INDO-AMERICAN BOOK CO.,
19 to 27 North Kedzie Ave., Chicago.

YOU CANNOT AFford to miss an issue of this paper, with its wealth of SPIRITUAL LITERATURE.

The Progressive Thinker.

SEND YOUR SUBscription in at once, and keep pace with all that is transpiring in the ranks.

VOL. 30 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 27, 1904. NO. 770

SPIRITUALISM IS A TRUTH.

"One truth is clear--whatever is, is right." Pope.

"I long to know the truth hereof at large." Shakespeare.

"Let us make truth catching instead of falsehood and disease." Ingersoll.

"Truth depends on, or is only arrived at by a legitimate deduction from all the facts which are truly material." Coleridge.

"Plows, to go true, depend much upon the truth of the iron." Mortimer.

"Truth bears the torch in the search for truth." Lucretius.

Let us love our cause and dare to advocate its truth and decry fraud. If we have the pure it cannot be destroyed in the crucible of reason and fair discussion. It will only thrive, and expand more rapidly.

TRUTH IS IMPERISHABLE.

"My mouth shall speak the truth." Prov. viii., 7.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." William Cullen Bryant.

"To have truth and not live it is like having lungs and refusing to breathe."

"However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully frequently, and fearlessly discussed it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth." John Stuart Mill.

The Bell Witch Mystery

The following is the only full and explicit account of the "Bell Witch Mystery," that has ever been published. It certainly is a thrilling narrative, and carries one into an interesting domain of the occult. While in some respects it reads like a fairy tale, we have reason to believe that Mr. Wiltse, the writer, has obtained information that is thoroughly reliable, illustrating the often reiterated fact that no one in particular has a cinch on those laws that enable spirits to communicate with mortals.

To the Editor:—Enclosed find clipping from the Chattanooga Daily News of August 6, which I think, if your valuable space allowed, would prove very interesting to your numerous readers. The events chronicled antedate the ushering in of Modern Spiritualism by 31 years, and the manifestations were of a more striking nature than any that have since occurred in any one family, so far as I know. Mr. H. M. Wiltse, who has written the article, is one of the editors of the News. He is no Spiritualist. I know him personally to be a truthful man, and a painstaking newsgatherer.

He derived his story from first hands, being well acquainted with the people of the neighborhood where these wonderful manifestations took place.

Could this have been an effort of the spirit world to bring to mankind the knowledge to which we did not attain until many years thereafter?

PAUL R. ALBERT.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

The most celebrated and the most interesting witch sensation ever known in the south; indeed probably the most puzzling ever known anywhere, occurred in Robertson county, Tennessee, commencing in 1817 and continuing from time to time during a period of fifty-five years.

That the phenomena described were conscientiously thought to have been real, and substantially as detailed, there is no doubt whatever. There are yet living those who, as children, heard of the demonstrations and at least one who, as children, heard of the demonstrations, and at least one who, while a baby, suffered chastisement by the chief of the witches. To the good character of the family which was most afflicted by the persecutions, and of the people who have given testimony in regard to the affair, leading men and women, doctors, lawyers and preachers of the time, have left abundant testimony.

John Bell, with his wife, several children and some slaves, removed from North Carolina in 1804, and settled on Red River, in Robertson county, Tennessee, purchasing 1,000 acres of rich land. His daughter, Bessie, was a winsome and beautiful girl. She was sent to the best school in the neighborhood, and received what was then considered a good education.

The first mysterious occurrence about the Bell premises was in 1817. Mr. Bell was walking through a cornfield with a gun when he saw a strange appearing animal sitting between two rows of the corn and steadfastly gazing at him. Concluding that it was a rascal dog he fired at it, but missed, and it ran away. Some days later his son, Drew, saw a bird which he at first took to be a turkey, and ran to the house for a gun, but when he returned and got within range the bird assumed an entirely unheard of aspect, great size, and calmly flew away.

Then commenced a series of strange rappings at the door and on the walls of the house; and a little later the same noises were repeatedly heard in the house.

Dean, a slave, reported that a black dog came into the road in front of him every night when he went to his cabin, trotted in front of him to the door, and then disappeared.

Something that sounded like rats gnawing at the bedposts disturbed the boys during their sleep, then followed sounds like dogs fighting in the room, and after that they heard exact imitations of the noises which would be produced by dragging trace chains over the floor. As soon as a candle was lighted the noises ceased.

The room of Bessie, the young daughter of Mr. Bell, was also invaded and Mr. Bell was seized with a suffening of the tongue, which affected him as if a small stick had been placed endwise across his mouth, pressing against both cheeks until they protruded. During these attacks he could not eat.

Strict secrecy was maintained by the family for a considerable time, but at last it was thought best to confide their troubles to their excellent neighbors, James Johnson and his wife. They were invited to pass a night at the house and willingly accepted the invitation. After the story of their affliction had been related Mr. Johnson led in the usual family devotions, and in his prayer earnestly besought an explanation of the mystery—or that the annoyances might cease. After the good man and his wife had gone to bed the noises were heard in their room, and the bed clothing was snatched from over them. Mr. Johnson sat up and asked the presence, if presence there were, to make itself visible and state the nature of his errand the object of the visitations. He was vouchsafed no sort of satisfaction, and the next morning he earnestly advised Mr. Bell to make his troubles public.

This was done and it was not long afterwards that the disturbed began to talk.

One of the distinguishing characteristics of this witch, as it was called, was that it never but once assumed human form, as most witches do. It was suspected, at times, of taking the forms of birds, beasts and fishes and indeed openly boasted of the power to be all things—birds, beast, fish or human. It was fond of appearing in the form of a rabbit, which would hop into the road and exhibit itself to nearly every passerby. To this day many people in that section could not be induced for any consideration to eat the flesh of a rabbit which had worn a black spot upon the left hind foot—for that is the witch mark. But human form the mysterious being never took save once, when Betsey Bell, while walking among the trees with some children, saw something which appeared to her to be a pretty little girl dressed in green, hanging to the limb of a tall oak tree, and swinging herself to and fro. But it had a very human voice. At first, however, this was but a whistle, heard in feeble response to questions after many attempts by many people to secure an answer to interrogatories. After the whistle came a faint whisper and the first intelligible answer that has been recorded was, "I am a spirit; I was once very happy, but have been disturbed."

Other answers, some of them extremely ludicrous, were given to questions concerning the identity of this voice, this spirit, this thing, this "shape that shape had none distinguishable in member, joint or limb," or whatever it may have been, at different times and in different places.

Once it stated that it was the spirit of a person who had been buried in the woods nearby, and that the bones had been removed, and one of the teeth had been lost under the floor of the Bell house. It was after that tooth.

In the neighborhood lived a kind-hearted but very eccentric and voluble woman, named Kate Batts, who was the wife of a highly respected and prosperous citizen. Kate did strange things at times, and by the free use of her sharp tongue made enemies. One day the Reverend James Gunn undertook to investigate the mystery, and in the most earnest way asked the voice to reveal its identity, and the answer was that if the truth must be known it was nothing but "Old Kate Batts' witch," and that it was determined to torment "Old Jack Bell" out of his life.

From this circumstance the tormentor became known throughout the neighborhood as Kate, and for convenience that name will be used hereafter to designate the mysterious disturber of the peace and dignity of the country around about the Bell home.

After Kate had developed the power of speech sufficiently she gave an exhibition of her powers by repeating Mr. Johnson's prayer upon the occasion of the first visit that he made to the Bell home, after the demonstrations commenced, and also singing the song which had been sung upon that occasion. She designated Mr. Johnson as Old Sugarmouth, and was fond of saying, "Lord, how sweet Old Sugarmouth prays. How I do love to hear him"

Kate made many visits to the North Carolina neighborhood from which the Bell family had emigrated, and always brough back an interesting budget of news. She proved a reliable reporter, too, although her visits sometimes lasted only a day, or even less time, including the time consumed in going and returning.

She was very kind to Mrs. Bell, whom she called Old Luce, but she evinced no affection for any other member of the family, while her sentiments regarding Mr. Bell were those of unconcealed and deadly hatred. It is thought to this day that her persecutions drove him to a premature death the victim of an unseen enemy's malevolence; a good man crucified upon the cross of human incapacity to comprehend the things that are but dreamt of in our philosophy.

She became an inveterate neighborhood tattler and informer, and was more dreaded for her gossipy propensities than the worst merely human gossip that ever wagged an unruly tongue.

Joshua Gardner was a school teacher in the Bell neighborhood, of excellent character and reputation. He was paying his addresses to pretty Bessie Bell, and one of the chiefest ambitions of the witch seems to have been to prevent the marriage. And in this she was successful, as will be seen.

The first intimation of her desire to interfere with the affairs of this young couple came in the sound of earnest pleading whispers, "Please, Betsey Bell, don't marry Joshua Gardner! Please Betsy Bell, don't marry Joshua Gardner!"

After Kate had become an established fact, a recognized institution in the neighborhood, a witch family appeared upon the scene, and the terror which her antics had inspired was now more than quadrupled. This family gave a series of concerts throughout the neighborhood, in which all kinds of songs, from sacred to shockingly profane, and from profane to superlatively obscene, were sung.

The sacred songs were often rendered as by a quartet of the sweetest female voices.

There were four members of this family, known respectively as Black Dog, Mathematics Cypocryphy, and Jerusalem. Black Dog officiated as the head of the family and leader of the orchestra. At times they made noises resembling those of drunken men in fierce brawl, and could even cause the room to reek with the odor of whisky, when there was not known to be a drop of whisky about the place. But fortunately the family organization was of short duration. It was Kate who held the boards, year after year, decade after decade, to the terror of the community and the mystification of all who had opportunity to investigate the mystery.

Kate greatly disliked negroes, and once said: "I despise the smell of a nigger. The scent makes me sick."

She did not visit the cabins of the negroes, and that was well, else some of them would most likely have been frightened to death. A house boy at the Bell home, whose name was Harry, had the bad habit of being often late about building fires in the mornings. He had been repeatedly rebuked and threatened for his remissness, and one day when Mr. Bell was expostulating with him, Kate said, "Never mind, Old Jack; don't fret. I will attend to that rascal next time."

She was true to her word. A few days later Harry was tardy again, and Mr. Bell was scolding him, when Kate interrupted with, "Hold on, Old Jack! Didn't I tell you not to pester? I will attend to this nigger."

The boy was at the time kneeling in front of the hearth, making preparations to light the fire. The unseen avenger of his many sins of omission seized him by the nape of the neck and threshed him until he yelled again and again for mercy. The blows were distinctly heard, and sounded like the noise made by striking a person with a small board.

Mrs. Bell, knowing Kate's aversion for colored people, once secreted a black girl named Anky in a trundle-bed under her own, adjusting a counterpane in such a way as to hide the trundle-bed entirely from sight, thinking that it would serve to keep the witch away, for she had company, and did not wish to be disturbed. But the ruse did not work well. While the room was full of visitors the witch was distinctly heard, saying, "There's a d—d nigger in this house. It's Anky; I smell her under the bed, and she's got to get out."

Then, under the bed, a noise was heard like that of a person hawking and spitting. Immediately Anky burst out from her hiding place in a pitiable state of frigat, and covered with what seemed to be spittle or foam. She exclaimed to her mistress, "The witch is trying to spit me to death." Then Kate said to Mrs. Bell, "Luce, did you bring that nigger in here?"

Mrs. Bell admitted that she had hidden the girl there, but made the excuse that she allowed her to go under there, where she would be out of the way, so that she might hear Kate talk and sing.

"I thought so," replied Kate. "I guess she heard me. Nobody but you, Luce, would have thought of such a smart trick as that, and if anybody else had done it I would have killed the d—d nigger. Lord Jesus, I won't get over that smell in a month."

On an occasion Calvin Johnson, a man well known as being rigidly honest and truthful, asked Kate to shake hands with him. She agreed to do so upon condition that he would solemnly promise not to grasp her hand. He promised, and stated that he felt a touch like that of a lady's hand in his. His brother tried to induce her to shake hands with him, but she flatly refused, saying: "I know you, Jake Johnson; you are a grand rascal trying to find me out, and I won't trust you."

William Porter was a prominent and highly respected citizen of that section, and prosperous bachelor. He sometimes went to the Bell home and remained over night, partly to gratify his curiosity and partly to give the family an additional sense of seecurity.

One night he felt the bed cover drawn from over him, and the familiar voice of the witch said, "Billy, I have come to sleep with you and keep you warm."

"Well, Kate, if you are going to sleep with me, you must behave yourself," replied Porter.

The cover was drawn away from him and formed into a roll at the side of the bed. He seized the roll and started for the fire, fancying that he could burn the witch and rid his friends at once of a burden that was becoming unbearable. But the load became so heavy before he got to the fire that he was glad to lay it down, and then it emitted so foul an odor that he rushed from the room into the fresh air, and rejoiced at his escape. When he returned nothing remained but the bed clothing. Both witch and roll had vanished.

Joel Johnson, who sometimes stayed with the Bells during their trouble, became tired of having the bed clothing pulled off from him, and one night made some observations upon the subject which were not couched in the politest nor the gentlest language, addressing himself directly to the witch.

"You little rascal, I'll let you know who you are talking to," said that personage or presence, and administered to him a lusty spanking.

In those days a good many Shakers traveled through that locality, trading with the people. Two of them often stopped at the Bell home, and were always made welcome. One day when they were seen approaching, the witch voice was heard to say: "Them d—d Shakers shan't stop this time."

Then it assumed the tone of the negro boy, Henry, who was accustomed to stir the dogs on in pursuit of hogs and breachy stock. The voice "set the dogs on" the Shakers, and drove them off in a state of great fright.

Mrs. Bell had a prolonged sickness, and became very weak. One day Kate said to her: "Luce, poor Luce, how do you feel now? Hold out your hands, Luce, and I will give you something."

The lady held out her hands and a lot of hazelnuts were dropped from above, into them. They were laid aside, and the voice said: "Luce, way don't you eat the hazelnuts?"

Mrs. Bell replied that she could not crack them. "Well, I will crack some for you," said the voice. A sound like that made in cracking these nuts immediately followed, and a supply of cracked nuts dropped upon the bed, within Mrs. Bell's reach.

Company was present upon this occasion, and the ceiling was examined, without revealing the slightest explanation of the occurrence.

One morning when Mr. Bell and his son were on their way to the hog-pen the elder man's shoe was suddenly jerked off. The son replaced it, tying the strings into a double hard knot. After they had gone on a few steps the other shoe flew off. It was replaced by the son, and securely fastened. While they were returning to the house both of the shoes were jerked off, and Mr. Bell was violently slapped in the face by an unseen hand. His face commenced to undergo violent contortions, then his whole body was affected in the same way, and soon the shoes were snatched from his feet as fast as the son could replace them. The air, meantime, was made vocal with words of revilement and ribald song.

It was upon this occasion that Mr. Bell's spirit, which had bravely and firmly borne up under his long persecution, first seemed to break. He predicted that his days upon the earth would be few, and firmly prayed that the affliction might pass from him. But the prayer was not answered. He sickened upon reaching the house, and never left it again. He lingered for weeks, the witch all of the time persecuting him with some manifestation of its hatred.

One morning, when he failed to awake at the usual time, his wife went to his bed and found him in a heavy stupor. The family was summoned, and when the son who had been administering medicine went to get a dose, he found that the bottle had been removed, and a smoky-looking phial, half-full of a dark, sinister-looking liquid had been left in its place.

Doctor George Hopson, of Port Royal, a nearby hamlet, was sent for and hastily appeared at the bedside. Neighbors were called in, and among those who were present were John Johnson, Alexander Gunn, and Frank R. Miles.

Kate did not fail to attend, and said jeeringly, "It's no use for you to try to relieve Old Jack. I have got him this time. He will never get up from that bed again."

Asked about the phial she said: "I put it there, and gave Old Jack a big dose out of it last night, while he was asleep, which fixed him."

The physician could not tell what was in the vial. Some of it was forced into a cat's mouth, and the animal died in convulsions soon afterwards.

Before the death of Mr. Bell, Kate indulged in a good deal of joyous revelry and song, but after he had breathed his last she held her peace until the funeral had occurred. Mr. Bell died in the morning of December 20, 1820. The burial services were conducted by three clergymen, of wide local distinction, one of them, Rev. Sugg Fort, being a member of a family which has for long been one of the most distinguished in the south, and is yet represented by some of the country's best known and wealthiest families. The other clergymen were Reverends James and Thomas Gunn. After the grave had been filled, and the family had turned to leave, Kate commenced to sing a lively, flippant air, of which the refrain was, "Row me up some brandy, O."

The fame of the witch spread over the whole country. After the death of Mr. Bell she had little to say, and in the spring of 1821 disappeared, or went out of business perhaps, would be a better expression, and was heard no more during a period of seven years.

It bade Mrs. Bell an affectionate adieu, and stated that it would not appear during that period of time.

In February, 1823, it reappeared, and the first intimation of its presence was about the same as the first that it gave upon its first arrival—scratching at the doors, then knocking, and then pulling the bedding from sleeping people. The first public demonstration that it gave after the return was upon the occasion of a great fishing excursion, when pretty nearly everybody in the neighborhood, white and black, had gone to the river for a day's sport. Kate put in her appearance there as a big fish, and thoroughly aroused all of the fear and superstition which had begun to die out since her departure.

She had given no attention to the affairs of Bessie Bell and Joshua Gardner, and the young people had practically forgotten her objections to their marriage, had become engaged and the wedding day had been fixed. On this fateful fishing day, however, Kate suddenly approached them and said to Bessie in the old, pleading tones which she had assumed years before when addressing the girl upon the same subject: "Please, Bessie Bell, don't have Joshua Gardner." It is pitiful to relate that Bessie's terror and superstition at last persuaded her into compliance with the wishes of the witch, and the match was broken off.

Now, witch conjurers, witch doctors, detectives, pretenders, curiosity-inspired people and all classes commenced to flock to the Bell neighborhood as they had done in the days before Kate's disappearance. During the lifetime of Mr. Bell the family had always flatly refused to accept compensation for entertainment to those who came to investigate the witch's performances. There seems, therefore, to have been no ground for the suspicion which some people are said to have entertained that the demonstrations were devised and executed by the Bells for notoriety and profit.

Because they would accept no pay, and it was known that the resources of no family in that country at that time were equal to such a tax, many parties went with all the necessary equipments for camping out. One such, which went from Nashville, was headed by General Andrew Jackson. They had a wagon well loaded with a tent and ample provisions. The men rode on horseback. They were following the wagon when the near proximity of the Bell place was signalized by an event. The team suddenly stopped, without apparent cause or provocation. The road was perfectly smooth and level, but although the animals pulled with all of their might under the stimulus of the driver's voice and whip, they could not move the vehicle an inch. By direction of the general the men dismounted and put shoulders to the wheels. It was of no avail. The wheels were removed, examined and found to be in normal condition as was every part of the wagon. Suddenly the general threw up his hands and exclaimed, "By the Eternal, boys, it's the witch!"

Then proceeded from the bushes at the roadside a voice, saying, "All right, general; let the wagon move on. I will see you again to-night."

The general remarked as the party proceeded, the team having started of their own accord, that this sort of think was worse than fighting the British.

The party stopped at the Bell home and were hospitably received. It chanced that a "witch layer" was present, who boasted much of his wonderful power and prowess. He had a horse-pistol, which was loaded with a silver bullet. He also had the tip of a black cat's tail. He stated that he had shot the cat from which it was taken with a silver bullet, while sitting on a woman's coffin. This, of course, gave it magic. By stroking the bit of tail on his nose he could produce a light and flash it upon a witch, in the darkest night, but the witch could be seen only by himself.

Late in the night Gen. Jackson whispered to a friend that the fellow was a great coward, and said he wished "the thing" would appear, so that they could see him run. Soon light footfalls were heard, and a voice said: "All right, general; I am on hand, ready for business." Then it addressed the witch layer, saying: "Now, Mr. Smarty, here I am. Shoot!"

The fellow stroked his nose with the tip of the black cat's tail, took aim, pulled the trigger of his pistol, but it failed to go off. He was told by the witch to try again. He tried again, with the same result.

"Now, it is my time," said the witch; "look out, you old coward and fraud, I'll teach you a lesson."

Sounds were then heard as if some person was slapping another with the open hand.

The magician commenced to cavort about the room, screaming, as if in much agony: "O, my nose, my nose! The devil has got me! O, lordy, he nas got me by the nose!"

Then the door flew open, as if of its own volition, and the witch layer rushed out and ran away, yelling like mad all the time. The witch joined in the general roar of laughter, and said: "Lord Jesus, how the old devil did run and beg. I'll bet he won't come here again with his old horse-pistol, to shoot me." Then it promised to return the next night and show another rascal who, it asserted was in the party. But the party left for Nashville the next day. Perhaps they felt anxiety as to where the lightning might strike.

Kate was fond of unlacing Bessie Bell's shoes, and sometimes asked permission to do so, following the request by suddenly jerking them from the girl's feet.

One girl in the neighborhood had heard that a four-leaf clover would enable the possessor to see a witch, and hunted diligently for the talisman, but for a long time without success. Going to visit some friends across the Kentucky line she was so fortunate as to find the long-sought prize. She secreted it in her bosom, and told no one of her good fortune. The next day she went home, and soon after her arrival there Kate said to her: "Lord Jesus, Theney, what a fool you have made of yourself. You went all the way to Old Man Placely's to hunt a four-leaf clover. You brought it home secretly in your bosom, believing that it would make you able to see me. But you will never be smart enough for that. Ha, ha, ha!"

Reynolds Powell and Allen Bell slept at the Bell house one night in 1861. They left the doors open, in order that they might have plenty of fresh air. The dog, which was outside, suddenly commenced to bark furiously, and soon after ran into the house, snapping and snarling. He soon ran out again. In an hour or so the bolster was violently jerked from under the sleepers' heads. They searched, but found nothing, then fastened the door. They put the bolster in place, laid their heads upon it firmly, and with all their strength held onto it with their hands. But it was quickly torn from their grasp and thrown upon their heads.

As late as 1872 two young ladies of highest character, encountered an experience near the Bell place which they feel positive arose from the same source that gave origin to the demonstrations which continued from 1817 to 1861. But dreading notoriety, they refused to divulge the nature of their adventure, and also refused to allow the use of their names,

Scores of people who live in that vicinity to-day have testified in writing to the nigh character of many who left behind them testimony of personal experiences with the witch.

A literary woman of the writer's acquaintance, whose social standing is the highest, and who lives only a short distance from the Bell place, says that she knew Frank R. Miles, one of the men who saw and heard many of the demonstrations, and vouches for him as a man of perfect reliability. She states, too, that members of her own family connection told her of numerous instances of these demonstrations which she would not like to repeat, so great a tax do they impose upon human credulity.

She states that a portion of the Bell kitchen is yet standing, and is an ob-

(Continued on page 7.)

MATERIALIZATIONS.

We take pleasure in spreading before our readers this week, the views of Mr. W. J. Colville. His views should be read in connection with those expressed by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, in a former issue of the paper. Both are leading workers in our ranks, and their views will be read with special interest.

The word materialization, like incarnation, means, strictly speaking, a manifestation of spiritual or psychic force rendered objective to physical sense. Keeping this definition clearly before us, we shall not find it difficult to discriminate between subjective, objective and superjective phenomena, though we are well aware that the third term we employ is by no means so generally used as the two preceding.

Subjective experiences, which are extremely common are in the strictest sense mediumistic, and they imply the possession of an involuntary phase of mediumship, but though sub-volitional, not necessarily unwelcome. In this first category we include all such instinctive sensitiveness as enables children and delicately organized persons in general, to become aware that they are in touch with a subtler grade of substance and with entities living in another realm than that usually perceived by the average mass of human beings by whom these sensitives are surrounded.

To such people materialization has no distinctive message, as they do not require external phenomena to reveal to them what they perceive without its aid. But as the great majority of non-sensitive people, who are to be encountered at every turn, desire some direct proof of spirit communion if they interest themselves at all in psychical investigation, objective phenomena, which we place in the second category becomes necessary for their enilghtenment, and this mode of demonstrating spiritual reality ranges all the way from mysterious noises, such as the famous "Hydesville rappings," to what is technically designated "full-form materialization."

With the third division of psychic revelation that which pertains to super-consciousness—only those can be directly concerned who are aware of conscious exaltation, at least at intervals, far beyond the common level of every-day sense observation.

Dismissing the first and third categories and confining our attention immediately to the second, we will seek to explain by what process materialization in any degree can be accomplished. Directly we inquire into the constitution of matter we confront the theory of atoms, but no sooner do we imagine that we have now reached an indestructible ultimate than some authoritative voice in the field of scientific research shatters the idea of ultimate atoms into fragments by deducing that every atom is decomposable into electrons which in turn may be disposed of by the suggestion that they also may be resolvable into something else.

Primum mobile, or the primordial substance designated etheria by some schools of occultists, certainly exists, but it is beyond the present scope of psychical investigation to discern and analyze it. Whether matter or substance be the correct term to employ when referring to this something out of which all definitely differentiated things are made, is an open question, but leaving aside the inquiry as to a name, it is admitted on every side that some force or energy resides in the universe which responds to the manipulative touch of some intelligence adequate to direct its movements.

Alchemy or occult chemistry is undoubtedly a science, and by means of it all genuine feats of magic are performed. Materialization is a magical act pertaining to a realm of intelligence beyond the physical and beyond that mental or intellectual groove in which external scientists dogmatically dwell. Unless it be admitted that human will has power to dominate the prime substance out of which organisms are constructed, no theory of materialization can be dated comprehensively. That there may be much simulated phenomena in various places we admit, and we are by no means averse to cautious investigation, but we do maintain that all that has ever been claimed for materialization is within the bounds of reason and can be philosophically accounted for. Ordinary observation suffices to convince the average student of human industry that an idea or mental concept always precedes external work as no object can be fashioned except in accordance with a pre-existing plan. Architecture is before building, and mental prototypes must precede any physical design submitted to a builder. All that we know as the gross matter of the most external world yields gradually to human persistence, until at length it is rendered completely subservient to the will of man.

When apparatus is first invented it is rude and clumsy, and ponderous in the extreme, and work can only be very imperfectly done by means of it. But after awhile apparatus becomes refined and when it is extremely delicate it does the most effective work as an agent of some directing intellect.

Beyond all stages of intellectual expression during which constantly refining physical apparatus is required is another, even a superphysical plane of activity where intelligence acts more directly upon substance and it is on that plane that magic is possible. Magicians on earth can do all that is claimed for spiritual entities who have recently left the fleshly body, therefore it is not unlikely that some phenomena witnessed at seances may be due to the determined psychic action of some one still on earth. But granting that this is the case, no ground whatever is cut from under any Spiritualistic edifice because there is always more power to act in the spiritual spheres than there can be embodied on earth. Nothing can be done by an incarnate entity which cannot be done by excarnate entities, but who the entity is, who is manifesting at any particular time must be decided by existing evidence. As we come to realize that there are no limits to the possibility of the manifestation of spirit, whose property it is to dominate matter, we shall cease to even greatly wonder at such transcendent evidences of spiritual domination as are displayed in "full form materialization" which it must not be forgotten, has been witnessed by Prof. A. R. Wallace and other eminent men of science under satisfactory test conditions.

The average circle or seance does not usually afford such conditions as are necessary for complete manifestation, therefore what is presented from a cabinet is very often extremely imperfect though not fraudulent. Even when a medium is entranced and made to personate an entity who is desirous of reaching friends among the sitters, there is no wilful deception on the part of anyone, but the manifestation is at best only a partial transformation. That there can be complete materialization we know to be true, but it is seldom accomplished except in places to which the general public can gain no access, and for the reason that more delicate conditions are necessary for its production than can be usually afforded outside the precints of specially set apart meeting places. As the atmosphere contains humanized particles in great abundance, it is often possible for spirits to partially build up the fac-simile of a human frame, but for purposes of exterior identification it is not necessary to fashion a complete structure with every organ belonging to a natural human body. We declare that it is quite possible for spiritual beings to do the very utmost which has ever been claimed for them, but the usual phenomena at seances is either a mediumistic person entranced and employed as an instrument of communication, or a sort of lay figure produced by the action of spiritual volition of just sufficient solidity or corporeality to serve for the purpose of a manifestation.

Far greater demonstrations are presumable in private circles sitting regularly two or three times per week than can possibly be afforded at promiscuous gatherings, therefore we strongly advise patient private investigation in preference to the desultory methods which often cause confusion and distrust.

W. J. COLVILLE.

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

It Is a Safety Valve.

THE OPEN COURT IS A SAFETY VALVE WHEREIN VARIOUS OPINIONS CAN BE EXPRESSED BY SPIRITUALISTS THEMSELVES, THE ANALYTICAL MIND WILL READ THE SAME, AND IN SO DOING WILL HAVE AN ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE EXACT STATUS OF OUR CAUSE. THE ONE WHO KNOWS THE FALSE AS WELL AS THE TRUE, IS WELL PREPARED TO FORM A CORRECT OPINION, WHILE THE ONE WHO KNOWS NOTHING BUT THE FALSE, IS ONE-SIDED, IS IGNORANT, AND INCAPABLE OF FORMING A CORRECT OPINION. HE, TOO, WHO HAS THE TRUTH ALONE, AND KNOWS NOTHING OF THE DECEPTION GOING ON IN OUR RANKS, CAN NOT CORRECTLY JUDGE OF THE CONDITION OF OUR CAUSE. IT IS NECESSARY TO KNOW THE BAD AS WELL AS THE GOOD, AND THEN A CORRECT ESTIMATE CAN BE MADE. THE OPEN COURT PRESENTS BOTH SIDES, AND IF YOU WILL CAREFULLY READ THE SAME, YOU WILL BE THE WISER AND BETTER THEREFOR. REALIZING FULLY BOTH THE GOOD AND THE BAD, THE TRUE AND THE FALSE, YOU CAN ACT UNDERSTANDINGLY IN FORMING AN OPINION, BUT NOT OTHERWISE.

FRAUD IS RAMPANT.

In Social, Religious, Commercial or Governmental Conditions.

To the Editor:—Much is being said and written on the ever-present subject of "Fraud in Mediumship."

I have just read the last contribution to the columns of your most excellent paper on that subject by Brother Loveland, which by very many may be regarded as an extinguisher; but to my mind nothing that I have yet seen, or read, or heard, has gotten down to bed rock of primary causation. Frand is rampant everywhere. Nothing that we know of in our social, religious, financial, commercial, or governmental systems is free from it. Fraud, as we know it, see it, and practice it has come and continues as a result of pre-existing and continuing conditions, and we will have it just so long as those conditions continue to exist; just as everything else comes and continues under the law of evolution.

Even the churches and ministers are full of it. Only recently a friend of the writer, who is a medium and a healer, had a patient—a fat, self-satisfied and arrogant minister, who prided himself on his ability to secure converts for his church, particularly among women. My friend discerned the man's true character, and frankly told him that he was a moral pervert, and recounted to him the gross evils which he was at that very time practicing almost daily, and got an admission from him that it was all true.

Thousands and indeed millions of people are now compelled to resort to fraud, perjury, theft, arson, murder and every wrong in the calendar of wrongs to get money in order that they may continue an existence, even though a miserable one. Now, what is the way out of all this?

What the world needs more than all else is better government.

There is no government in the world that is as good or as just to all of its people as it should be. Switzerland and New Zealand are leading the way to greater freedom and better government than any other lands on our planet. Why do we not learn of them? Mainly because of our arrogant and unreasoning partisanism.

It is said, and I think very truly, that our country produces in such abundance all the necessaries and comforts of life; that a much greater population than we have could be supplied with everything that life here can need or desire, if only the masses had the means to acquire what they need, and there were the facilities of distribution.

These facilities we undoubtedly have, so that in its last analysis it means only the means of acquiring. More is wasted and permitted to go to loss every year than would suffice to feed and clothe the needy poor throughout the length and breadth of our land.

But who is going to give to them, except a limited few in number without compensation in money?

It is also ascertained that any person with the physical strength to work from four to six hours a day, through from five to seven years, along industrial and productive lines, produces a sufficiency of necessities, which if it were stored up and preserved, would suffice to keep them in comfort all their lives. But why keep it?

Let all become producers along different lines of useful industries, and eliminate from our land all that is useless and harmful in its results. Let us have the Co-operative Commonwealth; community of interest; the welfare of each the interest of all; every one receiving their share in products of joint labor; none in want. Eliminate the tyranny of an unjust monetary system. Establish great supply houses where each and every one on the presentation of a certificate of service rendered can procure every necessity and comfort of life.

Let us have a currency that no one can steal or obtain unjustly, or if they did which they could not use, and which would benefit only the one to whom it was issued. Then what a wonderful transformation we would witness. Only the very best in every human soul would be educed or brought out. Self-help and co-operative helpfulness will revolutionize the world by mild and peaceful methods.

Fraud, deceit and indeed all crimes will pass away, and the world will become what it ought to be—a heaven on earth. Then we will become spiritualized to so great a degree that we will be enabled to walk the earth in daily and hourly communion with those we love, who have passed from the earth life and are now living the life immortal.

I have here given only a very meager outline of this great subject as I see it in my mind, but it will serve to show the way to a higher life through Spiritualism, to Socialism, here in the earth life; and to understand Spiritualism, we as recent converts to that most beautiful and inspiring philosophy, must in order to get it, begin at the beginning, which is the study of spiritual or psychic phenomena; that being to us the strong evidence, the enduring conviction, the truth of which nothing can overthrow. These phenomena as demonstrated by clairvoyance, clairaudience, the voices through the trumpet; the real forms and faces, as we saw them in the earth life, through materializations.

These phenomena are necessary to bring the certainty home to us; otherwise we must believe it only through faith, and what is evidence to others is not evidence to us; only the real is the convincing evidence. Your writer nas seen the real materializations, and has walked and talked with them, and conversed in regard to matters and things that occurred in my early life, wherein the materialized subject has recalled to my mind events, which had entirely passed from my mind, and has related past events which I had never had any knowledge of, as occurrences in our school days of long ago.

In the face of all these facts it is impossible for me to concur in the oft-repeated denials of materialization. Because, I say it boldly, that I know of my own positive knowledge.

PAUL DESTEN.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Surest Way to Suppress Fraud.

To the Editor:—While genuine mediumship, and genuine spirit phenomena, have been the glory and grandeur of Modern Spiritualism, the fraudulent and spurious have ever been its greatest curse; for the fraudulent is ever culated to undermine the genius of the spiritual philosophy, to generate distrust, and to otherwise reflect on the spiritual cause; although the spiritual cause is in no way responsible for it.

While, too, the genuine mediums are contributing their share to the grandeur and glory of Spiritualism, their names will live in history, and be remembered by all intelligent and broad-minded Spiritualists, with gratitude and respect; the wilfully fraudulent, who bring reproach upon Spiritualism for the money there is in it, will only be thought of with ignominy and contempt.

But some one has said, cover up the fraudulent, give it no publicity, lest the contagion of the iniquity abound, or the publicity of the offenders injure the cause.

This advice, I am sure, would not be in accordance with the wisdom or judgment of Solomon; nor like the wisdom or genius of The Progressive Thinker, which, from its first inception, while ever defending the genuine, would expose and condemn to the uttermost the wilfully fraudulent.

No legitimate cause could ever be injured by an exposure of crime, and no legitimate cause could ever be helped by a concealment of crime. It would, therefore, be an outrageous crime of any spiritual journal not to expose and condemn, to the uttermost, the crying evil of dishonest or pretended mediumship, when or wherever found.

The fearlessness with which The Progressive Thinker has always protested against dishonest or pretended mediumship is deserving of the world's congratulations. But this is only what might be expected of its editor, by those who know him best—as the genuine friend of genuine mediumship, but the veriest foe to frauds or spiritual impostors.

Spiritual imposture, like religious imposture, is greatly to be deplored, but how to stop the evil, is not by hiding it, or suggesting to the spiritual press the policy of concealing it, but by denouncing it as crime—unpardonable crime—in its editorial columns.

TO TRY TO HIDE SPIRITUAL FRAUD, WILL BE A GOOD WAY TO PLEASE THE SPIRITUAL FAKIR, BUT A BAD WAY TO PLEASE THE SPIRITUAL PUBLIC.

And, now that the subject of fraud is again aroused, especially since the recent exposure of Elsie Reynolds by Mrs. Laura M. Hyland (bless her), let the good work of exposure go on, which will meet the approval of all good people, and which, in the end, will prove the surest way to suppress spiritual fraud—to send the wilfully fraudulent to work, or to jail.

DR. R. GREER.

Chicago, Ill.

A COMPREHENSIVE EXPLANATION.

Letter From H. W. Richardson, President of the New York State Spiritualist Association, and One of the Most Prominent and Efficient Workers for the Cause of Truth in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—Permit me to say through the columns of The Progressive Thinker that the New York State Association of Spiritualists stands for honest mediumship and does not endorse, excuse or knowingly tolerate deception, trickery or fraud in connection with the practice of the God-given powers of mediumship. In thus voicing my own sentiments, I am certain that I voice the sentiments of every officer of our state association as well as of the worthy conscientious workers of the state.

No one feels more keenly than do we as state officials, the injustice to honest workers in our beloved cause, and the great injury to the growth and progress of the spiritual movement resulting from the deception and dishonesty which is sometimes practiced and palmed off as mediumship. And in so far as I am personally concerned, it would seem that my 20 years work in the cause, many times sacrificing business interests and denying myself the ordinary privileges of an occasional leisure hour, working without money and without price for Spiritualism, should be sufficient evidence of my integrity of purpose and of my loyalty to truth, and furthermore, it would seem that my activity as a member of the board of trustees of the Cassadaga Lake Association, in purging Lily Dale camp of fraudulent practices under the name of Spiritualism, were sufficient proof that I was not condoning fakism (and by the by I have experienced no change of heart in this direction since that time). Consequently I was indeed surprised to find in The Progressive Thinker, issue of August 13, page four, under the caption, "A Plea for Honesty," the following statement: "The state association of New York in giving expression to the wish that fakirs be let entirely alone forget the fundamental fact," etc., etc.

Now, Brother Francis, this statement as it will be generally understood, is misleading, for it will give the impression that we in the Empire state favor fraudulent mediumship—which is untrue.

To be sure we may sometimes be cheated or deceived, for we are only fallible beings, but we do not knowingly recognize or employ persons whom we believe are thus abusing and degrading mediumship; so that in this sense and to this extent we do intend to let fakirs alone. But the statement as published and the remarks in connection therewith, as it will be understood generally, is unjust to our state officers and workers and will tend to retard and neutralize the honest conscientious work they are doing in this state; and I trust you will favor us as you have done so many times before, by again opening the columns of The Progressive Thinker and giving space to this letter.

Were this purely a personal matter, I should remain silent. But Spiritualism is a grand and noble movement and its proper presentation is of such vast importance to the human family, that I as as president of the state association, feel it duty to defend the integrity of our workers. And you, Brother Francis, are so loyal and conscientious a worker in this cause that I feel certain you will correct the misapprehension under which the writer of that article seems to have been laboring.

H. W. RICHARDSON,
President N. Y. State Association.

PROOF PALPABLE.

Excellent Results in a Private Seance.

To the Editor:—The inquiring mind is searching after truth, the vital truth as to the proof of the continuity of life, and the possibility of intelligent communication across the border land, the river of death. Is that proof attainable? It is by and through the phenomena of modern Spiritualism alone that the answer is to be found. IN VIEW OF ALL THE DISCUSSIONS, LET IT BE ADMITTED THAT THERE ARE FRAUDS, IN THIS, AS IN ALL POPULAR MOVEMENTS, SO LOW IN THE SCALE AS TO CARE NOT IF THEY RUIN ANY CAUSE, PERCHANCE THEY MAY THERBY OBTAIN LUCRE.

Fully developed mediumship is a rare gift, and we must therefore look to such for that proof of what we are seeking.

Long experience and careful observation have taught me that for some reason, not generally understood, all our best mediums have been at one time or another accused of fraud, so-called, in the manifestations. When the charges are sustained and the medium is consciously responsible, there is no excuse to be offered in palliation of the offense. But let it be the work of the Society of Psychical Research, or any others, to look fairly into that subject and ascertain, if possible, why it is so; particularly as it is well known that much of the alleged trickery is chargeable to a psychic condition brought about by the sitters and investigators, as well as of excarnate spirits, all playing upon the subtile instrument who is accused of all the blame. The more highly attuned the instrument, the greater the liability to these perversions.

All right minds condemn deception, but delight in truth and honesty. Let us then seek for light and truth.

The writer has been fortunate enough to have had a couple of private sittings recently with one of the finest psychics ever met with. It matters not that there may have been accusations against him, as with all others, justly or unjustly; I wish for the benefit of your readers to narrate briefly the main points of the sittings. My personal acquaintance with this medium is slight, have not seen him, until recently, for about six years. He is gentlemanly, and courteous to all, and always ready to accord reasonable test conditions. The phenomena in his presence, which are varied, are certainly above suspicion.

At the first of the sittings referred to, I sat at table, in full daylight, the medium opposite to me. Upon the table was a single pair of slates, 6x9, and a pile of blank paper, size to fit these slates. This paper has a black glazed upper surface upon which the independent writing appears in gold or white ink. The contrast to the black surface, when the writing is produced, is very pronounced as well as beautiful. The medium is extremely passive, while the sitter apparently does all the work. I was requested to place a quantity of this paper upon one of the slates, and did so, mixing and disarranging the sheets. This then lay before us undisturbed or untouched, on the open slate. I was invited to write any questions, addressing same to my spirit friends. I did this, folded the paper and after enclosing the same in an envelope, sealed it. This envelope never left my sight during the sitting. The medium occasionally held it, rolled up, in the palm of his hand. We sat engaged in ordinary conversation something more than an hour before the medium felt the influences. Suddenly, as he felt the presence of the power, we closed the slates and placed, my unopened questions thereon; we held them between us, above the table for about six minutes, feeling a vibration. Then on opening the paper was at once seen to contain writing, in white (although no such material had been provided). Astonishing as it may seem, there were 28 pages written upon, all consecutively numbered using that number of the upper sheets which I had placed within the slates.

There were six messages received, including those whom I had addressed, and all queries fully answered.

This was certainly marvelous, for there were no less than 1350 words precipitated after closing the slates, at the rate of 3¾ words per second, faster, really, than one can read. It is food for thought, and such facts appeal to all truth lovers.

The subsequent sitting was equally acceptable. I wrote my inquiries and sealed them at home, and had like good results. Among the incidents I may mention that on my paper containing questions, I had addressed one subject to two spirits, not at all connected, and then before sealing decided to erase one of the names, and did so effectually, yet the message was signed by the said two names. Light tappings were heard while holding the slates. An audible request was made that the control would put the writing substance on heavier than usual in some one spot, and in proof that the invisible intelligence heard this remark, on opening one sheet was found thus stuck to the upper one from this very cause.

There were 25 sheets written full at this sitting, and at this as at the former, the communications are most interesting, and personal, and characteristic of the communicators. The subjects of my interrogatories were fully comprehended and replied to by those whom I addressed.

I will not take up more space at present. Such phenomena carry conviction with them, and my wish is that all who earnestly and sincerely desire to be convinced of the reality of spirit communion would seek for it where it may be found.

CHAS. P. COCKS.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Policeman and His Club.

To the Editor:—As a constant reader of your valuable paper, I wish to add a word of mine as to the question of materialization. I firmly believe that it is not possible for our loved ones to return in the form as flesh and bone, and all that goes to make up as we see men to-day.

Many have said it is true. But give us the truth. Many exposures have been made all over this country, and to-day we have a materializing medium in our city who has a policeman at her seances with his billy in his pocket, and he has said he would knock any one down that would grab the spirit. The fact of her having a policeman there carries with it the evidence of fraud.

As to Mr. Hale, I know him, and he is well known as a man of honor. I have heard him speak, and will say he is a power. He hits straight from the shoulder. He told me he denies nothing, but is looking for the truth.

Mr. Hale takes part in our Sunday morning meetings in the Truth Seekers, and his friends are legion, for we know how he has suffered by those frauds here and those that have left us for our good.

I only wish we had a thousand such men as Mr. Hale—our cause would be stronger, for he stands only for the truth, and when he takes the rostrum we always have a feast. Only the fakirs fear him.

MRS. MARY I. FOWLER.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Opinion of a Prominent Rockford Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—I have been much interested in reading the various opinions expressed pro et con, but am surprised and disappointed that some who believe themselves to be good, true Spiritualists would advocate keeping silent on the fraud question, or in other words, letting the frauds and fakirs keep right on in their nefarious work of deception, without molestation. To keep silent is to give consent, and is equivalent to lending our aid to this most unscrupulous class of deceivers. A burglar who enters my house at night and robs me of my valuables, is no worse, in fact, is not so bad as the man or woman, who, for financial gain, tries to induce me to believe that my dear angel mother emerges from a cabinet in materialized form, tells me she is my mother, embraces me, and speaks to me in most endearing terms, when in reality, the form is that of the person posing as medium, and the beautiful apparel worn is a gauzy construction previously prepared for the occasion. For this clever piece of deception, I must pay one dollar or more. The person who takes my money, and gives me in return this spurious representation of my mother in spirit, is not only a robber, but a base, conscienceless hypocrite, who makes use of things most sacred, to deceive us and get our money. And after we are convinced that we have been robbed and deceived by one of these unfeeling money grabbers, shall we let them go right on robbing and deceiving others?

I emphatically answer No!

Should we do so, we wrong our fellow man and the grand cause of Spiritualism. We should not lose an opportunity to inform the public of their deceptive work, and bring them to justice. If we fail to do this, we are guilty of gross neglect of duty to our fellow Spiritualists, to the cause we represent, and to the public at large.

For illustration, we will suppose that a minister of an orthodox church has been unmistakably detected in lying, cheating and defrauding, for financial gain, in his business transactions with others, both in and out of the church, and the members of the church society that employs him, are thoroughly convinced of his guilt, what would we Spiritualists think of them, if they endeavor to hide and smother his crimes, and continue to endorse and employ him, and permit him to go on in his evil work of wronging his fellow man? Would we not think far better of them, and better of their religion, if they rise up in open revolt against, him, and openly denounce his unscrupulous, dishonest methods? Should they fail to do this, we could not have much respect for, or confidence in them or their religion. The same will apply to us as Spiritualists. If we fail to boldly and openly denounce the frauds and fakirs in our ranks, we place ourselves in the same position before and in the opinion of the public.

That there are genuine materializations, I am thoroughly convinced, and I have seen many of them, some of which gave me indisputable proof of their identity. I have seen them come from the cabinet to the center of the room, walk about, converse, sing, and then vanish or dematerialize in the center of the room, apparently sinking through the floor, though upon close inspection, no opening could be found in carpet or floor. I have seen them descend from the ceiling like a ball of phosphorescent light, and upon reaching the floor, gradually rise up into the form of a beautiful spirit, talk for a few moments in a clear, sweet voice, then dematerialize in the center of the room, without having been near the cabinet.

Though there is much that is genuine, there is also much that is not, and we must use our best judgment in distinguishing the one from the other. We should not be too ready to endorse, nor too willing to condemn, but without prejudice or partiality, thoroughly investigate before we decide. About two years ago, we had an experience in this city with a man, who was in reality, a good physical medium, clairvoyant and psychometric, but in private, he was trying to induce persons whom he thought he dared approach, to enter into same investment schemes he presented to them, and after securing several hundred dollars in this way he suddenly disappeared. His victims, so far as we know, were all widows. This all came out after he was gone, as his victims, now realizing their situation, revealed the facts, hoping to have him intercepted, and get their money back.

There was one Spiritualist in the city, who knew he was doing this kind of work, for he was told it by one whom he had tried to make one of his victims, yet he made no effort to have him brought to justice, but let him escape with his ill-gotten gains. This good (?) Spiritualist boasted while the medium was here, that he knew some Rockford people were going to get "left in a hole" by him, but he would not explain what he meant by such an assertion, but after he was gone, and all was revealed, this good (?) Spiritualist bother went about with an exultant smile upon his face, and saying, "I told you so."

After the man had gone, and was no doubt, working in a new field, and gaining new victims, this man who considers himself a good Spiritualist, tells what he had before kept a secret. Was he acting for the best good of his fellow-man and the cause of Spiritualism, when he permitted this man to escape without being brought to justice and placed behind prison bars for getting money under false pretenses? After I learned of his bad work here, I immediately wrote him up for the Spiritualistic press, desiring to warn all Spiritualists against him, and hoping that he would see the article himself and be afraid to continue in his work of swindling, knowing that the public had been warned against him.

After the appearance of my article, I received many letters from all over the country, stating that a man whose work and appearance tallied with that I had given, had at some time previous, been in their midst, and was wanted in these places for swindling in like manner, thus showing that he or some one else had escaped many times before, no doubt taking a new name each place he went. When Spiritualists know of such an unscrupulous person representing Spiritualism, it is certainly their duty to have them intercepted in their dishonest work, and brought to justice, notwithstanding their mediumship, for such persons are wholly unfit morally and spiritually, to represent the sacred cause of Spiritualism. Let us not be afraid to condemn and expose the frauds and dishonest mediums, and in this way uphold and protect the honest ones, and save our cause from disgrace. I believe the recent exposures of fraudulent materializations will help to root them out, and put the fakirs out of business.

MRS. F. C. KRAMER.

Rockford, Ill.

Commercial Mediumship.

To my way of thinking there seems to be only one way of stamping out fraud, namely, to do away with commercial mediumship altogether; this I believe to be the only effective and radical cure; let mediums make a legitimate living same as other people do and let the home circle be more encouraged. Whenever we put a commercial value on Spiritualism we degrade the cause. An exalted spirit rarely ever enters the personality of a commercial medium. The old seers and mystics never offered their spiritual gifts for sale. As another example, analogous to the above, I might cite the old masters; their souls were wedded to their respective arts, not to the money value of their work, for they all died poor. Their ambitions were of a purely spiritual nature, and their success reached the limit. How is it today? A Paderewski may play before crowded houses, receiving a princely salary, but he is only reproducing the compositions of the old masters—nothing more.

But to come back to the subject. I think it has been pretty well proven that materializations are mostly of a fraudulent nature; why, then, encourage them and those that produce them?

Better have paid teachers or lecturers (non-mediumistic) who teach the higher philosophy of Spiritualism, and do away with the phenomena craze. It will only be a matter of time before the local authorities will stop materializations and like productions altogether; for as long as money is involved in sutch exhibitions the temptation to resort to fraud is ever present, and the investigator, as well as the public in general, is continually being humbugged. I know a good many will say such a course would retard the growth of Spiritualism; it may for a time, but what of it? The truth (if there be any truth at all in Spiritualism) would finally triumph.

I think Spiritualists could do without paid mediums.

It has been said that in nearly every family there is one sensitive, one gifted with clairvoyance; if such be true why can't Spiritualists develop some of the members of their own family, and have home circles, instead of going to witness a doubtful materialization show?

I have been investigating spiritual phenomena for the last twelve years, and have found but precious little that would be any proof to me of the genuineness of materialization. I wish to say in conclusion that if commercial mediumship is done away with, we might get at the real truth regarding all physical manifestations relative to Spiritualism. This is my candid opinion.

WM. RAUSMAYER.

Coshocton, Ohio.

Dean Clarke's Opinion.

To the Editor:—Though able to write but a few words, I wish to express my full endorsement of the course of The Progressive Thinker in exposing fraud, whether in the seance, or upon the platform. It is a crime against two worlds, and deserves severe punishment. I have always felt it my duty to expose it even though it was against my personal interest to do so. I made many enemies in San Francisco by exposing the tricks of Mrs. Reynolds, and the character and career of the notorious Fred Bell, both of whom, at that time, were the idols of many deluded Spiritists.

Time has justified my course. As regards Mrs. R., however, they were partly excusable from the fact that she has been a medium from her childhood, and can, and does when she chooses, give genuine phenomena. But this, in my opinion, is all the worse for her, for she abuses her spirit helpers, besides wickedly deceiving her patrons, when she gives spurious phenomena.

Undoubtedly there are deceiving spirits, as well as tricky mediums, who should share in the dishonor and disgrace of an exposure. It used to be a favorite (and a very appropriate) expression of Mrs. R., that, "The devil helps his own!" But she wouldn't have had such help unless she wanted it, and cannot thereby shirk responsibility.

I trust that The Progressive Thinker is the Hercules that will purge our Augean stables thoroughly, and I believe its "Open Court" should be kept open till all the vile deceivers who disgrace our holy cause have been exposed, and then, at least, given a "good letting alone" by all who love Truth, Honesty and Virtue.

DEAN CLARKE.

THE RECLUSE.

I'm told I'm lax in my duty,
I do not go to church
Nor pay my tithe to help along,
But always in the lurch;
I seem exclusive and alone,
They cannot make me out,
They call me a backslider,
An idler and a lout.

I'm not so old, they say, but
Selfish grown and cold,
Forgetful of the Sabbath day,
And in my speech too bold;
A dreamer of strange dreams
Of poetry and prose,
A seeker after strange Gods,
The Christian God oppose.

I'm not so social as they like
Of one so common-place,
And one of such humble birth,
Of little worth or grace;
They cannot see why I should be
So content in heart and will,
And not more concerned about
The wrath that's sure to kill.

I'm not ambitious of worldly fame,
To be among the rich apart,
The weight of years is on my head,
But peace is in my heart;
I seek no lofty illusive shrine,
The worldly may adore,
But see thro' earth's fading light
Love's bright and fadeless shore.

I'm in a world they know not of—
A world of light and love,
Where sweetest pleasures overflow
The garden walks above;
Where thro' the aisles of summer skies,
Walk loving forms of grace,
Untrammeled with earth's weight of woe,
With peace on every face.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

Summerland, Cal.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

The Wisdom of Passion

BY SALVARONA.

"In modern philosophy there are three great treatises on the Passions, that of Spinoza, that of Hume, and that of Salvarona."—Philosophical Journal.

Illustrated with three handsome portraits of Emerson, Hosea, Byron. 12mo, 250 pages. Red cloth; gold title. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of price by postal note.

Price, $1.00. Postage, 10 Cents.

The extraordinary merits of "The Wisdom of Passion" are the copiousness of human insight and content in the way of fact and reference with which the book is crammed. Its main thesis I agree with.—Prof. William James, Harvard University.

I have found "The Wisdom of Passion" to be a book of powerful erudition and fine intuition. I would be happy if in a certain sense I had inspired it.—Prof. Ceasare Lombroso.

Here is a man who sees and says things for himself. He is not retailing conventionalities. The book fairly bristles with wise sayings. I believe the thesis is sustainable and that the author has gone a long way toward fortifying it. After I took up the book, I did not quit, except for meals and sleep till I had read it carefully from cover to cover.—Albion W. Small, Head of Dept. of Sociology and Director of Affiliated Work for the University of Chicago.

I am somewhat familiar with the tendency in modern thought to give primary place to feeling—with James' "Will to Believe," with Ward's social philosophy, with Shelley's and Browning's philosophy. "The Wisdom of Passion" fits in with their contributions. The main thesis of the book—that the soul forms its own forms by its choice—I can ascribe to—Prof. Oscar Lovell Triggs, University of Chicago.

Address all orders to H. G. Walters, Langhorne, Pa.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building.
Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 15.
Admittance without examination.
Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week.. .. .. 1.75
Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

TREATMENT BY HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION; or Psycho-Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D., Aberd. New York. Price $3.

This is the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, 376 pages 8vo, of a most valuable and standard work, by an acknowledged authority and expert in the science of healing by hypnotism and suggestion. The method of treatment by suggestion is clearly and exhaustively considered, and illustrated by descriptions of numerous actual cases in the author's personal experience. The work will be found a valuable auxiliary to physicians in ameliorating and curing the mental and physical ills of their patients, and is worthy of most careful study not only by physicians, who should be thoroughly informed in the nature and methods of curative hypnotism or suggestion, but also by all students of hypnotism who desire to thoroughly understand the subject. It is a valuable mine of information to all who consult its pages.

THE LEADING WORKS OF E. D. BABBITT, M. D.

The Principles of Light and Color.

Superbly issued, royal 8vo, with over 200 engravings and colored plates. Price, $5.00; in massive binding, imitating half Russia, 50c. extra. "An imposing volume of nearly 600 pages. Shows a great amount of research on the part of the author. Will prove a great acquisition to Scientific Libraries."—N. Y. Herald.

Human Culture and Cure.

In six parts, five parts being already issued.
PART I. The Philosophy of Cure, including Methods and Instruments; 75 cents.
"The Principles of Light and Color" is in every respect masterly, and 'Human Culture and Cure' appears to be not less remarkable."—Dr. Pascal, 12 Rue Picot, Toulon, France.
PARTS III and IV in one volume; $1.00. Part III treats of Mental and Psychological forces; Part IV of the Nervous System and Insanity.
"This work discloses for the first time the chemical mystery of mental phenomena, throws the first clear light upon the nature and processes of hypnotism and all kindred psychological phenomena which have never before been explained or understood. Dr. Babbitt has here not only given the rationale of hypnotism, psychometry, clairvoyance and mental science, including the mysterious subject of memory, but has furnished abundant illustrations of their working. The subject of Phreno-physiognomy alone is of priceless value as enabling us to understand our fellow beings around us."—Prof. W. C. Bowman.
PART V. "The Bodily Organs, their Diseases and the Great Natural Methods for Their Cure," aims to be the most practical work on healing thus far given to the public. Price, $1.

Health and Power.

Brief Natural Treatment for 110 Diseases. Price, 25 cents. "Worth its weight in diamonds."

SOCIAL UPBUILDING, Paper, 15 cents.
RELIGION.—A most thoughtful and excellent work. Price, cloth, $1.10; paper, 60 cents.

THE SOUL OF THINGS;

Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind, which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price, $1.50. In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each. Postage, 100 per copy.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crookce. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature, and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

Power of the Unknown in Practical Affairs.

There is a study far deeper than the surface of things in the following literary presentation by Irene Clark Safford, in the St. Louis Globe Democrat, and perhaps to no class of readers will it be more interesting, and be better understood and appreciated than by Spiritualistic readers of The Progressive Thinker.

To be thoroughly interesting one must, of course, be inscrutable. The yellow mask is the one thing to overcome the yellow peril. To get at the heart of Japan the nations would almost be willing to lie at her feet. Baroness Hayashi, with the child look of wonder on her face, and the keen grasp of all the diplomats' problems and policies in her brain, is the commanding figure even in the social life of London.

Something to bring the spell and power of the unknown into the prosaic atmosphere that measures man's life by his ability to earn money is a growing Western need that figures more perhaps, than the papers take note of in the eager turning of the white man's eyes toward the martial stir among the yellow brethren. For centuries on centuries missionaries and teachers, statesmen and governments have been knocking at the door of the Orient and seeking to unveil the temple of Isis, and still the silence and the mystery remain. "Japan is the key to the Orient," says one of the latest and closest students of the Eastern problem, "but nobody has the key to Japan." "I have been in India all my life," said a cultured Christian teacher, with the East India exhibit at the World's Fair, "but I am only at the very threshold of their temple of life. It would take many lifetimes to penetrate beyond it." Indeed, lifetimes are small matters to people who have been listening at the gates of the unseen for thousands of years.

There is the dividing of the ways, the hopeless break in any meeting ground between East and West, that one is hunting mainly for wealth in the unseen, the other bent still upon building up wealth in the seen. And, curiously enough, this "other" represents all the Christian nations of the earth, whose avowed business it is to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Now, let alone any higher claim in the matter, would it not be well for these bustling Christian nations to wrap themselves in a few holy mysteries and purposes, if only to become a little more interesting, and less transparently measurable, purchasable and vulnerable to the entire universe.

"If you meet a man whose centrality is unknown to you, you might as well snub the sun," said one of those blessed Concord philosophers, who came as near to the Eastern triumph in the unseen as any beings our own land has harbored. But no man whose treasures were mainly on earth was ever able to hide himself from the snubs and stabs of the hunters. Even love, which is adroitest of all time's children in concealing its movements, is forever getting caught in the snare of the fowler, and the heart that can not shelter itself in the heart of the eternal is never quite sure that daws shall not find and peck at it.

So satisfied is the world becoming that it can read all the secrets of the natural man that it is moved to reduce the entire population of the earth to three or four fixed types, and keep them all going by a few springs of action affixed to those types. "Spasmodic muscular contractions" determines the nature of their smiles and tears, and the condition of the arteries the precise measure of their loves or hates. Some occult world to hide himself in is becoming an absolute necessity for any creature who would not be turned naked and open to the eyes of those with whom he has to do by the exploits of science and the physiologist. Of course, the incorrigible pursuer with the N-ray proposes to follow him even there, and psychology is doing its utmost to hunt him down in all the secret places of his soul. Yet, once he drops down into the unfathomable sea of the parent soul, human science fishes after him in vain.

And this is precisely what all the true mystics and seers of earth have been doing for ages; and, not alone in the wilds of India, but in the simplest hamlet of the land, where some fair child, or patient pilgrim by the wayside, looks at you with eyes that stir the mystic depths of your own soul, because you can see, as the poet expresses it, that "they have looked at God."

It is the story of little Mattie in Mrs. Browning's tender lines,

"She has seen the mysteries hid Under Egypt's pyramid."

All the mysteries of Isis, of Brahma or of Buddha resolve themselves to nothing deeper than the Christian mysteries cover, if any Christian soul cared to take refuge in them.

The papers looked upon it as an amusing joke when recently a Japanese youth in New York took a card hung out from various houses for the street scavenger as a prayer card, indicating "a beautiful religious custom similar to that of Orientals." But that it might carry some clew to the understanding of the Japanese mind which all the world is seeking did not occur to any them. Clearly, as far as the East is removed from the West is that state of mind removed from us which looks upon illuminated prayer cards as a natural part of street hangings and the daily life of a people. And the final commentary of the foreign observer that "the religious and mystical symbol did not seem to have any restraining effect on those in its vicinity," though amusing enough under the circumstances, yet points a moral on the place which the real thing holds in the two nations that might warrant a few Japanese missionaries in undertaking a salvation work on our shores. Likewise it suggests the strength and revolution of ideals which these nations that have been silently working in the unseen and spirit forces for centuries on centuries would bring to mankind if at length they should throw off the human slumber and resolve themselves into world powers.

Of course, it has been a wily devil, far more than a righteous God, that has been supposed to figure in the inscrutable counsels of the Orientals, and the unspeakable Turk and unconscionable Chinese Boxers have done much to foster this stern idea.

Yet, in penetrating to the heart of the matter everywhere, one finds that it is pious zeal for some supposed god of truth and justice, and fancied, or perhaps real, insults to him, that creates the difficulty. Even the Chinese cry against "foreign devils" shows the nature of his mind and faith as to the things he should fight for and against. In fact, everywhere among the Orientals it is their religion and their altars, their temples and their gods, around which all their whole life, thought, literature, social systems and governments, revolve, and take their colors.

And when Christ cometh, shall he do more than this? is the natural question which they propound to Christian nations. Perhaps it is reserved for them to bring their own answer. Let them in, with their spiritual zeal and fervor, to the Christian mysteries along the natural path of world's progress and development, and who knows but the star of the Christ may again dawn on us from the East. Certainly something different from the god of mammon would take possession of our civilization.

IRENE CLARK SAFFORD.

THE LAWS OF LIFE.

Their Origin, Which, Material or Spiritual?

In the advancement of life from the lower levels of its existence it realized in proportion to its development the necessity of coming under the dominion of law. The Biblical account of life previous to the operation of the creative or organizing forces well illustrates the conditions of life then existing. "And the earth (life) was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." "And God said, let there be light, and there was light." The dawning of that light was the unfolding of the consciousness in the human of the fact that the spiritual law is the directing force and from whence all external laws emanate. When they are barbarous and selfish they represent the medium through which they have been transmitted. But they will, as surely as the laws of attention and repulsion operate change to a higher type of manifestation when the medium through which they are given to the external world develops out of its crude systems of life, comes up onto a plane of being where it can comprehend a higher manifestation of law, then, and not till then will the higher law be given them.

The laws of life are only manifested to the external sense in a limited measure. The external mind cannot understand the gifts of the spirit. The enactment of barbarous and cruel laws by any nation, those that oppress the less favored brother or sister, preventing them from rising unto their true estate proves that such nation or governmental system has not come under the dominion of the spiritual law; because that when manifested is an uplifting power, helps every one however low their phase of development, to rise; and when a nation makes an effort to remove from their external records those barbarous enactments it is proof that their interior life is becoming more in harmony with the higher law, and the more perfectly that is made manifest the less crude will be the interpretation given to the external world.

Marytrdom has been the portion of thousands of the world's most advanced minds because they interpreted the laws of life from too high a plane to be comprehended and accepted by the masses; but while they suffered by the hands of one generation, succeeding ones having come up to the level of that high ideal and made it practical, have in their turn honored those martyrs of a former age, they have pronounced eulogies on their character, and erected monuments to their memory. The views of humanity in regard to what constitutes the laws of life are changing from one generation to that viewed by its successor. What may be considered right and was for the race who could not comprehend anything higher, with succeeding and more advanced races, that interpretation of law was too barbarous and brutal to be tolerated or recognized under the name of law. The degradation under which chattel slavery compelled its victims to live was styled law which was enacted in due form but happily most of the world has advanced to the plane where they refuse to recognize such a condition as lawful and have placed the seal of their condemnation upon that system.

The farther upward life advances the more perfectly it comprehends the fact that what is not right cannot as viewed from the higher levels be lawful however much human selfishness may seek to argue the point that because it has gone through the form of legal enactment it has been made right and lawful. It has taken a long time and practice to arrive at that point where that fact could be understood in the measure that it is at present.

There are social and economic conditions existing at present that may be legal but no amount of legislation can make such conditions right; they have the brand of condemnation placed upon them by the higher interpretation of what constitutes the laws of life. Piracy on the high seas was once allowed to be a proper occupation, but now the ban of condemnation is placed upon it by all civilized nations, so what at present is not right but is protected under the guise of legality will receive its condemnation and its legal privileges removed by the more advanced thought of the coming generations.

There is existing at the present time among the civilized nations of the world a condition that may properly be termed legalized anarchy; and none have yet advanced to that condition where they are able to come out of that horrible nightmare which is a constant source of terror to the governmental systems and which will continue until the legalized phases that are the creators of that awful condition are removed.

Geology tells us that in the earlier periods of world formation the eruptive processes were more violent than at the present time. They were needed as a reorganizing force and nothing could silence those violent outbursts of nature's forces but a growth to a plane of life where the action of those forces was not needed. The moral and spiritual development of the world and the material must move in harmony, the difficulty is in drawing the line of demarkation between the external and internal realm, they are closely interblended, and if one moves upward, evolves a higher life, the others feel the stimulus and advance.

The positive force being the spiritual, from that is evolved the energy and can if understood and intelligently applied control even the physical elements. The origin of all law is spiritual, whatever the realm in which it for the time being operates.

The ignorance which at the present time exists in regard to the use of those spiritual forces will be replaced by a knowledge that can utilize it and the destructive storms that at present are manifesting their power will be brought under the control of a power that will manifest its superiority to those external forces.

To the materialistic mind these statements may seem the height of absurdity. It is characteristic of that form of development to condemn everything that it does not understand. The wonderful inventions that have revolutionized the external world were once denounced as impracticable. Their adoption has been the means of bringing life nearer to a more perfect understanding of the laws that more directly govern the spiritual life, and the researches that are being made are coming nearer to the realm of the occult, the region from which originated all of the forces that at present are being utilized in the external world.

The laws that the different races of mankind have formulated, by which they were to regulate their conduct in relation to each other, could only be of a type representing the intellectual and spiritual development of the race or nation at the time they were formed. They could not be any higher, but as soon as advance was made to higher planes of life religious or political the external laws changed so as to represent the internal spirit in its growth. This must be if they are to be effective for it would need a despotism of the first water to be able to enforce laws that did not have at least a passive recognition. Many good laws have failed in their intended mission because after they had been placed on the statute books they became inoperative, an interest not being aroused in the necessity of their enforcement, and many bad laws have also failed after they had been made legal through nefarious means because they did not receive the support their advocates expected. Human life externally in all of its various forms is a type of human life internally; the dominant note sounded on the keyboard is the one proving the predominating influence of the spiritual forces in life, and in proportion to its refinement is the outward manifestation graded.

HAMILTON DE GRAW.
West Troy, N. Y.

SHALL WE ESCHEW MEAT?

Dr. Lillard Points to the Japanese to Show What Vegetable Diet Will Do for Men.

There is a legend that before the flood, meat as a food was unknown. Those were the days when, the Scriptures tell us, men lived to be 700 and 800 years old. According to this story, which has been handed down from the ages, it was not until the waters receded and man dwelt upon the earth again that he began the consumption of meat.

I do not vouch for these statements. Neither do I write myself down a vegetarian. It is a fact, nevertheless, that man is practically the only animal that eats dead food. The lobster lives on dead food, and so does the hyena, but aside from them and man, there are very few of the thousands of birds and animals that inhabit the earth who will eat anything but what may be described as being alive.

When a baby is born, its first demand is for live food—milk—and so I think the natural tendency is toward the live foods as distinguished from the flesh of slaughtered animals.

Nevertheless, the question as to the comparative value of the meat as against the vegetable diet is one that depends largely upon the individual. I don't think there is any doubt that a man or woman can exist without meat as well as with it. But then there are some whose systems demand a little meat in order properly to nourish their bodies. It depends entirely upon the physical condition of the individual, his habits and the work he does.

Aside from the broad aspect of the case, I think that this is a good time of the year for all of us to give up meat, or at least to eat as little of it as we feel that we can manage on.

Meat is stimulating, and stimulation is just what is not needed, except in isolated cases, in the summer. Take some meat extracts, and one may almost become intoxicated on them. This is bad, for it is always a good rule to avoid all stimulants during the heated term.

As a substitute of meat, weight for weight, there are some vegetables that are ever more nutritious and strengthening than any meat that can be eaten. Beans, corn and peas, to which I may add oatmeal and wheat, and all kinds of fruits are splendid substitutes, and are an ample diet for the normal man and woman during the summer. Spinach I can also add as one of the finest tonics for the system that is known.

I know of a physician who is now practicing in this city who for one whole month, with his family, lived on a bushel of wheat, and thrived upon it.

I don't recommend this as a steady diet to the ordinary man or woman, and I am not advocating either side of this discussion. What I am trying to do is to present both sides of the matter as it appears to me.

The Japanese will always be a shining example of what a strictly vegetarian diet will do. Look at them. They have infinitely more energy, vitality and endurance than the Russians, who are a great meat-eating race, and in the present struggle in the far East are suffering reverse after reverse, one of the reasons being that they lacked the stamina and endurance of their enemies, and, also, that they are unable, like the Japanese, to thrive on a minimum of food such as satisfies the little fellows from the land of the Mikado.

I frankly admit that I believe a great many people eat too much meat; but at the same time, let me be understood as not meaning that the same people could get along without any meat. It might be as great a mistake for them to eat too little meat as it is to eat too much.

The whole problem resolves itself into the question as to what the individual system demands. A general rule would probably be that meat and vegetables eaten in fair proportion would most effectively promote perfect health.
—Dr. Benamin Lillard, in the Practical Druggist and Pharmaceutical Review of Reviews.

To the Editor:—If there ever was a time when the subject of "Meat Diet" should prove interesting to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, it is now (when the butchers' strike is on), and prices are so high as to make that article, for many, almost impossible to procure. Besides, it is well enough for our people who wish to preserve their good health, to pay some attention to the judgment of science and historical facts, and then reason within themselves, as most of them are wont to do.

I send the the above clipping, because it seems so apropos to the present condition of things in the city of Chicago, applicable to the ideas and teachings of the spirit, and reasonable in deduction.

DR. T. WILKINS.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

Life In the Spirit Realms.

A Series of Letters from Spirit Carlyle Petersilea, Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, Medium.

LETTER NUMBER FOUR.

Oh, if you of earth could know how it is with us here, you would all be bright and happy as the lark.

It seems to me like this; as though all these people, one by one, or more as the case might be, had started on a voyage to Europe, or Asia, or even Africa; and at last I myself also started on a similar voyage, and when I arrived, one by one I would meet those who had gone before.

Now, instead of Europe, just change it to Celestial Land—and all these people are so much better and happier and brighter than they formerly were, the voyage having changed them into beauty and brightness.

Now when one is in America, and one has a very dear friend who has gone to Europe, what is it intervenes between them? One may say it is distance, but what makes the distance? Is it not land and water and air, and are not land, water and air material things that separates those friends.

My wife cries out, sometimes, in her grief: "O! Carlyle! Where are you, my husband? If you are with me in spirit, I cannot see you, or hear you with these material senses. Oh! it is a great gulf that separates us;" and I reply telepathically: "I am truly near you but we are separated by the material—the material lies between us, dear.

"A friend in Europe would be a thousand times farther away from you than I am, but the opaque material lies between us. You cannot see through it with your material eyes which are only fitted to see material things; and your material ears are only fitted to receive the vibrations caused by material sounds. You are yet in prison, my dear. You are imprisoned within the dark material and cannot see or hear other than the material."

Then she asks me: "Can you see me, dear?"

"Yes, for I have escaped from the material prison-house and my vision now not only can penetrate the material, but the spiritual has come into view like a vast new continent that my eyes never beheld before.

"Suppose you were imprisoned in a large room, my dear, where there was not a loop-hole or window, and you had always lived there. You had heard that there was an outside world, but your eyes had never beheld it; and after awhile someone rolled away some large sliding doors, and a great world of light and beauty was revealed to your enraptured sight. Now the material within which you are imprisoned is like that, and when the material is rolled away from you, like those large sliding doors, a great world of spiritual and celestial beauty bursts upon your sight. You can still see the prison and all it contained, yet you do not want to be confined within it any more."

As my wife reads over articles in The Progressive Thinker, her soul cries up to me with a great cry:

"O, Carlyle! my dear love—my other self—come to me and answer some of these questions that so puzzle humanity. You are now where you know and can answer many of them. Here is N. B. Freeland, who asks, 'What use could a spiritual body have for feet? Why have ears where there is no atmosphere? What use can a spiritual body have for a mouth, abdomen, stomach, heart, lungs, and so forth?' "

"My dear wife, I am here in answer to your call. I never failed when in the material body, to respond to any cry for help that you might send forth. I will not fail you now, though the heavens fall—but, first, I desire to make a statement; then, afterward, try to show a materialistic world that the absurdities lie in materialism and not in Spiritualism. My statement is the following: I am now out of my material body and so do know, positively, that I have hands, feet, mouth, ears, abdomen, stomach, brain, and all the organs that go to make up the body of a man. These organs have, simply, thrown off a coarse material covering. The organs themselves are perfect in every respect. This is my statement as a spiritual being through my own dear wife who is not a fraud, a falsifier or a liar; and, in her overwhelming grief, cannot be accused of foisting a base deceptive fraud upon the world; moreover, she has not the least incentive to do so, for it is not a question of money with her. Money does not enter into it at all, for I have left her comfortably provided for, as far as the material is concerned. Thanks to spiritual guardianship and oversight for that, for I most solemnly assert that it was not of myself that this was so, but my father's spirit who guided, as he could see what I did not then know or think—that I should soon pass out of my form and she would be left helpless and unprovided for. How can I ever thank him enough? Now I have called to my aid, Robert G. Ingersoll; and he, by a great natural law, will help me to answer these questions. While I control my wife to write, he will stand near to aid me in my thoughts; and, together, I think we shall be able to make them plainly understood by the people.

"But, first, I, Robert G. Ingersoll, desire to say that I want you all to send to this lady, Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, Garvanza Station, R. F. D., Los Angeles, Cal., for a book called 'Philip Carlislie,' which is inscribed and dedicated to me—Robert G. Ingersoll—which I, myself, read diligently and thought upon deeply, for it was written by a spirit for my especial delectation, and in it the ancient spirit prophesies my own departure, and states why I should be shortly gathered to my fathers; not only this, but my exact condition of mind was therein explained and well shown up.

"Now, by a great natural law, I must undo the wrong to humanity which I did; the good will take care of itself. I have tried to reach the people, through these twain that make one, before; but received a slap in my spiritual face, and so retreated to bide my time which I well knew would shortly come. I am no coward, as you all know, and would have faced hell and the devil without flinching had I been called to do so and could have found them, but this time I will stand third in the chain, and, when you slap, slap the lady. You are all brave men, agnostics and materialists, some of you of my own making. Slap the lady. Now I will show her up to you: A white-haired, broken-hearted, grief-stricken, desolate widow, of more than sixty years of age, whose husband now stands by my side, one of the dearest friends that I have, with his great, noble heart overflowing with profound grief and sympathy for his wife. Now, show yourselves brave men and profound thinkers and slap this woman while I dodge behind the two to escape the blow, that is, providing you can think so meanly of me.

"No, I do not stand behind the two to escape the blow. I would much rather stand face to face with you, but I came unto my own and my own received me not. I came unto Spiritualists, thinking that they would gladly receive me; but they waived me aside. Now, I will try again; but allow me to retire behind my barricade. Slap the lady!"

Mr. Ingersoll has indulged in a little harmless, jocose irony. His individuality will assert itself whether in or out of the body, and now we will proceed to answer some of the questions Mr. Freeland asks.

"As we taste but to feed our material bodies, what use could a spiritual body have for a mouth?"

Is a mouth used for no other purpose than to eat? Does the mouth, which consists of lips, teeth, tongue, and so forth, all connecting with the vocal organs, answer no other purpose than to feed the material body? What sapient thought is here. The mouth can utter and express—ask Hudson Tuttle how many different languages; I am a musician, never counted them up. Through and with the mouth has been given to the world all the grand orations that the world has ever received since the first speech was made. Through, and with the mouth, Robert G. Ingersoll gave all his grand lectures to the world. All the speeches of Parliament, and also those of the Senate, by which the world is governed, at least England, and her provinces, and the United States—are given by and through the mouth. All the ministers, in all parts of the world, give forth their sermons with the mouth. All the grand discourses of Spiritualists have been given through the mouth. All the beautiful lectures of Cora L. V. Richmond are given by the mouth. Think of the mouth of a Colville; and how about Moses Hull's mouth? also his brother, D. W. Hull? All the messages from the spirit realms that have been given at the Banner of Light circle rooms, have been given through the mouths of various mediums. Think of dear little Mrs. Longley and her beautiful speeches and lectures, and the seances at the Banner of Light for fourteen years. Think of Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison, of Henry Ward Beecher and Phillips Brooks. Thinks of a Daniel Webster; all these people used their mouths for a far higher purpose than simply to eat with. No doubt they all ate with their mouths, and fed their bodies thereby, but I think that each and all of them would have said that eating was the lowest use to which they put their mouths, although wholly necessary.

With the mouth the lover woos his bride with tales of love, and with their lips they kiss each other and seal their vows of eternal constancy. With her lips the mother kisses her new-born babe, and instructs her older children in ways of wisdom, gentleness and peace, and tells them of her eternal love and watchful care over them, and sings her babies to sleep. With the mouth, teachers of all grades and classes instruct their pupils—and now we come to my own art, the art of musical expression. O, my dear singing pupils! How could you get along without your mouths? Your throats would be of little use without your mouths. Where is Jenny Lind and her mouth? Think of all the great opera singers of the world, both male and female. Oh, what would they do without their mouths?

Now I was connected with a theater, as orchestral pianist, for a number of years; and I do not know what all those actors and actresses would have accomplished without their mouths, for they were declaiming for a number of hours every evening; and this is being done all over the world year after year, night after night.

Now we will leave out all the gossip and tale bearing, for they drop down to a lower plane. On earth the mouth answers more than one purpose. You eat, talk, kiss and sing with the mouth. Strange that all this should be overlooked or forgotten by our wise philosophers who talk, or write rather, about the mouth merely being necessary for the purpose of eating to feed the body, and when the body, or the material body rather, falls apart the mouth is no longer needed; but it was, simply, the material covering that the spiritual mouth took on.

To eat means that one eats to preserve the material covering through which the spiritual may be able to express itself to and within the material, while it is on that plane of existence.

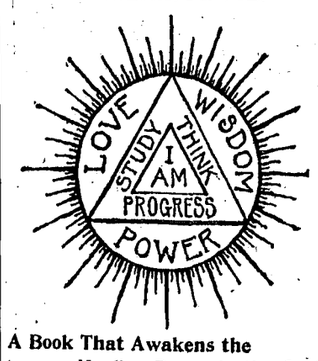
Evolution without involution, leads you all astray. You commence wrong and end wrong; and you will never be right until you commence right. There is something more to life than matter, force, and intelligence as there is something more to the mouth than simply to eat, as I think I have amply proved, and this something more is the entering into matter of the invisible spiritual germ from out the ether, perfect as a germ in all its parts, for the purpose of growth and development up through matter, which it attracts to itself through the method of eating, until it is strong enough to go on without it. I would that I could make the world understand this great truth, but it is passed by as of no account or not true. I bide my time however; the world will go on with evolution without involution like a man without a wife, one half and not the other, until it lands in the morass of error, as the church dogmas have landed it; then the people will look around and discover involution smiling at them, and pointing to higher and firmer ground.

Mr. Freeland also says that an unused organ is eliminated by "innocuous desuetude;" but why should he think our organs are unused. Organs grow and develop up through matter, especially that they may be of use. Do you think, my friend, that we have no music in the spirit realms? Is music something belonging entirely to earth? Did it originate within the material? Was it eliminated from matter? Does a grand oratorio already exist within a crawfish, to be at length unwound or unrolled? Now I hear Mr. Ingersoll laughing; so you perceive that I have ears as well as a mouth, and he must have a mouth and a throat or he could not laugh.

Of what use would music be here, in the spirit world if there were no ears to hear it, or no mouth, or throat, or fingers, to perform it? Our fingers have thrown off their coarse, material covering, to be sure, which renders them ten times more powerful.

Mr. Freeland speaks of a Marconi transmitter, that vibrates the ether. Precisely! And it is ethereal vibrations that our ears are adapted for—To catch and register upon our ethereal brains; for we have ethereal, spiritual brains as well as mouths, ears, fingers, hands and feet. He asks: "Why have ears, where there is no atmosphere?" At the same time he admits ethereal vibrations. So there is an ether which vibrates—a vibratory, ethereal atmosphere.

Ah, ha! We have you now! A vibratory, ethereal atmosphere; and within that vibrating atmosphere we live and move and have our being; it vibrates and our ears catch the vibrations. We have spiritual lungs and we breathe it in. We have a spiritual heart and it beats, and with each throb it sends a current of ethereal, magnetic fluid through our ethereal bodies.



He asks: "What use could a spiritual body have for feet? Do spirits walk?"

Well, how do you think we get around? Do we fly, roll, or walk, within this ethereal atmosphere? We have no wings, so we cannot fly. We do not roll like a ball, a hoop, or a barrel. That we move, or float, within the ether a great deal, I admit; but in order to do this we move our hands, arms, feet and legs. Nothing can move without there is a resisting element within which to move, and the ether has great resisting power, and it is by our will power and the movement of our bodies and limbs that we are able to overcome the resisting force and move through it.

"Do spirits walk?" Yes; most emphatically, yes! We have feet and we walk; they are ethereal feet corresponding to our ethereal bodies, and we have ethereal land whereon to walk. We have here the ethers, or ethereal essences of all that exists upon the earth; grass, trees, flowers, birds and beasts in their ethereal

(Continued on page 8.)

HEALING CURRENTS
FROM THE
BATTERY OF LIFE,
BY WALTER DE VOE.

A Book That Awakens the Healing Power in the Soul,
It Teaches the Glorious Truth that Frees From Sin, Sickness, Poverty and Pain.
PRICE, $2.00.
For Sale by
COLLEGE OF FREEDOM
Woodlawn, Chicago.

A PRACTICAL COURSE
FOR
Physicians and Students
of Occultism,
Treating on the Following Subjects:
Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By
PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to
MISS NETTIE WINTER,
466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PUBLICATIONS
OF
Hudson Tuttle.
Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.
This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.
In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRIT AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.
English edition. Price, $1.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF MAN.
Containing the latest investigations and discoveries, and a thorough presentation of this interesting subject. English edition. Price $1.

THE SECRETS OF THE CONVENT OF THE SACRED HEART.
This book was written for an object, and has been pronounced equal in its exposure of the diabolical methods of Catholicism to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Price, 25 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.
A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?
How to investigate. How to form circles, and develop and cultivate mediumship. Names of eminent Spiritualists. Their testimony. Eight-page tract for mission work. Singles copies, 5 cents; 100 for $1.25.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.
By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best poems of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE.
For the home, the lyceum and societies. A manual of physical, intellectual and spiritual culture. By Emma Rood Tuttle. A book by the aid of which a progressive lyceum, a spiritual or liberal society may be organized and conducted without other assistance. Price, 50 cents; by the dozen, 40 cents. Express charges unpaid.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.
For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.
All books sent postpaid. Address
HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1904.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

Heir Promised in a Dream.

If there is a church more saturated with religious superstition than the Roman Catholic church, it is, beyond doubt, the Russian Greek church. From emperor down through nobles and aristocracy, down to lowest peasantry, all—except the few who like Tolstoi and the nihilists, have broken from priestly thrall—are dominated by a superstitious priesthood, which is viewed with awe and blindest reverence as mouthpieces of God.

According to the New York Sun, concerning the recent birth of a son to the Czar and Czarina, the religious superstition connected with the event gives the clergy a renewal of the hold upon the imperial family and people. This is evidenced by an incident which the people of St. Petersburg are eagerly discussing. The Czarina about a year ago dreamed that she saw one of the saints of the Russian church, who expressed sympathy with her desire for an heir. He directed her to open his tomb and remove the relics therefrom and her wish would be gratified.

The Empress related the dream to the Czar. She did not know the name of the saint, so the Czar collected pictures of all the Russian saints and the Empress identified St. Seraffim as the one of her dream.

The Emperor and Empress went personally to his shrine in a forest on the Volga. The tomb was ordered opened. The body of the saint was in a state of perfect preservation and the relics which were there as described were givn to the Czarina. News of their Majesty's mission to the shrine became known through the past year and hereafter it is certain to become a Russian Lourdes or Mecca.

There is a tinge of Spiritualism in the matter of the dream or vision of the Czarina, and the incident shows that spiritual influence is active everywhere, among the high and the lowly alike, dignitaries of church and state not excepted. Indeed we may truthfully say that Spiritualism is extending among all classes, the most intelligent and best educated, the lowest and most ignorant, and all the great mass that ranges between these extremes. None is exempt from its manifestations and influence, from the least to the greatest, the superstitious or the non-superstitious.

Of course, to the superstitious churchly Russians the affair is rated as miraculous, and St. Seraffim will be accorded high veneration and worship.

To the intelligent and well-informed Spiritualist the incident is easily susceptible of a spiritual, non-miraculous explanation.

Worthy of Notice.

There are two things in Moses Hull's notice of Hudson Tuttle's Arcana of Spiritualism which are worthy of especial thought by Spiritualists. Aside from his hearty and general commendation of the book, Mr. Hull says: "The book as a whole should be studied. So thoroughly convinced are the Morris Pratt school faculty of this, that our leader of the psychic class has determined to use it to some extent in her lessons."

It is of especial interest to Spiritualists to note that there is not another institution of learning in this country or any other, that maintains a psychic class, in which the psychic side of life and its nature and phenomena are made a special line of study. As understood by Spiritualists, psychism is ignored by all the great colleges and universities, if not absolutely flouted and contemned by their faculties.

This matter of psychic fact which is always with us, and is of deep import to mankind, is largely treated as if it were unworthy of notice, and its phenomena beneath serious consideration—a mere matter for contemptuous jest and ridicule—by the governing forces that control the studies of these institutions.

The Morris Pratt Institute is thus unique in making a distinct study of this important subject which is of so great interest to Spiritualists in particular.

This fact does seem to be worthy of notice and special thought, and to constitute a special claim of the Morris Pratt Institute on the patronage of those Spiritualists who feel interested in its special line of work.

"Origin of Life, or, Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Prince 10 cents.

The Weeding Process.

Many Spiritualists, usually those who have more recently been born into the light, have an insatiate thirst for the phenomena.

Spiritualism came to them through a medium, no doubt, and it is so beautiful to know that the loved ones gone in death are still alive and conscious, and with them every day, that they cannot pause to think of the philosophy; they are so hungry to see the dear ones that they rush to every seance in the country, and as a consequence every "fake" in the land has a minute description of both sitter and spirit friends, and the same spirits appear just the same at each seance, though given by a different medium in a distant city.

They make the demand and the "fake" furnishes the supply.

These descriptions are soon in the hands of every member of the "secret circle," and they are put down as "dead easy."

There are many genuine mediums who have no "stock tests," and who would not stoop so low as to use even one pointer that came from the human side of life, but their tests are not so marvelous as those of the pretending mediums, who use the stereotyped tests, and they are swept back in the mad stampede for "the marvelous."

This cannot always be. There must come a turn in the tide of spiritual events. It seems slow to an old-time Spiritualist, but it must arrive some day.

How often have correspondents uttered the words in these columns: "We must clean our own door-yard, and not leave it for our neighbors to do." In their envy, as a rule, our "Christian" neighbors would rather make our door-yard look unclean to the world, but if we go into it with the lawn-mower, the rake and sufficient determination the world will see that it is clean, and we need not proclaim it from the housetop or advertise it in the secular press.

It should be the aim of all devout Spiritualists to make Spiritualism the purest religion, the most profound philosophy, and an absolute fact in science.

Can this be done by harboring fraud because it makes additions to the cause?

Spiritualists condemn the Catholic church because they know that the very scheme that holds them in power is deception through and through, and yet, when the spiritual press deems it proper to point to the deception in the ranks of Spiritualism, there are those who raise their virtuous hands in holy horror, and would pull down the curtain between the eyes of the world and these wily rascals, who take advantage of the opportunity and encouragement offered them and crawl up under the wing of our "religion" for protection.

To "hold our peace" would be considered by the best legal authority, "aiding and abetting," or sanctioning the crime.

Ninety-nine out of a hundred of those who censure the editor for this act, would be still more rabid in their denunciation of the frauds, were they in possession of one-tenth of the data furnished this office.

Only recently a detective sprung a search-light on a so-called medium in Milwaukee, and caught her standing with trumpets in her hands, through which an instant before she had been giving spirit messages.

These things are piling up uncomfortably rapidly recently, and, for instance, read the following audacious business proposition, received by a conscientious friend, and sent us a few days ago:

To the Editor:—Enclosed find a letter received by Brother D. L. Haines, and it has been decided to give the man no reply, but to warn the public of his vile scheme, and give him such a ventilation that he will get no patronage from Spiritualists. I hope that you will use the letter. J. M. WHITE.

Franklin, Neb.

I am preparing a demonstration of clairvoyance and psychical phenomena for the stage, which will be quite startling, and as it has several new features, I have no doubt will attract no little attention.

For this act I need a lady who has good stage appearance, good general education, good command of language, one who is a judge of human nature and who can get the most startling and dramatic effect in answering a more or less simple question. If she has been a professional clairvoyant medium or palmist, so much the better. Experience in active business and experience in bucking up against the world will help her.

The act is somewhat in nature of work done by Anna Eva Fay, but in no way is it an imitation. I shall introduce many new and unheard of effects. If the lady has the natural requirements I will teach her the rest. I shall put her at the head of a company playing week stands. I am willing to pay a reasonable salary, but as I furnish the money, the ability to manage and the important secrets, I do not propose to pay any large salary. For her this will be an opportunity to make an easy living, make a name and reputation, a chance to travel and as I intend this to be my permanent business she will have an assured occupation for many years.

Can you not put me in communication with a lady who is the right person for me. Let her write me, giving full particulars of herself, age, salary expected and any effects she is able to accomplish. Also have her send her latest photograph.

I take this means of finding an assistant as I dislike the undue and undesirable publicity of an advertisement in the newspapers or the Spiritualistic press.

Thanking you in advance for any favors extended to me, I am, very truly yours, S. BALL.

(Address omitted.)

Do you wonder why it seems apropos and eminently fitting to discuss this very important question, just at this time?

We believe in the facts as they come from the spirit side. We believe in the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism, but we do not endorse the employment of fraud to gain converts to our cause.

Are you ready, dear old conscientious, cautious friend, to go into partnership with, or to hire out to, a being who would demand that you sacrifice your most sacred possessions (honor, nobility, dignity and your very spirituality) for the dollars that you might get for it? Would you brazenly stand up and represent the arisen loved ones of your friends? Do you sanction the acts of these conscienceless villains who would tear at the bleeding heart of a sad and sorrowing mother by bringing back her babe in the shape of a rag doll, and then mocking her devotion and agony when her back was turned and her money deposited? If not, why would you have us do so by maintaining perfect silence over so horrible a swindle, when known to be such?

Is this the way to reform our cause and maintain an honorable place among other institutions of this country?

To say that those who come into Spiritualism through fraudulent manifestations make good Spiritualists, may be telling the truth, but is that any reason we should advocate the employment of fraudulent means by which to increase our numbers?

It is known that there is a truth underlying Spiritualism, and that truth is all that will make our cause substantial. That truth will live when the name of Spiritualism will be defunct; it has lived before and is eternal, and upon the strength of that truth lies the hope and the aspiration of the scheming sharks who would fatten upon its nutrition.

Must we, can we, shake them off? This is the question, and the vital question.

The police are about to begin a general crusade against mediums in Milwaukee, we learn from a reliable source; not on account of mediumship, but on account of the numerous exposures, and of swindles that have been perpetrated and the swindlers caught in the act.

Must we, as Spiritualists, rush to the rescue because they operate under the name of "Spiritual Medium," when the exposure brands them as "fraud" and not as "medium" at all?

But the odor is becoming more and more obnoxious, and the fakes more numerous, as the exposures made in the secular papers prove, having been read by at least 35,000,000 of people, and something must be done, and that soon, or the cause of Spiritualism will suffer among all thinking, reasoning men and women.

The fact of spirit communion will endure as long as there is one genuine manifestation, but our cause cannot long survive as a factor of great worth to the world, and remain so seriously afflicted by those barnacles of destruction.

Comes Like a Specter.

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 15.—Clad only in undergarments, Miss Mary Black, a pretty young woman and a distant relative of ex-Governor Frank S. Black of New York, walked up the aisle of the Fortieth Street Methodist Episcopal church, corner of Walnut street, interrupting the Sunday evening service and announcing in solemn tones, "I come with a message to you from Christ."

It was just as the pastor, Rev. N. B. Masters, concluded a prayer that Miss Black entered the edifice. She tiptoed through the vestibule, then with arms outstretched she walked slowly toward the pulpit.

Over her shoulders hung loosely the folds of a silk bodice. Her eyes were partly closed and her lips moved inaudibly. As she neared the altar rail she raised her voice, repeating in measured tones, "I come with a message to you from Christ."

Awed by the apparition, the congregation, numbering upward of 300, sat speechless. None knew what to do and the silence was like a pall and in another moment as the girl stood helpless before them women wept and prayed.

Assisted by other men and some of the women whose nerves had been calmed Professor Foster persuaded the girl to go home with him.

She was taken to her home by a family of the name of Hyde. She appeared to be rational upon all subjects other than religion. Later she did not recall going to the church, in which she was an active worker.—Chicago Chronicle.

If this incident had occurred in a Spiritualist meeting, what a text it would have afforded some ministers to expatiate on the evils and dangers of Spiritualism. But as it was one of their own fold—the case is different, of course.

"Spiritual Fire Crackers, Bible Chestnuts and Political Pin Points." By J. S. Harrington. A pamphlet containing 79 pages of racy reading. Price 25 cents.

Opportune Suggestions.

While the good church people are conducting their reform saloon business, we suggest that they enlarge the scope of their operations so as to include reform gambling hells, moral brothels, pious get-rich-quick concerns, heavenly pawn shops, golden rule boards of trade, holy opium joints, reform beer and moral whisky, warranted to induce religious aspirations and godly life and conversation.

It must be admitted that this new enterprise opens up vistas of wide expansiveness in the direct line of cognate businesses. It opens a new era in moral progress—in a horn.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF MEDIUMS' RELIEF FUND.

To the Editor:—The following sums have been received for the Mediums' Relief Fund, to be added to the amount that was being raised in order to secure the thousand dollars promised by our treasurer, and to strengthen the work. The final report was supposed to be that of July 1, but as the friends herein mentioned were a little late, we give them the privilege of having their contributions printed with those of former donors. Mrs. E. M. Lindsay, $5; Jacob Hey, second contribution, $2; T. S. A., Truth Seeker, fourth contribution, $2; Mrs. T. F. Goeltz, $2; Mrs. H. G. Harmon, $1; T. F. Malitz, 65 cents. Our sincere thanks are due to each contributor.

We trust the Mediums' Fund will not be forgotten in future days; the N. S. A. is paying out a large sum monthly in pensions for mediums, and we feel it to be a most blessed work.

MARY T. LONGLEY, Secretary.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

A Psychic or Mediumistic Horse.

According to the Associated Press dispatches, Wilhelm von Osten of Berlin, Germany, who has for a long time made investigations of the intelligence of animals, has reached results in educating an Orloff stallion that causes amezement among scientific men and psychologists. Some of those who have tested the mental powers of the animal are Dr. Studt, the Prussian minister of education; Prof. George Schweinfurther, the famous African traveler; Prof. Karl Stumpf of the Berlin university; Herr Schillings, the naturalist, and Ludwig Heck, director of the Berlin Zoological Gardens.

The horse, besides adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing sums, does examples involving several of those operations, finds square numbers and not only simply repeats what is taught, but solves fresh problems put to him by examiners in the absence of his master, showing a grasp of the principles of arithmetic. The stallion also forms little sentences, remembers them next day and discriminates twelve colors and shades, giving their corresponding names. The animal distinguishes musical tones, indicating where they are situated on the chromatic scale, and picks out discords, designating which tone to omit to restore harmony. He communicates by a system of hoof-beats, representing the alphabet.

Prof. Schillings has taken much interest in displaying the horse's accomplishments to other scientists. Dr. Studt says Herr von Osten would have been burned as a wizard in the earlier ages of the world. When the exercises are prolonged the horse becomes nervous, inattentive and mistakes become more frequent.

Prof. von Osten affirms that the horse is as well educated as a boy who has gone to school for the same number of years, and the professor desires that a commission of specialists be selected to take the horse under observation for four weeks. This probably will be done with the view of determining whether the conventional idea that animal instinct and human intelligence are essentially different, is true.

Verily, that horse is entitled to immortality.

Superstition Exemplified.

The New York Bureau of the Chicago Tribune sends to that paper the following piece of information, which illustrates the methods of the Roman Catholic church to cultivate superstition in its devotees:

"In the smallest Roman Catholic church in the city a reliquary, said to be one of the most precious and representative of any in America, was shown at mass to-day. It is the Bohemian church of St. John, in East Seventy-first street. Authenticated by the vatican, and accompanied by a certificate signed in 1842 by Cardinal Patruzi, then in charge of the vatican collection of sacred relics, the church has a cabinet collection that cannot fail to impress the devout.

"In the center, upon a silver cross, is a little piece of wood, said to be a portion of the cross on which Christ was crucified. Near this is a part of a red robe worn by the Savior after leaving the sepulcher. There is also a scrap of the title of the inscription on the cross, a chip from the table of the last supper, a shred of rope used to bind Jesus, a piece of the pillar at which he was scourged, a splinter of the crib that held the Christ child, a bit of soil from the grave of the Blessed Virgin, and a piece of the cloak of St. Joseph.

"Alongside the columns supporting the altar are affixed small pieces of bones of the twelve apostles."

The more ignorant and superstitious, the better Catholics they are. It is the well-informed and thinking ones, the church is in most danger of losing, though the chains of early priestly teaching are hard to break.

Probably not one of these sacred relics in this "reliquary" is what it purports to be, although "authenticated by the vatican."

But thoroughly believed in and held as sacred, the collection of pieces of old bones, etc., "cannot fail to impress the devout," that is the superstitious believers.

A Voting Constituency of Mothers.

When Judge Ben Lindsey, of Colorado, the highest authority in the United States on Juvenile courts, was asked what effect the influence of a voting constituency of mothers had had in the success of the Juvenile court system of Colorado, he replied:

"The Juvenile court of Denver has always had back of it the support of the women and whatever successes it may be credited with is largely, if not entirely due to their efforts."

"The results of woman suffrage in Colorado have been so satisfactory that it is hard to understand how it encounters opposition in other states. I have never observed one evil as the result of woman's suffrage.

We have in Colorado the most advanced laws of any state in the Union for the care and protection of the home and the children, the very foundation of the republic. These laws in my opinion, would not exist at this time, if it were not for the powerful influence of woman's suffrage which, at all times, has been back of them and those who have conscientiously and faithfully administered them.

I know that the politicians in both parties reckon seriously with the woman vote and I know that men of immoral character have been refused places upon party tickets because of the fear inspired by the woman vote.

"We believe we have the best Juvenile law, the best child-labor law, the best compulsory education law, the best laws for the prevention of cruelty to children and the enforcement of the obligations of fathers to support wife and child, and the best administration of these laws of any city of the Union."

In view of the fact that every irresponsible, unreliable and malicious canard of the failure of woman suffrage in Colorado is seized upon to exploit their predictions by opponents of political power for women, the testimony of a man like Judge Lindsey, an acknowledged expert in child saving, will be of value to those who want the truth in regard to woman suffrage in practice.

PROGRESS.

A Correction Corrected.

In The Progressive Thinker of August 13, I made a mistake in correcting a mistake in reference to Dr. Franklin and the Age of Reason. The mistake consisted in using the figure 8 instead of 9. Dr. Franklin died in 1790, and the Age of Reason was not written till 1793 or 4. J. S. LOVELAND.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents.

What Is Matter?

The majority of people think they know a great deal about matter. They name its so-called properties and qualities, never doubting that they are describing an external substance as it exists per se, instead of the different ways in which their consciousness is affected by a reality of whose ultimate nature they know nothing. They imagine that outward things are directly mirrored by the senses, and that they are exactly what they seem to be. Tell them that to us matter is a congeries of qualities—weight, resistance, extension, etc.; that these words imply and describe our own conscious states, and the effects on us of an external reality rather than the reality itself—and they are utterly unable to comprehend what you mean.

It is none the less true that mind and matter form a synthesis, and neither can be conceived without the other. We are compelled to think of mind in terms of matter, and matter in terms of mind. The hardness and softness (resistance), for example, which we ascribe to matter are sensations; the substantial form in which we are compelled to represent mind is necessarily material.

Every perception, every sensation, implies a sensitive organism and an external reality acting upon the organism; in other words, two factors, without either of which sensation is inconceivable. This is what Aristotle meant when he described sensation as "the common act of the feeling and the felt."

Without the living organism, what are sound, color, fragrance, hardness, softness, light, and darkness, or any of the so-called secondary, not to speak here of the so-called primary, qualities of matter?

Can there be sound without an ear to collect and transmit the aerial vibrations to the acoustic nerve where, to use a materialistic terminology, they can be assimilated and transformed by some mysterious process into sensation, or where they can be so modified that the motion in its subjective aspect becomes the sensation we call sound? Without an eye can there be luminous effect?

There must be both vibrations of the air and an acoustic nerve to have sound, undulations of ether and retinal sensibility to have light, emanations of particles and an olfactory nerve to have fragrance, and external objects and nervous sensibility to have hardness or softness. Vibrations of the air, undulations of ether, emanations of particles, and external objects may all exist in the absence of a living organism; but what are sound and luminousness, fragrance and hardness, but sensations? And, of the external factors mentioned, what do we know, except in connection with the subjective factor? We need not pursue these reflections far, to become convinced of the truth of Tyndalls remark, that "matter is essentially transcendental in its nature." By psychological analysis, our conceptions of matter are reducible to sensation, "the common act of the feeling and the felt;" and this is what Fenelon meant, when he said of matter, "It is a je ne sais quoi, which melts within my hands as soon as I press it."

Let no one imagine that these facts give any support to the theory that there is no objective reality, and that everything resolves itself into the various states of the conscious subject. The doctrine of the relativity of knowledge, as Kant and Spencer have shown, leads logically to the conclusion, in accord with the universal reason and common sense of mankind, that there is something beyond consciousness that, in co-operation with the organism, produces the sensations of which we are conscious.

What is the externality? What can be affirmed of it? We turn to the great philosopher Kant, and he tells us that knowledge of the object unmodified by the subject can never be known, since subject and object co-operate in every act of cognition; and that, "though the existence of an external world is a necessary postulate, its existence is only logically affirmed."

"As well might the bird, when feeling the resistance of the air, wish that it were in vacuo, thinking that then it might fly with the greatest ease." And Spencer says, "The antithesis of subject and object, never to be transcended while consciousness lasts, renders impossible all knowledge of that Ultimate Reality in which subject and object unite." Mr. Fiske declares that we cannot identify it with mind, "since what we know as Mind is a series of phenomenal manifestations," nor with matter, "since what we know as Matter is a series of phenomenal manifestations. Thus is Materialism included in the same condemnation with Idealism." What is the Ultimate Reality that produces in us coexistent or sequent states of consciousness, that appears to us under the forms and appearances of space, matter, force, time, and motion? Who shall tell? It certainly is the basis of all phenomena, mental and physical, and constitutes the enduring part of man. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A Ball Game With a Moral.

A game of baseball that came off Saturday last in West Paterson, N. J., was one of the most remarkable ever played.

The remarkable feature of the game lay neither in the skill of the players nor in the size of the crowd that witnessed it, but in the fact that it was played between the local nine and a team of ministers.

Swift as mountain deer came the young men of Paterson to meet them, and on the diamond, for more than two hours, victory swayed back and forth between the enthusiastic contestants.

It matters not which side won—although that honor, I believe, fell to the local team—the main thing is the fact that the ministers played, and played well, and played with tremendous enthusiasm.

The two thousand spectators enjoyed themselves; the players enjoyed themselves, the ministers as much so as the others; and all the world, with the exception of a few old fossils, is glad that the game was played.

That game of ball means very much more than appears on the surface. It was more than a game of ball—it was a game of ball with a moral, and the moral is nothing less than this: That the ministers are at last becoming reasonable.

There was a time—and that time was not very long ago, either—when religion was the gloomiest thing in the world.

"Hung be the heavens with black," seemed to be the motto of every clergyman and every church member.

Sundays the ministers preached mainly on "death and the judgment," and on the same doleful themes the people thought all the week days through.

The idea prevailed that the world was mortgaged to the devil, and that those who took any interest in its pleasures were sure to be damned.

It was given out from the pulpit that it was a sin to be happy and pretty nearly everybody felt that the pulpit was right.

There was little joy in the world. In the presence of the terror that everywhere reared its awful crest there was but little disposition to laugh, but a slight inclination to be merry.

Man's business in this world was to make sure of his "calling and election" for the world to come; and it was at his everlasting peril that he permitted himself to dally with the pleasures that met him by the way.

I am still many decades younger than Methuselah is reported to have been at the time of his death, and yet I can well remember the time when the few of my acquaintances who persisted in enjoying themselves as they went along were looked upon as being mighty risky, and as "tempting Providence" to a degree that was exceedingly dangerous.

It wasn't "safe" to allow oneself to fall in love with the pleasures of this world—a world that was soon to be licked up in flames and crumpled in the fervent heat of God's wrath like a leaf in a red-hot furnace.

As a joy killer the old time religion was perfect. The incense of its pessimism hung like a pall over the beauty of the world. The life that now is was a curse—and the one to come was dreadfully uncertain.

But it is evident that a change is coming over the spirit of our dream.

When ministers play baseball, and enjoy it, we need no extra argument to prove to us that religion is experiencing a "new birth."

When ministers play baseball, and enjoy it, we may be sure that, in their opinion at least, there are some pleasures of this world that are not to be despised.

In a word, after a long, hard fight, human nature is beginning to win its rights. Long scouted and scorned, it is now beginning to be recognized. Its claims are being allowed. It is entering into its patrimony.

Upon the world, long cursed by theology, is falling the light of reason; and it is beginning to be perceived, on all hands, that human gladness is no sin, and that it is contrary to no law, human or divine, for men and women to get what pleasure they can out of the life that has been given to them.

It is only wrong to do wrong. It is not wrong to be happy.

It is wrong to be selfish, to be cruel, to be dishonest, to be untruthful, to be less than a manly man or a womanly woman—but it is not wrong to enter with zest into the enjoyment that the passing day may offer.

And so it was a grand thing when those clergymen played baseball. It is true they were beaten, but they played well, and, incidentally, did a mighty good day's work for humanity in general.—Rev. Thos. B. Gregory in Chicago American.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

An old-fashioned literary entertainment was given at the auditorium on Friday evening, August 12. The home talent did not say they were there. They did if the Breeze did not say he was not there.

When the first edition of the Breeze was brought forth the hand clapping and laughter declared it was the fourth.

Mrs. Coffman now proceeded to give her editorial of the "Bridal Troup." The bride of the camp hollyhocked in hair and dress until the bridegroom said—so the Breeze said—"I will not walk with her." He saw the plain little dress under the hollyhock and he said, "I gues I will walk on."

The Breezy Breeze breezed some of the "medials" of the camp until they whooped.

It was a little far on, when the editor insisted "our secretary must be reincarnated." He looked around and said, "I will not be told out of my spirit home."

The Breeze feels the Ravenna minister ought to arrest the Katydid. The editor said, "I don't care if he does. Katy will till his soil." When the court reigned o'er her she said, "Katy did, Katy did."

The Breeze says, "The mosquito ought to be arrested, he has been singing on Sunday." He said, I will not say I sang on Sunday," so he said to them, "I do not know whether that was 'sing' or not," and the soil did not get its till."

In the next incarnation the Breeze will be continued.

Mrs. Coffman, on Saturday afternoon, August 13, gave a very interesting lecture, followed by the answering of questions written by persons in the audience. They were very kindly answered; in truth, they were answered justly to all present. Her Sunday lectures were full of beautiful truth and contained many thoughts that ought to be instilled into the heads of all.

LYDIE L. CURTIS.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

Nobody Knows But Mother.

Nobody knows the weary cares,
The many trials which she bears,
Hidden behind the smiles she wears:
Nobody knows but mother.

Nobody knows the hopes and fears,
The lonely hours, the silent tears,
The faith that lasts through dreary years:
Nobody knows but mother.

Nobody knows how deep the blight
When Death came like a thief at night,
And stole her baby from her sight:
Nobody knows but mother.

Nobody knows how deep she wept,
When silently she often crept
To know if baby only slept:
Nobody knows but mother.

Nobody knows the mental strain,
The aching heart, the frantic brain,
When baby would not wake again:
Nobody knows but mother.

Nobody knows the grief she bore,
In her fond heart how deep the sore,
To be forgotten never more:
Nobody knows but mother.

Henry M. Edmiston.

DEAF.

As to a bird's song she were listening,
Her beautiful head is over sidewise bent,
Her questioning eyes lift up their depth intent—
She, who will never hear the wild birds sing.
My words within her ears' cold chambers ring
Faint, with the city's murmurous subtones blent;
Though with such sounds as suppliants may have sent,
To high-throned goddesses, my speech takes wing.
Not for the side-poised head's appealing grace
I gaze, nor hair where fire in shadow lies—
For her the world's unhallowed noises base
Melt into silence; not our groans, our cries,
Our curses reach that high removed place
Where dwells her spirit, innocently wise.

—Henry Cuyler Bunner.

THE ROOM.

Here in this old deserted room,
Where cobwebs fringe the tapestries
Swayed by the breezes in the gloom,
My heart renews life's ecstasies.
There where the dusty shade's let down,
Against the yellow light I see
A bended form whose silver crown
Is more than queenly crown to me.

There in the quiet corner nook
A leathern chair leans to the wall—
There bended o'er some cherished book
A form arises in the pall;
A form I looked to with delight
In days of childhood when I trod,
A vagrant and a tott'ring wight,
A trembling babe o'er vernal sod.

I list the voices faint and sweet
Borne to me in soft roundelays,
Like echoes from some dim retreat
Of life's exquisite choral days.
And while the mould'ring tapestries
Swayed by the breezes in the gloom
Crumble to dust, life's ecstasies
Bring back the sunshine to the room.

—Horace Seymour Keller.

A Host of Angelic Spirits Assist Her.

To the Editor:—As you well say, Spiritualism is world wide, and of course co-extensive with Spiritualism is spirit influence. A large and influential band of spirits are constantly at work in aiding Grandma Shulhoff in her humanitarian work. She attributes her success to the Lord (only a kindly spirit) and says, "I just leave it all to him—all the providing, that is. And of course he sends bread and milk for the babies. He wouldn't send them to me to go hungry or starve.

"For myself, I want nothing. I haven't bought a garment for myself or my daughters in two years, and I don't expect to. We just spend and are spent for the babies—and we love them, every one!"

So Mrs. E. J. Shulhoff, a Chicago woman, as set forth in the Tribune, who, because she believes a higher power called her to work among destitute Chicago infants, had faith and courage a year ago last May to rent a large house with no visible prospect of being able to pay expenses. A large number of homeless and delicate infants, frequently accompanied by mothers equally ailing, have been cared for since the courageous beginning, and never once has a mother or child gone hungry or the rent been long owing. In one way or another the necessary money has always come in.

At present eleven children, the oldest 2½ years old, and nine under 10 months of age, are sheltered in the nameless, informal home at 571 West Congress street. One of these babies is cared for by its mother, a frail girl now able to help a little with the care of some of the other diminutive morsels of humanity, but the main burden of their support and tending devolves upon Mrs. Shulhoff and her two daughters, equally devoted to the babies. No light task, this, when it is remembered that all the little ones are "bottle babies" and require frequent and generous feedings to keep them in their present flourishing condition, and when the nerve wearing tasks of day and night baby tending are recalled.

"But it's all right when one loves the babies and believes God sends them," says "Grandma" Shulhoff, quaintly, smiling upon the two eldest charges, playfully demanding her attention. "We haven't had a night of uninterrupted rest since November, but we seem to be getting along."

Work Is One of Love.

No charge is made by the three devoted baby lovers, no price set upon the care and affection rendered the babies "God sends us." The needy mothers who are in destitution and distress are helped, fed, tended, set upon their feet again in similar spirit; sometimes a needy, destitute father is stirred to new hope by the knowledge that his cherished child will be tenderly cared for until such time as he may be able to support and reclaim it.

"If ever I do get into work again I'll do something nice for these other babies," fervently promises one such father who, his wife in the insane asylum, was in sore straits to know what to do with the tiny baby concerning which he felt so utterly, wretchedly helpless until led to Mrs. Shulhoff's vicinity and friendship.

The baby meanwhile blinks and smiles and prospers, well fed, well tended, lacking not even affection. And across the room from the big bed that enshrines him are tiny girl twins whose mother will strive hard to keep them with her by and by. Six other infinitesimal fragments of humanity, all well and thriving, share the four rooms on the top story. The two little "big boys" of the family, sturdy and laughing toddlers, neither of whom has yet attained the dignity of the third birthday, have the freedom of the household save only the front parlor, where their two pretty and girlish "aunties" give music lessons, in the intervals of bay tending, in order that fruit and milk and breakfast foods and good bread and butter may be forthcoming for each member of the large family. And there are lively times on the top story of 571 West Congress street if the proper time for meals is even momentarily delayed.

How Her Unbounded Faith Was Born.

Back of the good work performed so quietly and unostentatiously lies the simple story of a woman's faith.

A long time ago Mrs. Shulhoff herself had four little children, one of whom died some years back. A second, the son, is married and lives in Wisconsin. The two daughters, at home and with their mother, share in and sympathize with all her unselfish, philanthropic efforts, heart and soul. Growing up together and much with one another, mother and daughters have always kept close.

Three years ago the mother was ill, given up by a physician as a speedy prey to tuberculosis. "California or Florida may prolong her life, but nothing can save her." This was the doctor's verdict.

Concerning the daughter who had always suffered from hip malady it was said that she must always remain a cripple. But faith and prayer, according to the story and belief of Mrs. Shulhoff, cured both mother and daughter. Grateful and fervent, they looked about them for some unselfish work to do.

For years it was "borne upon" the thankful women, together with the other daughter who thought and felt with them, that work in behalf of destitute babies was that towards which they felt special leading. But the money which had been lacking to defray the expenses of the proposed sojourn in California or Florida, as for the various kinds of expensive treatment frequently proposed for the daughter, was also lacking for the support of the babies. The husband and father, now no longer opposed to the work for the children, but willing to assist with it, although for some time an invalid, disliked the idea of the child mission intensely. The small apartment in which the family resided precluded the taking of more than one child.

Couldn't Save the Most Loved Babe.

But in strange ways which Mrs. Shulhoff considers providential she was led from the small apartment into the large house now occupied and the first child was quickly brought to her, a distressed young mother being saved to happier days through the effort. Other children followed, one by one, save in the case of the twins who naturally came together, until fifteen babies laid claim and siege to the hearts of the devoted baby lovers. The sick little baby, motherless from birth, and for several months left to the neglectful tending of a drunken neighbor, the baby whose early death was inevitable but who was saved much suffering, was loved, perhaps, the most of all.

"I do wish we could have had that baby's picture," says the proxy mother of so many infants. "We cannot think how any one could have deserted it so cruelly, it was so sweet."

Though herself a firm believer in the power of healing through faith, strong in the long held intent never again to take medicine or medical treatment, Mrs. Shulhoff exacts no such rigorous faith from the destitute mothers who stay in her house with their children. A skilled physician visits the home upon occasion, several times the inmates have called in other medical assistance, when anxious concerning the babies, but in the main the small shavers are well and lusty and speak well for the "treatment of faith."

To this treatment Mrs. Shulhoff and her daughters, following the famous example of Dr. George Miller, who for many years maintained an orphan's home in London upon a similar basis, yield complete trust and confidence. Do they lack money wherewith to buy the next meal, or milk for the babies, or some necessity for the house or the older patients? Is the rent due and the household pocketbook empty? Is there responsibility of any kind to be met?

Support Always Rewards Her Faith.

"We pray for support and assistance," says the woman whose faith, if it has not already moved mountains, has at least been potent to accomplish the seemingly impossible, "and it always comes somehow. 'Where two or three shall agree together,' says the Bible, and my daughters and I are of one mind in this matter. And, as I said, it is the Lord's work and we trust him to look after it.

"I never go out and look for the children; in fact, I am careful never even to seem eager to take them. They are all brought to me, and in strange ways sometimes. Providence would not send them without the means to keep them alive and well.

"I never speak, even to my dearest friends, of our needs or the needs of the babies. I would not for worlds make appeal for aid or assistance, and all the money we make ourselves we 'turn in' to the work. But somehow, in some way, enough is always supplied to take good care of the babies and any one else whom we may happen to have with us. Now and then friends give us money; once or twice, when we have been practically stranded, it has come by letter; several times I have received it with no clew to its origin or donor. And other things come in strange ways, too.

"We wanted a baby carriage not long ago, for instance. If we had been choosing one we should have selected a double carriage, on account of the twins, but we didn't make mention of this when we prayed for the perambulator. A few days later we had a baby carriage sent us, however, and—it was a double carriage, just right for the twins!

"I haven't the faintest doubt but we shall be able to keep up the work on the 'faith basis.' It's marvelous what strength and endurance have been given us; it takes lots of strength and endurance for three women to look after eleven or fifteen babies, although we've always been able to manage it so far. And as long as friendless, homeless, or destitute women and children come to us we shall take them in."

Mothers Lend Aid When Able.

Sometimes when the women assisted are stronger and able to secure desirable positions they make the home a small present or "divide" with the proxy mothers of the numerous other babies. One woman, who, with her tiny child, was tenderly cared for during several months, left 75 cents when she departed as earnest of the help she would like to extend to other unfortunates were she able. Two young mothers, partially recovering the strength depleted through illness and hunger, have helped a little with the work of the home, one of them being paid for such effort. But as a rule no material return of any kind is made for the care and love given, and the only claim upon this care and love necessary to secure the fullest possible benefits is that of need.

Modest and shrinking in manner, earnestly deprecating praise or publicity, Mrs. Shulhoff has something of the eager spirit of the martyr or devotee evident in her glowing eyes and quiet manner. Extremely slender and frail in physical appearance, the brave faith that is in her inspires every movement.

Her daughters, youthful, attractive, accomplished, are no less in earnest in their devotion to the work, to do which they believe a special call to have been sent them, and as the woman who lovingly mothers eleven little stray babies quaintly expresses it, "when young women give up everything, spend all their time, never go out, do nothing but care for poor little children, they must have grace and faith and love in their hearts."

There is something sublimely beautiful in the above philanthropic work, carried on by "Faith." An invisible host of spirits cluster around that home, and Grandma Shulhoff is their medium to do a beautiful humanitarian work. DIVINE WRIGHT.

WHEN OUR MOTHER PASSES ON.

When our mother lives among us and we see her all the while,
We forget that she must leave us and take with her that sweet smile.
We forget, while she is supple, and goes lightly to and fro,
That she soon will get so feeble that she can but slowly go;
We forget when she embraced us in our childhood days now gone,
Till we see the dumb clods cover her, then wisdom seems to dawn,
Then our heart-strings draw us closer, as we sense her closing day;
And we weep in bitter sorrow when her spirit goes away.

Titled lord and humble peasant on a level here must be
To the mothers that produced them, in our world's humanity;
For a mother, poor and humble, loves as well her humble child,
And as deeply as the mother who has gold around her piled.
And as nature has decreed it that all things shall pass away,
It is no event unlooked for that we all shall go some day,
But the world seems dark and dreary and and the thoughts upon us dawn,
That we love her and shall miss her when our mother passes on.

It is then we feel the value of her counsel and her love,
When her spirit has departed for its mansion up above.
It is then we feel regretful, if a thing was left undone,
For the comfort, ease or pleasure of our dear old angel one.
It is then remorse goes gnawing through our bleeding consciousness,
It is then an obscure future blights our hope of happiness,
And the world looks gloomy to us when the thoughts upon us dawn
That we love her and we miss her, when our mother passes on. DR. T. WILKINS.

A PAT UPON THE BACK.

When th' days are dark and dreary an' a feller's in th' dumps,
An' his cards is mixed so badly that he don't know what is trumps;
When th' sunshine leaves him stumblin' an' a-gropin' in th' gloom,
An' th' flowers o' love are blighted of their blossom an' their bloom,
Sort o' sets his feet a-travelin' in a safer, surer track,
When you boost his courage upward with a pat upon th' back.

An' it gives a chap th' confidence to take a firmer stand,
Just to feel th' kindly pressure of a sympathetic hand.
An' his eyes 'll git to fillin', when you whisper in his ear
Just a little word o' comfort; just a little note o' cheer;
An' he'll bear afflictions torture, when he's placed upon th' rack,
With th' courage of a martyr, by a pat upon th' back.

Maybe you have been discouraged; felt morose an' glum an' blue,
An' th' load you struggled under was almost too much for you;
An' when all your sky was clouded, an' you only saw despair,
Like a black-winged monster hoverin' 'round about you everywhere,
You remember how th' sunshine chased away th' shadows black,
When some feller cheered you onward with a pat upon th' back.

Why, 'twill never cost you nothin' just to do a thing like that—
Cheer some weary-hearted feller with a friendly little pat!
You will never miss th' minute that you stop to do th' deed,
Or regret th' kindly action to th' feller who's in need.
Oh, you'll brighten many pathways if you'll learn th' little knack
Of assistin' others onward by a pat upon th' back.

—E. A. Brininstool.

LIFE IN THE SPIRIT REALMS.

(Continued from page 2.)

forms; for all entities and all forms are as eternal as we are ourselves.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole, and each fills its position and place. You of earth are accustomed to think that each organ of the body has but one use. You say, the eyes see, the ears hear, the tongue tastes, the feet walk; whereas, each and every organ of the body answers a great many different purposes. The eyes not only see but they express all the various emotions of the soul; they weep when the spirit within is grieved; they smile as does the mouth and lips; they flash with anger; they express joy, and hope, and love, and tenderness. But for the eyes there could be no great paintings in the world; no beautiful buildings nor architectural colorings; no symmetry anywhere. The eyes answer for more than one purpose. They are for the soul to use for a great many purposes; not, simply, to see with.

And thus of each and every organ of the body. They not only serve the body but the indwelling spirit, and are needed as much, and even more by the spirit than by the body.

The material body can and often does get along very comfortably without some of its organs, but the spirit body never, for if a material member is missing the person is conscious—and it has also been proved—that the corresponding spiritual member is still intact. If a man loses his leg he is conscious that his spiritual leg is still with him, proving that spirits have feet, legs and arms.

My wife has asked me a great many times since I passed out of the body: "Dear Carlyle, have you eyes to see with as here, and ears to hear; have you feet and hands and so forth?" and my reply has been in the most emphatic and positive manner: "Yes! I have. I can see you and hear you; and each and every organ of my body is intact, ethereal and spiritual. Paul truly said, "there is a natural"—or material—"body, and there is"—an ethereal or—"a spiritual body." Even the Christians, Catholic and orthodox, all believe this; and they are right as well as the Spiritualists.

Miss Abby A. Judson has been visiting me of late, and she is very anious to control my wife to write, and she will tell you of our earth, water, fauna and flora.

(To be continued.)

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

NEW INVENTION!

Write for new booklet, Special Offer this month. Our new Quaker Folding Vapor Bath Cabinet, finest produced. Everybody delighted. Enjoy at home for 2c each all the marvelous cleansing, invigorating, curative effects of the famous Turkish Baths. Open the 5,000,000 skin pores, purifies the entire system. Heats Hot Springs. Prevents disease. Saves Dr. bills. Cured thousands. Nature's drugless remedy for colds, grip, rheumatism, aches, pains, blood and skin diseases, kidney trouble children's diseases and female ills. Guaranteed. Sent on 30 days' trial. $100 to $200 a month, salesmen, managers, general agents. 100% profit. WORLD MFG. CO., 82 WORLD BUILDING, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

770

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Everything at the City of Light is moving steadily forward with assured success. Showers by night and sunshine by day afford a most delightful climate. Lectures and classes follow in succession, and activity on every plane is the watchword of the hour. The mental science advocates are teaching the practical application of the truths which Spiritualism has been giving for more than half a century and the people accept it cordially.

Thursday afternoon, Dr. Chas. Brodie Patterson addressed a fine audience on Mental Healing.

The lyceum sessions held at the auditorium every Friday morning are full of interest, marching with band music, carrying flags and banners affords the keenest delight of from 60 to 70 children, and their songs and recitations show the faithful labors of the philanthropic teachers. Mrs. Peterson and her assistants may well feel proud of the splendid results achieved.

Friday afternoon Mrs. Helen Campbell talked on the Education of Children.

Letters of inquiry are received daily from most intellectual sources concerning the possibilities of the City of Light for investigations along phenomenal and mental lines, and they are all here. The most skeptical can secure the evidence if willing to investigate.

Mr. Lockwood's class lessons continue with unabated interest, and people are being taught an understanding on purely scientific lines of what has long been considered mysterious.

Mr. Conway, a wealthy oil operator from Texas, is making his yearly visit to Lily Dale, and takes a wholesome interest in all our proceedings.

Col. Van Horn, of Kansas City, is a keen observer, and alive to everything of interest.

Mr. J. S. Drake, recently of St. Louis, and the husband of Maud Lord, is a welcome visitor and is enjoying old friends, along with the rest and recuperation from business cares.

On Saturday, August 13, Dr. Patterson spoke on "Concentration, Meditation and Breath."

Mr. J. Clegg Wright lectured Saturday morning on the Evolution of the Human Mind, and said, in part, "I cannot imagine any limitations to the universe, though Peter Parley wrote of a sailor who sailed to the end of the world and found a high wall, which he climbed, and looking over, saw a heap of old moons on the opposite side. You cannot conceive of the end of space more than a limited space. Reason is not a representation of consciousness, and is only perfect on a certain plane. This life should be the basis of evolution for another life."

Mrs. Campbell spoke Sunday morning on "Body Building."

The speaker was followed by Mrs. Lillie, who received her subject from the audience, "The Growth of the Soul." She said: "The soul is the intelligent, conscious Ego. Dr. Buchanan said, 'We have soul, brain and body and that we become body as well as soul builders by various processes.' The soul, like a seed, finds its own way of growing, and is dependent largely on its environment. Every thought we think is to help us in soul development. Spiritualists want the best light that can be given, the greatest amount of truth that can be received. We have sent for teachers of the various cults, and are willing to accept truth from every source."

Sunday afternoon Dr. Patterson discoursed on "The Law of Success."

On Sunday evening Mrs. Mabel Todd lectured on "Japan Revisited."

Tuesday afternoon was the day appointed for Mrs. Gilman to speak, but failing to arrive in time, the platform was occupied by Willard J. Hull, who paid glowing tribute to President Pettengill and to his old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Lillie; also to the memory of Mr. Skidmore and other tried and true ones who had been loyal supporters of the divine gospel taught on these grounds.

Woman's Day, one of the fairest of the season and a grand gala day at the City of Light, was ushered in with great pomp and display. A large banner bearing the inscription, "Lily Dale Greeting to Political Equality," was suspended just within the gateway. Flags floated from every available place, while drapings and festoons of yellow and white made beautiful the line of cottages from the gates to the auditorium. Badges of yellow were everywhere in evidence, and bright yellow blossoms were profusely worn by the ladies, on the waists and in the hair. Everywhere women had the floor, but the perfection of artistic handiwork was realized when the auditorium was reached. Busy hands, under the direction of Mrs. Pettengill and Miss Florence Ahl, with Mr. and Mrs. Further, had been active all the night long and transformed the great platform into a veritable bower of beauty, surpassing everything in the line of decorations ever before produced. Evergreens and yellow blossoms covered the columns on either side of the stage, and above the decorated arch was stretched a scroll with "Woman's Congress" in large letters. The front of the stage, festooned with yellow, tied with huge white cords and tassels, and surmounted with an evergreen border produced a most charming effect. In the background was a large white flag of peace, over a section of which was arranged the small flags of every nation, and beneath it the pictures of Mrs. Skidmore, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony. Over the electric lights were immense yellow pond lilies, while groupings of ferns and blossoms were arranged in bountiful profusion with the most surprising taste and skill, and elicited unbounded admiration.

The exercises of the day were opened by Mrs. Humphrey, president of the Willing Workers, as chairman, who presided with easy grace and ability.

A quartet of ladies sang, "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters," and Mrs. Parkhurst rendered a vocal solo.

Helen Campbell, the speaker of the morning, gave an intensely interesting recital of her two years' experience in Denver, Colo., where she registered as a voter and went to the polls on election day, and did not encounter any of the direful results predicted by the opponents of suffrage. She recounted various amusing events in connection with this novel experience, and explained many of the benefits and advantages which were made manifest as the result of universal suffrage in Colorado.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie was the first speaker of the afternoon and referring to the exquisite beauty of surroundings, said, "Its inspiration touches not only the eye and sense, but the heart as well." She recalled the well-known fact that Modern Spiritualism made its first appearance in 1848, the same year the Woman's Suffrage movement was organized, and pointed to the fact that all along the lines of Spiritualistic teachings the thought had been emphasized that intellect knows no sex, that real progress for the race could never be achieved till the mothers were made free and placed on perfect equality with man. Mrs. Lillie was heartily cheered, and in response came forward and spoke in reverent feelings of the arisen ones whom she saw clairvoyantly, and prominent among them Marion Skidmore, for whom she voiced the message that the work being done was what they had hoped for in the past; the weight of the burden may seem oppressive, but it is only temporary; brave souls are working with you, and the work which is greater than any one can conceive must be done.

Miss Edna Grant rendered a sweet solo and was recalled for a second song.

Mrs. Charlotte Gilman of New York, was the next speaker, and was received with a long-continued round of applause. Mrs. G. has just returned from Europe, and said that the International Council held in Berlin, Germany, was the most inspiring she had ever attended. It was composed of delegates from national councils all over the world and meets every five years. It was a question how Germany would receive this great movement, since children and churches, kitchen and clothes are the limit of interest to German housewives. The delegates represented the best class of people among the arts and professions, and doctors, who are studying the woman question scientifically, after the manner of the Germans. A reception was given by the Empress of Germany and banquet by the city government of Berlin, where the officers wore big gold chains and made pompous speeches. The Empress had a chair brought to Miss Anthony and stood while she talked to her. Every honor was conferred that the great capital could bestow, showing the dignity of the movement that lies so near the heart of the suffrage advocates. Mrs. Gilman said she did not like to put six lectures in one and very nearly succeeded in doing so. She made a strong point of the fact that we learn by doing things. The progress of the world is made by progress in work. If humanity could have ascended the stairway of development by prayer we might have stayed in the garden of Eden. Her lecture bristled with new thought and original suggestions concerning the position of women as cooks and care-takers of children.

The dance in the evening drew a packed house and was supposed to be entirely in the hands of the ladies who purchased tickets and invited their partners, but the most ardent advocates of feminine supremacy were hardly prepared for the surprise that awaited when the entire band filed in arrayed in women's apparel; needless to say it brought down the house, and the hours that followed were strikingly hilarious.

S. M. KINGSLEY.

Report From the Camps.

After four weeks of camp work, Mrs. Morrill and myself are again at our home in Grand Rapids, Mich. We started July 15 for Lake Brady, arriving there the 16th. We were met by the president, Mr. Rouse and the chairlady, Mrs. Hollis, and given a cordial welcome by all. It was our first visit to the well-known Ohio camp and we were charmed with its beauty. We found the camp in good condition, with bright prospects for the future, and we enjoyed our stay there very much.

While there we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Bond the president of Lake Helen Camp, Florida. We also met for the first time, the veteran writer and lecturer, Dr. D. M. King, president of Maple Dell camp. He cordially invited us to visit his camp, and Monday, July 25, we bade farewell to many kind friends at Lake Brady, and left for Maple Dell.

We were met at Ravenna by Mr. King, and while enroute to the camp he pointed out to us the birthplace of Modern Spiritualism in Ohio. It was an old house standing by the road side, surrounded by trees, and Mr. King informed us that raps that could be distinctly heard in the middle of the road, were heard in this house about six months after the Rochester rappings began. The house is unoccupied, but stands there an old landmark to the memory of Modern Spiritualism.

We found Maple Dell a delightful place, well shaded by grand old maple trees, from whence it took its name. They have a fine auditorium, hotel and numerous cottages. The officers and members are very enthusiastic and are working for the good of the camp.

While there we had the pleasure of meeting for the first time, Mrs. Mattie Hull, and also of listening to a very interesting and instructive lecture which she delivered Tuesday afternoon. We also had a short visit with Mr. Gaston, of Lily Dale. Mrs. Brown the landlady, did much to make our visit pleasant during the two days that we were there.

With the usual farewells we left for Cleveland, Thursday morning, arriving there at about 10 o'clock; we were met by Mr. Pope and conducted to his beautiful home on Archwood avenue. After a very pleasant visit with Mr. and Mrs. Pope, they informed us that they had planned a reception for us, and in the evening about twenty of the Spiritualist friends gathered in. The evening was very pleasantly passed, with music, short talks and recitations. Light refreshments were served, then with hearty handclasps and good wishes from all, we bade good-bye to our new-made friends.

Friday morning we started for Michigan. We arrived at Haslet Park Saturday morning. We found the camp in the usual hurry and bustle of opening, but a very delightful and restful place. After one week's stay there, which concluded Mrs. Morrill's engagement, we went to Grand Rapids, stayed one night in our home, then on to Forest Home Camp in northern Michigan, located at Snowflake, on Intermediate Lake.

This camp is just the place for a summer outing. It is a charming spot, surrounded as it is by wooded hills; one feels as he enters these grounds that he is far from the worry and bustle of city life, and in close touch with Mother Nature. This camp is located on the Pere Marquette railroad, three miles from Central Lake, and five miles from Belair, the county seat of Antrum county. A few earnest workers are striving to make this camp a success, and we feel that they will succeed.

They have platted the grounds into lots, which will be leased at a nominal sum. Those desiring a sumer home in northern Michigan equal to any of the summer resorts, and much more restful, should at once avail themselves of this opportunity to secure a lot, by writing to the secretary, Mrs. Ruth Eastman, Mancelona, Mich.

D. A. MORRILL.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

In the World Celestial.

By DR. T. A. BLAND.

"It is inexpressibly delightful."—Hon. C. A. Windle.

"It lifts the reader into enchanting realms."—Medical Gleanor.

"It is intensely interesting."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

"Three things make this book remarkable. Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.

"It will give us courage to pass through the deep shadows of death to the sun-lit clime of the World Celestial."—Rev. H. W. Thomas.

"Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great Spiritual book, but a most beautiful romance of two worlds."—Banner of Light.

It is Printed in elegant style and bound in cloth and gold. Price $1.00.

The Mystic Thesaurus,

Or Initiation in the Theoretical and Practical secrets of Astral Truth and Occult Art. By WILLIS F. WHITEHEAD, Editor Agrippa's "Natural Magic." The book treats of The Symbol of the Cross, Spiritual Gifts, Inspirational Conception, Initiative Exposition, The Astral Brotherhood, Message of the Brotherhood, The Magic Mirror, and Celestial Companionship. It is a good text book for students of the Mystic, and will be sent postpaid, in paper, for $1.00.

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Religion of Science.

By Dr. Paul Carus. Ver thoughtful and interesting. Price, 25 cents.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

The camp meeting at Lily Dale, N. Y., will close September 4, instead of September 14, as appeared in the announcement.

Will C. Hodge writes from San Diego, Cal.: "Our temple meetings are fine and Spiritualism is in the ascendancy in San Diego."

Utica, N. Y., Aug. 11.—Joseph Falatice had a couple of guests who talked Spiritualism and handed him a blank paper, telling him there would be writing on it in the night. Joseph rose and was amazed to find a message illuminated on the paper. It told him to bury $1,000 in his cellar and soon he could dig up $27,000. Falatice heeded, but another man who heard what Joseph had done, stole $200 of the buried treasure, thereby revealing the game to the police. The visitors were arrested.

Dr. J. H. Randall will lecture for the Society of the Psychic Forces, 361 East Forty-third street, Wilcox Hall, Sunday evening, August 21, at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Isa Cleveland, pastor.

Ashland, Pa.—Grace Weisshold, only three years old, is one of the most remarkable children in the country. She speaks four langauges and besides has decided musical talent, playing Beethoven.

The Spiritualists of Topeka are planning a revival in Topeka this winter. From private sources a large amount of money has been obtained for that purpose, and the work on an unusually large scale will be carried on. The building of a temple, worth in the neighborhood of $20,000, is included in the plans. The Occult Science Club is the principal in the movement. The crusade for a big following will be led by this organization, which is the strongest Spiritualistic society in the city. The church which it is planned to build will be known as the "Topeka Church of Spiritualism" and the Occult Science Club will practically be in charge of its organization.—Topeka Journal.

O. E. Kropp writes: "The next regular meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists' League will be held at the hall of the Hyde Park Occult Society, at 319 East 55 street, on Monday evening, September 5, 1904, at 8 o'clock sharp. Take Jackson Park car."

Two hours after waking from a dream in which she fancied she saw her mother and sister killed in a railroad wreck, Mrs. Angie Williams Devine, 5478 Ellis avenue, learned that both mother and sister had been lost in the Colorado wreck. Mrs. Devine has gone to Pueblo to attend the funeral of her sister, Carrie Downing, and to assist in the search for her mother, whose body was washed down the river by the raging flood. Neighbors of Mrs. Devine declare she related the dream to them before the arrival of the papers giving particulars of the wreck.—Chicago Journal.

Miss E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Mrs. M. T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., and Miss Agnes Winke, spent two weeks at Asbury Park. Prof. Longley is at Onset, Mass. Mr. F. H. Wood is expected home from Boston, where he went to join the G. A. R. encampment. The Ladies' Aid of the First Society is progressing, and the meetings held at the grove down the Potomac were well attended. Hon. Theodore Mayer is busy at his desk. Washington has had a very cool summer and nearly all the prominent mediums have remained in the city. The Second Society which has its camp named Camp Fox, after the Fox Sisters, will break up camp in a few weeks and return to the city."

C. I. Kehligua writes from Canton, Ohio: "We will furnish any speaker who will come to us on trial for permanent salaried position the use of a hall every day and every night, should they wish, and a room and office for readings, including a well-fitted place to heal, and guarantee a fair to fine income from the start and a very substantial one later, should they prove satisfactory. We wish such a worker or workers now. Will they write? Address me at No. 215 West Fifth street, Canton, Ohio."

The Los Angeles Express says: "Motion is an expression of life, and life is God," said Dr. G. E. Chesbro, as he spoke last evening before the First Spiritual Mission of Los Angeles. "Motion, under the impulsations of the one supreme force or power of life—the direct means by which all manifestation is produced, has always marked in its train a perfect order of arrangement with all things which give rise to the idea of intelligence. Hence we have life, motion and intelligence, all unseen, comprehending this vast immensity called eternity while consciousness was asleep. But the unfolding of life by the power of motion into outward visible expression called creation is in fact nothing more nor less than that which is recognized by the awakening consciousness. When God said, 'Let there be light,' it was consciousness that rubbed open its eyes to see the light. When God said, 'Let there be a firmament,' it was consciousness awakening to recognize space, and when God said, 'Let the waters be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear,' it was consciousness recognizing those things in that way. 'And it was so.' And so on through the whole chapter of creation until we have a universe externalized according to the unfolding the awakening consciousness fodingthe awakening consciousness into the power of recognition."

L. Worthen writes from Blodgett's Landing, N. H., Lake Sunapee camp: "August 9, at 2:45 p. m., meeting called to order by the president, John Gage. A lecture followed by Edgar W. Emerson, lecturer and test medium. Aug. 10, at 10:30 a. m., conference, which was very instructive. At 7:45 p. m., a seance by that veteran, Mr. Emerson. Every test was acknowledged to be true. Aug. 11, at 2:15, lecture and tests by Mr. Emerson. Aug. 12, at 10:30 a. m., conference; at 7:45 p. m., a seance by Mr. Emerson. It was one of the largest held on the grounds this year, and was well received by all. Aug. 13, at 2:15 p. m., a lecture by Dr. C. E. Watkins, the great slate-writer. Mr. Irving F. Symonds, the business manager of the Banner of Light, and Mrs. Minnie M. Soule of the spirit message department, and a lady friend, were at our camp over Sunday. We were glad to receive them, and hope they will come again. Aug. 14, at 10:30 a. m., a lecture by Dr. C. E. Watkins, who took his subject from the audience. He spoke well. At 1 p. m., a seance by Sadie L. Hand, assisted by Mrs. Minnie M. Soule. At 2:15 p. m., a lecture by Dr. C. E. Watkins, on Psychical Researches. It was well received."

Chas. H. Green writes: "Sunday, Aug. 14, 1904, the regular services of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission were held in their hall, 378, S. Western avenue. Mrs. N. E. Hill, the pastor, delivered the evening lecture. Her address was most powerful and touching in its import, being both interesting and pleasing to either skeptic or Spiritualist. Following Mrs. Hill were numerous tests by Sisters Cutter and Andrews. Mrs. Weaver also gave a few tests; authough short, were enough to bring the thoughts of the most skeptical investigator to our work and to excite an added interest in the phenomena of Spiritualism, in the minds of both investigator and Spiritualist. Dr. C. Burgess also delivered a short address. It is certainly most gratifying to us, and should be to all other Spiritualists, to see the large number of people, some Spiritualists but a great many who are not, who attend our meetings, our hall being usually filled to its capacity at our evening services. The superintendent of the Sunday-school, Rev. Thos. S. Warner, has announced that our Sunday-school will re-open October 2, 1904, with the promise of leaping forth into the front rank of Spiritualistic Sunday-schools. Sunday, Aug. 28, our speakers will be Mr. Geo. Montgomery and Rev. Thos. S. Warner; Mr. Montgomery addressing us in the afternoon, and the assistant pastor delivering his discourse that evening. Both Mr. Montgomery and Mr. Warner are very able speakers, able at any time to command the most respectful attention from their audiences. The subjects of both speakers will be specially selected. Spirit messages will be given after the lectures by numerous of our mediums. We respectfully tender an invitation to any or all of the Spiritualists or investigators, to attend our meetings at our hall, 378 S. Western avenue."

H. F. Coates writes: "Being away on a short vacation, I beg to announce that I will return August 28, trusting that the much-needed rest will be received. I invite my friends to come as usual, after the above date."

Mr. A. C. Curtis gives an account of an attack on Col. Ingersoll by an orthodox minister of the gospel. Really, his attack is a tissue of lies, and unworthy of notice, in view of the fact that any answer here would not reach the persons to whom the lies were told. His statement, too, of immoralities practiced in a city of this state are false in all respects. Such a thing was never heard of.

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be again favored by a lecture from Walter DeVoe, and we always get something grand and spiritual from him. Those who do not attend little realize what they are missing. He will lecture on August 28, at 8 p. m. Mrs. Kline will be the message medium, and she is doing some fine work. Come and get some new ideas and a message from your dear ones. Don't forget the time and place, August 21, at 319 E. 55th street. Everyone will receive a cordial welcome."

Mrs. M. E. G. Howe writes: "After serving the Clackamas county (Ore.) camp of Spiritualists three weeks, with lectures and messages, Mr. Howe and myself assisted the Progressive Society of Portland on Sunday evening, July 24, Mr. Howe, by special request, delivering his address on 'The Life and Works of Thomas Paine,' I following with messages. Monday we left Portland for McMinnville, Ore., where he delivered his lecture on 'Is Spiritualism of the Devil?' to a mixed audience. I followed with messages, and held a large circle the next evening. Back to Portland on Thursday; a large number of camp friends and Portland people tendered us a reception on Friday evening at the home of Mrs. Armstrong, which was a most pleasant affair. Saturday we left Portland by boat for San Francisco, after being away from home six weeks, all of which time we were working to establish the truth that life is continuous and communcation possible."

Officers elected at the Chesterfield camp are as follows: President, Levi Mock; vice-president, Capt. David Kilgore; recording secretary, Lyda Jessup; financial secretary, B. B. Patterson; treasurer, Henry Bronnenberg; trustees for three years, M. Bronnenberg and W. T. Lynn; trustees for one year, Joseph Kizer.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Dr. G. B. Warne, president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, has been at the Clinton Camp, Iowa, during the past two weeks.

An instance of telepathic communication, premonition, or whatever term may be used to describe the phenomenon is brought to light today with the announcement of the death at Muncie, last evening, of the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aquilla Jones. Mrs. Jones was formerly Pearl Bronenberg, of Anderson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Bronenberg, of Anderson. Recently Mrs Jones' mother left for a trip to Adirondack mountains for the benefit of her health. She returned to her home unexpectedly last evening. Mrs. Bronenberg says that while she was stopping in the New York mountains she had a premonition that all was not well with her family at home. Although she tried to throw off the thought she was unable to do so. It finally became so strong that without wiring her husband she boarded a train for home. Her thought was that her husband, who is an invalid, was suffering. Upon reaching Anderson she hurried to her home on West Ninth street and met a messenger at the door with a telegram announcing the death of her little granddaughter at Muncie.—Bulletin, Anderson, Ind.

The second annual camp-meeting of the Association of State Spiritualists is now being held at Surprise Lake, Washington, and the meeting will continue until August 21. The ground on which the camp-meeting is being held was purchased by the state association one year ago, and the site is a beautiful one. On the grounds at the present time there are fourteen tents, occupied by people from various parts of the state, the majority, however, being from Tacoma. Regular meetings are held on the grounds each day, but the meetings on Sunday are most largely attended. The camp-meeting opened one week ago to-day and at that time the address of welcome was delivered by Rev. Frances A. Sheldon, of Tacoma. At the afternoon meeting, Rev. Lois Prior, of Seattle, addressed the meeting, and at the evening meeting, Rev. Flora Heckman was the leading speaker. Meetings will be held to-day at 11 o'clock a. m., and at 2:30 and 8 o'clock p. m. These meetings will be addressed by prominent Spiritualists from various parts of the state. During the week meetings are held each afternoon and evening, with the exception of Friday evening. On that evening social dances are given and refreshments are served. At the close of the camp-meeting the regular state convention of the Spiritualists will be held. No more ideal spot could have been chosen for the holding of the annual camp-meetings. Lake Surprise is a handsome body of water, covering an extent of about eighty acres, and it is fed by subterranean streams. The lake is well stocked with black bass and is quite a resort for anglers. This lake is located near the dividing line between Pierce and King counties, and to reach it by rail passengers on the interurban train get off at Edgewood.—Tacoma Ledger.

Harry J. Moore writes from Clinton, Iowa: "All mail will reach me directed to Cedar River Park, Spiritualists Camp, Waterloo, Iowa. I serve the Englewood Spiritual Union during September, and my Chicago address will be 5900 LaSalle street."

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, one of the ablest speakers in the ranks of Spiritualism, will speak at Haslett Park (Mich.) camp, Sunday, Aug. 28, 1904.

T. W. Sherk writes: "'Spiritualism in Shakspeare' will be the subject of the address at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4303 Cottage Grove avenue, Sunday evening, Aug. 28. The human mind, in whatever field of labor, be it music, art, literature or science, when its success amounts to genius, comes invariably to more or less conscious communion with the spirit world and Shakspeare seems to have been no exception. As with the Bible so with the unrivalled poet, no one can appreciate them as can the Spiritualist. Mrs. Pearce is organizing a ladies quartette, and we hope to have this interesting feature added to our musical program next Sunday night. A strong lecture by Dr. Randall and a fine duet by Mrs. Pearce and Mrs. Hobbe, ably accompanied by Mrs. Sherks, were the features of last Sunday's service. Mr. Coates gives messages at each service."

On Tuesday evening, Aug. 16, about fifty members of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, assembled at the home of the pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, for the purpose of going to the home of the president, Mr. C. Kirchner, as a surprise party to Mrs. Kirchner, who was to leave for an extended trip to Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia. Everything was quietly arranged, and all were in the house and gave the Indian yells, ere Mrs. Kirchner knew what was happening. It was a surprise indeed, and everybody had an enjoyable time. Refreshments were served and a safe journey was assured by the good wishes extended at the parting. Mrs. Kirchner will be away from the mission about six weeks, and will do some missionary work at the various societies she will visit.

W. H. Kiser writes: "Mrs DeWolf Kiser will not be at Waterloo camp, Iowa, this year, notwithstanding her name appears on Waterloo advertising. Perhaps the authorities meant all right in placing her name, expecting her presence without previous arrangement or consent on her part, hence no appointment to be there. However, that her many friends who read The Progressive Thinker may not be disappointed, but know of her whereabouts, I will say that she expects to be in Chicago after August 23 for about ten days. Her location may be found by inquiry at 251 S. Hermitage avenue. She sends love to all the friends who may read this letter, and to those who are writing her, expecting to see her at Waterloo."

Mrs. M. A. Gray writes: "There is no publication I value higher than I do The Progressive Thinker, and I mean to be a subscriber for it as long as I am able to peruse its contents."

Priscilla E. McArthur writes: "I wish to endorse the Open Court which is now in session in your much beloved paper, and also the methods which you adopt in promulgating Spiritualism in its entirety. To my way of thinking, you will rid the cause of the stigma that 'false prophets' and fakes have been trying with their Blue Book and artificial toggery to place upon it. Instead, as some seem to fear, of belittling Spiritualism, it will bring out the beauty and grandeur which we know is contained therein, so intelligent people can view and reason upon it, and know it to be a thing of beauty and a joy forever, and will give the investigator the right thought, that there are intelligent workers within the ranks of Spiritualism. We who have been within the fold of Spiritualism for years, going from place to place, seeing mediumship manifesting the return of spirit in all the different phases, also seeing the work done through our home mediums, besides feeling, seeing and at times speaking for the spirit, know that it is a truth which has come to stay and it is to the world of creeds and skepticism what the giant oak is to the forest, it is king! The mad, rushing wind only serves as a strengthener, causing the oak to strike its roots deeper in mother earth, making it more firm for the next attack; but if we wish to have a pleasant uninterrupted rest under the boughs of the shade-giving oak, we don't want thorns, thistles or weeds of any kind to surround it, trying to take the nourishment which should be given to the tree, besides troubling us in various ways."

Mrs. Maud K. Gates writes: "The Spiritualists of Winfield, Kansas, have organized a local society known as the Spiritual Society of Occult Science. I would like to correspond with good speakers and mediums. Address me at No. 1303 So. Manning street, Winfield, Kansas."

Dr. Beverly writes: "The Spiritual Science Society, at Arlington Hall is prospering during the summer months. Our hall is being decorated. We will be ready for our next party Saturday evening, Oct. 1. This will be a swell affair and we invite you all to come and enjoy something novel and entertaining. Our orchestra will give you music that will make the oldest member dance with delight. All who are visiting in the city are especially invited to attend our Sunday meetings and enjoy the day. We always have plenty of mediums and the best talen that can be procured."

Correspondent writes: "Lora Holton-Upson held two grove meetings, Aug. 8 and 14, in Geo. L. Congdon's beautiful grove, on the banks of Fox river, Elgin, Ill. She took her subject from the audience and answered questions pertaining to the philosophy of spirit return. She finds The Progressive Thinker a welcome visitor i nthe home of Elgin Spiritualists. Her permanent address is 495 East 43rd street, Chicago, where she can be addressed for fall and winter engagements."

Dr. Louis H. Friedman, the noted healer writes: "After enjoying Chesterfield and Vicksburg camps, I came to St. Louis, Mo., to see the fair, and possibly combine business with pleasure. I am now stopping at Mrs. Cadman's house, 4242 Cook avenue. I have met a great many people who read The Progressive Thinker, and all agree that fakes should be stamped out of grand old Spiritualism. But what is the difference; everybody who is practicing mediumship is called a fake by the authorities. You have to pay license in everytown and city in America (very nearly) to practice any phase of mediumship. I shall remain a few weeks at the above address, when I shall return to Chicago for my winter work. All societies who desire me to give public demonstrations and talks, can write me for dates."

There will be a social held at the residence of Mrs. M. A. Burland, 3019 Vernon avenue, Thursday evening, Aug. 25. There will be readings, palmistry, music, refreshments, etc. It is for the benefit of the Light of Truth church, corner Forty-seventh street and Cottage Grove avenue, where Mrs. Burland holds two services every Sunday, at 3 and 8. p. m.

Grand Ledge Camp, Mich.

The camp-meeting at Grand Ledge continues to be well attended, the people seeming to take great interest in all the meetings.

From Sunday, Aug. 7 to Friday, Aug. 12, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kates were the speakers. As usual their work was highly appreciated by our people.

From Sunday, Aug. 14 to Thursday, Aug. 18, Rev. B. F. Austin was our speaker. We feel that his work was extremely profitable to his audiences, as his discourses were eloquent, logical and instructive. Mr. Austin will always be a welcome visitor in our state.

The conference meetings are quite a feature at our camp this season, presided over by our chairman, Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly. They add much to the life and zest of our assembly.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter will be our speaker Sunday, Aug. 21. We look forward with pleasure to her coming as her work is always entertaining.

Tuesday, Aug. 16, the annual meeting of the Michigan State Spiritualists was held in Lansing, and many from our camp were in attendance.

Rena D. Chapman, one of our campers, was re-elected state secretary.

LAURA MATLOCK, Sec'y.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

John Servis passed to spirit life, Aug. 1, from his home in Los Angeles, Cal. Dr. and Mrs. Chesbro conducted this most beautiful funeral service. It seemed like bidding a good old Spiritualist friend adieu for a safe and happy voyage to a fairer clime, from whence he could come to visit his friends at will. This service had a wonderful effect upon the church friends who were present.

A. VOSS.

Mrs. Mary J. Kendrick, mother of Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, the celebrated medium, passed to spirit life, August 11, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Grabel of Chicago. Her remains were taken to Louisville, Kentucky, for interment. Mrs. Kendrick was nearly 76 years of age, and although a life-long member of the Episcopal church, she had been convinced of spirit return through her daughter's mediumship. Her death is the seventh that has occurred in the immediate family since last October, including Mrs. Folsom's husband, who passed away Feb. 28. Mrs. Kendrick's husband was a prominent attorney of Louisville, and she was a cousin of Congressman Kendall, of Kentucky, and Judge Elliott of the Supreme Court of Kentucky. Of a family of thirteen children, all have preceded her to spirit life but four, Hon. M. B. Kendrick, attorney, of Newport, Ky.; Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, of St. Louis; Mrs. Louise Bronstein of Frankfort, Ky., and Mrs. Grable of Chicago.

C. W. STEWART.

William Van Linck departed this life at San Francisco, Cal., August 7, 1904, of heart disease, aged 49 years, 8 months and 20 days.

The funeral services were held Aug. 9, at Gantner Brothers' undertaking parlors, at 1209 Mission street, and were conducted by Prof. Geo. F. Perkins. The address throughout was very beautiful and comforting and given with strong spirit power, as was also the songs, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Only a Thin Veil Between Us."

The services were concluded at the I. O. O. F. cemetery, by the reading of the beautiful poem, "Scatter the Germs of the Beautiful," and invocation. The remains were cremated, according to the wishes of Mrs. Van Linck.

MRS. L. M. PALMER.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. F. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

WHAT IS CONSCIENCE?

Analyzed and Considered From the Standpoint of M. Adele Thieman

Inherent in the physical construction of man resides that faculty, dormant in some, active in others, which for ages has been referred to under orthodox teachings as "Conscience." It is designated as "the still small voice," the censor and director of man. By those mindful of their "conscience" the question has oft been asked, "What is conscience? Where does it arise? and whence does it receive its informations?

The conscience is nothing more or nothing less than the spirit of man, residing within his physical body during man's sojourn on this mortal plane of life.

Man is trifold in his nature—spirit, soul and body.

The spirit is the highest life. It is the source of wisdom and love. All spirit is pure.

Soul is the life of the body, the consciousness. Spirit is the life of the soul.

Spirit, soul and body are so closely interwoven that each seems a voucher for the other, the higher being sponsor for the lower; that is, soul is the sponsor to the body and the spirit stands sponsor to the soul.

Where the consciousness or life of the body, through ignorance or disobedience, deliberately disobeys rules of health and hygiene, the body is made to suffer. Still the body cannot live independently of the soul, and the body being made to suffer for the imperfections of the soul, proves their temporary indissoluble tie.

The attributes or agents of the soul are reason, knowledge, experience, desire, ambition, will power, emotion and others. These agents mingle and bring to, or take out of the soul-fount such quantity of their own constituency as well be required for the spiritual progression of the individual while receiving his primary education in the physical world. The soul-fount, with its soul-servants, possesses the alternative of right or wrong, good or evil, advantage. There is a constant battle between spirit and worldly desires of the soul. As these desires are manifested for good and evil, spirit is ever watchful, ever wakeful; but man by his strong sordid desires, weakens the spirit, which is thereby disabled and prevented from exercising its natural functions of soul sponsor, in holding in check strong wayward currents of the soul. Where anger, dishonesty, greed and other faults and vices are predominant, and where a tendency to evil is strongly accentuated in man, the spirit is smothered by the turmoils of such sinful reasoning, and thereby the soul loses its guiding staff, and man is thrown hither and thither upon the billows of life. Reckless ambition, desires and greed all tend to lower the spirit power. Spirit loses its strength and becomes as dead. Being as dead it is impossible for it to communicate with the soul.

And this is the state where conscience, so-called, is dormant.

Where the ambitions of the physical man are of a higher nature, and all soul attributes are exercised and employed in lofty aspirations, spirit works with soul. Soul, the life of the body, restricted in its capacity, is instructed and assisted by spirit, pure and limitless, and spirit holds its proper position, that of guiding star to the soul life of man. This directing force is erroneously called conscience. And still the word is not altogether misapplied. For conscience means an inner knowledge, and knowledge is the first requisite to any directing force. Where the soul puts aside wrongful reasoning, spirit will guide, and though the conscious man makes mistakes, still each attempt at betterment brings the spirit in closer touch with the soul, and in the very consciousness of their close relationship soul seeks the shelter of spirit. Each evil overcome with good; each attempt at progression brings an understanding of the spirit's power to the soul.

Spirit is wise, all pure, lofty and charitable; and where soul and spirit are being in close touch, man will be greatly benefited, materially and spiritually. Being wise, spirit will never give a wrong direction, and being pure and lofty it will help the soul from base to higher conditions, and being charitable it will always direct in such a way as to prove beneficial to man in his physical, moral and financial state, watching over the same with zealous ardor.

As the body suffers for the misdeeds of the soul on a physical basis, so also is the spirit made responsible for the misdeeds of the soul on the spiritual plane.

All imperfections of the soul will have to be perfected by the spirit after its departure from the body, and each one must make atonement for himself.

And as the pure spirit is the real man and the innocent party to a crime it behooves each individual, in justice to his own spirit, to acquire, day by day, an elevated and pure line of thought as a basis or undercurrent for his acts.

By doing this the voice of the spirit or so-called conscience will be heard by the soul, and man shall be led by the spirit "ever faithful guide" through the rugged vales of this mortal plane to his promised Canaan now dimly viewed in the distance.

M. ADELE THIEMAN.

Milwaukee, Wis.

EVERY DAY.

Every day hath its dawn,
Its soft and silent eve,
Its noontide hours of bliss or bale;
Why should we grieve?

Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And scorn the little days that pass
Like angels on the wind?

Each turning round a small, sweet face
As beautiful as near;
Because it is so small a face
We will not see it clear;

We will not clasp it as it flies,
And kiss its lips and brow;
We will not bathe our wearied souls
In its delicious Now.

And so it turns from us, and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Though we would give our lives for it,
It never comes again.

Yet, every day has its dawn,
Its noontide and its eve;
Live while we live, giving God thanks;
He will not let us grieve.

DINAH MULOCH CRAIK.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism, or a concordance of the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism. By Moses Hull. Price $1.

Esoteric Lessons. A valuable book by Sarah Stanley Grimke, Ph. B. Cloth cover. Price, $1.50.

Every Living Creature, or a heart-training through the animal world. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Cloth. Price, 35 cents.

Evolution of the Devil. The most learned, accurate, scientific and philosophical analysis of His Satanic Majesty ever published. By Henry Frank, the independent preacher of New York City. Price 25 cents.

Father Tom and the Pope and the History of the Pope's Mule. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth 50 cents.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome. A book that has done more to enlighten the world of Catholicism than any other two published. By Rev. Chas. Chiniquy, ex-priest. Price $2.25.

Force and Matter, or the Natural Order of the Universe, with a System of Morality Based Thereon. A very popular scientific exposition. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner, M. D. Price, cloth, $1.

From Dreamland Sent. A book of poems. Verses of life to come. By Lilian Whiting. Price, $1.

From India to the Planet Mars. By Th. Flournoy. Price $1.50.

From Soul to Soul. This beautiful book of beautiful poems is all that the title indicates—profound, sublime and tunefully poetic and restful in its variation. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, cloth, $1.

Gospel of Buddha. According to old records. A translation from Japanese, made under the auspices of the Rev. Shaku Soyen, delegate to the Parliament of Religions. By Dr. Paul Carus. Price, $1.

Gospel of Nature. A book filled from beginning to end with spiritual truth of the most sublime and soul-stirring character. In touch with all life. By M. L. Sherman and Wm. F. Lyon. Price, $1.

Great Roman Anaconda, or Thirty-seven and a half years in the Church of Rome. A 32-page pamphlet. By Prof. George P. Rudolph, Ph. D. Price, 15 cents.

Harmonics of Evolution. A valuable work by Florence Huntley. Cloth. Price, $2.

Healing, Causes and Effects. Fifteen chapters on how to heal by unseen forces. By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price, 50 cents.

Health and Power. A handbook of cure and human upbuilding by aid of new, refined and powerful methods of nature. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Cloth cover. Price, 35 cents.

Helen Harlow's Vow, or Self-Justice. It shows the falsities rampant in society in matters of moral and social import, and the wrongs that flow therefrom. By Lois Waisbrooker. Price $1.

Heliocentric Astrology and Solar Mentality, with illustrations and ephemeris. By Verno Vedra. Cloth. Price, $1.50.

Heresy, or Led to the Light. By the well known writer, Hudson Tuttle. Paper cover only. Price 30 cents.

History of Atharael. Life in the Stone Age. The history of Atharael, chief priest of Al Aryans. Written through U. G. Figley. It is very interesting. Price 30 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. By Chas B. Waite, A. M. Cloth bound. Price $2.25.

History of the Inquisition. Just the book for those seeking information concerning that most damnable institution known in history—the Roman Catholic Inquisition. By Cyrus Mason, M. D. Price 25 cents.

Human Culture and Cure. Part First. Philosophy of Cure, Including Methods and Instruments. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Price, 75 cts. Part Second, Marriage, Sexual Development and Social Upbuilding. Price, 75 cents. Parts Third and Fourth, in one volume, Part Third being devoted to Mental and Psychological Forces, and Part Fourth to the Nervous System and Insanity. Price $1. Part Fifth, The Bodily Organs, Their Diseases and the Great Natural Methods for Their Cure. Price, $1.

Hypnotism. By Albert Moll. Price $1.50.

Hypnotism. By L. W. DeLaurence. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Hypnotism and Suggestion. By C. Lloyd Tuckey. Price, $3.

Hypnotism. An Experimental Study. By Dr. R. von Krafft-Ebing. Price, $1.25.

Hypnotism in Mental and Moral Culture. By John D. Quackenbos. Price $1.25.

Hypnotism, Its History and Present Development. By Fredrik Bjornstrom, M. D. Price 75 cents.

Immortality, or Future Homes and Dwelling Places. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price, cloth, $1, postage, 15 cts.; paper, 50 cents, postage, 10c.

Inner Life Mysteries Explained. The present age and inner life, ancient and modern. By Andrew Jackson Davis. Price $1; postage, 10c.

Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life. This book states the simple principles of the Zodiac in simple terms, and in a manner highly interesting and instructive. By Eleanor Kirk. Price, cloth $1.

Interviews With Spirits. A real visit with friends on the other side of life and a familiar talk. An interesting book. By Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. Price 50 cents.

In the World Celestial. A story of spirit life. By Dr. T. A. Bland. Cloth. Price, $1.

In Tune With the Infinite, or Fullness of Peace, Power and Plenty. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price, $1.25.

Invisible Helpers. By C. W. Leadbeater. Written in the author's charming style. Cloth. Price, 55 cents.

Jesus and the Mediums, or Christ and Mediumship. A careful comparison of some of the Spiritualists and mediums of to-day with those of Bible times. By Moses Hull. 48 pages. Price 10 cents.

Jim. A story for young people, teaching spirit guidance. By Carrie E. S. Twing. Price $1.

Joan, the Medium, or the Inspired Heroine of Orleans. This is the most beautiful history of Joan of Arc ever written. Thrillingly interesting and convincing. By Moses Hull. Price, cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

Just How to Cook Meals Without Meat. A small valuable book on vegetarian cooking. By Mrs. Elizabeth Towne. 25 cents.

Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus. By Mrs. Towne. A book on concentration. Price 25 cents.

Karezza. Ethics of Marriage. A plea for a better birthright for children and a higher development of parentage through the most sacred relations. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Price, cloth, $1.

Kate Feld. A Record. By Lilian Whiting. Price, $2.

Koradine. A prophetic story, and a valuable book for girls to read. Written by Dr. Alice B. Stockham and Lida Hood Talbot. Price $1.

Koran. Commonly called the "Alkoran of Mohammed." Translated into English from the original Arabic, with explanatory notes taken from the most approved commentators. Price, cloth $1.

Language of the Stars. This important work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in relation to man—yet issued. Price 50 cents.

Law of Psychic Phenomena. By Dr. T. J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

Life and Labor in the Spirit-World. Being a description of Localities, Employments, Surroundings and Conditions in the Spheres, through Miss M. T. Shellhamer. Price, cloth, $1.

Life Beyond Death. Being a review of the World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling, Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact, to Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions. By Minot Judson Savage, D. D. Price, $1.50; postage, 10 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. Illustrated with views of the old Paine homestead and Paine Monument at New Rochelle. By the editor of the National, with preface and notes by Peter Eckler. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Life Work of Cora L. V. Richmond. An interesting book regarding a world-renowned inspirational lecturer, a pioneer worker in Spiritualism. Compiled and edited by H. D. Barrett. Price $2, postpaid.

Light of Egypt, or the Science of the Soul and the Stars. A grand work of profound philosophical deductions, on a theme of great interest to everybody. Price $2.

'Lisbeth, a Story of Two Worlds. By Carrie E. S. Twing. Cloth bound, with portrait of the author. Price $1.

Longley's Choice Collection of Beautiful Songs. Price, cloth, 60 cts.; board covers, 40 cents.

Mahomet, His Birth, Character and Doctrine. Historically correct. Exact and perfect in every detail and beyond adverse criticism. By Edward Gibbon. Price, 25 cents.

Mahomet the Illustrious. An apology for the life and character of this celebrated prophet of Arabia, containing 118 neatly printed pages. By Godfrey Higgins, Esq. Price 25 cents.

Man and the Spiritual World, as disclosed by the Bible and study along the line of Biblical Spiritualism. By Rev. Arthur Chambers. Price, $1.10.

Man in the Past, Present and Future. A popular account of results of recent scientific research regarding the origin, position and prospects of mankind. By Dr. Ludwig Buchner. Price, cloth, $1.

Man Visible and Invisible, containing a number of colored plates illustrating the aura surrounding man. By C. W. Leadbeater. Price, $2.50.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

G. H. A.: Q. I would like to know if the following phenomena are of ordinary occurrence or not, and what they denote, and how explained. My father died of spasmodic asthma. About one year later a medium came to this city on business in company with another person who told that the former was a medium and had recently found it out at a town in Minnesota where he met another medium and they worked together in that line to locate some ancient and lost mines. At the hotel some of the guests prevailed on this medium to give a test. In doing this he acted out my father to perfection, having a spasm such as he had when alive. The next day a friend spoke up and said to me that he heard of the occurrence and wanted the particulars. I was reading a magazine and as he spoke I held the open book in both hands, open about the middle, each half held between thumb and finger quite tight. To answer him I let the book go to my lap, still held by both hands as before, and when telling him of the phenomena of the night before the book pulled out of my hands, and taking a curve, sailed over to him and would have landed in his lap had he not been sitting in a high arm chair. As it was the book struck the chair arm and fell to the floor. It was indeed new and strange to me.

A. Such manifestations cannot be said to be ordinary occurrences, and yet they are not uncommon, and few Spiritualists there are who have not had similar experiences. The re-enacting of the disease afflicting the spirit, by the medium, is often witnessed at seances. When the spirit comes through the medium, again in contact with earth-life, the conditions of that life at the time of its departure are revived.

L. Rouser: Q. What is the number of spiritual societies in the United States; number of Spiritualists; number of journals devoted to the cause, and number of volumes issued on the subject?

A. It is difficult to furnish accurate statistics on this subject, as the census report is incompetent, and probably not half the societies affiliate with the National Association. The National Spiritualists Association has somewhat more than three hundred chartered societies, state and local. Texas is the only southern state having a state organization.

The membership of these societies inadequately expresses the number of Spiritualists in this country, from the fact that so many conceal their belief and do not affiliate with organic movement. The number of those interested has been placed at three millions, and we accept it as a conservative estimate. There are five journals—weekly—published, and the library of Spiritualism contains at least 1,000 volumes.

Aurin Hill: Q. How explain Rider Haggard's dream of his dead dog?

A. Perhaps no writer of fiction has a more wayward and vivid imagination than Haggard. In fact his exciting stories have little to recommend them beyond weirdness and improbability. The condensed story is that the author in a kind of nightmare sleep, became conscious that a favorite dog was dead. The knowledge seemed to be imparted by the dog. He says: "In my vision the dog was trying to speak to me in words, and failing, transmitted to my mind in an undefined fashion, the knowledge that it was dying." For this he offers two explanations. If the dream occurred at the moment of the dog's death, then it was by means of telepathy. If, however, as he thinks most probable, the dream was three hours after the dog's death, "then it would seem that it must have been some nonbodily, but surviving part of life, or the spirit of the dog, which as soon as sleep gave it an opportunity reproduced these things in my mind, as they had already occurred, I presume to advise me of the manner of its end or to bid me farewell."

It is well known that some persons are mediumistic, or sensitive to spirit influence when in sleep that are not when in the waking state. The author appears to think his experience is unique, but numberless facts could be produced parallel in significance. Before attempting an explanation, the facts should be clearly stated. Mr. Haggard is not sure of his premises. If the dream was coincident with the dog's death, telepathy is a plausible theory; if three hours after, impression from a spirit desiring to impart the information and employing a vivid image or picture, solves the question in perfect accord with the known laws of spirit.

It may be true that animals for a time retain spiritual form and substance. If so, then the dream offers no difficulties. Whatever may have been his motive for this sensational story, Spiritualists should be generous and thank all concerned, for it has called wide attention, and those who can believe that the spirit of a dog can exercise telepathic influence, or appear and communicate, will scarcely stultify themselves by unbelief in the continued existence and capability to communicate of those near and dear to them.

B. O. Fenton: Q. Where can the celebrated mad-stone be obtained? and what other cure than the Pasteur treatment is there?

A. The "mad-stone," has been kept in the relic-room at Columbus, Ohio, but its use is now forbidden by the board of health. It is said by the doctors to be useless, and by preventing the patient from at once applying to a Pasteur institute, productive of great harm.

Whatever efficacy it may have, is undoubtedly mechanical, depending on its absorption, and a piece of dry clay or chalk applied to the wound would as effectually absorb the virus or other poisonous matter imparted by the bite.

The method of the doctors is peculiar. They have been forcing legislation to protect the dear people against themselves. Not that the people want such legislation, but the doctors want it, to strengthen their trust. The doctors have gone daft on the matter of antitoxins and virus injections. The tyrannous laws enforcing vaccination are supplemented by enactments favoring the Pasteur treatment.

The Chicago institute has been so profitable that one is to be established in Cleveland, Ohio. That anyone who has a chance bite from a vicious dog can have the means to attend, the legislature last winter enacted a law giving any such patient a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars for expenses, such sum being absorbed by the institute. The "mad-stone" might keep some unfortunates away and thus cheat the institute, hence it is to be kept from public use.

The peculiar feature of this scheme is that the value of the Pasteur treatment is problematical, and eminent medical authorities assert that it is not only useless, but develops a fatal disease—laboratory rabies. Noted medical men who have practiced a life time, say that they never met a case of hydrophobia, and many doubt if there is such a disease.

Whenever a dog or cat bites, it is almost taken for granted that they are mad, and there is a nervous collapse from fright. In ninety-nine cases in a hundred, with ordinary methods for wounds there would be no after effect. Now all these go to the Pasteur institute, are treated, and if they recover, are sent away "cured," but if the treatment kills them, "the patient came too late."

We venture to maintain that if one hundred perfectly healthy individuals were to receive the pasteur treatment, as large a percentage would die of it, as are incurable among those who are bitten.

The legislature of Ohio, under the influence of the doctors, has made the "graft" easy and profitable. If Johnny is scratched by his pet cat, the "family doctor" can recommend him to the institute, or escort him. The state will pay up to $500, of which the doctor will get a fat slice for recommending! A more corrupt piece of legislation was never forced on a free people.

Notes From Texas.

The eighth annual convention of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists will be held in the city of San Antonio, Texas, September 30 and October 1 and 2. Reports of the present officers, of the ordained ministers and missionaries will be received. Delegates to the National convention will be elected, also officers for the coming year. Mr. John W. Ring, who has for several years filled the office of president, positively declines the nomination for re-election and a new president is therefore a necessity. The work of the state moves gradually along and the seed of liberal and spiritual thought has permeated the mental atmosphere.

Mrs. Alice Baker will spend the month of August at Delphos, Kansas, camp-meeting, and will resume her work in Dallas the first of September.

Mrs. Laura B. Payne has been doing some helpful lecture work through the state since her recovery from a run of fever in Beaumont. Mrs. Payne's ability as a missionary in many ways qualifies her for the state office and her name is already mentioned as a candidate for state president.

The work in Galveston moves gradually forward with President John W. Ring as leader at the Temple. Services have been continued during the entire summer and Mr. Ring will not leave home until the latter part of September, spending the month of October on a lecture tour in the north and east, attending the National Convention in St. Louis.

Very impressive services were held at the Spiritualist Temple, Monday, August 8, over the mortal remains of little Henry Tiarks, aged seven, who passed to spirit life, Sunflower Day, (Sunday August 7) at 1. 1 5p. m. The lyceum room was decorated with a profusion of floral offerings and fully 200 people listened attentively to the truths of Spiritualism as presented by Mr. Ring. The singing added very much to the impressive services and many declared if that was Spiritualism, it was certainly beautiful and comforting.

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner will resume her work in the state as missionary the first of September, and localities desiring her services should address her care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston. Mrs. Kayner will most likely spend October at the Temple in Galveston, and will then be open to engagements in various parts of the state for the next four or five months. Mrs. Kayner's work proved satisfactory in various parts of the state where she ministered and each locality has looked forward to her return.

The German-American Spiritualist Society in Galveston, located at the west end of the city, is doing a great amount of good, with Mr. C. Baumann as leader; there is perfect harmony between this and the Temple society, and their efforts are therefore more effectual. COR.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price 35 cents.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

Buddhism, Biographical, Ethical and Religious.

No one can read this little brochure by that erudite scholar and clear, unbiased thinker, George A. Bacon, without profit and pleasure. The subject is almost exhaustless, and the difficulty is to tell the wonderful story of Buddha the God-man, in the narrow compass of thirty-two pages, and not omit the essential facts. This Mr. Bacon has done with a delicacy of touch most admirable, and the treatise is like a clear-cut and brilliant gem.

Buddha was born in northern Hindostan at least in the sixth century B. C., and his religious system is now accepted by nearly one-third of the inhabitants of the world. His birth and life have been surrounded by miracles and myths, which were reproduced by the writers of the life of Jesus Christ, and remain scarcely changed, or at least they do not lose their identity.

The story of the Mediator, the God-man, has come down from immemorial time, its representatives changing, but the ideal remaining. The Christ of a thousand years ago is unlike the Christ of to-day. It is not the real Christ men worship, but their ideal of the highest excellence, and thus every individual has a Christ of his own.

In Mr. Bacon's words, Buddha, the savior of India, taught: "The truth is holy and sweet; the truth can deliver you from evil. There is no savior in the world except truth. To abandon all wrong-doing; to lead a virtuous life, and to cleanse one's heart—this is the religion of all Buddhas."

Buddhism is a practical religion which does not conflict with science. Self-sacrifice it holds above all sacrifices. It places good deeds before belief. The fate of the spirit after death will be decided by the goods deeds in life.

The Demonism of the Ages and Spirit Obsession.

We have had time to scarcely more than glance at the book issued by J. M. Peebles, on Reincarnation, before he remembers us with another and larger volume with the above title. The broadside the Doctor poured into the reincarnation doctrine should have silenced the enemy, but we presume not a single soul will be changed in views, for a doctrine founded on fancy and ignoring reason is not to be changed by reasoning.

Demonism is an ambitious book, of 332 large octavo pages, and the author has gathered material from all sources, and so exhausted the subject that it is safe to say that it will be many a year before another book will be required on this subject. The belief in evil spirits or demons, of all peoples, is rapidly sketched. China, Japan, Korea, India, ancient Greece, supply material. A rich gleaning is gathered from the early Christians, and church history.

The conclusion is that there are evil spirits and these have in times past and do at present largely enter into affairs of men.

Obsession has recently called out a good deal of attention, and there is no difficulty in gathering volumes of narratives, giving personal experiences. While it cannot be doubted that ignorant and evil-disposed spirits can control those sensitive to their impressions, it does not follow that all these instances are obsessions. Spirits, good or evil, cannot control a medium unless there is similarity, and when an individual says that he is controlled by evil spirits, he confesses to being on their plane, and does not extenuate or excuse whatever he may say or do under such influence. Nine-tenths or more of all cases that have come under my personal observation, and of those recorded, judging from the attendant circumstances, do not require spirits, good or bad, to account for. They are plainly results of hysteria, from vital depletion, or selfhypnotism, when the mind is deceived by some dominating suggestion. The doctrine that we are surrounded by a world of demons, invisible, irresponsible, and man is a puppet to move at and for their pleasure, is as terrible as ruinous.

Eminent students of hypnotism agree that it is impossible to control a sensitive to do anything against which his moral sense rebels; in other words, to do what he would not do of his own will, if impelled by strong motives. Here is the adamantine wall, defending man from all exterior influences. The medium is able to dictate the character of his control, and if he allows such control, he should direct and reform it, as he would if he was brought in contact with the same grade of mortals. There is more danger of such mortals, fellow companions, hypnotizing and controlling, than of spirits who meet with far greater difficulties.

Dr. Peebles has gathered up a mass of facts, of more or less cerdibility and theories, and his book is a valuable addition to the library of Spiritualism.

Obsession means more than control. A sensitive may receive messages and be impressed by all grades of spirits, and yet not obsessed. Obsession implies a prolonged influence which absorbs and takes the place of the medium's personality. If the medium allows this influence to be prolonged into the possession of the individuality, he is responsible, and all the trouble comes from a misunderstanding or ignorance of the laws of impressibility, and the conditions of spirit life.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Onset, Mass., Camp.

We have been having a feast of good things at this camp. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has been with us and gone. Mr. W. J. Colville has been here the last week and certainly he does attract the people; his classes are larger than other classes; he seems to reach the people, they understand him; and he is always willing. Mr. Colville has been very kind to the lyceum, giving two benefits for the same.

Saturday was Massachusetts State Association Day, and a good audience in the interest of the association was present; fine talent was presented, Mr. Geo. Carey, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, Mrs. Alex Caird, Mrs. Carrie P. Pratt, Mr. W. J. Colville, Mr. J. H. Foss, Mrs. Carrie F. Loring, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, and President George A. Fuller. Mr. George Carey and Mr. W. J. Colville were the speakers for Sunday, and over one thousand people were at the camp to hear them.

The Bridgewater Band gave three concerts during the day, and Mrs. Alex Caird gave a fine seance in the evening.

Onset is a delightful spot, and all should visit the place. HATCH.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1.

THE ARCANA OF SPIRITUALISM.

Hudson Tuttle's Latest Book—Moses Hull Weighs It in the Balances and Finds It Not Wanting; but Good Enough to Use as a Text-Book in the Morris Pratt School. Here Is What He Says of It:

Hudson Tuttle is rightly dubbed "The Sage of Walnut Farm." He has written many able books, but he has never written anything more worthy of reading than the book recently from the press, entitled "The Arcana of Spiritualism." In every sense of the word this book is timely, and adapted to meet the needs of a progressive people.

This book contains history, philosophy, science, reason, pathos and appeal such as will be hard to find elsewhere in Spiritualistic literature. It is a book which it seems to me any right-thinking Spiritualist would be glad to place in his library and keep to hand to his friends.

Mr. Tuttle is a well-read man on all the topics discussed; besides that he has been an earnest student of, and an active worker in Spiritualism from the first. In the language of the Jews I will say, "This man speaks not as the Scribes and Pharisees, but as one having authority."

There are in this book of 351 pages, besides, Preface, Introductory, Glossary, and a few poems by Mrs. Tuttle, fourteen chapters under the following headings: Two on "The Evidences of Spiritualism"; one on "Matter and Force, and Their Relation to Spirit." Others are entitled, "Spiritual Atmosphere of the Universe," "Animal Magnetism," two chapters on "Spirit, Its Phenomena and Its Laws," "Philosophy of Death." "Mediumship, Its Phenomena, Laws and Cultivation." "Mediumship During Sleep," "Heaven and Hell, the Supposed Abodes of the Departed," "The Spirit's Home," "Resume," "A General Survey of Spiritualism," "The Old Religion of Pain, Spiritualism the Religion of Joy."

In the preface Mr. Tuttle gives some of his experiences, including a mediumship which came to him and in fact converted him to Spiritualism. Being under the influence of some thing he saw, heard and felt, and intelligence which was beyond himself, and which was honest and truthful, his Spiritualism came to him to stay—to increase in power and usefulness with increasing years.

In an ordinary newspaper article not many quotations can be made from this book. Indeed quotations are not what the reader wants. The book as a whole should be studied. So thoroughly convinced are the Morris Pratt School faculty of this, that our leader of the psychic class has determined to use it to some extent in her lessons.

On page 20 Mr. Tuttle says:

"If death makes no change except of condition, the individuality being perfectly preserved, communications must be like their source, and the psychological influence exerted upon mediums be good or bad according to the moral and intellectual status of the controlling spirit. But the law of affinity strictly holds, and a bad spirit can no more force a sensitive into wrong-doing than can a human companion. On the other hand, good spirits possess the talismanic qualities, charity, pity, love, which enable them to enter the sphere of the lowest and aid them to rise to higher conditions."

This, although directly against the doctrine taught in the book called "The Great Psychological Crime," is as true as any gospel ever preached.

On page 21, he shows wherein Spiritualism differs from the theologies: it sends to the stowaway of worn-out superstitions. He says:

"The doctrine of spirit evolution carries with it the following constructive and destructive propositions: (1) Man has not fallen from a state of perfection; has not been and cannot be 'lost from God.' (2) The mediators between God and man are those mortal spirits or angels who bring knowledge. They are saviors one and all, equally essential in his reception of truth, and aspiration for the highest ideal excellence. (3) Evil is the imperfection of a lower state or condition conflicting with a higher, and as such will be outgrown. (4) Mortal life is not probationary; immortality is not bestowed on account of belief, but is the natural heritage of humanity."

In his talk on "Spiritualism, What it Is, and What it Does," he says, on page 24: "Suffering soul there is hope. There is a guide out of darkness into the clear sunshine of immortal light. It leads to the highlands overlooking the murky fogs, and we can see far out into the infinite beyond. That guide is Spiritualism. By this name is meant vastly more than the phenomena which result from spirit action. Spiritualism is a system of thought which goes down to the foundation of creation, and ascends to the sphere of the highest intelligence. It is a system commensurate with the universe, from the attraction of atoms to the formation of thought, from the birth of worlds to the ascension of an angel.

"This Spiritualism is the foundation of all religious systems. It runs through all as a golden thread, woven into diverse patterns, always bright, beautiful, indestructible, however dark the background against which it is revealed. It forms the essence of all poetry, and supplies the pivotal facts of history. It is the essential doctrine of all sacred books, without which they have no significance. The various Christian churches repose on the demonstration through Jesus of immortality, and the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, records the communion of spirits with mankind."

On pages 37-39 of this book all the subconscious theories of explaining Spiritualism with spirits left out are spoiled beyond redemption. I am sorry that I have not room to make extensive quotations from them.

The chapter devoted to the Evidences of Spiritualism, is filled with just such evidences as all our speakers and writers need to use in their arguments with and for skeptics.

By far the most interesting chapter for those who wish to study Spiritualism as a science is the one devoted to "The Relations of Matter and Force to Spirit."

The chapter on "The Philosophy of Death," if thoroughly studied and understood will entirely take the sting out of the thought of Death, and cause the one who comprehends it to look forward with joy and not with dread to the event called death.

On "The Spirit's Home," Mr. Tuttle takes a different view from that generally assumed by Spiritualists, but I can see no reason why his views may not be correct. They are certainly reasonable.

The Glossary at the end of the book should be studied by Spiritualists who mispronounce many of its terms, and who use many others without any comprehension of their meaning. I heard a leading speaker, not long since, several times mention the term psychrometry and psychrometric, instead of psychometry and psychometric. When one puts "chrom" into psychometry they connect it so closely with colors that it is a little hard to tell whether they are talking about colors or soul measuring. A thorough study of this glossary will be of great assistance to some of our workers.

It is hoped that the readers of The Progressive Thinker will supply themselves with this book and thoroughly study it. MOSES HULL.

Franklin, Neb., Camp.

The camp-meeting at this place closed with a large attendance Sunday night, Aug. 14. During the last ten days of the camp the work was materially aided by Dr. Casterline of Edgar, Neb., whose beautiful solos attracted many who also appreciated his masterly lecture on the Bible.

Hon. C. H. Moody, of Jewell county, Kansas, delivered an eloquent and logical lecture on Labor Day, which was said to be the best lecture ever delivered in Franklin.

Woman's Day was celebrated in becoming manner by the ladies of the camp, and a prominent feature of the day was a lecture by Mrs. Wilkins, an employe of the Geneva Industrial School of Geneva, Neb. In the evening, Queen Victoria delivered a lecture on Woman's Sphere, using Hon. C. H. Moody as medium.

Rain has interfered some, but in spite of all obstacles a successful business meeting was held the last Saturday of the camp, at which the following officers were elected: W. W. Shelburn, president; C. H. Moody, vice-president; D. L. Haines, secretary; Rosco Burton, assistant secretary; Mrs. D. L. Haines, treasurer. Board of directors, R. G. Douglas, Rosco Burton, Mr. Boulton, Mr. Bowers, Mrs. W. W. Shelburn, Mr. Wm. Lea.

The papers have treated us with the greatest courtesy, and the citizens of Franklin have given the kindest of treatment to campers. To mediums thinking of visiting this camp in future, I will say that their money is absolutely sure. The Sunday night closing was a great success.

J. M. WHITE.

Grand Ledge, Mich., Camp.

From what we learn through sidelights, the season is not generally favorable—in a financial sense—to camps or resorts of our state, owing, it is believed to campaign year, and a greater desire to see the World's Fair. However, the Grand Ledge camp for the past two weeks is as prosperous as in former years. There are more campers on the grounds than last year and the attendance from far and near is about normal.

A little improvement each season testifies to the interest manifested in making the camp in time, a thing of beauty and a joy forever. This is more especially true in the improvement of the rostrum which heretofore looked like Paradise lost. Mrs. Russell, with the aid of two volunteer ladies, have transformed it into Paradise found.

J. W. Ewing, the president, is an all-round business man and is yet a "hustler" in his age of about sixty years. For many years supervisor, and once, nominee for governor of our state and now, chasing dollars through insurance and conveyancing. Very congenial, broad and liberal in mind. Isn't supposed to be much of a Spiritualist as yet, but the bald spot on his head is pin-feathering which—to the Spiritualist—indicates the mind to be in the first stage of "Goosology"; generally the symptoms of angel-trend. John is all right with his symptoms. A good, moral, financial and intellectual influence to the camp.

Mr. Kates and wife have filled their week's engagement, and gone. Very good people.

The weekly dances and music are simply fine.

Mr. Edgerly! Oh, say! you ought to see him as chairman. You look all over the rostrum as you go in. You see everybody else and everything, but the chairman. Watching a large arm-chair behind the table in front, you see something rise and fall convulsively just over the top of the table. You rise in your seat a little for a better view of the phenomena and you discover a chin; to your great surprise it is Mr. Edgerly, the looked-for chairman. Now, this would not be so bad, but for strangers not being conversant with Spiritualistic methods, will speculate as to whether or no they are not mistaken and gotten into a Tom Thumb materializing seance, with an arm chair for a cabinet. O Lord! But never mind. Oscar is all right. HE IS GOOD WHEAT AFTER YOU FIND HIM.

There has been but very few mediums for the different p.aces on the grounds thus far, but are now beginning to come in swarms.

Farmer Riley is in evidence, but unless you are able to sit up all night and sleep in your chair between acts, you will not get a sitting with him; but if you are able it will be a sitting, indeed. Good, jovial, honest fellow, is Riley.

B. F. Austin. Well, I will not insult his intelligence by dubbing him Reverend. He doesn't manifest his reverence in windy prayers and theological embellishments nor blandishments. He throws his clear-cut reason and facts at you in a way to delight you, or to make you dance on a hot griddle according to the plane of intelligence you occupy.

The Great Australian Healer came for a day or two only.

Edson A. Titus, Ph. D., M. A., B. S., D. S. M.—just see that! If that isn't title enough for one man to stand upon before God, it will be because there isn't room enough left in the spirit realm for his feet; but he is just simply teacher and demonstrator of massage treatment, from Ontario, Canada. He is making success in healing at the camp hotel. A very nice, congenial personage. Can't stop joking long enough to spit. You have to look up three lengths and then jump two more to see his "soul hod." Say! honestly, if he should die standing up, he would only have to pull his legs and feet up, to be there, "over there." He's all right.

The campers are all singing hallelujahs of praise over their cook (Mrs. Brown, of Marcellus, Mich.), and her expertness as hasheress and hostess. It is proverbial that all the campers are two buttons shy at the waist this year in consequence. With Mrs. Palmer's excellent management of the lunch counter and bazaar, everybody is pudding out like an acorn on a cent.

Mirth and intelligence flows in abundance and joy is unconfined. Everybody screams, Oh, it's so good to be here. J. P. RUSSELL.

TO-MORROW.

Fret not thyself for the morrow,
The morrow will care for its own;
'Tis foolish and vain to borrow
Its care and labor and sorrow—
There's enough in a day alone.

To-day is the day for endeavor,
The only time that's our own;
If we use it aright there will never
Be trouble to-morrow, but ever
A day from which sorrow has flown.

—W. S. Whitacre.

"The Commandments Analyzed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analyzed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 35 cents.

THE BELL WITCH MYSTERY

(Continued from page 1.)

ject of much superstitious awe in the community.

Whatever may be the explanation of the Bell Witch mystery it has taken such deep hold upon the popular mind in that section of the country that it will probably not let go that hold for a hundred years to come.

Mr. M. V. Ingram, a well known journalist and author, wrote the history in much detail, from notes left by John Bell's son, William Bell, and from testimony collected among the oldest inhabitants of the county. Of the truth of what he has stated as facts—gathered from the testimony of witnesses who heard and saw—there can be no reasonable doubt.

A "witch killer" appeared upon the scene and announced that he could work a charm by means of which he could see a witch and kill it with a silver bullet. He remained several days, making many preparations.

He finally decided that Kate was afraid of him and would not appear while he was there. He thought it best to go home, and return later if the family had any more trouble. He saddled his horse, mounted and was about to depart, but the animal would not "move a peg." Whipping, kicking, spurring and scolding were alike unavailing. The horse would rear, plunge, kick, lie down and all of those things, but it would not move off. Finally Kate came to the rescue. "I can make that horse go," said she; "let me get on behind." Without waiting for permission she mounted, as it would seem, for the horse started off at once, snorting and leaping, and finally rushed furiously down the road.

Kate laughed about this occurrence many times. "I scared that old man nearly to death," she said. "I stuck him full of brass pins. He will spit pins and fox-fire for the next six months. Lord Jesus, how he did beg. I told the old scoundrel he came here to kill me and I was not going to let him off easy. He said if I would let him alone he would never come here again."

A woman named Ayers is yet living, who, as a baby, is supposed to have received a spanking from Kate. The baby was very tretful and the mother had to get up frequently to rock the cradle. Finally Kate said, "Patsey, why don't you slap that child, and make it behave itself? If you won't, I will."

The parents distinctly heard a noise like someone spanking a child, and the baby cried as if it were being murdered. The father and mother rushed to the rescue and the blows ceased. Careful search failed to reveal anything or anybody in the house. Mrs. Ayers says her mother told her about it often, and stated that she behaved like a little lady all the remainder of the night.

William Wall started on horseback to visit the Bell place. When he was near the house Kate called to him, saying, "Hello, Bill Wall! You going to see the witch?"

"Yes," said he, "that is where I am going."

"I am going there, too," said Kate, "and I believe I'll ride behind you on that fat horse."

The horse squatted his hind quarters as if a heavy weight had been placed upon him, and then commenced to prance and kick, keeping up his antics until they reached the house, Kate in the meantime indulging in a running fire of raillery at the expense of Mr. Wall. When they stopped in front of the house she said: "Light and hitch your horse to the rock, Mr. Wall; I'll be in pretty soon, to entertain you."

In about half an hour the "entertainment" commenced. Noises like dried hazelnuts being poured upon the floor in showers were heard, the voice all the time keeping up a steady course of light talk.

In 1852 Dr. Sugg was called to visit the house of Joel Bell, the son of John Bell, whose child was sick. The doctor placed his medicine case on the floor, and soon after heard an explosion, as he supposed, inside of it. Feeling sure that every bottle was smashed into smallest fragments, he opened the case and found everything exactly intact. Expressing his amazement to Mr. Bell that gentleman said that such occurrences were common there, and he never paid any attention to them.

H. M. WILTSE.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

WEDDED—PAXON-M'COY.

A very pleasant wedding party assembled at the home of Dr. Horace Paxon, of Hamburg, N. Y., on the evening of July 27. The bride, Miss Aimata Paxon, is the niece of Dr. Paxon, and the groom, Clarence H. McCoy is a resident of Jackson, Mich.

The house was most beautifully decorated with sweet peas and ferns. The bride was gowned in white organdie, and carried a bouquet of white carnations. The marriage service used was one accepted by the National Spiritualists Association, in October last, and was thought very beautiful. The supper was delicious, and served by the dear friends of the bride.

A pleasant departure from old customs was the showering of the happy couple with sweet peas instead of rice. The wedding gifts were many and both useful and beautiful. Mr. McCoy is thought a great deal of by the people of Jackson, Mich., and will take his bride to the home he has prepared for her in that city. They are both firm Spiritualists, and not ashamed to own it. The writer officiated at the wedding.

CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Do You Suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery.

Mr. J. B. Ayle, Estherville, Iowa, writes Feb. 28th, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after 28 years suffering, could get nothing to even give relief. Miss Eva Preston, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, suffered beyond words for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma until cured by the Kola Compound. Physicians told her she could not be cured. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., a very bad case was permanently cured of Asthma after many years suffering.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Company, No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"Social Upbuilding, Including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In "Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

11 Read This List of 11 PREMIUMS.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

1. The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, our leading Premium Book this year. Price 25 cents.
2. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Price 25 cents.
3. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Price 25 cents.
4. Seers of the Ages, by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 25 cents.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 40 cents each.

We have only ELEVEN Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any two of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.
Any three of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.
Any four of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.
Any five of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.
Any six of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.
Any seven of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.
Any eight of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.
Any nine of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, prive $2.90.
Any ten of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Lastly, all of these ELEVEN Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.35, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

OUR ELEVEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.35.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
6.—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Transcribed by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.
11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Address all orders to

J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Illinois.

KEEP POSTED

In Current Spiritualistic and Occult News.

You can do it by reading each week The Progressive Thinker. The Philosophy and the Spiritualistic and Occult phenomena it contains each week, is the marvel of the age. No one can afford to be without the paper. Its price is within the reach of all.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

MYSTERIOUS REALITIES IN THE DOMAIN OF THE OCCULT.

In spite of the increasing testimony to mysterious communications such as clairvoyance, spirits, telepathy and others outside of the ordinary methods, says the Detroit Free Press, how little we yet know! The skeptical call them hard names and let it go at that. Others call them long names—hypnotism, psychological phenomena, etc., but do not really know what mindreading and hypnotism are. Dr. Funk, the Brooklyn publisher, has recently brought forward a number of remarkable incidents, especially that in which the medium disclosed through the courtesy of the alleged spirit of the late Henry Ward Beecher, the location of a missing valuable coin, which no one had been able to find but he had no explanation to offer.

No Coincidence Here.

One indolent explanation of these phenomena is that they are mere coincidences. But what coincidence is there in the following. A New England acquaintance of mine had a son about 14 years of age who returned home from school in a neighboring town Friday afternoon and stayed with his family until the next Monday morning. One Friday he failed to appear and no trace of him after he had arrived at the railway station was gained. After days of fruitless waiting and search, even to the dragging of a pond near his parents' residence, his mother in despair resolved, contrary to all previous prejudices, to consult a clairvoyant. "I see a body under a boat in a boat house," was all that her trance yielded. The mother rejected the solution, but another member of the family, on investigation, found the boy's dead body just where the clairvoyant had described it. Before reaching home he had evidently gone to the boat-house, probably for a row, and stumbling and falling under the boat, had been unable to rescue himself.

The Twin Brothers.

Was it a shrewd guess? If so, here is a case of another sort: A few years ago I met in Chicago a young man of 25, who for some weeks previous had slept badly and in the daytime had been restless and depressed. He was sure that his twin brother, then in the Philippines, was ill, in spite of a letter written in high spirits to a friend a short time before. He had had too many experiences to be deceived. For they had always been the closest relations as well as resemblances between the two. They dressed alike, and always wore hair and beard in the same fashion. Without consultation they always ordered new suits the same day. When one went to the barber's he was almost certain to hear that the other had just been there. If Frank had nose-bleed, Fred soon suffered from a similar attack. They would frequently speak of the same subject simultaneously; or if one spoke the other would say, "I was just thinking of that." They were almost always conscious of each other's whereabouts, and would call one another up by telephone at any moment, regardless of the location. When Frank arrived in New York from Europe one day he went to a different hotel from the one where he was accustomed to stop. While dining with a friend he asked to be excused because his brother was trying to get him by telephone. Though his friend said, "O, nonsense!" he found that his brother was at the Chicago end of the wire, having by some impulse called him up at the hotel instead of his usual stopping place.

While in Chicago Frank once became suddenly aware that his brother had been taken ill at Geneva Lake, forty miles away. He took the train and without inquiry traced his brother to a farm house where he had been taken after his attack. Fred himself was subsequently aware that his twin was ill somewhere along the line of the Milwaukee road. He mentally rejected every station along the line until he had himself put off in the suburbs of Milwaukee where the trains did not usually stop. He went straight to the house where his brother had been carried after the sudden illness to which both were subject. Again, when one of them while in a hunting party in northern Wisconsin was lost, the other in Chicago was aware of the difficulty and knew when he was rescued. Whenever they desired to locate each other they would shade their eyes with the hand and have a vision of each other's situation and surroundings. This consciousness of each other's existence was, so to speak, unconscious. Not second nature, but first. They hardly knew what it was to think or feel independently of each other.

Hence the surviving brother was not in the least surprised when a cable from Manila announced his brother's death. For only an hour or two before it came, he had a sensation of grief and bereavement as though he had stood by his brother's death-bed.

According to Galton, there are two kinds of twins—those that correspond to the progeny of animals that have more than one at a birth, and the others corresponding to those double-yolked eggs that are due to two germinal spots in a single ovum. It is these, he says, that have such close sympathies. But this hardly explains the sympathetic consciousness of mothers and sons, wives and husbands, brothers and sisters who are not twins, and even between those who are not akin.

Michigan Clairvoyants.

I know several such instances that occurred in Michigan, some of which are reported in the annals of the Society for Psychical Research.

Mrs. Samuel Alexander, of Detroit, has clairvoyant power. While a resident of Birmingham she had a vision of a neighbor dying a mile or two away, surrounded by her family, while the forms of several of the dying woman's deceased friends were hovering above her. The woman had died at the exact hour of the vision and announced to her family the presence of her departed friends. Mrs. Alexander also had a vision of Garfield in some kind of conflict at the hour of his assassination and several hours before she had heard of it.

While living at Drayton Plains the late Mrs. Augustus Leggett, of Detroit, heard her son Percy, a soldier in Virginia during the civil war, exclaim: "Mother, mother!" She knew that these were his parting words. When the next day the messenger arrived she said before he could announce it. "Yes, Percy is dead. He told me last night."

In April, 1890, Mrs. Paquet, of Muskegon, confessed to feeling depressed and, on suddenly returning from the pantry, saw her brother, Edmund Dunn, standing before her. He seemed to be falling forward, apparently impelled by a rope looped around his leg. Then he disappeared over a low railing like the bulwark of a ship.

"My God!" she exclaimed. "That was Ed and he is drowned!"

In the course of the afternoon her husband came in and said:

"I've just got a telegram. Ed's sick in Chicago."

"Sick!" she cried. "He's drowned. I saw him go overboard."

Her husband admitted that he was only breaking the news to her gradually.

"He was bareheaded," she continued, "and had on a heavy blue suit without his coat. As he went over the rail I noticed that his pants were turned up so that I saw the white lining." She proceeded to describe the appearance of the boat at the point where her brother disappeared.

The facts were that her brother, a fireman on the tug Wolf, at Chicago, was adjusting the tow line to a vessel at the mouth of the river at 3 o'clock that morning. While doing so the line got twisted about his leg and dragged him over the side of the vessel. He was dressed exactly as his sister had described him, and, having just bought a pair of trousers that were too long for him, he had turned them up, showing the lining. The captain of the tug thought that he had had an attack of vertigo, but one of the crew testified to the tow line's catching him just as his sister saw it. She also had given a correct description of the vessel and its position. One phenomenon of this vision is especially noticeable and that is the lapse of several hours between the occurrence of the event and her vision of it.

A vision not so tragic came to Mr. Wilmot of Bridgeport, Conn., on board the steamer Limerick, from Liverpool to New York in 1889. He dreamed that he saw his wife come to the door of his stateroom, but on seeing another man in the upper berth she hesitated about entering. She finally did so and stooping down, caressed, kissed him and withdrew. Next morning the passenger in the upper berth reproached him for having a lady come and visit him and behave in that manner. He would not be convinced that the two had had the same dream, and that the intruder was the image of the man's wife. Subsequently meeting the wife on their arrival in New York, the passenger testified to the "goings on" of the husband during the voyage.

"A week ago Tuesday?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Was the lower berth wider than the upper one?"

"Yes. It had to be. It was in the after part of the ship."

"And I was afraid at first to go in, on your account?"

"Yes."

"And then I did, and kissed him?"

"Yes."

She had dreamed her part of it just as the two passengers had theirs.

Other Amateur Clairvoyants.

Not long since a Chicago woman told a friend whose mother was in Paris that she had dreamed of her mother struggling for breath as though she was suffocating. In about ten days a letter came informing the daughter that her mother had been almost asphyxiated by charcoal fumes. It was the same night that the Chicago woman had dreamed it. This clairvoyant—not a professional, however—saw a friend's relative shipwrecked but rescued off the coast of Brazil. It was subsequently proved to have happened according to the dream.

A Washington woman having had a vision of a friend in the same city falling up the front steps of her house sat down and wrote her exact description of the incident and of her dress and of the papers she held in her hand. "You looked so funny," she said, "spreading yourself all over the front yard. But I don't understand; for I don't in the least remember any steps from the sidewalk to your front door I saw then."

But she had dreamed true. The incidents happened as she described. Her friend was dressed as she had seen her, and the steps had quite recently been added on account of the new grade to the street. The two women were intimate friends and the clairvoyant had several visions of the other from time to time.

Detroit, Mich. EDWARD G. HOLDEN.

"THERE IS NO DEATH."

"He Giveth His Beloved Sleep"—"Her End Was Peace—Perfect Peace."

Such is the loving record to be made on the occasion of passing away of our esteemed friend and worker in the cause, Mrs. Stoddard Gray, who was taken from the midst of her family so suddenly and without warning. On the evening previous she was in unusual bright and happy condition of health and mind, laying out plans for future work in which she has taken so much interest for fifty-seven years, and jointly with her son, Mr. DeWitt Hough, for fifty years. Truly her end was Peace, for she passed away without a struggle in the presence of the writer and her son; the direct cause being heart failure to which she has been subject for some years, and the final attack might have been expected at any moment during this period. The beautiful angelic expression of her features showed clearly that she suffered no pain in passing to the higher life.

At the recent celebration of the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism on March 27 and 28, in making the introductory remarks to her audience it was observed that she seemed to suffer from unusual emotional feelings, and within six months afterwards she is suddenly taken away from the midst of her family and of those who loved her deeply for her noble character and disposition—not only in her labors in and for the cause of Spiritualism, but in her household and by all with whom she came in contact. Never was a hungry, tired or distressed mortal turned away from her door, and thousands will miss the kind words of encouragement which always accompanied her benevolence.

Not only in this work was she earnestly following out some noble purpose, but also made many visits to the homes of the poor and distressed with supplies for their needs, accompanied by myself unknown to others, for we always carried out this work without ostentation of any kind.

Her home life was angelic and beautiful in its sweet spirituality, and everyone who entered her presence at once recognized that he or she was in the presence of one possessed of the rarest spiritual culture and refinement.

Mrs. Gray was truly a rare soul morally, intellectually and spiritually. Her life has been a power for good among the many who knew her not only throughout the United States, but from other parts of the world, for her meetings and demonstrations were visited by scientists, philosophers and even princes of other lands, and she has exerted a wide influence over the multitudes of people in the direction of psychical unfoldment.

She never allowed the tongue of gossip or slander to reach her, and moved forward over the pathway of duty with a serene smile upon her face.

She has made the world better from having lived in it, and the celestial home is richer because of her entrance there. She will be sadly missed by all of her friends and loved ones. All will grieve and sorrow for her departure, yet that sorrow will be softened by the comforting assurance that she is free from the cares, sorrows and struggles of this world, and at rest in the peaceful dwelling of the spirit land, from which she came to us as she has assisted thousands of others to come to their friends during her wonderful ministrations in this beautiful work. Joy, peace and happiness will now be her constant companions forevermore.

The following words taken from one of her many letters, written by her to her companion and co-worker in the cause, will at once show the angelic spirit with which she was so largely and richly endowed:

"God bless you, and take all care away from you. When I left you yesterday I dropped into a kind of trance or sleep. When I came to again I saw you before me with your hands reaching to me to show me I had been with you. You are such a beautiful character; your influence is so soothing. You are so kind. God bless you—we feel as if we cannot be without you. Your letters are appreciated by me, and I am always anxious to receive them. We will work together for success in our work. Do not worry about the letter you received. Your mediumship is not understood. God bless you. Your spirit needs sympathy, and I am indeed brought into your life to help and encourage. You came to me to bring peace and happiness.

"How glad I am to get your letters. The kindness of your spirit makes my life burdens easy, for until you came and gave me your sympathy I was losing interest in this life. There was so much hardship for me to lean on, and no one that understood me; now no burden is heavy with your kind words. You are my first thoughts on waking; my last thoughts when sleeping. I am doing all I can to further our interests for our mutual work. You shall always have my protection and sympathy, and believe me, we are friends for life. Your mother is near to me most of the time. Your letters always give me so much pleasure and cheer me. I am always waiting for them."

Mrs. Stoddard Gray was a direct lineal descendant of one of the Scottish ducal families, and her ancestors came here to America in the Mayflower, with the Pilgrim fathers.

She was in her 73rd year at the time of passing out. Funeral services were held at her late residence, and were very impressive throughout in every detail. Her remains were interred in the family burial plat at Saratoga.

The work conducted by her and her son jointly, will now be continued alone by the son, DeWitt C. Hough.

J. KNAPTON THOMPSON, PH. D.
New York.

BOOK REVIEWS.

AFTER HER DEATH; THE STORY OF A SUMMER. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Company, Boston, Publishers. Price $1.

Anything that emanates from the mind of Lilian Whiting possesses great value. "After Her Death" will prove especially interesting. She wisely claims that when the spiritual being that has lived a certain period here slips out of its physical body, and is free from material clogs and lamentations, the readjustment in a number of ways is made. Those who still remain in this world, are far more truly recognized; some have been unduly appreciated; some have been underestimated. The risen spiritual being, now being able to discern spiritual states, and to adjust all to a new scale of values, rearranges his loves and friendships, so to speak. In fact here is a type of the judgment day.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH. Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described. By C. W. Leadbeater. Theosophical Book Concern, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

This book comprises 502 octavo pages, in clear print, durably bound in cloth. The subject matter, pertaining to the spiritual nature of man and the immortality of his essential being, is of deepest interest and intense import to all thinkers, whether Materialists, Spiritualists or Agnostics. Mr. Leadbeater is widely and favorably known as a lecturer and author. He presents the views of the advanced Theosophist, in a clear and kindly manner, entertainingly and instructively elucidating the subject from the theosophical standpoint. The special chapters are devoted to: Some Misconceptions About Death. The Evidence for Continued Life. Religious Misconceptions. Our Attitude Towards Death. The Facts as They Are. Some Examples of Astral Life. Astral Surroundings. The Desire Elemental. An Extension of Consciousness. The Work of the Helpers. Astral Visits. Visits Just Before Death. Thought-Bodies. Apparitions Announcing Death. Those Who Return to Help. Those Who Need Help. Those Desiring to Atone. The Earth-bound. Hauntings. Apparently Aimless Apparitions. Less Frequent Types. Astral Impressions. How to Meet a Ghost. Classification of Spiritualistic Phenomena. Personal Experiences. The Utilization of the Medium's Body. Clairvoyance in Spiritualism. Partial Materialization. Miscellaneous Phenomena. Visible Materializations. Our Attitude Towards Spiritualism. The Heaven World. The Nature of the Evidence. How Clairvoyance is Developed. Index. The Objects of the Theosophical Society.

THE LIFE RADIANT. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston. Price, $1.

The author sets forth in beautiful language that the Life Radiant is that transfiguration of the ordinary daily events and circumstances which lifts them to the spiritual plane, and sees them as the signs and the indications of the divine leading. Every circumstance thus becomes a part of revelation, and to constantly live in this illuminated atmosphere is to invest all experiences with a kind of magical enchantment. Life prefigures before us a spiritual drama in which we are at once the actors and the spectators.

In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration.

THE NATURE CURE BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS. Illustrated. A Bridge from the Old to the New. The Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. By M. E. Conger, M. D., Assisted by Mrs. Rosamond C. Conger, M. D. The Educator Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill. Price, bound in fine English cloth, $2; in neat, substantial cloth, $1.50.

This work presents in a plain concise manner home treatment for nearly all the diseases to which the human frame is heir. The author says:

"The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

"Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of the Nature Cure.

"The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as Nature Cure.

"Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. Nature Cure will lead the way to certain success.

"The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 500 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease

Free of Charge,

to all who will send their name, age, sex, and give leading symptoms; and all who will send $2.00 (Two Dollars) with their request for a diagnosis, I will diagnose their disease free, and will send them for the $2.00 two weeks' treatment, and the best book published on Spiritualism,

"The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism."
BY EPES SARGENT.

Cancers Cured or No Pay.
We Have the Best Method.

DR. C. E. WATKINS,
"THE WESTLAND,"
(Next to Symphony Hall.)
Boston, Mass.

SPIRITUALIST MEETINGS.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7.45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Mrs. Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, 560 East 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Light of the Truth Society meets each Sunday at the northwest corner of 47th street and Cottage Grove avenue. Conference at 3 p. m., and lecture and tests at 8 o'clock. Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union holds meetings at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West Sixty-third street, every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Conference in the afternoon at 3. The Ladies' Auxiliary meets every Thursday afternoon at same number. Harry J. Moore, lecturer.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 7:30 in Garfield Turner Hall, corner of Garfield and Larrabee streets. Mrs. Lizzie Swensen and Frank Joseph, mediums.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 963 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Church, Licht und Wahrheit, meeting every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in Wicker Park Hall, 501 W. North avenue. Lecture and tests by Mrs. Th. Loll and Mrs. J. Villroak.

Church of the Spirit Communion, Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Conference and messages at 3 p. m.; lecture at 8 p. m. Messages by H. F. Coates and others. Good music.

The Spiritual Unity Society holds meetings every Sunday at 3 and 7:30 p. m. at 207 Lincoln avenue. Lecture and tests by Prof. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Rising Sun Spiritual Mission holds its meetings every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:45. Sunday school at 1:30. Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. All welcome.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer. Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 523 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

Church of the Spirit, Schiller Building, 109 East Randolph street, conducted by Prof. Wm. Fitch Ruffle. Services every Sunday at 11 a. m. Brief address, closing with readings for all. 3 p. m., brief address, followed by tests and mental telepathic demonstrations. Speakers and mediums invited. 8 p. m., address, followed by messages.

The Universal Occult Society holds its meetings at No. 77 East Thirty-first street, Hall "C," every Sunday afternoon and evening, the Hon. Robert Gilray pastor. Good mediums to give messages. Conference at 3 p. m. Regular service at 8 p. m.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 480 pages. Price $1.

FOR RENT.
Furnished room at 222 Irving Ave., near Van Buren Street Cars. Spiritualist family.

MRS. G. PARTRIDGE, THE Psychic.
Readings by appointment or by mail $1. 15 Park avenue, Chicago, Ill. 771tf

MISS MAE HUNT.
Trance Medium and Lecturer, is located at 205 Turk st., San Francisco, Cal. Readings including three questions by mail, $1.00. 767tf

ELTON E. HEDRICK,
ASTROLOGER.—Vocation, business speculation, matrimony, changes, travel, all affairs of life. Fee $2.00. Send date of birth as near the hour as possible. Address, 2021 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. 775

WANTED.
Workers among Spiritualists, to handle "The Gentleman from Everywhere," a fast selling scientific and missionary work, heartily recommended by leading Spiritualists, Liberal commission, W. H. WARNER, M. D., Agt.

DON'T READ THIS.
If sick write to me, and I will give you a free examination. I want no leading symptom. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Send name, age, sex, complexion, weight and 10 cts. in stamps or silver, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth many dollars to you. Be sure and write your own letter. Address,
FRANCES L. LOUCKS,
85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address
MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

Institute of Higher Sciences
And College of Fine Forces.
Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics; can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to
E. D. BABBITT, M. D., Geneva, N. Y.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS
The oldest and best known physician now in practice. His cures are wonderful; his examinations free to all who send him name, age, sex and lock of hair, and six cents in stamps. He doesn't require any leading symptoms. He cures weak men. Address,
DR. J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
Lock Box 1203, Stoneham, Mass.

FRANK N. FOSTER,
The Noted Psychic for
Spirit Photography
Send name and address for circular. Sittings by mail. 91 Fitzhugh St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

BIOCHEMISTRY.
The Natural Law of Cure.
BIOPLASMA.
The Life of the Blood.
By DR. GEO. W. CAREY,
"The Biochemic System of Medicine." New course of instructions in the science of Biochemistry, now ready. Send 2 cent stamp for circular. Address,
The Chemistry of Life Co.,
337 Summer St., W. Somerville, Mass

A MASTERLY WORK.
Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.
A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

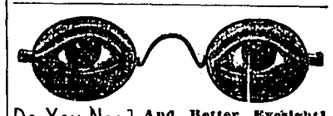
Bangs Sisters,
PHENOMENAL MEDIUMS.
Independent slate and paper writing sittings daily.
Spirit Portrait Work a Specialty.
Sent two 2c stamps for booklet. 654 W. Adams Street, Telephone Ashland 1912.

HELIOGENTRIC ASTROLOGY,
Or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris to 1910. By Yarmo Vedra. With 64 illustrations, 35 of which are original drawings by Holmes W. Merton, author of "Descriptive Mentality." A new system of personally determining the primary fund of Mental and Physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes that dominate the nature of the individual as based upon date of birth. Price, cloth, $1.50.



BODY AND SOUL
BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.
This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

COSMIAN HYMN BOOK.
A collection of original and selected Hymns for Liberal and Ethical Societies, for Schools and the Home. Compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price, 50 cents.

C. WALTER LYNN
THE Eminent Healer
and
Gifted Psychic.
Health Restored by Common Sense Methods.
For the Cure of Mental and Physical Ailments.
OBSESSION CURED
For Free Diagnosis of Disease, send five two-cent stamps, age, name, sex, and own handwriting.
Readings and Business Advice, $1, and Two Stamps.
Address 784 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.
Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER
Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.
Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,
230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal

Do You Need Spectacles And Better Eyesight I can help you. I Will fit your eyes by Clairvoyance and spirit assistance at your own home with the improved melted pebble lense, to see near and at a distance. Please write for illustrated circular, showing styles and prices. Also, my spirit method of treating that restores lost vision and impaired eyesight. I guarantee to fit your eyes, and safe delivery by mail.
SAMPLE FREE.—Sufficient magnetized Compound for four oz. cures sore eyes, restores the eyes to normal vision. Ten cents for postage.
E. F. POOLE,
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.
When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

Development Guaranteed.
Do you sit in the dark? Do you close your eyes to see clairvoyantly? Do you belong to circles? Are you afraid of the trance? I will show you the better, aye, the best way to develop, and without losing your normal condition. Many years of psychical experiences, and as a psychic and teacher, for I have experienced all the phases and kinds of mediumship, have qualified me for the good I am doing. Thousands of flattering testimonials to that effect. I take the students and psychics who fail. If you are a beginner, better start right and obtain results that are genuine. My system is without a parallel, and has had many bad imitations. Send at once, enclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, for Standard Occult Literature.
CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). It teaches you how to penetrate the veil of sense and matter, converse with spirits, read the crystal, see the future, prophesy are attain illumination, and be a Yogis. "All students will do well to study this excellent volumn."—W. J. Colville. "It is a revelation."—Light. "Best work on the subject."—Mind, "Marvelous—Epoch-making."—Lilian Whiting.
SPIRIT WORLD, by Garfield, cloth, 50 cents.
AURAS AND COLORS—With exhaustive dictionary of color meanings. A unique book for unique people. Price 50 cents
BENGOMETRY—The first and only book which teaches the science so that you can practice it. Price, 50 cents
EASY LESSONS in Inspiration Clairvoyance and Psychometry. Price, 50 cents.
REALIZATION—How to enter the super-consciousness and be a Yogis. Price, 25 cents.
DIVINATION—A Ms. series on how to divine hidden things, find lost treasures, become a seer. Price, $1.00.
CRYSTALS for crystal-gazing, a new lot at $2.25 each, postage prepaid.
HOW TO REMEMBER PAST LIVES—A Ms. series on this fascinating subject. Price, $1.00.
Prospectus of "The College of Divine Science and Realization." Reduced tuition.
The only one of its kind in the world.
J. C. F. GRUMBINE,
1285 Commonwealth Ave.,
Boston, Mass.

The Spiritual Wreath.
A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 15 cents.

THE HARMONIC SERIES.

Harmonics of Evolution (Florence Huntley),.....Vol. I., $2.00
THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME,.....Vol. II., 2.00
The Dream Child,..... 75

These works have made a profound impression on the most advanced and progressive intelligence of the age. In the field of Psychical Research it can be said truthfully that they have created a veritable "Cyclone" of interest and discussion. Their subject matter and simplicity of expression make them intensely interesting and fascinatingly attractive to every one who can understand the simplest English. They have made simple and clear the most difficult problems of human life, and carry a special message to all who love the truth.

The Great Psychological Crime—Contents—Part I.
Psychological Crime; New Definitions; Pertinent Admissions; What is Hypnotism; The Deadly Parallel; Man and His Two Organisms; Physiology and Pathology of Hypnotism; "Auto-Hypnotism," a Misnomer; "Suggestion," a Lexicological Libel; Independent Suggestion, a Fact; Hypnotism and the Three Brains; Does Hypnotism Cure? A Violation of Natural Law; True Suggestion and Therapeutic Faith; Post-Mortem Hypnotism; What of the Hypnotist?
Part II.
A Risk and a Duty; Other Definitions; Significant Admissions; Facts Demonstrated; Spiritual Mediumship Analyzed and Classified; The Principle Involved; "Automatic, Physical Mediumship" Impossible; Neither a "Gift" Nor a "Power"; The Destructive Principle in Mediumship; Mediumship and Morality; Mediumship and Martyrdom; Mediumship and "Affinity"; Mediumship and Emotionalism; Mediums and Their Motives; Mediumship and Insanity.
Part III.
The Genesis of "Hell"; The Way of Death; In Perspective; Individual Immortality; On What It Depends; Self-Control, the Application; The Line of Despair and the Powers of Darkness; The Law of Spiritual Gravity; Admonitions and Suggestions.
Supplemental.
The Value of "Theories"; Differences and Distinctions; Transmigration; Transubstantiation; Reincarnation; Metempsychosis; Self-Perpetuation; Conditional Immortality; Inherent Immortality; Individual Extinction; Psychical Reinvesture.

Harmonics of Evolution—Contents.
Preliminary Statement; There is No Death; Life After Physical Death Is Scientifically Demonstrable; Life Here and Hereafter Has a Common Development and a Common Purpose; The Scope, Method and Purpose; The Genesis of Physical Life; The Spiritual Basis of Evolution; The "Law of Natural Selection"; The Natural Law of Selection; A Question in Science; The Completion of an Individual; Masculine Will and Feminine Desire; The Struggle for Happiness; Masculine Reason and Feminine Intuition; The Spiritual Basis of Love; Natural Science Corroborated; Natural Marriage; Legal Marriage; Divorce; True Marriage, Mathematics, Harmonics, Ethics.
Handsomely Bound.
Send for Circular.
Address all orders to
THE INDO-AMERICAN BOOK CO.,
19 to 27 North Kedzie Ave., Chicago.

YOU CANNOT AFford to miss an issue of this paper, with its wealth of SPIRITUAL LITERATURE.

The Progressive Thinker.

SEND YOUR SUBscription in at once, and keep pace with all that is transpiring in the ranks.

VOL. 30 CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 3, 1904. NO. 771

SPIRITUALISM IS A TRUTH.

"One truth is clear--whatever is, is right." Pope.

"I long to know the truth hereof at large." Shakespeare.

"Let us make truth catching instead of falsehood and disease." Ingersoll.

"Truth depends on, or is only arrived at by a legitimate deduction from all the facts which are truly material." Coleridge.

"Plows, to go true, depend much upon the truth of the iron." Mortimer.

"Truth bears the torch in the search for truth." Lucretius.

Let us love our cause and dare to advocate its truth and decry fraud. If we have the pure it cannot be destroyed in the crucible of reason and fair discussion. It will only thrive, and expand more rapidly.

TRUTH IS IMPERISHABLE.

"My mouth shall speak the truth." Prov. viii., 7.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." William Cullen Bryant.

"To have truth and not live it is like having lungs and refusing to breathe."

"However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully frequently, and fearlessly discussed it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth." John Stuart Mill.

A Spirit Mother Talks to Her Daughter.

Question: Of what nature is my mediumship?

Answer: Your mediumship is not demonstrating external manifestations of spirit presence, but of an impressional nature, therefore not requiring external conditions to be made for the spirit or soul to operate in. The conditions are furnished by your mind, for mind speaks to mind, and is considered the highest of all gifts of the spirit. That is the "comforter" which is always with you.

Q. Why is the world called the dark star?

A. The world is called the dark star because the mind of humanity has not evolved to where they add light to light, or universal light, therefore they are still in the evening state and adding confusion, which taken in a whole produces chaos. The minds that are in darkness give for their mite selfishness and greed, to the law evolving human affairs, thereby acting on the wheels of progress as wet clay does on the wheels of earthly conveyances. The minds that give love and unselfishness as their mite are to humanity what the stars are to the earth and the motor power to the engine.

Q. What is your work and standing in the spirit world?

A. My work is teaching others who are in need of what I have become conscious of.

My standard in spirit life would be the same as any teacher on earth who taught the higher branches only. I (or we) do not work for a salary. Each thought and desire and act brings its own recompense. The mind is the standard of all in the spirit world and the thoughts and acts of each one make their history.

Q. How do you receive what you feel in need of?

A. We have a heartfelt desire and act in unison with our desire, for instance, if I should want a piece of furniture my desire goes forth and if I am worthy it will be answered by someone who understands the construction of that article I am in need or, and so on fulfilling the injunction, "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant."

Q. What can you tell me of your home?

My home is white, with a light blue tint. The structure is opaque, symbolizing limitation in so far that I still have those I would rather do for than others. The homes of those who have reached that degree of unfoldment where they would work for one the same as another, are transparent. The windows in my home reach from the eaves to the foundation, symbolizing there is no darkness or selfishness in my mind. My furniture is the same color as the walls, the draperies are whatever color I may desire. My dishes are white with gold trimmings. I may have them decorated to suit my taste. They are about the same as your Haviland china. Those who have transparent houses have transparent dishes if they choose.

Q. What is your food?

A. Our food is the breath of fragrance of your more gross or condensed foods; for instance, you get the scent of an apple that is the apple to us. The perfume of the flower is the flower to us.

There is nothing but refinement. Everything we take in our stomachs comes forth as an odor of fine flowers through every part of our bodies—some more refined than others. A crude illustration taken from earthly conditions—the perspiration of one is so much more offensive than another, the emanation being in accordance with their physical output. So it is with our emaanations, only remember, all things are refined to our acme of refinement.

Q. What is your knowledge of Jesus?

A. My knowledge of Jesus by coming in personal contact with him is no more than when on earth. We receive lessons on what he has done and is still doing. In our gatherings he is spoken of as the light of spheres or Teacher of teachers. When meditating upon his works and teachings, there is an influence imparted to me that lifts me into an exalted condition that I do not receive at any other time.

We have no desire to deify him or to think of him as being God of all life and soul, but rather think of him as being a revealer of the many graces and great power with which all are endowed. He reveals the love of our father to the hearts of those who look in the right direction. You know it has been said that the star was in a certain direction and that the wise men traveled a long way. So will all souls that reach the revealer of spiritual greatness. They must go in the right direction at the right time and no one can lead them. That is a knowledge that is born within each mind. To some the way is filled with many obstacles and they nearly faint by the wayside. Only the few can go on the way rejoicing with only one thought in mind, like the wise men that they were, to see what would be to them a talisman of greatness, a savior of mankind a revealer of God. There had been teachers before him, there had been prophets before him, but he was the greatest of them all. He taught and demonstrated that the power of resurrection after death was within the soul.

Q. What can you tell me of the hour of death?

A. Regarding the change called called death I cannot say very much about. I can only say that when the body is dying the soul is being born into sprit life. That one—or I did, at least—passes into what is called a comatose state and the natural surroundings seem to go farther and farther away and things of a different nature are gradually being presented. The scenes and conditions are in accord with the inner life of the dying individual. All one has to do about the change at the time of death is to accept what comes and try to understand what is given you. The only evidence of death I have ever seen when called to witness the changing of the soul's surroundings, is an emanation coming from the top of the head just within the space that would be left if you put a crown on the head and as that emanation grows denser, the breath in the body grows shorter. If you are so fortunate as to see a spirit materializing from the floor or ground as it would to you, then you could have more of an idea what I mean when I say the emanation from the head gets larger and more dense. I can not say whether this builds the form or whether it is the form that gives the already formed body power to offer to our sight and as a thing of use and perhaps beauty a receptacle prepared from the beginning for the use of the ascending soul. My own death experience I will relate to you at some other time; rest assured that it was pleasant.

PRISCILLA E. M'ARTHUR.

Ludington, Mich.

Onset, Mass., Camp.

Saturday, August 20, was N. S. A. day at the camp, and we were greeted with a tremendous gale; at one time it looked dubious for the meeting, but there were many who responded to the call of the bell. The meeting opened with singing by Miss Alice Holbrook, after which Dr. Fuller spoke briefly, saying that he had received word from President H. D. Barrett that his train was delayed, but he would be present during the session or about 3 p. m., so Dr. Fuller would proceed as chairman until Mr. Barrett arrived.

Mrs. Annie Knowlton Hinman read an orginal poem, "The Ministry," which was warmly received.

Mrs. Carrie P. Pratt, one of the directors of the Massachusetts State Association, was the next speaker. She said her voice was always raised in the interest of organization, that she knew we could not have success without method and united effort. She thought all should come together for one common good.

Dr. G. A. Fuller then told of some of the benefits of the N. S. A.; said that the state association endorsed the work of the N. S. A. He spoke of the Mediums' Fund, and of the good work the organization was doing, pensioning our worthy mediums, and keeping them out of the alms-house, and for this reason, if for no other, we should support the N. S. A.

Mr. J. H. Foss said he had been battling against organized effort of waves and wind, and he was alone in a boat trying to reach land. He questioned what the Army of the Potomac would have done if every man had said: "I want to flock alone; I want to be independent." Why we would have gone down and would not now have a Union, but the grand old army did not take any such position; they filled up the gap and became united and followed their leader, and that is just the way we should hold up the hands and position of President H. D. Barrett in his grand efforts for organization; we should organize to send out the message of light and to tell to all that they need not fear death, but prove to them that life is continuous.

President H. D. Barrett arrived at this time and received an ovation as he entered the hall. He said it gave him great pleasure to be present and greet his Onset friends once more, and to convey to them greetings from the City of Light to the Onset Bay Grove Association. "I have wondered what I shall say of the work of the N. S. A., and of the work of the M. S. A. and the work accomplished during the past year. He told of an aged medium, 92 years old, whom he found an inmate of the alms-house, that he reported it to headquarters, how the lady was taken out and that the N. S. A. would take care of her as long as she lived. Of another case of an old man 82 years old who was in a destitute condition, and this man has been put on the pension list; of several New England mediums who had been pensioned by the N. S. A., and I believe, my friends, that we are going to help an institution that is doing this kind of work." He spoke briefly of the railroads and said that the presidents of the roads in the West had told him that our ministers were the only ones they have not had trouble with, that the roads wished to give half rates to the clergy, as it was their offering to religion. He told of the recognition received through the press, by the efforts of the N. S. A., of the recognition our religion had gained in the courts, and asked the friends if they did not wish to contribute toward putting the N. S. A. upon a solid financial basis, so they could enlarge their work.

Mr. J. B. Hatch then assisted Mr. Barrett in taking contributions and collections, and the sum of $100 was taken in the hall, including pledges.

Mr. S. Mann, of New York, spoke of the Jews, and said there were many Spiritualists among them and he knew they would help the cause.

President Barrett expressed thanks in the name of the N. S. A. to the Onset Bay Grove Association for the kind use of the grounds, and to all who had assisted in any way to make the meeting a success. C. L. HATCH.

Religion counteracts morality and universal philanthropy in so far as it sets men against each other by diversity of doctrines and theories of belief, thus fostering and nourishing the worst impulses of human nature.—Buchner.

A little wit and a great deal of ill-nature will furnish a man for satire; but the greatest instance and value of wit is to commend well.—Tillotson.

Heaven must be in me before I can be in heaven.—Stanford.

Nothing destroys authority so much as the unequal and untimely interchange of power, pressed too far and relaxed too much.—Bacon.

There never was any heart truly great and generous that was not also tender and compassionate.—South.

Materialistic Philosophy.

A COLD FACT.

To the Editor:—I wish to present a cold fact against the materialistic philosophy. Philosophy and facts do not always agree, but a fact must remain a fact in spite of philosophy.

I have a very dear friend—Mrs. Elizabeth Aiken—wife of one of Pinkerton's famous detectives, whose actual experience will offset any materialistic philosophy.

Mrs. Aiken is a lady of truth and veracity, whose word would never be doubted by any who may have had, or still enjoy, the pleasure of her acquaintance; besides, there are many who can vouch for a portion of that which I am about to relate; but I will relate it, as nearly as possible, as Mrs. Aiken related it to me.

The lady had heard of my sorrowful affliction in the loss of my dearly beloved husband, Carlyle Petersilea, and called at my home to console me if possible. She sat gazing at me with her large, beautiful, sympathetic eyes, as I told her that I should be much happier if it were not for some miserable doubts that would arise in my mind, whether there really was a life after so-called death or not, as I had read Mr. T. J. Hudson's book, also much on reflex action of the mind, and greatly feared that that which I thought to be the controlling spirit of my dear husband, might be but reflex action of the mind, or the sub-conscious self.

"If," said Mrs. Aiken, "you had had my experience, such doubts would be entirely expelled from your mind, and you would be as happy as I am in the positive assurance of there being a material body and a spiritual body."

"If I could know this," I replied, "beyond the shadow of a doubt, I believe I could be happy and bear my great sorrow with a lighter heart."

"Then, know it," said she; "for that which I am about to tell you is as true as the light of heaven."

"Some few years ago, I was extremely ill with what the doctors pronounced carbuncles, or boils within the stomach. I had been confined to my bed for many months, and for weeks had not been able to turn myself. I was extremely emaciated and bed sores had made their appearance; yet my mind, through all this suffering, had remained clear and firm. The doctors held a consultation over me, and all declared that I could survive but a very short time. In fact, that I was already struck with death—was actually dying—that nothing more could be done. Saying this, two of them took their departure, while the third, a much younger and more sympathetic man, remained until all should be over. He was somewhat inclined toward the spiritual belief, and desired to witness the departure of a soul and spirit from the body of flesh.

"I was too weak to move or speak, yet heard and understood all that was said about my condition. I had now ceased to suffer and had no pain, but felt myself gently sinking, and my eyes closed.

"I suppose I must have been unconscious for a short period of time, for, when I opened my eyes, I was standing upright, not far from the bed. I heard the doctor say, 'She has gone at last! She is dead!' I heard my friends and relatives, who were gathered about my bed, sobbing and mourning.

"I seemed to gather myself together as one might after a severe jar or fall, and, as I did so, my sensations were most delightful. I felt as light and buoyant as a feather, and could scarcely keep myself down upon the floor; and, now, I noticed a broad shaft of light—a kind of white light—which connected me with the body upon the bed. I had a strong desire to break this shaft of light and free myself entirely from that poor, emaciated thing upon the bed, and thought, 'Could that poor, emaciated body, covered with bed sores, ever have belonged to me?' I realized a mixture of disgustful, pitying contempt for it, and, oh, how I did want that shaft of light to leave it entirely, that I might be wholly free from it. I now felt a strong desire to examine myself and understand how and what I was; and, to my extreme delight, I found that I was more beautiful than a dream. I had eyes, and they could see. I had ears, and they could hear. I had hands and feet, and every organ of my body was perfect, intact and exquisitely lovely; my hands and arms were so beautiful that I gazed upon them rapturously. I lifted up my hand and arm, and as I did so a beautiful white drapery fell lightly away from the arm, disclosing it nearly to the elbow.

"Could that lovely, lovely arm be mine! I now put forth my foot and examined it. Like the arm it was perfect and extremely beautiful. The foot was bare, but surrounding my limbs, and nearly covering my feet, was this exquisite drapery, half-concealing, half-revealing my most perfect and beautiful form.

"And," continued Mrs. Aiken, "I must admit that I felt a little vain that this most beautiful form was mine; and to prove to you that I had eyes and ears, I will say that I distinctly saw my friends around the bed, and heard their sobs, and wondered how it could be possible that they should mourn for me, when I was so perfectly happy, light and beautiful.

"I now looked, from myself, around the room. The walls of the room were now very indistinct, as though they scarcely existed, but in their stead there appeared a vast world of light and beauty. I could not yet see it very distinctly, because the shaft of light still held me near to the form upon the bed, but I saw the forms of a great many angels or spirits, and they were formed precisely like human beings, excepting that they were dazzlingly beautiful. I wanted to join them but was unable to break the broad shaft of light, and they seemed to be waiting for something, and did not approach me very closely. I could yet see the door of the room quite distinctly. The eyes of all the angels seemed to be fastened upon the door. It opened and there entered a man—a spirit man—and I could see at a glance that he was an eminent physician—a spirit doctor. He carried a physician's case in his hand, which he placed upon the table, and came toward the bed upon which that poor, worn body lay, apparently dead. I watched him curiously and closely, praying with all my might that he would pass between me and that form upon the bed; for I thought if he were to do so, it would disengage that shaft of light from the body, and set me entirely free. But this he did not do. He carefully went to the other side of the couch, placed his hands beneath the head of that poor body, and lifted it up. As he did so, the shaft of light shortened itself together, drawing me with it back into the body upon he bed. The body gasped and breathed once more. I could still hear what the spirit doctor said:

"'My poor child, you must not go yet. Your time on earth has not yet expired. You must still experience much more of earthly life and its vicissitudes.' And now, his voice grew indistinct; the spirits disappeared; the walls of the room once more confined me, and I was lying upon the bed too weak to move hand or foot, but the spirit doctor had done something to my stomach—I know not what—and I could now take a little nourishment.

"My relatives, finding that I was yet alive, as they called it, joyfully hastened to do all for me possible, and I at length recovered; that is, my earthly body did, and I now weigh, as you see, two hundred pounds."

This, dear readers of The Progressive Thinker, is the story as told to me by my dear friend, Mrs. Aiken. She is now at the present time a beautiful woman, perhaps thirty years of age, and in the full enjoyment of earthly life; but she tells me that she would gladly go through with all her former suffering for the one joy she experienced of feeling and knowing that she was a spirit and immortal, possessing all the organs of the earthly body in an etherealized and exquisitely beautiful form.

In addition to this I would like to relate an incident connected with my own childhood. I personally have never seen with my own material eyes the spirit form of a human being; but I have seen with my own material eyes the spirit form of a dog.

When I was a little child of five years, I awoke one morning and gazed curiously at something in the air just over my head; not directly over my head, but at an angle above me. There, apparently in the air, lay a large Irish setter, watching me as dogs do when protecting children. He was white and had the large brown spots that dogs of his species usually have. During my short five years I had never seen such a dog, and there was no dog belonging to my home. I did not even know, at that age, that there was such a dog as a setter. I watched him curiously, and he looked at me lovingly and protectingly. His eyes were large and beautiful, and he was so ethereal that I could see directly through him, and that which attracted my childish fancy, more than anything else, was the fact that he appeared to be composed of little moving atoms, which were circulating all through his form, and where the dark spots were, these moving atoms were of the same color, and where he was white, the atoms were also white. The atoms were also moving and scintillating in his bright and loving eyes.

I gazed at him a long time, smiling in childish delight, for I realized that he was a spirit dog, although I, as yet, knew not the meaning of the word, and knew nothing of Spiritualism whatever, as my parents were Methodists and I was not old enough to know anything about religion or that there was death or an after life. MRS. CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

Los Angeles, Cal.

TRUMPET COMMUNICATION IN THE LIGHT.

This narrative may interest those who are investigating the truth of Spiritualism. I found a few fake trumpet mediums during my experience, but in this instance there was no chance for manufactured phenomena, because it was in the light.

Some five or six years ago I had been to Bristol, Tenn., on business, and was returning via the Norfolk & Western Ry., and Huntington, W. Va. I had previously been informed that there was a trumpet medium across the Ohio river opposite Huntington, and that the manifestations were in the light.

On my arrival at Huntington I crossed the river on a ferry, and the old ferryman told me that a great many people crossed on his ferry from all parts of the United States, and they told him of the communications they held with their friends who had passed over. I have forgotten this lady's name. I found the cottage. The lady's husband met me at the door. He stated that his wife had been very sick, but was better. She came in presently. I told her that I had heard she could produce the trumpet talking in the light. She said she got the manifestations out in the yard, at any time, and produced the trumpet, and stated they had it made under the direction of her control and about the same length of the trumpet used in dark circles, but small at each end and large in the center. She asked me to play a hymn on the organ, after which she placed the trumpet in my hand and told me to put it to my ear. This was about 2 p. m., sun shining through the window, the lady and her husband present. I placed the trumpet to my ear and some one called me by name—I asked who it was, and he said "George."

I asked, "What George?"

He replied, "Your brother George,"

I talked with him at length. He passed over three years' previous.

The lady's control then talked with me. I asked, "How long have you been able to produce this manifestation, and why don't you go away from home and give it to the public?"

She stated that she had been a medium since she was 13 years old. She was then about 50 years old. She had never been away from home. People came to her home from all over the United States.

I was at that time investigating Spiritualism. This was convincing as there was no chance to produce manufactured manifestations.

A. VEREBOME.

Mundane Religion--One That We All Can Get.

Now, then, what is religion? I say, religion is all here in this world—right here—and that all our duties are right here to our fellow-men; that the man who builds a home, marries the girl that he loves, takes good care of her, likes the family, stays home nights, as a general thing, pays his debts, tries to find out what he can, gets all the ideas and beautiful things that his mind will hold, turns a part of his brain into a gallery of fine arts, has a host of paintings and statues there, then has another niche devoted to music, and a magnificent dome filled with winged notes that rise to glory—now the man who does that gets all he can from the great dead ones, swaps all the thoughts he can from the ones that are alive, true to the ideal that he has here in his brain—he is what I call a religious man, because he makes the world better, happier; he puts the dimples of joy in the cheeks of the ones he loves, and he lets the gods run heaven to suit themselves. And I am not saying that he is right; I do not know. [Why need he?]

This is all the religion that I have—to make somebody else happier if I can.

I divide this world into two classes, the cruel and the kind, and I think a thousand times more of the kind man than I do of an intelligent man. I think more of real good human nature in that way—of one who is willing to lend a helping hand and who goes through the world with a face that looks as if its owner were willing to answer a decent question—I think a thousand times more of that man than I do of being theologically right, because I do not care whether I am theologically right or not. It is something that I never, never, never shall understand; and everyone of you will die and you won't understand it either—until after you die at any rate. I do not know what will happen then.

I am not denying anything. There is another ideal, and it is a beautiful ideal. It is the greatest dream that ever entered the heart and brain of man—the dream of immortality. It was born of human affection. It did not come to us from heaven. It was born of the human heart. And when he who loved kissed the lips of her who was dead, there came into his heart the dream, We may meet again.

And, let me tell you, that hope of immortality never came from any religion. That hope of immortality has helped to make religion. It has been the great oak around which have climbed the poisonous vines of superstition.

And yet the moment a man expresses doubt about the truth of Joshua, or Jonah, or the three fellows in a fiery furnace, up hops some poor little wretch and says, "Why, he doesn't want to live any more; he wants to die and go down like a dog, and that is the end of him and his wife and children." They really seem to think that the moment a man is what they call an infidel he has no affections, no heart, no feeling, no hope—nothing—nothing. Just anxious to be annihilated! But if the orthodox creed be true, I make my choice to-night. I take hell. And if it is between hell and annihilation, I take annihilation.

I will tell you why I take hell in making the first choice. We have heard from both of those place—heaven and hell. According to the New Testament there was a rich man in hell and a poor man, Lazarus, in heaven. And there was another gentleman by the name of Abraham. The rich man in hell was in flames, and he called for water, and they told him they could not give him any. No bridge! But they did not express the slightest regret that they could not give him any water. Mr. Abraham was not decent enough to say he would if he could; no, sir, nothing. It did not make any difference to him. But this rich man in hell—in torment—his heart was all right, for he remembered his brothers, and he said to this Abraham, "If you cannot go, why, send a man to my five brethren, so that they will not come to this place!" Good fellow, to think of his five brothers when he was burning up. Good fellow, best fellow we ever heard from on the other side, in either world.

So, I say, there is my place. And, incidentally, Abraham at the time gave his judgment as to the value of miracles. He said, "Though one should arise from the dead he wouldn't help your five brethren." "There are Moses and the prophets. No need of raising people from the dead.

That is my idea, in a general way, about religion; and I want the imagination to go to work upon it, taking the perfections of one church, of one school, of one system, and putting them together, just as the sculptor makes a great statue by taking the eyes from one, the nose from another, the limbs from another, and so on; just as they make a great painting from a landscape by putting a river in this place, instead of over there, changing the location of a tree and improving on what they call Nature—that is to say, simply by adding to, taking from, that is all we can do. But let us go on doing that until there shall be a church in sympathy with the human heart and in harmony with the best human brain.

And what is more, let us have that religion for the world we live in. Right here! Let us have that religion until it cannot be said that they who do the most work have the least to eat. Let us have that religion here until hundreds and thousands of women are not compelled to make a living by the needle that has been called "the asp at the breast of the poor," and to live in tenements of filth, where modesty is impossible.

I say, let us preach that religion here until men will be ashamed to have forty or fifty millions, or any more than they need, while their brethren lack bread, while their sisters die from want. Let us preach that religion here until man will have more ambition to become wise and good than wise and powerful. Let us preach that religion here among ourselves until there are no abused and beaten wives. Let us preach that religion until children are no longer afraid of their own parents and until there is no back of a child bearing the scars of a father's lash. Let us preach it, I say, until we understand and know that every man does as he must, and that if we want better men and women, we must have better conditions.

Let us preach this grand religion until everywhere the world over, men are just and kind to each other. And then, if there be another world, we shall be prepared for it. And if I come into the presence of an infinite, good and wise Being, he will say, "Well, you did the best you could. You did very well, indeed. There is plenty of work for you to do here. Try to get a little higher than you were before."

Let us preach that one drop of restitution is worth an ocean of repentance.

And if there be a life of eternal progress before us, I shall be as glad as any other angel to find that out.

But I will not sacrifice the world I have for one I know not of. I will not live in fear, when I do not know that that which I fear lives.

R. G. INGERSOLL.

A VIEW-POINT OF THEOSOPHISTS.

Concerning the Danger to Spiritualists.

All along the pathway of human progress an element of fear has manifested itself, and a people have been warned against meddling with combinations of forces that were out of the ordinary or known.

Who does not remember the fear surrounding the telegraph, the telephone—any system in which electricity is used; and we read of the sensations aroused by the first locomotives, the first steamboats. The old man who stood watching the first steamer that entered their harbor, get ready for a buffet with the seas of the Bay of Fundy exclaimed, with fear and indignation in heart and face, "Tempting Providence! going out against wind and tide!" has many a representative in the domain of Advance.

The argument of fear is always the argument of ignorance. Knowledge alone enables man to assume new reins of power to attempt new achievements, to seize upon new discoveries, to handle and bring into use new arrangements of forces. The sense of fear must be eliminated and instead a steadfast determination to learn how to control and utilize take its place.

The kindly solicitation of the Theosophist regarding the danger in Spiritualism, then, is no new phase of human expression; it is projected in all brotherliness, but it must be met with the same argument that has silenced the fearist in all other cases.

It is too late to refuse to handle the elements that enter into the inter-relation of man incarnate and excarnate. The study and use of these forces have advanced too far, their demonstration has taken too strong a hold upon the thought of to-day to be cast aside because of fear. Science has only another problem to solve; the searchers after truth only another field of explore and it must be done as all such work has been done, under difficulties, through patient perseverance, by the pathway of mistake; by failures and renewal of effort; by falling and rising again; persistent investigation and experimentation.

No system of thought rises full-fledged from the seas of time; it grows, only grows by legitimate methods. Few edifices are reared without sacrifice of life, few rounds of the ladder of progress are reached without slippings and fallings, but because of this shall no new steps be taken? Shall fear so dominate that we let go and travel along in the same old ruts lest some one get hurt in scraping the road to make it smoother?

So it is, indeed, with surprise that we hear those who delve so deep in the occult, who brave so many dangers and who have discovered so much, warning people against having to do with Spiritualism because it is dangerous.

Is their building so staunch that it has no weak places?

Is it proof against all winds, all powers and forces?

Have they a safety insurance in dealing with the higher elements in Nature?

Are they immune from all seizures from the invisible side of life?

Are Spiritualists alone in danger from obsessing discarnate ones?

Is not their argument itself one proof of the action of excarnate minds, a weapon in the warfare that is being carried on in the invisible against this new form of progress, this departure from the old path of ignorance?

Have Theosophists any proof of greater danger to Spiritualists than to scientists of any other type that they need cry "Beware?" Seems to me not, and it seems to me also Spiritualism, as in the cases of all other systems, must come by the laborious pathway of acquiring knowledge, not deterred by misunderstandings or misapprehensions of how to handle elements concerned in the manifestations of the seance room, the relations of the two planes of substance.

How much nobler to undertake the study of their inter-related parts of being in order to better use them; they are part and parcel of us, so we are in duty bound to learn how to control them, to handle until we are able efficiently to manipulate them to our advantage in the climb of life. I would suggest, therefore, to the Theosophists that if the seance room is a dangerous place and mediums in such jeopardy, they also abandon their seeking, because the same possibilities lie in wait for them, for they have to do with the same subtle elements of life and as necessarily do invite their dangers as their blessings. M. A. CONGDON.

Washington, D. C.

Philosophy, when superficially studied excites doubt; when thoroughly explored, it dispels it.—Bacon.

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

It Is a Safety Valve.

THE OPEN COURT IS A SAFETY VALVE WHEREIN VARIOUS OPINIONS CAN BE EXPRESSED BY SPIRITUALISTS THEMSELVES. THE ANALYTICAL MIND WILL READ THE SAME, AND IN SO DOING WILL HAVE AN ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE EXACT STATUS OF OUR CAUSE. THE ONE WHO KNOWS THE FALSE AS WELL AS THE TRUE, IS WELL PREPARED TO FORM A CORRECT OPINION, WHILE THE ONE WHO KNOWS NOTHING BUT THE FALSE, IS ONE-SIDED, IS IGNORANT, AND INCAPABLE OF FORMING A CORRECT OPINION. HE, TOO, WHO HAS THE TRUTH ALONE, AND KNOWS NOTHING OF THE DECEPTION GOING ON IN OUR RANKS, CAN NOT CORRECTLY JUDGE OF THE CONDITION OF OUR CAUSE. IT IS NECESSARY TO KNOW THE BAD AS WELL AS THE GOOD, AND THEN A CORRECT ESTIMATE CAN BE MADE. THE OPEN COURT PRESENTS BOTH SIDES, AND IF YOU WILL CAREFULLY READ THE SAME, YOU WILL BE THE WISER AND BETTER THEREFOR. REALIZING FULLY BOTH THE GOOD AND THE BAD, THE TRUE AND THE FALSE, YOU CAN ACT UNDERSTANDINGLY IN FORMING AN OPINION, BUT NOT OTHERWISE.

THE IMPORTANT POINT TO CONSIDER.

I have read the articles in the Open Court with much interest, and while I regret the necessity of such a proceeding as that which seems imperative, I believe we should face the issues of the day as fearlessly as we would face an enemy to our country if need be. I have already stated my position, in reference to the fraud question on numerous occasions both on the platform and through the press, but feel that too much may not be said for the good of our cause, hence the thoughts that follow.

I often hear folks argue that we should not speak of that which is objectionable, and that if there is fraud "silence is golden" etc; also that we have no more of this undesirable element in our ranks than have other denominations or creeds, but it appears to me that this is not the question. The important point to consider is not, has another philosophy as much fraud among its adherents as have we, but rather, how much less fraud have we, how much better and purer is our philosophy than any other?

I do not want to feel that Spiritualism has anywhere near as much fraud in its ranks as any other philosophy or religion, but rather that Spiritualism is the synonym of truth and purity. For this reason I do not hesitate to say: Whenever unquestionable evidence is procurable that fraudulent practice has been resorted to by so-called mediums, that evidence belongs to the Spiritualists and should be given forth to them.

I am sure I dislike the cry of fraud as much as any perhaps, but I cannot see how we better ourselves or our cause by remaining silent at all times. It is truth we want, and we certainly do not want to see our cause besmirched by any cloud whatever, if we can prevent it; and I believe everyone who will stop to think of the matter, laying aside all prejudices, will see that a man's worst enemy is the one who will permit him to practice fraud, knowing that he is so doing, and not remonstrate with him, or try to prevent him from continuing the practice.

If any man tries to pass counterfeit coin upon us, we are all very ready to say to the world "That man is a cheat." If a business man sells us what we discover to be thoroughly unworthy, we have no hesitancy in telling our friends they had better watch what they are getting at his store.

I venture to say that nearly every one who tells us that we should not say anything about fraud in our ranks, would be quite ready to put the officers on the track of the man who had passed a bogus ten dollar bill on them. Which is the most despicable, the passing of the bogus bill, which affects only man's cupidity, or the simulation of spirit phenomena—claiming to be a man's or a woman's nearest and dearest relative who had died but was now alive and came back from the bourne beyond the grave to greet them? I submit, Mr. Editor, that the latter is by far the worse crime of the two.

By all means let us speak out when evidence has been secured, but let us be sure we have the evidence before we speak. Innuendoes, suspicions and sneering hints are by no means to be construed as conclusive. But when we get the evidence, get them with the "goods," it is right and just that we speak out, and thus enable some who are liable to become victims, to elude such workers.

I do not believe we should keep a man down because he has made a mistake once, because the past has no very important bearing upon the present; it is what we are that counts, but let us convince all who have been caught simulating spirit phenomena that we will not countenance the same, and if they have genuine mediumship they will stop their malpractices and give what they can honestly get from the arisen ones.

I sometimes wonder if we as a class are not very often to blame when fraud is presented. Do we not demand sensationalism at times, that the true medium cannot supply? Again, are we always willing to allow the honest medium to get up and say, "I am unable to give to-night?" I know we are not. How often we are to blame for the "padded" work that may be calculated to bring down the house. If we would all study mediumship, and discover what it meant, I feel assured that we would strive to more nearly comply with the necessary conditions in the production of spirit phenomena.

How often are we satisfied with the word, the sympathetic message that may be given quietly by some honest worker? Instead of being satisfied we must needs demand more, and if it be not forthcoming we immediately pronounce the medium as unworthy our attention. I would rather have but one word, but one thought from my loved ones on the other side, spoken in their characteristic way, than to have their whole history given under the sensational way which seems to appeal most to some people. For the love of truth let us cease parading mediumship before the public as we would some more material commodity; let us show the world how we venerate and love the power which enable us to converse with our arisen loved ones, and then the world will also learn to respect it.

I saw one man in trying to simulate materialization, swing a white rag in the air, and hold it under his knee, etc., to the edification of the people assembled—at least they were greatly edified until they discovered that he was using very ordinary cheesecloth! Up to the time they made this discovery, they very readily recognized the cheese cloth, and saw in it the faces and forms of friends near and dear. I believe such occurrences should be reported to the people. It is evidence that rightly belongs to them. Whenever we say we are "a Spiritualist," we are endorsing mediumship in the eyes of the people; we stand for mediumship when we say we believe the so-called "dead" can return. When we stand as sponsors for a thing, we are entitled to the knowledge as to whether that thing is real or not. Who, then, can blame us when we are goaded to the highest pitch by the malpractices of people who are prototypes of the man I have referred to above. That to which I have referred is a fact, and if the editor wishes, he can have the name of the individual of cheese cloth fame.

Now, I do not wish to be understood as being malignantly opposed to any phase of mediumship. Mediumship was the thing that placed me where I am, and I would be ungrateful, to say the least, if I forgot that fact, but I am opposed to materialization that consists of cheese cloth and luminous paint; to slate and letter writing that is done by mortal hands instead of spirit power; to messages that are formulated in the note book or brain of the medium (?) and believe when we have the evidence, WE SHOULD SPEAK OUT FOR THE TRUTH.

I like to see polish, erudition and culture, but I like still more to have truth, and I have a ready welcome for the one who will voice the messages of the angel world without any additions of their own; the one who will give me the truth and that alone. These I will defend and uphold.

This world is too big, and the possibilities of advancement are too many for us to be crushed by the fact that we demand true mediumship. I would that everyone should demand the same; it would then be no hard thing to place Spiritualism before the people in a way to command respect.

But my letter is too long already, and I do not wish to tax the patience of your readers. Permit me to add in closing that Spiritualism will never be killed by exposing and expelling the frauds, but unless we demand that our representatives be genuine in every respect it will go down, and so it should. When our spirit friends produce all the phenomena, they become the works of God and will live in spite of all opposition; but when the phenomena are made by mortals, they become the works of man and will soon die.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

TO WOMEN WHO DREAD MOTHERHOOD

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain—Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or remain childless. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at childbirth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how it may be done absolutely free of charge. Send your name and address to Dr. J. H. Dye, 134 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you, postpaid, his wonderful book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure sterility. Do not delay, but write to-day.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. Price 75 cents.

A Prominent Eastern Lady Steps to the Front

She Is a Spiritualist and a Medium.

The following communication from Eva A. Cassell will excite unusual interest. She is a confirmed Spiritualist and a careful, critical and painstaking investigator of the philosophy and phenomena. She, like thousands of others, has had her lesson to learn from the degenerate fakes that have invaded our ranks, and superseded, to a certain extent, the genuine phenomena and genuine mediums, by their tact and skill. Spiritualists living in remote places, or in the quiet of their own homes, without mingling extensively with the public work, can have no adequate idea of the impostures practiced in a variety of ways, hence, to them the "cry of fraud" seems unwholesome, unnecessary and dangerous, when, in fact, it is the reaction occurring among those who have at last awakened to a realization of what is going on in our ranks. Spiritualists generally want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and to them this discussion in The Progressive Thinker will prove valuable and of great interest. All should read the following article, by Eva A. Cassell, a prominent Spiritualist and medium, of Chelsea, Mass.:

To the Editor:—As an old contributor I feel moved to take up my pen and share in this discussion. Many of your old readers will remember me and my articles on the lynching of the negro in the South, and later my condemning letters of fraudulent mediums. At this time I feel moved upon to add my voice to that of those who speak knowingly of these things. Yet it is a thankless task—that of trying to teach Spiritualistic fanatics the pitfalls of their religion.

I shudder even now, when I remember how cruelly I was treated, simply because I dared to stand forth and declare that certain so-called mediums were frauds. It was at that hot-bed of Spiritualism, Onset Bay, that I first became convinced of the stupendous villainies carried on in the name of Spiritualism. For years I had believed in materialization; I had gone to the cabinet for spiritual consolation; many times I have wept in the arms of my supposed spirit mother, for I was full of earthly trouble and my domestic trials seemed more than I could endure. For years I was the dupe of those heartless monsters who made stock of my sacred griefs and anguished tears to induce me to come to their seances, coining money out of the emotions of my sorrowing soul, but laughing slyly behind my back, as I afterward learned and commenting because I was so easily gulled!

If there is any monster of iniquity—any devil in hades—any thug in India—any merciless, wild Indian of the plain who can equal the heartlessness, the devilishness, so to speak, of the fraudulent materializer, I would like to know it!

There is no greater crime in all the realms of earth than that which turns into dollars and cents for the charlatan's pocket, the sacred human emotions—the sacred love of the sorrowing mother for her child—the despairing love of thousands of grieving mortals for those loved ones who have passed beyond, and who go to the seance with anguished souls and a prayer on their lips, aspiring for only the truth.

I often wonder what will be the fate of these merciless imposters who have made money and waxed fat on the divine and sacred loves and griefs of the sorrowing souls they have thus wilfully deceived.

Let us hope that the Prince of Darkness who is their patron, will care well for his own and prepare a special pit in hades where the temperature may shrivel and scorch and roast to a turn these vile impostors who have trafficked in the highest and holiest emotions of the human heart!

Several years ago the Onset camp was in the grip of these villains, and it was necessary to do something to protect the public—the book entitled "The Vampires of Onset," was the result. It performed its mission, then went out of print and again the vampires were in power. At this time my eyes were opened and I began to write up the matter for the papers, and then had to suffer for the truth's sake. The fraudulent mediums were a power and combined to crush me. I received anonymous letters threatening me; at night when I went to the postoffice and passed the cottages of these vampires, rocks and other missiles were hurled at me; foul slops were poured on me until I learned to take the middle of the road for safety; one night I was intercepted by a female materializer (?) who said: "D—n you! if you don't quit exposing me, your beautiful little daughter will be outraged and murdered by men. Take this warning."

All sorts of persecution were heaped upon me, and while I faltered many times and grew spiritually weak, yet I never gave up the fight a single moment, and I fought alone because those who should have helped me wanted the camp to move along smoothly and appear in the eyes of the world as a model camp-ground; they would rather keep the villainies covered up than have them exposed.

At that time there were a dozen so-called materializing mediums, and their nefarious practices were being commented on all over the country. Many aged Spiritualists, gentlemen of means, were fleeced of their money in the most heartless manner. The name of Onset became a stench in the nostrils of the public, but no one moved in the matter.

There was a man by the name of H. Doulke who went around from seance to seance personating spirits for the "mediums." I engaged him in conversation several times, wishing to get him to admit his share in the imposture. One day he said to me, "Look here, what's the use of pretending any longer that there are genuine materializations. It is all a fraud. Why don't you go into the business. I will develop you for a medium for ten dollars. You are cute and bright, and could make up fine. You could make lots of money, and it is dead easy to fool these old gray Spiritualists—men who are glad to pay a dollar to hug a female spirit."

I turned away shocked, and prayed for help in my efforts to unmask this man. It took me two years, unaided and alone, to do it, but finally he landed behind the prison bars through my efforts, and as he needed money to pay a lawyer he wrote to all those mediums (?) and told them that if they did not give him money he would expose them, and he did in the newspapers, telling that he had played spirit in their cabinets. Their nefarious deeds coming to light, business grew dull and finally the materializing mediums folded their tents and stole away and now not one is left, and others of their ilk have given our camp a wide berth.

I was present at the court trial in Boston, where the Concannons were involved, and listned to the whole pitiful evidence—the testimony of the landlady where they boarded, and of the servant girl who had often washed the spirit robe, etc.

Mrs. Byron, at Onset Bay, was fleeced of ten thousand dollars by a medium who had materialized her spirit husband.

I have attended over three hundred seances, from Boston to California, and I have never yet beheld a genuine materialization. When one stops to think of what is required to furnish a living organism, capable of standing in a cabinet and uttering intelligent words, no wonder we are skeptical. A so-called spirit, such as comes from the cabinet, must have a heart with a perfect action, with all bodily functions in action—all the arteries of a human organism; all the muscles and nerves which support a human body on its feet, and give equilibrium to hold it upright, must be there; in a mortal, it took the mother long months to create these in her child, and do you believe that any medium can make all these organs—heart, lungs, muscles, nerves—all that is required and necessary in fact to support a human organism on its feet in a cabinet, IN TEN MINUTES' TIME, when it takes a mother long months to create them? No solid, living body, with the power to talk proper sense, such as the mediums produce in cabinets as spirits to-day, can be anything but mortals, and confederates, or else the medium herself dressed as a spirit.

All the fine network of veins, arteries and muscles which make a mortal, must of necessity be there, in order to support the so-called spirit on its feet and all these cannot be manufactured in ten minutes' time by any medium.

After years of investigation I feel convinced that genuine materialization consists in the production of an ethereal figure only, instead of one that may be handled—one that is dense—solid—such as is materialized to-day, and smelling of whisky and onions.

In this, my home city, Chelsea, Mass., lived an aged man, Mr. Law (now dead), who was duped shamefully by so-called mediums. I have been to seances many times and seen this old gentleman there; Phoebe and Louise Carey, the poetesses, often came from the cabinet and sat on his knees, and ate candy from his pockets. He spent hundreds of dollars at seances. Poor old fellow! After his transition he manifested through the Banner of Light circle, complaining how shamefully he had been deceived at seances. I used to tell him that he was being deceived, but he did not believe it.

I want to say that the charlatans are not wholly to blame, for there is a class of aged male Spiritualists who aid and abet fraud in these so-called mediums. They are in their second childhood, senile, and their eyesight is poor. This class has been by me especial study. Their vision is not to be trusted, in the matter of spirit forms in a dark apartment, yet they write glowing letters to the newspapers of the wonders they have seen at seances, and thus help along fraud.

I have been at seances and heard the exclamations of delight of these aged men as they embraced a lovely female "spirit."

Many of these men have no other opportunity to embrace a feminine form than that afforded by the cabinet. They seem childish in their cravings for the "divine feminine" and yearn to feel the arms of a woman—to receive a kiss from her.

I fully sympathize with these feelings, for I suppose that no true man is without them, yet they are easy prey to the bogus medium, and some of them are to blame for the unsound conditions prevailing at the cabinet.

From my investigations in materializations, I know that the cabinet in some cases equals the brothel in unwholesomeness and the deepest insult I ever received in my life came from a male "spirit" at the cabinet, who made known his desires—not in the choice language one would expect from a denizen of the heavenly spheres—but in the most vulgar terms common to the lowest of men. With a prayer on my lips and pure aspiration in my soul I had gone to the seance for solace!!

I feel to say that the system of embracing and kissing as commonly carried on at seances is unhygienic and in some cases indecent, and it is time that intelligent Spiritualists acknowledged this fact.

The cabinet is growing to be a cover for a multitude of sins, in some cases, and many Spiritualists will bear me out in this statement.

The letters written by aged men to the newspapers, of the wonders they have seen at seances ought to be suppressed, for what is a fact to one person, is not a fact to another and much harm is done by printing them and thus sending patronage to a fraud.

I say again that I have found that many men of advanced age are not competent judges of forms that appear in a dark room.

I reverence old age, and sympathize deeply with the yearnings of those of whom I speak, yet my investigations at the seance prove to me that they are not competent judges, in many cases, and it is mostly this class of Spiritualists who raise a hue and cry over the efforts to unmask fraud.

It is as much as one's life is worth to even mention that there are fraudulent mediums. For a razor-back, hard-shell fanatic, the Spiritualistic one can not be beaten. He will neither listen to reason nor believe the medium a fraud even if she "made-up" before his very eyes and he caught her in the act of defrauding—he would disbelieve his own senses, rather!

I was dreadfully scored by good, decent Spiritualists for unmasking fraud, but I am glad to say that to-day Onset Bay is the banner camp for pure, wholesome Spiritualism. A glance at its prospectus for this year shows the mediums and teachers to be of a high order and we are proud of our camp.

I note what Mr. McFarland asks of Mrs. Hyland. He wants to know how "it is done," but it is useless to waste breath telling the thousand and one tricks that are performed by these charlatans. If Mr. McFarland and those who wish to know how it is done, will contribute a sum of money for the purpose of bringing Mrs. Hyland in their vicinity, where she will give seances, then they will know the modus operandi, and in fact it is now Mrs. Hyland's duty to drop all else and show to the Spiritualistic world just how the tricks are done. A committee ought to be formed who will take this lady in charge and travel with her to our great Spiritualistic centers and there give fraudulent seances so that we all may see how easy it is to deceive in materialization. An admittance fee should be charged, of course, for expenses. Mrs. Hyland, if she cannot afford to give her services gratis, should be hired and paid for her trouble. I should say that it is the duty of our leading Spiritualists to take this lady in charge for that purpose.

The materializing mediums have everything their own way and never give the sitter a chance to see fraud. "Spoil the conditions," is the cry raised by the medium to cover fraud, while we are told it would kill the medium, in all probability, to grab her, when the truth is, it would kill her reputation as a genuine medium. Thus the honest sitter is scared off by the cry of "spoil the conditions."

Great stress is laid on the fact that mediums are searched before entering the cabinet, but I have learned that the manager of the seance often passes a bundle of white robes into the cabinet and often a confederate among the sitters does so. At an exposure where the medium was grabbed, whiskers and other paraphernalia have been found in the cabinet, and then the psychic (?) asserts that they were thrown in there by some of the sitters, which is an easy way of getting out of the matter. At any rate no so-called medium has ever yet died of being grabbed, though no doubt they wanted to die when they were exposed.

The more intelligent Spiritualists are disgusted over the combat and friction attending materialization, and it is time to call the spirit world to account. If the fleecing of hundreds of honest people of our faith out of money is not enough—if the cruelty of their deception is not enough to cause a wave of horror in the heavenly spheres; if these barbarous conditions surrounding materialization are the best that can be given us, then I challenge the world of spirits, and say, "Stop right here! Rather than that one human being torn by grief and sorrow and anguish over the loss of a loved one, should be deceived and his sacred emotions turned into dollars for the charlatan—rather than this, I say, let spirits quit coming to earth!" I don't care whether it is one grieving mortal or a thousand—the whole system is unsound whether it is one or a thousand, and it is somebody's duty to challenge it.

But does it not betoken an unwholesome mind in one who can believe that our loved ones materialize to sitters at a dollar a head? And are not spirits to be condemned for maintaining such a system, on their side of life? I would like to ask them why it is that they never select as a medium one of our wealthy Spiritualists whom they know would materialize without money and without price. And when you talk about "tying the medium and putting him in a bag under test conditions," does it not strike you that the spirit world must feel mean and cheap because such debasing conditions surround materialization?

Is it elevating and ennobling to the spirit world that their avenues of communication must be so roughly used! And how often we excuse the immorality and vulgarity of a so-called medium on the plea that "never mind, spirits are obliged to use any channel they can, for communicating."

It is a base libel on the spirit world, and you may depend upon it that any so-called medium who would submit to be tied, is simply a trickster who depends on his knowledge as such to sneak out of his bonds, pretending that spirits released him.

The genuine medium is he or she who stands in the circle of sitters innocent of test conditions, saying, "Here I am, in the light of my honest mediumship, such as it is, you may accept of it or let it alone; I am simply the instrument." But, this same medium should be above suspicion, and court the light. The very act of tying mediums is degrading to spiritual intelligences, and I do not believe that they have any dealings with it nor in fact materialize at our seances to-day.

In my opinion the only materialization there is, is that which has occurred for hundreds of years. All adown the ages there have been "ghosts" seen and these are simon-pure materializations—in cases where the spirit was able to draw elements from the persons who saw them and thus become visible.

As for spirits flocking to earth to play vaudeville and line the pockets of itinerant "mediums"—it seems improbable—spirits of Indians—spirits who weave lace—ancient spirits—with now and then the spirit relative of a few of the sitters—to take the curse off—it can be nothing less, as carried on today, than a vaudeville show—degrading and disgusting to the spirit world, and no spirit of intelligence would tolerate it. In fact, it is belittling to my sense as a Spiritualist to believe that spirits come as mortals, solid in form, smelling of sweat and whisky. I have a right to believe that spirits should be different from mortals when they show themselves on earth.

Even at the seances mentioned in a recent Progressive Thinker, with the medium Bailey—no forms materialized, but lights were seen, said to be spirits.

My readers will find that genuine materializing mediums are very scarce, if there are any.

The Difficulties in the Way.

There seems to be a very general agreement that "honesty is the best policy," and that dishonesty or fraud is undesirable. But how to eliminate the fraudulent actors is still an unsolved problem with the great majority. I have stated what I think is the only possible method, and I am glad to see it endorsed by many careful thinkers. But I am aware that the difficulties in the way of accomplishment are many and almost insurmountable. In this article I beg leave to mention some of them and to suggest some helps to overcome them.

One of the most formidable obstacles is the determined opposition of so many Spiritists to all efforts for exposing frauds, and the endorsement of the most notorious frauds, and employing them at all great public gatherings. And this is done not only by the managers of those meetings but by a portion of the Spiritist press. One of the most often, and most thoroughly exposed frauds on the Pacific coast is personally endorsed and eulogized in that paper, not by a correspondent, but by the editor! Now, when known and proved frauds are endorsed and advertised by our own papers it is very difficult to overcome the deplorable influence of these shielded cheats, and not only shielded but recommended. I have been publicly insulted because I abstained from patronizing one of these most notorious cheats. One of the most unfortunate facts connected with some of these cheats is that many of those who know them to be frauds will patronize them because they think them to be mediums, notwithstanding their trickery. This is specially true of Elsie Reynolds, the often exposed. Can anyone see a way out of this tangle except by a positive division of the people into fraud and anti-fraud associations?

Another formidable obstacle is the general demand for the platform shows of real or simulated mediumship. And the less there is of real mediumship, and the more of common fortune-telling, the greater the demand and satisfaction. Some owe their place on the platform entirely to their ability to do just what the gypsy fortune-tellers are doing all the time. Thousands of dollars have been paid here in California to assumed spirit mediums for aid in locating and working mines, and millions have been acquired through those fortune-tellers. But it doesn't require any help from spirits to locate mines or oil. If the spirit world will stoop to the business of aiding grasping plutocrats to gobble up the wealth of this world, we don't want anything to do with it. And, when one of our great camp-meetings will devote its platform to a description of oil fields, and claiming it as spirit mediumship, what are we going to do about it? There is no more need of spirit influence to locate mines, oil, water or coal than there is to plant a hill of potatoes. I grant fully that these platform fortune-tellers are largely honest, they are innocent frauds; but the confusing of psychometry, telepathy and clairvoyance with mediumship constitutes one of the formidable difficulties in dealing with the fraud question. Every year science is limiting the domain of strictly spirit phenomena, and enlarging the field of our normal and abnormal possibilities, so that it is becoming more and more difficult to say that this or the other phenomenon is from the spirit or natural side of our life. The gullible ignorance, which swallows all the facts of hypnotism as genuine spirit performances, must be supplanted by a thorough knowledge of the physiology and psychology of the mediumistic states before we can fully solve the fraud question.

One of the common methods in the show business is to have a table piled high up with rings, handkerchiefs, watches, jack-knives, etc., and then the process begins of giving spirit (?) tests and messages by handling those articles!! Now under proper conditions it is perfectly legitimate to do this as an experimental manifestation of psychometrical power, but to have it on the Spiritist platform as a manifestation of spirit mediumship and manifestation is detestable. What influence can an old jack-knife, which your spirit friends never saw or heard of, have in bringing them to you or the medium? What it can do in impressing your entire character, memory, etc., upon the psychometrist's consciousness we very well know, and as a result the names and characteristics of departed friends given with great exactness. We never forget absolutely anything, and the forms and features of our friends are pictured upon our inmost consciousness. The trained psychometrist can read all this and it does not require spirit return to do. Longfellow well says, "All houses where men have lived and died, are haunted houses." Because, they have left their images and character upon the walls of those houses, and the psychometric sensitive can read the impressions as she reads a book.

Here is a wide field for self-deception and ignorant, innocent fraud, and just so long as so many of the assumed leaders and teachers are so profoundly ignorant of the science and philosophy of both mediumship and psychometry, so long will so-called medium manifestations teem with fraud, and all the efforts to eliminate it from the platform and elsewhere will be futile.

But the most formidable difficulty in overcoming the fraud nuisance is the lamentable fact that organized Spiritualism has no great, unific and altruistic program or purpose. There is a chasm, deep and wide, between the adherents of the system. The first class are the managers of the organization. They are the ones who are pushing mediums real or seeming upon the public platform. They are upholding commercial mediumship. They are resorting to all sorts of methods to aid this form to succeed. It is ordaining mediums as REVERENDS, so as to free them from the necessity of paying a license, and also to secure half-fare on the railroads; and its creed was drawn up for the especial purpose of posing before the legal authorities as a religious organization in the same sense as "other denominations" are religious. And it cannot be said to have any special purpose beyond that of convincing people of the reality of a future existence. Hence, the continual pushing of mediumship before the people and making it the exclusive work of the organization. For in reference to the great socialistic problems of the day the organization as such pays no attention. Its members belong to all the different political parties of the day. There is no tendency whatever toward any great reconstructive work. It is all left to the spirits to accomplish the work of reconstruction if any such work is needed.

The other and much smaller class regard Spiritism as a reconstructive movement. That it is the science and philosophy of life, and that its purpose is the creation of the "Co-operative Commonwealth," or the practical outworking of the principle of the Brotherhood of Humanity. They regard all the phenomenal features of the movement as means to this great end. They can't help seeing that the absorption of effort to the one single effort to produce phenomena appealing exclusively to personal emotionalism has developed and cultivated a narrow selfishness which is detrimental to all true progress. Hence, most of the platform efforts are made of fulsome laudations of Spiritualism as destroying the fear of death and comforting the bereaved, or else of labored expositions of the superiority of this movement to all of the old religious systems. And yet, like the old church it continually sings of the "over there," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee." An overmastering enthusiasm is thus an impossible and the narrow circle of personal excitement is traveled over and over again.

The rationalistic, humanitarian wing cannot at present see any escape from these difficulties for the present. There will come an eclective sifting when science will supersede superstition; when social reconstruction will become the inspiring religion and the purpose of the higher intelligences will be appreciated and carried out by the co-operation of both worlds.

J. S. LOVELAND.

I know that the higher and nobler intelligences are doing all they can to do away with this curse upon Spiritualism—false mediumship, and we have no right to condemn any person who stands forth and tries to show us the pitfalls in our faith, for such a person may be under the guidance of the Higher Powers—they may be the greatest of our mediums, after all. And don't condemn Mrs. Hyland; if she was a fraudulent medium once, then she is now a genuine one and is used by the Higher Powers to unmask the villainy now said to be materialization, for wise intelligences know that only in just this manner (by a reputed medium coming forward and acknowledging her fault) can false materialization be exposed. Of course, our sister did wrong, but it is not for us to deal with her—a higher court than ours will judge her; so let us leave her to its mercies. Her case is some different from that of the regular charlatan inasmuch as she has come forward and exposed the fraud, and some concession is due her. We can at least admire her courage in coming forth, for it takes courage.

Oh! the oceans of tears I have shed because I was scored for daring to say a medium was false when it had been proved to me that she was! Persecuted for the truth's sake. But I have never declared, by being silent, that a wrong was right; while life lasts I shall speak.

EVA A. CASSELL.

Chelsea, Mass.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents.

The Wisdom of Passion

BY SALVARONA.

"In modern philosophy there are three great treatises on the Passions, that of Spinoza, that of Hume, and that of Salvarona."—Philosophical Journal.

Illustrated with three handsome portraits of Emerson, Hesea, Byron. 12mo, 250 pages. Red cloth; gold title. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of price by postal note.

Price, $1.00. Postage, 10 Cents.

The extraordinary merits of "The Wisdom of Passion" are the copiousness of human insight and content in the way of fact and reference with which the book is crammed. Its main thesis I agree with.—Prof. William James, Harvard University.

I have found "The Wisdom of Passion" to be a book of powerful erudition and fine intuition. I would be happy if in a certain sense I had inspired it.—Prof. Ceasare Lombroso.

Here is a man who sees and says things for himself. He is not retailing conventionalities. The book fairly bristles with wise sayings. I believe the thesis is sustainable and that the author has gone a long way toward fortifying it. After I took up the book, I did not quit, except for meals and sleep till I had read it carefully from cover to cover.—Albion W. Small, Head of Dept. of Sociology and Director of Affiliated Work for the University of Chicago.

I am somewhat familiar with the tendency in modern thought to give primary place to feeling—with James' "Will to Believe," with Ward's social philosophy, with Shelley's and Browning's philosophy. "The Wisdom of Passion" fits in with their contributions. The main thesis of the book—that the soul forms its own forms by its choice—I can ascribe to.—Prof. Oscar Lovell Triggs, University of Chicago.

Address all orders to H. G. Walters, Langhorne, Pa.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building.
Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 15.
Admittance without examination.
Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week.. .. .. 1.75

Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

Our Eclectic Magazine.

The Cream of the Secular and Spiritualist Press.

EXTRAORDINARY MANIFESTATIONS OF SPIRIT POWER WITHOUT THE PRESENCE OF A MEDIUM, HAVE BEEN OCCURRING IN MODERN TIMES. THE SECULAR PRESS TEEMS WITH STARTLING DEVELOPMENTS IN THIS DIRECTION. THOSE WHO HAVE NEVER DREAMED THEY POSSESSED ANY PSYCHIC POWERS, ARE BROUGHT SPONTANEOUSLY IN TOUCH WITH THE SPIRIT WORLD AND WONDERFUL PHENOMENA FOLLOW. IN FACT SPIRIT POWER COMING FORTH SPONTANEOUSLY IS OFTEN MORE REMARKABLE THAN WHEN COMING THROUGH A MEDIUM. THAT SPIRITS CAN AND DO RETURN TO EARTH AND COMMUNICATE WITH MORTALS IS PROVEN BY A VARIETY OF MANIFESTATIONS THAT ARE CONSTANTLY OCCURRING IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE COUNTRY, AND WHICH ARE VERY STARTLING IN THEIR NATURE, AND WHICH DO NOT SEEM TO REQUIRE A MEDIUM FOR THEIR PRODUCTION.

Ghost stories at first hand are not so hard to obtain as some persons may think. Here are two personal experiences told by a lady living in Colorado Springs, to a reporter of the Gazette. She did not write them out, but they are substantially in her own language. She gave permission that they be published, without the use of her name in connection.

"I want to say first of all that I am not superstitious and I believe that there is a solution for all things in natural law after investigation. A great many people are given to imagination and think they see or hear things that they really do not. Then they want to tell someone and to impress their hearer as much as possible, exaggerate. For that reason I do not like to talk of these things because there are so many stories that seem to me very foolish. They are handed along from one person to another, gaining with each repetition. But I will tell you an experience I had a few weeks ago and I will tell it just as it happened.

A Recent Experience.

"I believe in continued life after what is known as death. I do not accept Spiritualism as generally understood, but the teachings of theosophy help to explain some of the things which otherwise I could not account for.

"One evening a few weeks ago I was obliged to be out very late at night and was returning to my home very tired and alone. Just as I entered the gate I was surprised to see some one sitting on the porch. The porch was not so dark but that I could see the outlines of a woman's figure, for she had on a white dress, but at that distance I could not recognize the features. The chair which she was seated in I recognized from its arms as one belonging in my own private room. I have roomers in the house and I thought that one of the ladies was troubled with sleeplessness and had come out on the porch to get the full benefit of the cool night air.

Clear and Unmistakable.

"As I came down the walk the figure turned its head and smiled at me and I recognized the face and form of my sister who died a year ago. Her hands were clasped back of her head in a characteristic attitude. The dress had been a favorite one with her, and she had had a photograph taken in it with her hands in the position in which I saw them then. But the chair was not in the photograph. As I reached the steps, with the smile still on her face she gradually vanished. Not all at once but slowly, very slowly. The chair also disappeared. There was no chair of any kind on that porch. I was not frightened, nor nervous. Indeed I was willing to believe that the image was the product of my own mind and yet the figure seemed so real to me that I half expected to find the door unlocked and that someone had slipped into the house. The door was locked securely, but my experience was not to end there.

Another Figure Also.

"I entered the house, passed through the room and started for a match safe in the dining room. As I threw open the door between the rooms I met my other sister who had been dead two years and a half, standing directly in front of me. She was in a dark dress similar to one which she used to wear. I reached out my hand for a match and as I struck it she disappeared.

"No, I was not afraid even then. Why should I be? They loved me in life, why should they harm me in any way now? If I had been a stranger I might have been frightened. If they were images created solely by my own mind they were harmless; if they really were spirits of my sisters, their presence was only for good.

A Mysterious Old House.

"You ask me if I ever had any other unusual experience. I certainly have, although at the time the occurrence took place I perversely insisted that nothing of the kind happened. When I was a girl of 19 I was invited to spend some little time with friends at the Las Vegas Hot Springs. I found my friend and her husband, with their two little children of 3 and 4 years, and a small serving maid, occupying a rather large old house remote from other neighbors. One reason they insisted on my remaining for some time was because they felt lonely. Their own house had been burned down and they had taken this one because it was the only available one and had been standing vacant for a long time. The owner had once occupied it, but his life in it had never been happy. He quarreled with his wife, so rumor said. The wife suddenly became very sick and died within three days. The owner left the house and place and never returned to it to my knowledge. However this all took place before I went to visit there.

"Well, I was shown my large, old-fashioned room. The little serving maid had a small room next it and there was a connecting door between. 'Please, mayn't I leave the door open?' she said to me, so timorously that I looked at her sharply. My parents had brought me up strictly, and taught me never to fear, so I had little patience with those who did.

"'Why?' I asked.

"'Oh, it's so dark and lonesome in here,' replied the child.

"'Leave it open, if you want,' I said.

Groping Hands in the Dark.

"I think I had just fallen asleep, although of course I do not know what time it was, when I suddenly roused wide awake. Someone was groping their way around my room; it seemed to me as if they had both hands against the wall opposite the child's room. What she was doing there I didn't know, but nevertheless I spoke quietly and kently. "What do you want, Gertie?' There was no answer but the groping hands continued their way around the room. I spoke again, more sharply, 'Gertie! What do you want?' Still no answer, but the sound came nearer, passed the door of the little room, toward my bed. I was not frightened, for it had been trained into me from childhood that there were no sights, nor sounds, however mysterious, that could not be accounted for in perfectly natural ways if we would only investigate them carefully. Still nearer came that sound of groping hands, and passed over the head of my bed. Not a thing was to be seen, although the room was not what we call pitch dark. Still around the room went the sound of groping hands, finally reaching the door whence I had first heard them. Then they ceased.

Suddenly came a sleepy, but half-frightened voice from the child. 'Did you call me?' she said.

"'When?' I asked.

"'Right now.'

"'No,' I answered.

"'Somebody did.'

"'Oh, you've just been dreaming,' I answered.

"'I'll call it mice,' I said to myself, and went to sleep.

"The next morning my hosts looked at me rather curiously I thought, but I said nothing. A few days later my friends asked carelessly, 'Have you heard any noises in this house?'

"'Noises?' I repeated questioingly, 'what kind of noises? What do you mean?'

"'Oh, strange noises at night, or anything of that sort?'

"'Why, no,' I answered. 'I have not heard anything that I couldn't account for.'

"'I believe you have,' was the somewhat impolite reply, 'and just won't admit it, for I know you were brought up not to believe in these things.'

A Midnight Struggle.

"It was several nights after this that I was again roused, this time by the sound of an awful struggle in the dining room directly below my room. I could hear no voices but there was the crash of furniture, as if the chairs were being used as weapons, and the frequent thud as of a falling body.

"My first wild thought was that burglars had entered the house and that a conflict was in progress, but there was no shouting for help and no screaming; nothing to indicate that anyone in the house was awake except myself. There was suddenly a tremendous crash, the sound of a heavily falling body, then all was still. I lay awake thinking until I again persuaded myself that I had been the victim of my own imagination. The next morning I inquired if the doors had all been locked the night previous.

"'What did you hear?' was my friend's quick rejoinder. But I would not risk being laughed at, and again denied having heard anything.

Others Heard It Too.

"Then other friends of the family came for an unexpected visit. One gentleman was obliged to occupy a couch in the parlor. 'How did you sleep?' asked the hostess in the morning.

"'Pretty well,' was the reply, 'but I heard you when you came into the room.'

"'I did not come into the room.'

"'Then it was you who came down after your book,' he said to me.

"'No, I took my book upstairs with me,' I said.

"'Well, somebody came into the room last night, groping their way around in the dark, searching for something.'

"I must not take your time in telling all of the instances in which I knew other people had heard the same sort of sounds that had puzzled me.

Steps on the Stairs.

"One night I heard stealthy footsteps coming up the back stairway near my room. There was the sound of groping hands on the wall, and I felt that I could not be mistaken in the belief that someone had broken into the house. I knew I could tell when they passed the broad stair at the turn, and I made up my mind that I would call for help as soon as they came that far. Slowly the footsteps came. They reached the turn of the stairs and then stopped. 'Waiting to hear if anyone is awake,' I thought. But there was no further sound, ascending or descending. Finally I rose and with lighted match in hand went to the head of the stairs. There was no one in sight. I went softly down to the turn and struck another match. I could all see the stairway and the little entry. There was no one there and not a sound.

What the Children Heard.

"One afternoon my friend asked me if I would be willing to look after her two little boys, while she went on an errand. The little serving maid had left several days before, frightened away by the mysterious noises, and still more, I thought, by what I believed was the foolish talk about them, in which I would never join. So I readily agreed to look after the boys. They played quietly together until just about dusk when I began to hear footsteps upstairs. I paid no attention but suddenly the little fellow spoke: 'Lady,' he said, 'who's upstairs?'

"'No one,' I said.

"'Yes, there is,' he insisted; 'don't you hear them?'

"'No,' I said sharply, 'I don't hear anyone, and you don't either; you just be a good boy and keep still.'

Searched Through the House.

"But the sound of heavy footsteps continued, and the older boy said, 'Why, I hear them plain, too.'

"'Look here, children,' I said, 'there is no one up there and just to convince you we will go up and see.' So I took the little one in my arms and the other by the hand and we went upstairs in the twilight and all through the house, into every room and opened every closet. Of course there was no one to be seen. But the footsteps now sounded distinctly down stairs. 'Papa's come,' shouted the boys, but I doubted it. We went down stairs. No one was there.

"In about half an hour the father and mother both came. 'Somebody's been upstairs, papa,' said the older boy; 'we heard them walking around.'

"'The boys thought they heard some one,' I corrected, 'and we went up there and looked all around, but they just imagined it.'

"The father's face grew pale at the thought. 'Do you mean to say that you took those boys upstairs in the dark and tried to find who made those footsteps?' he demanded.

"'Of course, why not? Those footsteps were only imaginary.'

"He turned on me almost angrily, 'Everybody who has ever slept in this house has heard these sounds except you, and has known that they were not imaginary or explainable, and it's strange that you have never heary anything, or won't admit it.'

An Unsolvable Riddle.

"It was only a few nights after this when I was roused from sleep by a light shining into my eyes and a voice saying, 'It can't be her, she's been sound asleep all right.' I opened my eyes to find my friend and her husband standing near my bed.

"'What is it?' I asked.

"'There's been the most awful row going on down stairs, the sound of crashing furniture, and falling bodies. We have heard it separately before, but this time it woke us both together.'

"'Why don't you take a light and go down to see what it is,' I suggested.

"'What, go down there, with a light in my hand? If it were burglars, they'd have a bead on me sure.'

"After some discussion, I agreed to go down in the dark so as to avoid 'a bead,' if possible. I left them on the landing above. I ran lightly down the stairs in my slippers and entered the dark room. All was silence. I called for them to come on.

"That man let me go, and followed behind his wife downstairs. Everything was just as it was when we had gone up stairs some time before. The doors and windows were all closed and locked and not a thing disturbed.

"I went over the house inside and out but I never found a sign of any kind to explain the mysterious sounds. I investigated thoroughly. That is all of my story. I have never accounted for it."

The Detroit (Mich.) Free Press has the following:

Shakspeare wrote of the stuff that dreams are made off, but he forgot to throw any light on the quality of the material. This was careless of him, provided he knew, for it would have settled a much-disputed and curiously complicated subject. However, it would also have deprived us of the pleasure of speculating; and who is there that, at times, has not been interested in his dreams?

A Michigan man, holding one of the most dignified offices in the gift of the state, tells the following experience:

"When I was a young fellow working my way through Michigan university I was often short of funds, and one night, when I had reached a point from which I could not see my way without money, and knew not where to get it, I dreamed that I received a letter from my brother in which were inclosed several bank notes. I distinctly saw the various denominations and, a few days later received a letter from my brother inclosing the money exactly as I had dreamed of it. My brother was some distance from me and, as I afterward figured it out—the letter was written just about the time it appeared to me in my dream."

A Spirit Voice Saves His Life.

"Did I ever have a dream that came true?" said a Detroit man, in answer to the question. "Well, I should say I did! A dream once saved my life! When I was a boy we lived near the St. Lawrence river, and I was very fond of taking little trips in my boat. One night I went about five miles from home with a friend who went ashore to call on a young lady. While he was gone I went to sleep in the boat, and I dreamed that I heard my father call, 'George! George! if you don't get out of that boat you'll be drowned!' It woke me up and I found that a severe storm was rising. I had just time to drag the boat on the shore, and I knew that if it had not been for my father's warning, I should have been drowned. Yes, the storm came from the direction of my father's house, and I presume that when it came up, he thought of me, for he knew where I was."

The Soul in Dreamland.

Many interesting dreams are recorded in the annals of the Society for Psychical Research, including the following:

"My youngest sister was visiting my bachelor quarters," says the narrator, "where I was residing with a bachelor friend who was considered by his best friends, most unlikely to marry. One night I dreamed my bachelor friend approached me with a smile and said, "Sparrow, congratulate me; I am engaged to be married and am as spooney as I was at one and twenty.' I offered my congratulations, and asked who the lady was, to which he replied, 'She is an Irish girl; I met her at Kingston regatta.' I told this dream to my sister, the morning after it occurred, and that night when I returned from the office my sister said: 'Your dream has come true; even the very words.' She put a letter from my eldest sister into my hand, and I read: 'Tell Alick his friend D. L. is engaged to one of the daughters of our rector. He met her at the Kingston regatta.'

"The following occurred about May, 1859," said the writer. "I believed my son to be away in the Mediterranean, and I had no reason to believe he would come home for a year or two, when one night I dreamt that I had a letter and all that was written on it and inside was "Woolwich.' In the morning the postman brought a letter marked 'Woolwich Dockyard,' and it was from my son, who was in the navy, and telling of the safe and unexpected arrival the night before of the ship he was on."

"When I was in England, some years ago," relates another, "I had a very bad cough, for which a blister was ordered by my medical man, but being improperly applied, it left a very ugly mark, like the print of a horse's shoe. I was then preparing to rejoin my husband in India, and carefully avoided mentioning the circumstance to him.

"When I reached my destination, my husband's mother said to him, 'Does L— look at all as you saw her in your dream?' Upon which my husband turned to me and said, 'I had such a horrid dream about you the other night. I saw you looking pale and ill and you had a dreadful mark like a horseshoe upon your chest.' An unlucky horseshoe, to be sure, though it had the virtue of disproving the old saying that dreams go by contraries."

Experiences of this kind often take place when not in a condition of actual sleep—borderland cases, as they are called.

"I once went up from Oxford to stay a day or two with my brother," says one narrator, "but when I reached there, I found a note saying that he had gone to a dance. Instead of going to bed, I dozed in an arm chair, but started up wide awake exactly at 1 o'clock, ejaculating, 'By Jove! he's done!' and seeing him coming out of a drawing room into a brightly illuminated landing, catching his foot in the edge of the top stair and falling headlong, just saving himself by his elbows and hands.

"The house was one which I had never seen, nor did I know where it was.

"Thinking very little of the matter, I fell adoze again for half an hour and was awakened by my brother suddenly coming in and saying: 'Oh, there you are! I have just had as narrow an escape of breaking my neck as I ever had in my life. Coming out of the ball room, I caught my foot, and tumbled fell length down the stairs.'"

Most of these cases of course, can be explained on the theory of telepathy, but for those that predict events one must look to some other source for their origin. The foretelling of death is not an uncommon occurrence in a dream, and speaking of that, a lad, now visiting in Detroit, had this to say:

"My mother foresaw in a dream, the death of my father, and just the manner in which it took place, though at the time of the dream, my father was in the best of health. A few days later, he was attacked with pneumonia, and died in just the way my mother had pictured him in her dream."

But such cases are depressing, and though many of them are on record, it is encouraging to know also, that many gruesome or unhappy dreams have not the faintest relation to the truth.

Before allowing oneself to worry over an unfortunate prediction of the dream state, it is best to consider carefully the possible consequences of a midnight Welsh rarebit.

A Strange Visitation.

The following is sent by a lady of Detroit, who, for obvious reasons, requests that her name be withheld. She states that she is noted among her friends for veracity and matter-of-factness, and could produce almost any number of persons willing to vouch for her sincerity. The experience she relates is certainly peculiar:

"I had been working hard during the morning, and feeling very tired laid down after lunch for a nap. I had been asleep perhaps an hour, when I was awakened by a slight pricking sensation in my neck. I became conscious that someone was hovering over me and thought I must be ill and that it was my mother soothing my head with gentle caresses, and called out, 'Mother, is that you?' No one was in the room, and after a few moments I suddenly knew positively that it was not my mother, but could not imagine who it could be that was so anxious over me.

"As I became broader awake the touches became bolder and more frequent on cheek and throat, and trying to turn my head to see, I caught a fleeting face drawing back hastily as if it did not wish to be discovered. 'Who is this bothering me?' I said drowsily, resenting being aroused. The touches ceased for a few moments, then began again with renewed vigor. This occurred several times, and at last, somewhat annoyed, I exclaimed, vehemently, 'Who is it?' and raised my head quickly. This time I was successful, and I recognized the face distinctly, and flung up my hands in amazement, exclaiming, 'Why, it is — —! What can he want of me!' At this the face (which was very grave and sad), drew down closer until the eyes were level with my own and seemed to look down into my very soul. I understood then without words, and with a sudden impulse of tenderness and pity flung out my arms toward him with a long-drawn 'Dear, I understand.'

"A satisfied expression came over the face and it drew slowly back. I lay quietly for a few minutes, feeling a presence still in the room and noticing also a blue mist extending for several feet in each direction from the couch on which I rested. After a little this mist disappeared and with it consciousness of the presence. I sat up and thought the matter over and my intuition told me that the person in question had made, unconsciously perhaps, a superhuman effort to reach me and break the barrier of unfriendliness and coldness which had apparently existed between us for several years. We had been slightly acquainted in childhood, but had not met since, and there was apparently no cause for such an unusual occurrence, so that altogether much puzzled I tried to forget about it. In spite of my efforts, however, at times, it worried me, lest there might be something which I ought to do and was neglecting to do.

"Soon after I stumbled upon the reports of the Society of Psychical Research of England, and the accounts of similar occurrences confirmed my opinion of the affair. At the time of the occurrence I had read nothing whatever on occult phenomena and was very skeptical concerning hypnotism, Spiritualism, etc., and had no earthly interest in them. I have not been able to secure an explanation of the affair and would be glad to hear the opinions of those versed in such phenomena."

OBSESSION.

It Is Estimated by the Writer to Be Very Prevalent.

To the Editor:—On July 2 last, I replied to some critics on the above subject, one of whom stated in his letter published on a previous date: "The idea that a spirit can enter my body, take possession and hold court, dominate and control my life and actions, is too absurd to be debated in these modern times."

Since the date of my reply, Dr. J. M. Peebles, "the grand old man of Spiritualism," has published his new book on "The Demonism of the Ages and Spirit Obsessions."

I have read the book with thrilling interest, and I urge, beseech Spiritualists and all persons interested in the subject to purchase a copy. It is a large book of nearly 400 pages and the price is only one dollar; postage 19 cents extra. It may be had from the office of this paper, or of Dr. J. M. Peebles, Battle Creek, Mich.

From the quantity of letters I have received since May 28 from persons so obsessed, and the reports I hear of others, I am amazed that spirit obsession is so prevalent in this our day and country.

Spiritualists have no conception of the prevalence of spirit obsession in Europe, Asia, Africa, and even in our own country, America.

This is a subject matter which none but Spiritualists are truly able to combat, and it must be grappled with by them.

Dr. Peebles' book gives full details how to treat cases of obsession.

I wish I could afford to give away a thousand copies of the book. I would do so to-morrow to each and all persons who applied. W. YATES, M. D.
Chicago, Ill.

STOP LYING!

The Rev. Dr. Frank DeWitt Talmage, whose chief notoriety lies in the fact that he is the son of his father, is now on the Pacific slope and cutting a wide swath in true Talmagean style. He spoke at La Jolla, a seaside resort near San Diego, Sunday, Aug. 14, and this is a choice extract from his sermon as published in the San Diego Sun, the following morning:

"There is a 'time to die,' which is beautiful. Oh, yes; death is beautiful if it comes in God's way. Then a dying saint knows death is not annihilation, but coronation, irridiation and eternal triumph. Like old Senator Foote, when dying, he can look ahead at the rapturous glories and cry, 'Beautiful! beautiful! beautiful!' But was the death of Nero beautiful? Was the death of Cleopatra beautiful? Was the death of Tom Paine beautiful? One moment he was in prayer and the next moment blaspheming God, until his relations in horror placed their fingers in their ears and ran from his howlings and fearful agonies."

This is the kind of stuff that emanates from the lips of this great (?) divine, in order to bolster up the fast decaying dogmas of Christianity.

Once upon a time there was a jackal who, surrounded by his animal friends, held forth upon the ignoble qualities of the lion. The lion being dead, it was perfectly safe for any of the lesser animals to traduce his character. The cases are parallel. The lion is dead. The jackal still lives. When will preachers of the Talmage stripe stop lying?

WILL C. HODGE.

HEALING CURRENTS
FROM THE
BATTERY OF LIFE,
BY WALTER DE VOE.

A Book That Awakens the Healing Power in the Soul.
It Teaches the Glorious Truth that Frees From Sin, Sickness, Poverty and Pain.
PRICE, $2.00.
For Sale by
COLLEGE OF FREEDOM
Woodlawn, Chicago.

A PRACTICAL COURSE
FOR
Physicians and Students
of Occultism,
Treating on the Following Subjects:
Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By
PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to
MISS NETTIE WINTER,
466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PUBLICATIONS
OF
Hudson Tuttle.
Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.
This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.
In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRIT AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.
English edition. Price, $1.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF MAN.
Containing the latest investigations and discoveries, and a thorough presentation of this interesting subject. English edition. Price $1.

THE SECRETS OF THE CONVENT, OF THE SACRED HEART.
This book was written for an object, and has been pronounced equal in its exposure of the diabolical methods of Catholicism to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Price, 25 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.
A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?
How to investigate. How to form circles, and develop and cultivate mediumship. Names of eminent Spiritualists. Their testimony. Eight-page tract for mission work. Singles copies, 5 cents; 100 for $1.25.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.
By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best poems of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE.
For the home, the lyceum and societies. A manual of physical, intellectual and spiritual culture. By Emma Rood Tuttle. A book by the aid of which a progressive lyceum, a spiritual or liberal society may be organized and conducted without other assistance. Price, 50 cents; by the dozen, 40 cents. Express charges unpaid.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.
For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.

All books sent postpaid. Address
HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year..... $1 00
Six Months..... 50cts
Thirteen Weeks..... 25cts
Single Copy..... 5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1904.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio,

Chicago's Exploration Expedition.

It may not be generally known to our readers that Chicago has an excavating expedition operating in the Orient, under the direction of the University of Chicago, and yet such is the fact.

During the last explorations with pick and spade, the ancient Adab, mentioned in the code of Hammurabi, an early king of Babylon, was unearthed. This expedition is under the direction of Prof. Robert F. Harper, of Midway University, an archeologist of rare ability. Prof. Harper received the good news a few days ago in the form of a cablegram from Prof. E. J. Banks, field director of the expedition, in which he related the uncovering of Adab, also known to the ancients as Udnunki. The site of the ruins is near Bismya, in the valley of the Tigris, not distant from Bagdad.

Prof. Banks announced in his dispatch that on the lowest level of the ruins he found Ud-nun-ki inscribed on the bricks. With 120 men in his service the excavations were pressed forward with great energy. The remains of four temples, one above the other, were found. Marble statues, onyx and sandstone lamps were found, with many bronze objects.

Wherever inscriptions were found, the characters used were syllables, not letters. This fact of itself tells of the great antiquity of this resurrected city.

These wonderful ruins in the valleys of the Euphrates and the Tigris doubtless antedate those of Egypt. They probably connect the civilizations of the Indus and the Irrawaddy, and farther East, with those of the Nile. These ruins scattered all over these vast regions, remains of full ten thousand years ago, are the true and uncorrupted records of a long buried past. Let the search go on. Their revealments are destined to give us a better conception of the beginnings of our race, and of the grand strides it has made to reach its present proud eminence in the arts, literature and science. We thank the University of Chicago and its learned professors, for the noble work in which they are engaged. Knowledge and bigotry are incompatible with each other. Teach the truth in regard to the past, and the myths of creation and the peopling of the earth with inhabitants in six days, will give place to real knowledge, showing there has been no FALL, but a gradual acquisition of wisdom and ascension through all the millions of years our progenitors have inhabited this earth.

A Babe Is Born—and a Boy.

The bells of all the churches in the Russian empire rang the glad tidings that an heir to the throne was born. It is reported that the autocracy had decided that if this event disappointed, as the four preceding had done with a girl, then the czar would seek a divorce and marry again, for in the disturbed condition of the empire it was of vital importance than an heir be in waiting.

The poor babe, over whom there is shouting and prayers at the churches, and blessings of priests, should have the pity of the world. A man sleeping on the brink of a volcano, trembling and muttering with the intensity of the suppressed lava ready to burst forth, is safe compared with the czar and his court. It is perfidious, inhuman, despicable to assassinate, but possibly there may be a government so inhuman, cruel and despicable in the estimation of those who suffer from its misrule, as to justify the bursting bomb.

The poor child will inherit the plaudits of the priesthood there, always on the side of tyranny, and the accumulations of all the outrages suffered by the people of past generations.

On him will fall the reflection of the torture of the Siberian exiles, their festering shackles, their hunger and despair, their terrible suffering unto death in mines, dungeons, and on the frozen storm-swept plains. On him will fall the misery and degradation, the want and poverty of a great people, robbed of their birthright and enslaved by autocrats in the name of God. Born to be cradled in fine linen, and fed on a service of gold; to have rulers for his servitors, he cannot escape the fate he inherits, and no one can remove the bomb from beneath his pillow or prevent the fuse burning when the time comes for its lighting. Justice may be slow, but it is sure, and the red hand of revolution will avenge the wrongs of the past and the present.

Poor little bit of humanity! Better been born in the shack of a peasant than in the royal palace.

Honest Mediums Must Be Sustained.

Honest mediums should be well sustained. They are entitled to encouragement and protection, and a generous equivalent for their services. The Progressive Thinker has been, and will still continue to be, their special organ. There are many mediums in this city and scattered through the country, whose lives are pure and whose homes are heaven itself. By suppressing the fakes you encourage these honest mediums and assist the angel world in its efforts to promote the truth. Every honest medium will find in The Progressive Thinker a true friend. Its friendship for mediums has taken definite form. The $1,000 lately raised for the benefit of the medium's fund—to render those mediums comfortable who are on account of sickness or old age, incapacitated for work—was procured mainly through the untiring efforts of The Progressive Thinker. The paper is not only the Organ of honest mediums, but it has been under the special charge of the Higher Powers who have made it extremely prosperous—prosperous beyond that of any other Spiritualistor free thought paper published on this earth to-day.

Spiritualism and Prejudice.

Ever since Modern Spiritualism began one of its most bitter foes has been "Prejudice." It has plowed its way up from the tiny raps received by those three little children at Hydesville, to an institution of life and activity among other institutions of this world.

At every step the church, and that means all denominations, has slandered and abused it—lied about it; the preachers have applied almost every poisonous dose of epithets to it and have knifed it on every side in a frantic attempt to assassinate it, and still it lives and grows. Prejudice could not kill it.

Then the Agnostics and Infidels, biased by a supreme egotism and, prejudiced by the same spirit of intolerance that influenced the church, have tackled the little infant, and between the two it has grown up, like the stately sunflower with its face to the light until it is almost too tall to hear their piteous wailing, and too wise to pause in its growth to look out upon them in their valley of shadows and cactus.

There is nothing too mean for a being or an institution governed by prejudice to do.

Upon the subject of prejudice, however we cannot do better than sanction the same from the Chicago Chronicle:

Prejudice rules this world. The governing power may appeal to reason, conscience, wealth, the courts, the armies, but behind all of them, like the serpent behind Eve, crouches prejudice. A person, therefore, who is ignorant or neglectful of it is like a man strolling through a power-house without having an eye to the dynamos.

Prejudice is a kind of hatred, distinguished from all other kinds by several characteristics. One of these is that its cause in any particular case is obscure or unknown. It may be racial, it may be religious, it may be social, it may be political, it may be superstitious and, worst of all, it may be caused by jealousy, but what causes any particular man's prejudice against another, while it admits of much argument and speculation, is utterly unknown and unknowable.

Another characteristic is that the man with a prejudice is never conscious of it. On the other hand, he indignantly denies it. He will not deny at times that he is angry with the other man, but when he attempts to tell what it is about he is so irrational that he gives himself completely away. Other people can see that he is prejudiced, but he himself does not know it and of course does not know the cause of it.

A more forbidding characteristic is that a prejudiced person, especially if envious, will do the most contemptibly mean things that human nature is ever guilty of, such as lying, slander, treachery, bribery, poisoning and assassination. A man with a genuine hatred wants a fight to the finish in the open, but the prejudiced man skulks in the dark and seeks to take a mean advantage. There is also a special brand of cruelty in his attacks.

The climax is that prejudice is incurable and eternal. Every complaint that prejudice has brought against a man may be refuted and shown to be ridiculous and impossible, and the only effect on the prejudiced man will be a momentary embarrassment, while the prejudice remains and soon breaks out in some other direction. Ingersoll said that religion was not founded on reason and that was the reason that reasoning had no effect on it. Probably that is not true, but in some cases it certainly is true that prejudice is not founded on anything and that is the reason there is not anything that will remove it.

If a man is the victim of a prejudice what had he better do about it? The first thing is to find out, because many unsuspicious people suffer from prejudice a long time before they suspect it. Having once made up his mind that another man is prejudiced against him, his course of action should be governed by his relations with his enemy, the prejudiced person.

If he is wholly independent of his enemy he will find it an excellent remedy to break up all friendly relations with him and compel him to be an open enemy. That is a hundred times better than a hypocritical friendship with a deadly prejudice at the back of it. If a man's prejudiced enemy is his superior upon whom he depends for promotion and success in life the best way is for the victim to put the diameter of the earth between him and his enemy and start life afresh.

Power of Suggestion Illustrated.

The power of suggestion is well illustrated in the following case reported to the Chicago Record-Herald, from Fort Wayne, Ind.:

"Held bedfast for twenty-five years, apparently by the power of suggestion, Miss Ella Conklin of this city, 30 years old, is learning to walk. At the age of 5 her back was injured by a fall, and the physician in attendance said she never could walk again. She went to bed, and has stayed there since, eating no solid food and hardly moving. Recently, having been taken to a hospital because her stepmother became ill and could care for her no longer, she was examined by a physician, and he could find no reason why the patient should not walk. She now moves about, takes solid food and is gaining strength."

Held helpless during all these long, weary years by the unwise suggestion planted in her mind by an unwise physician. The case illustrates a great fact. Suggestion, like hypnotism, is a principle in nature, and rightly used may be made vastly beneficial to humanity; but perverted or unwisely used, it becomes an instrument of evil.

The Logic of It.

Is it not rather queer that the apologists and shielders of fraud, trickery, deception, of persons claiming to be mediums, but who are mere swindlers preying upon the public, preying upon the gullibility of dupes, and in some cases catering to the lowest animal passions of morally and mentally weak-minded patrons—is it not queer that by this class The Progressive Thinker's warfare against fraud is denounced as a warfare against mediums and mediumship?

The logic if this charge against The Progressive Thinker amounts to this: That the persons who make the charge regard all mediums and mediumship as fraudulent.

Certainly The Progressive Thinker has done nothing of the kind, has made no such charge, has only battled for honesty and truth and for the welfare and protection of genuine mediumship—never a line or word to the contrary. Genuine mediums should regard our warfare against fraud as a warfare in their behalf, for such it really is. If all the frauds were weeded out, the true mediums would thrive.

A Nation of Atheists.

According to the report of a Christian missionary, as published in the Sunday Magazine, London, in a paper entitled "Religion in Japan":

"The Japanese come as near being a nation of atheists as any people upon the planet. So far as Christianity is concerned, progress in Japan is slow; there is no sign of any real turning to Christ."

That missionary had spent many years with the people of the Rising Sun, and had expended his best services in a futile attempt to convert them to his faith. Instead, they insisted their Buddha was every way superior as a teacher to Jesus, inculcating better morals, without adding threats of endless woe to frighten them into good behavior.

The Parent of Crime.

Rev. W. H. Harrington, late chaplain of the Minnesota State Prison, is reported as saying: "The theological dogma of vicarious punishment is responsible for a vast deal of crime." Well, why not? If Jesus suffered for the sins of the world, in place of the real offender, why should the culprit care how much guilt is charged to his account. The atoning blood of the dear Savior effaces every trace of wrong-doing, if trust is placed in his power of redemption.

The statistics of every penitentiary in Christian countries confirm the observations of Rev. Harrington.

THE OPEN COURT.

It is controlled by Spiritualists—by devout, sincere Spiritualists who have the good of the cause at heart. They have a right to be heard on the important questions before the Court. Whatever is said therein, each writer is responsible therefor—give them the PRAISE or the BLAME, and not the editor. After next week the Court will adjourn. The proceedings of the sessions that have been held should be laid aside for future reference, especially this issue and the next. Soon there will be another session of Court, on a question that will awaken an immense interest in the Cause of Truth among all honest Spiritualists throughout the world. The ball has commenced rolling, and Error will be crushed, and Truth prevail.

A Prominent Cuban.

We have had the pleasure of a visit from Mr. E. Prieto, of Cuba. He is an earnest Spiritualist, and has been attending the various camps. He is a man highly cultured, and it is extremely interesting to talk with him.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

MYSTICAL TEACHING.

What one writer [as set forth in the St. Louis Globe Democrat] calls the popularity of Maeterlinck is bringing more things to light than the announcement of the fact commonly recognizes. Among others that the mystic himself has been something of an egotist in fancying that he held a mount of vision where none but the rare initiate could follow him. "The Mystic," says a recent speaker in university circles, "is he who looks at things from his notion of the unknown." To imagine, then, that in a great palpitating world of the unknown he and a small handful of his disciples were the only ones given to incursions and speculations in the unseen, is almost the supreme egotism of man—the strange idea of a picked company of the elect which seems to pursue the teachers into every spiritual field.

That Maeterlinck is becoming a charmed and familiar name in nearly every household of to-day is not all due to the growing spiritual consciousness of mankind, but to the large and daring faith he has in it, when appealed to through the universal brotherhood—the subconscious self that lives, silent, but alert, in every one of us. It is true that Maeterlinck, with all mystics, "original, derivative or factitious," as the university professor divides them, recognizes a "point of sensibility," a degree of psychical experience necessary to fully grasp the mystic speech and vision. But this is far from limiting them to any class or order, and simply marks the individual soul's awakening to the nature of its own being and inheritance. "For the soul," he tells us, "is like a dreamer, enthralled by sleep, who struggles with all his might to move an arm or raise an eyelid."

That this struggle of the soul to find itself and assert its power, is universal, and old as the soul itself, is something which it is well for the mystic of any age to begin to recognize. Even the "spiritual epoch" lies very much in the power of the mind to discern it; the courage of the mind to declare it, perhaps.

Sitting in the luxurious drawing-room of one of the veriest butterflies of society, and seeming devotees of wealth, a caller recently chanced—very improperly, of course—upon some reference to the Uray and the psychic developments of the hour, when, to her surprise, her hostess exclaimed in tense tones that bore no relation to fad-following: "Oh, Mrs. ——, I would impoverish myself and go barefoot through the streets for one ray of light in that direction."

Out on a prairie ranch a gentle sister of mercy attempted to whisper spiritual hope and consolation to a poor farmer, whose beloved son lay in jail, under unjust, but deadly accusations, with all the odds of the trial going darkly against him. With a smile, the bronzed plainsman replied: "I know all about it, sister, and alone with the stars and the prairie grasses I have had full assurance that my boy will be acquitted"—and he was.

Many a paragraph has crept into the daily papers touching a case—the strangest, say the authorities, that they have ever known—where a young woman, under arrest for murder, showed not one sign of fear or even concern over the deadly charge against her.

"Right prevails, does it not?" was the simple explanation she offered for her strange and almost smiling disregard of all the dangers, horrors, constraints and hardships of the situation, and the very whisper of such a stronghold in such an atmosphere might set the cult-worshipper in psychic circles pondering.

Faith cures, and prayer tests, and thought masteries and occult leading, and every other form of spiritual or psychic influence or phenomena known to the schools, work constantly in all grades of life and society, and, from the superstitious savage to the subtlest philosopher, the sense of the unseen is the deepest principle of being. Great or small, ignorant or learned, doubting or believing, every mortal being knows full well that he is in the power of the known, and from the heart of the unseen must draw his vital strength and resource.

Is he likely to sit down then and wait for some cloud-wrapped mystic to tell him how? Nay, more is the eternal life principle within him, the Divine Spirit by whose breath alone he knows one hour of being likely to leave him to some brother mortal to whisper to him the immortal story? "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart," runs the sacred teaching, and to feel after and find him is all the rapt speaker from Mars hill asked of Greek or barbarian for the mystic union with God.

There is a sublime simplicity, as well as "eternal unanimity" in all higher mystical teachings, which bears scant relation to the cabalistic utterances of the minor prophets. Man, as the breath of God, one with the eternal, is about all, from Genesis to Revelation, that the record allows, and from that tremendous and all-glorious truth must the individual soul work out its own spirit life and philosophy.

To perceive its struggles and trust its pure and incontaminable life essence to bring it back to the bosom of purity, is the most and the best that the outside friend or seer can do for us. That Maeterlinck recognizes this indestructible soul force in all men, and makes it especially "the treasure of the humble," is the thing that brings him to our doors and firesides, where other mystics stand afar off, bewildering us with their unknown tongues.

"We are natural believers," said Emerson; "truth alone interests us. We are persuaded that a thread runs through all things, and men and events, and life itself, come to us only because of that thread." Thus do the larger spirit teachers take us all into their confidence, and make us partners with them in the grasp of that eternal scheme of being and design, where nothing is by chance or accident, yet veiled in mysteries that the instinct of a bird or the swift intuition of a child may read more truly than all our philosophies. Always, too, must the mystic's teachings be tried at length at the bar of the social consciousness, and thus does the mysticism of a Philo or Plotinus fall away before the very intuitions of the common people it has despised.

Grant also, as a great sociologist has recently declared, that the sole strength of this social consciousness is the belief in immortality, and "the unity and existence of God the one ground of our reciprocal action," and you have the very field the Christ himself discerned for the work of the spirit teacher. Couched in parables, and wrapped in heavenly mysteries, as were all his utterances, yet it was the common people who heard him gladly, and from the unlearned woman at the well of Samaria that the first quick answer to the mystic lesson came in the eager cry, "Lord, give me of this living water, that I thirst no more, neither come hither to draw."

The fact is that there seems little hope in the whole mystic business, till the days come, foretold by the Scripture, when they shall not teach every man, or any man, his neighbor, saying, know the Lord, and the lordly powers within you, for all shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest. The

RADIANT THOUGHTS.

How to Realize Spiritual Power—Thoughts that Scintillate Divine Truths and Breathe the Fresh Atmosphere of the Heavenly Spheres—Thoughts that Will Do the Soul Good to Contemplate.

Do you want to feel the joy that is felt by freed spirits in heaven? Do you long to realize a close communion with Divine Wisdom? Do you desire to cultivate your spiritual powers while yet in the flesh, so that when you enter the spiritual world you will have mastered the first rudiments of spiritual dominion? Let me give you the exercises and the words of wisdom that the angels of power have given me, which have awakened in me a great consciousness of my immortal nature here and now.

You have wonderful spiritual potencies slumbering within your soul, but you imagine that you must lose your body before these divine forces will become operative. Not so! Knowledge and exercise of what you already have will unfold to you wonderful visions of spiritual power, and you may become conscious now of what the majority do not realize until after long experience in the freed spirit form.

You are a spirit now, and to realize it you have but to spend a little time daily thinking and feeling as think and feel the enlightened spirits who live in and express the love of the Eternal. It is joy to live to those who have become attuned to the mighty harmony that pervades the spirit spheres. That same harmony will pervade the mental aura of this world and bring great joy to humanity and the alleviation of all physical pain and want when the majority of humanity learn to live attuned to God and the harmonious light and love proceeding from His presence. The darkness, suffering and ignorance in the world are but a lack of that glory of eternal truth that illumines all enlightened souls in the higher spheres.

How shall you begin to feel that light and that love? By expressing it! That light shines in your interior soul-nature, and if you will you can feel that love for humanity and the expression through your nature of those spiritual qualities will make you more and more radiant with soul light and power. As the steam radiator becomes warm in giving forth heat, so your nature will become warm with divine love, which is the essence of power and dominion, by exercising love toward your neighbor—there is no other way to grow in spiritual power.

For at least one hour each day lay aside the petty cares and disturbances of this earth life, and if possible go by yourself and create happy thoughts, fill your mental atmosphere with light and joy by affirming over the eternal realities of truth that you have learned, until the negative thoughts of this earth plane are replaced by positive thoughts like those that pervade heaven. If one glimpse of the truth of endless immortality has given you a degree of joy, then you will realize more light and joy by affirming that truth over and over until it charges your whole brain with positive uplifting thought, and through this thought, so radiant and beautiful in your mind, positively enunciated, will flow the heavenly Spirit of Truth to illuminate hundreds of ignorance-darkened souls.

Do you not know that even the silent mental affirmation of divine truth will change the quality and color of your mental aura or atmosphere and create a light and peace about you that will attract higher and higher spiritual forces as your development continues?

Spirits are radiant and beautiful, because they have learned to think and feel love, and as their characters are transformed their light and power increases. Meditate upon these thoughts while you are alone in the silence each day, affirm them positively as though you were preaching to a multitude in ignorance and your thoughts will go forth as a blessing to many souls; your secret word silently spoken will become a liberating force dissolving the darkness of error and making them free.

There is no death.

God is my immortal life and the life of every soul in the universe.

The light of eternal life is now dissolving all mortal beliefs of death and damnation.

The whole universe is pervaded by a glorious love and wisdom that seeks to heal, redeem and transform every one of its children.

My soul is vitalized by Love's eternal essence and its light now dissolves all the gloom of mortal thought from my aura and makes me free.

The light and love that glorifies all beings in heaven is now becoming known to spirits incarnate. This glorious truth will pervade all minds, and as its influence spreads it will bring the health, peace and prosperity to humanity that it has given to the inhabitants of heaven.

I will be true to this light. I will be strong in the spirit of love. I will live and act as an immortal in all my ways, for the glory of the living, eternal truth.

The oftener the above thoughts are affirmed the more vibrant and joyful the mind becomes, and through this exercise of the mental and soul powers you will become a true medium for the Spirit of Truth, and your influence for good will become mightier as you thus co-operate with the angels in penetrating the ignorance of the world with your illuminating thoughts of truth.

Chicago, Ill. WALTER DEVOE.

Is the Problem Soluble?

It may be said without detraction [San Francisco Chronicle] from the just value, both scientific and practical, of recent discoveries by Professor Loeb and Mr. Clark, that they bring us no whit nearer a real solution of the problem of life. And that much ought to be said because of the infectious spread of an irreflective tendency to jump from the facts to a snap conclusion that life is chemical activity—and nothing more. It should be borne in mind that to know the phenomena of life and how to govern them is not to know what life really is. Were it possible to carry laboratory experiments up to actual production of a living human being, or even to something better, the great problem of life would still remain unsolved.

Whether we term the activities of life vitalism, or chemism, or what not, we have in them no clew to what actually constitutes life, aside from its known phenomena. We are told that frictional and chemical action will generate electricity; but there is no one to tell us more of what electricity is, aside from its effects, than Gilbert knew after rubbing his bits of amber, or Franklin after the lightning had streamed down his kite string. And as with electricity, so with life. Just what that was which is said to have been breathed into Adam, and which, in one way and another, has set all of us going since human life began, we know no more than did Adam or the first anthropoid ape. But we know it was something more than chemical reaction. We also know that life in some form of activity, is everywhere and in everything, while death is merely cessation of that activity in any given form or direction. It follows that while life itself is absolutely without beginning or end, its lesser manifestations begin and end in an infinite variety of ways. So that death to mankind is but a decolonization of certain physical activities whose concert of action has kept his body alive.

From these considerations it becomes safe to predicate that a hand-made, artificial man or a spontaneously generated man, if properly constructed and set going, would stand the same chance of the future life that the rest of us do—which is not saying that there are any chances against the future life. Human life develops consciousness of self, with realization and memory of experience which go a long way to create the personality for which, alone, could immortality be reasonably expected. The essential thing, therefore, is to set human life going.

The fact is that the future life is simply a question of consciousness. Does the conscious human personality survive bodily death? Now there is consciousness and consciousness. That awareness and sense of physiological duty which governs the purely physical manifestations of life is one kind of consciousness and that which recognizes the self and the mental aspect of life is quite another kind. A tissue cell is necessarily aware of what it must take from the blood to sustain its existence, but it does not know enough to know it does exist. But it has not the slightest need of such knowledge, while self-knowledge is essential to human personality. Evidently, the end of bodily life is the end of that kind of consciousness which governs it. It is also evident that while the body lives its consciousness never sleeps nor could it be off duty for a moment without disastrous consequences. But the true consciousness, or, at least the objective part of it, goes sound asleep or becomes obliterated in syncope or disease, while the bodily functions go on as placidly as ever. Self-consciousness, therefore, is not essential to bodily existence and, evidently, is not governed by the functions of that existence. Hence the inference that this, the higher form of consciousness, is supported by the higher functions of life—which implies the activities of that life which is life itself—ultimate, universal and without beginning or end. Extended study and analysis of collated proofs of the survival of human personality, recently published, convert that inference into scientific fact.

Human life may be regarded as a wave produced upon the surface of the sea of life, which pursues its career, subsides, and is gone forever. Yet nothing is lost to that sea itself. On the contrary, its substance becomes enriched by the experience of one more human personality. For the wave carried with it an inherent potentiality which developed actual consciousness of its own existence, actual realization and memory of its own experience, actual yearning for and acquirement of expanding knowledge of that of which it was a conscious part. All this and more it carried with it in its subsidence into the placid depths of the sea of life; for this, its personality, formed no feature of the wave's material form.

Now, as a growing personality, an expanding receptacle of progressively acquired knowledge, it must eventually reach a solution of the problem of life—provided the sea of life has boundary limits. If it has not, then omniscience is but a relative term and the problem of life remains forever insoluble.

But, after all, who would care to sink into the innocuous desuetude of nothing left to be learned?

O. O. BURGESS.

soul is preparing for a decisive struggle, says Maeterlinck, and none can foretell the issue, be this struggle for victory or for flight. Alas, for the mystic who must leave us there.

IRENE CLARK SAFFORD.

Boil It Down.

The advice of experts is epitomized in Joe Lincoln's poem in the "Author's Year Book," entitled "Boil It Down." Contributors to The Progressive Thinker are kindly requested to commit the stanzas to memory, and govern themselves accordingly.

If you have a thought that's happy,
Make it short and crisp and snappy.
When your brain its coin has minted,
Down the page your pen has sprinted,
If you want your effort printed,
Boil it down.

Take out every surplus letter—
Fewer syllables the better—
Make your meaning plain—express it
So we'll know, not merely guess it.
Then, my friend, ere you address it,
Boil it down.

Boil out all the extra trimmings—
Skim it well, then skim the skimmings—
When you're sure 'twould be a sin to Cut another sentence into,
Send it on, and we'll begin to
Boil it down.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

Another Daring Wager.

There is an "anti-Spiritualism" society, of which the notorious Hagaman, who writes "Prof." before his name, is secretary. He really is society, officers and all. In this case it is not the dog that wags the tail, nor exactly the tail that wags the dog, but there is nothing but a wagging tail. The "Prof." makes a point in his lectures to offer $1,000 if he cannot reproduce any and all phenomena of any medium. This is like clinching an argument with a bet, a weak and unsatisfactory method. It is a catchy thing and attracts the vulgar. It is fine bluff, and will pass until he is called to make good. Now this "Prof." has not probably two cents to lay down, and would retreat at the suggestion that his $1,000 must first be deposited in a bank, to be drawn by any medium he fails to duplicate. If he will do this, then he will be worth attention, but until he does, his talk is simply braggadocio. He knows he cannot duplicate the truly spiritual manifestations, and will never be caught in binding himself to fulfill his arrogant pledge.

"The Majesty of Calmness, or Individual Problems and Possibilities." By Wm. George Jordan. Another valuable little work. Price 20 cents.

"Buddhism and Its Christian Critics." By Dr. Paul Carus. An excellent study of Buddhism; compact yet comprehensive. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, $1.25.

WHENCE AND WHITHER?

An Inquiry Into the Nature of the Soul, Its Origin and Destiny.

BY DR. PAUL CARUS.

This little book treats of the central problems of all religion; the nature of the ego; the origin, development, and destiny of the human personality; spiritual heredity; the dissolution of the body and the preservation of the soul; the nature of human immortality; mankind's ideals; the rational basis of ethics, etc., all from the standpoint of modern psychology and biology. 188 pages. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

"Dr. Carus answers the question: "Is Life Worth Living?" very fully and satisfactorily. The whole is a comprehensive and helpful treatise."—Journal of Education, Boston.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

The Grandeur of Truth

A Lecture Delivered by J. L. Merritt, Los Angeles, Cal.

Truth is that which is; error is that which is not. Truth is real; error is a misconception of truth. Truth is eternal; error falls by the wayside. Truth is an illuminating radiance; error is an alluring false light. Truth becomes more resplendent with usage; error after usage, is discarded. Truth is the Rock of Ages; error is the shifting quicksand. Truth is God; error is evil. Truth in the end, sits triumphant; error at last, lies prone in defeat. Truth is always worthy of recognition; error should be shunned. Truth is benevolent; error is malevolent. Truth is loyalty; error is treachery. Truth is comeliness, symmetry, beauty, grace; error is the antithesis to each. Truth is love, faith, hope, charity; error is loveless, faithless, hopeless, uncharitable. Truth is of such inestimable value that life on the earth plane is too brief to spend any portion of it in pursuit of any other acquisition; error is so derogatory to human happiness that this brief span of eistence is too long to spend in its pursuit.

All truth is sacred and totally incapable of being discriminated against in its various applications except in individual results; error is not sacred and its only worth is, by contrast, to awaken the mind to a due appreciation of the purity of truth.

Fact never is a full synonym of truth, for while fact may be true, yet it is the mere perception of truth but shorn of the lustre which the latter adds to the former. In fact, fact may be error, to which truth never descends. Truth is the pure, sparkling, scintillating gem; fact, if true, is but the gem in the rough. Truth stands out the beautiful statue perfect in delineation, in symmetry and in feature; fact is gross material.

Many facts are valuable; some are valueless; all facts are not true. A lie—which is but a short, crisp name for willful error is the antithesis of truth. The lie is the outcome of human selfishness, and for the time is meant to, and does supplant truth, but in the end the lie perishes and truth triumphs. Unlike truth, the lie has no great fountain head from which it is drawn but exists only in the evil mind conceiving it. As truth by reflex action leaves its indelible impress upon the soul, so, too, does the lie, but the effect is different. We can use truth until it assumes its place in our thoughts, and thus a habit for truth becomes fixed. Likewise, we can conceive and use the lie until it becomes the paramount issue before the mind—and the lying habit becomes permanent.

"We call them habits, all those little things
That trouble life and work;
And yet, we might make habits of our faiths and truths;
Our loves and hopes; and of our joys,
But we forget."

Truth when properly used never grows stale; for no matter how often it may be applied, new aspects of truth are constantly presenting themselves for recognition. Truth has the characteristic of perpetuating youthful vigor. We see the old truth in new attire—in a new light.

The universe was built on truth. Error and lie had no part, neither in its conception nor in its formation. Error in all its details came in with human thought and has no existence except upon the reflecting surface of the curtains of the mind. Its effects remain, and will remain to some extent, throughout all eternity; for, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Truth is eternal and cannot die; for if it should, God and the universe of Justice, Spirit and Matter would alike perish and nothing remain but space and eternity; the two latter not being existences but conditions of being.

The greatest practical problem that can possibly affect human existence is the attainment of the full perception of our true relationship to the Infinite, to the laws and conditions of our being here and hereafter, and to our relationship to our fellow man. When we grasp the full significance of this problem of the ages then we shall know that

"Truth is within ourselves; it takes no rise
From outward things whate'er you may believe,
There is an inmost center in us all,
Where truth abides in fullness, and to know,
Rather consists in opening out a way
Whence the imprisoned splendor may escape,
Than in effecting entry for a light
Supposed to be without.
Watch narrowly the demonstration of a truth, its birth,
And you trace back the influence to its spring
And source within us, where broods a radiance vast,
To be elicited ray by ray as chance shall favor."

The solution of this problem and its assimilation to the needs of humanity was the mission of Jesus; but strange to relate, the organizations, excepting a few—taking name from his titular appendage—have lost sight of His central idea and instead have substituted a mere incident and hold up the cross as a fetisch for mankind to look upon in order that they may be saved from the effect of sins committed by themselves—and by others.

Spiritualism, though old as the race, came to the denizens of earth near the middle of the nineteenth century with renewed vigor after a long vacation, if you please, to emphasize the truth of the compound proposition before stated.

Do I hear you say that the doctrine inculcated in this proposition is impossible of human attainment? No doubt it is by the mass of those now living, but certainly you recognize that the plane now occupied by humanity has been reached after untold centuries of evolution hastened by the sacrifices and far-reaching endeavors of the Christs, the sages and the martyrs. HE WHO GIVES MOST, RECEIVES MOST; OR, THE CAPACITY FOR RECEIVING IS INCREASED IN PROPORTION TO THE DESIRE TO GIVE. THIS IS A LAW NATURAL AND INHERENT IN OUR VERY BEING, BUT TOO OFTEN CLOGGED BY SELFISHNESS.

Do we not owe to posterity the richest heritage it is in our power to bequeath them? Or have we as a race become so strongly attached, through the commercial spirit of the age, to material aggrandizement and accumulation that sacrifice of personal enjoyment is too dear to surrender for our own, and for posterity's betterment? While recognizing that the upward trend of mankind is naturally slow, can it not be strengthened and hastened by an all-along-the-line movement toward the goal of truth?

Individually, Spiritualists, do you not perceive the line of your duty to humanity and thereby to your cause by seeking to fully understand, to live and to perpetuate the grandest lesson ever brought for the contemplation of mankind?

Pray glance at what we please to term "our boasted civilization," and note the departure from the inculcated lesson contained in the proposition which merits our full consideration.

Is not our civilization barbarous? For what do people strive? For position, pelf, power and riches, prompted by innate pride and vanity and reached by means of legalized murder, oppression and robbery!

A very eloquent pulpit orator of revolutionized Methodism, in this city not long ago referring to two multi-millionaires, asserted that God had raised them up to dispense blessings upon the widows and orphans! Shades of John and Charles Wesley!

"Upon what has this our Caesar fed that he should" so pervert truth! when the truth is, that God has raised up the widows and orphans to dispense, through a system of vicious laws, blessings upon those rich tribute-takers!

Another divine (?) —a fat parasite, for he produces nothing but glittering generalities and weak, vapid milk and water strictures upon sin—in speaking of the incessant warfare which obtains among carnivorous animals used it as a lesson for the poor portion of his congregation, that thus, in Infinite wisdom, are some men permitted to accumulate great wealth at the expense of others on the principle that the big fish are made to eat up the little ones!

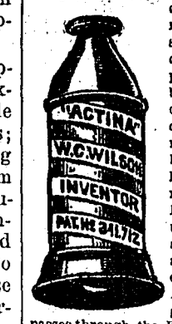
Rather than hear Spiritualistic speakers give vent to such damnable twaddle in the name of Truth, I would infinitely prefer that the cause, which I love, should go down to deserved and eternal death while hoping that its place might be supplied by a religion that would battle for human rights and for the suppression of human wrongs.

But this civilization! Think of war, slavery, oppression, rapine, plunder. Human passion as it exists in many forms; the slum and its indispensable comcomitants, the public dance-halls and brothels; the bureaus existing ostensibly for supplying young girls with honorable positions, but really to sell them to keepers of dens of ill-fame; great corporate institutions (bodies without souls) and smaller firms, employing women on scanty salaries, and when asked for increase, cite them to a quiet life of shame! Do not assert that many of these conditions exist because of demand for them, for that only intensifies the horror.

And then the passion of temper—or rather, distemper. So near to the skin of the human being is wrapped the growl of the beast of the jungle that in a moment, men and women seemingly peaceful, on slight provocation becomes raging, fighting and frequently murderous fiends to say nothing of the "counting out of so many ounces of blood for so many ounces of treasure"—the cold, deliberate murder.

In view of all this—a mere epitome of human crime, both legal and illegal—should not Spiritualism make greater efforts to present the truth which Jesus sought to bring humanity, for which He suffered death and from which the great mass of His pretended followers have turned away because unpopular and because its practice involves personal sacrifice?

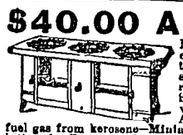
Inter-communion between the two life-planes is a truth, magnificent in its proportions, and of great importance, but is this the all of Spiritualism? Not for one moment would I detract from the importance of this phase, but bear in mind that spirit communion is only instrumental in bringing to our recognition terrestrial, the brighter aspect of truth as viewed from the higher standpoint of those celestials.



In the language of another let me say, "Man has not yet arriven, he is only a promise." When the being we call man shall solve, practice and instill into the minds of the succeeding generation the three-fold problem taught by Jesus, then he will become really human; then will he become refined; then will he become spiritual; and then will he have arriven to take his rightful place as—Man.

Meantime, Spiritualism faces its golden opportunity. The cause will not stand still, but will either advance by taking its position to teach humanity to rise to the summit of human accomplishment or go backward by a lack of the spirit of progression.

DEAFNESS CURED



By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. 1-929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1143, Detroit, Mich.

$40.00 A WEEK.

Reliable man or woman each county as manager to exhibit, take orders, appoint agents for Harrison Valveless Oil-Gas Stoves. Wonderful invention—beats others—Automatically generates fuel gas from kerosene—Miniature gas works—Absolutely safe—Enormous demand—Splendid for summer cooking—Delight customers—Clean, clean, safe fuel. Gasoline is dangerous. Catalogue Free. Write today. World Mfg. Co., 5087 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, O.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

771

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

HYPNOTISM.

ITS DANGER AS A THERAPEUTIC AGENT.

A Retraction of Opposing Statements Made to One of the Question at Issue in the Great Psychological Crime.

I am constrained, as a result of later and more far-reaching evidence, to retract a certain verdict that I hastily rendered concerning what, at the time, I elected to designate "an alchemistical transmutation of disease, and which appeared in the columns of The Progressive Thinker in my review of The Great Psychological Crime some time ago. Therein I gave the results of my personal research and consequent deductions. I feel the unfairness of not meting out in words of unmistakable clearness the apology due from me, when in later days, with broader concepts and clearer light, I find myself in error.

From the materialistic Esculapius who believes the realm of cause and effect is confined within the domain of the physical plane I expect naught but calumny and positive denials should he be interrogated upon the deductions that follow.

To hand on to you in the manner and form that it has reached me a conception that is by no means new I will conform as closely as my clumsy words will permit to the subject matter in hand.

I shall ask those who do me the honor to praise my literary screed to accept for the moment as a working hypothesis the doctrine of the pre-existence of the ego.

Diseases may, for simple analysis, be regarded as having their origin in two sources, namely, external and internal. Abrasions, bruises, cuts, fractures and contagious maladies may be classed as external. Scrofula, cancer, consumption, dyspepsia, and physical deformities at birth, may, in a wide sense, be catalogued as inherent—as soul qualities working themselves from within out. Such physical diseases and distortions are the outward evidences of moral, and therefore essentially mental, depravity and inharmony. The gross physical body is the photo or likeness of (superphysical) spiritual causes. The ego is the thinking principle that functions through at least two bodies more rarified in constitution than the gross physical vehicle, and each body is respectively correlated to the plane from which it derives its technical name. Again, each of these vestures of the ego interpenetrates the others below it in the same manner that ether interpenetrates air. The ego radiates through his subtle bodies harmonious or inharmonious vibrations. These vibrations use as their avenue of epression in the physical body the channel that offers the least resistance. This channel is the nervous system with its numerous ganglion, plexuses and nerve fibres acting as mediums of transmission, for what we will call, for want of a better term, animal magnetism, which constantly circulates in and through the human body. This magnetism is poured into the earth's atmosphere from the sun, and is taken up and specialized by each individual, every man as it were having a keynote—a vibratory rate—that is peculiar to himself. This specialized magnetism is in rapport with the brain and with the corresponding higher vehicles of consciousness. These more subtle vehicles are exact replicas of the physical body. If through the agency of "suggestive therapeutics"—a term that is a flagrant attempt to hide the word hypnotism—a disease disappears, it is altogether probable, if the malady is one of those we have called inherent, that it is driven back into a higher vehicle. The dynamic intensity of the will-power that is used in the effort to cure the disease will determine the place of its lodgment, in the higher vehicles. A disease may be driven into the mind-body, in which event melancholia, dimentia, suicidal tendency, etc., are the noticeable accompaniments. The expression of this vibratory inharmony (disease) will again reappear in the gross physical body at a future time in this incarnation or some other one, unless its downward or outward progress is impeded by additional counter-currents of either the alto or auto-suggestionist.

The great agnostic, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, whose mellifluous words still ring in my ears, though he made no pretense to occult knowledge, tells us that "perfect peace makes perfect form," and we who have given even the most cursory attention to the question know that living in harmony with nature builds for us soul-vestures whose emanations are incalculably delightful, to contact.

Disease is often the precipitation of evil that existed on higher levels, and it is far better to allow it to work itself out, and to use such physical plane means as are at our disposal for its cure, than to forcibly check it and throw it back into the subtler bodies.

Mental healing can be useful and devoid of danger when it is induced by pouring pure thoughts and lofty aspirations down through the subtler vestures, which will act as transmitters to the physical. Pure thought shows itself in healthful physical form.

Students of occultism know something of the different forms of Yoga as taught in the "one-pointed" philosophy of the great Patanjala. They will remember, too, one particular phase of it known as Hatha Yoga. All that the Charcot school of hypnotists which supports the neurosis theory—all that the Nancy school, with Liebault and others at its head, which supports the suggestive hypothesis, and all that the disciples of Anton Mesmer have gleaned in their researches—in fact all that is as yet known by men of science is focused in this one form of Yoga. Truly Hatha Yoga is the triune unity of suggestive hypnosis, mesmerism and neurotic hypnotism. So, when I tell you that the modern practitioner of suggestion is only brushing the surface of a knowledge of which our oriental brother is a post-grauduate, I only reiterate a truth.

Concentration upon different organs of the human body, after repeated effort, will usually put the organ in rapport with the consciousness of the man. He can accentuate its action—can retard or stop it entirely at will, in instances of a high degree of proficiency. Singular as this may seem he can again bring under the control of his will the functioning of the stomach, heart, lungs, etc. The automatic activity of these organs is known as the sympathetic system, and in the course of evolution these vital processes have passed under its control. Again bringing the control of these organs under the dominance of the mind is a backward step, not a progression. Deep-rooted injury (the reversal of the action of intestinal processes, for instance,) very often self-wrought by the ignorant though earnest student can thus be induced, a cure for which may be unattainable.

Through a slight knowledge of the physiological arrangement of the eye in relation to the brain it is possible for the man with a trained will to reverse the visual power so as to be enabled to see the base of his own brain. The same set of nerves that carries an impression to the mind through the brain can be so stimulated as to carry an impression from behind to the retina and thus picture thereon the object that lies anterior thereto, to be again by reflex action carried back to the brain, thus carrying the brain itself to the view of the mind. Let the telephone transmitter represent the retina. An excitation of the reverse side thereof will carry the vibration in an inverse direction, and you will then have a rough comprehension of my meaning. Other methods of achieving the same results than by auto or alto-hypnosis are known to a few physicians, the modus operandi being regarded as furthering the advent of optical disorders. Therefore, for the time at least, it is not discussed publicly.

A semblance of death, covering a period of three or four months is sometimes indulged in by persons who have succeeded in getting the whole sympathetic system under their control. So complete is the delusion that experts have diagnosed these cases as the "visitation of the king of terrors."

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

The Western Christian Advocate does not hold a very high opinion of Dr. Funk's "Widow's Mite." It says:

"He has written and compiled the book, but not for the purpose of advocating Spiritualistic phenomena, or with the aim of declaring his belief in their validity or importance, but rather with the aim of urging others to investigate, with the purpose of declaring his conviction that there is behind these various phenomena a valid somewhat, a residuum of actual fact, a positive substratum of actuality, which deserves the wisest and most thorough and painstaking exploitation. He also urges as one of his aims the securement to the Society for Psychical Research the needed means for further exploration into the mystical and unknown realms, at whose doors they have for years been knocking. He avows his belief that there is within reach of man in these varied and inexplicable phenomena "a colossal new force, or rather a world of new forces," which need to be explored. The volume is a mixture of all sorts of data, some of which may be of worth, but many of which are absurd and trivial. We are, we confess, surprised at finding Dr. Funk attempting to classify certain Biblical incidents in the Old and New Testament as Spiritualistic phenomena, although he declares that he has found in years of investigation "much deception, trickery and fraud." But he avers his sincere belief that there is much in the realm of psychic phenomena in addition to these elements.

"And we opine that Dr. Funk takes entirely too much for granted in his book throughout, although he professes to occupy a purely judicial attitude. Nevertheless he has furnished a volume which will stimulate research and quicken curiosity on all lines of investigation which he has indicated."

Dr. Funk, in his attempt to appear of a judicial mind, and while a Spiritualist pose as one not convinced has not awakened the enthusiasm of his church brethren as he anticipated. He is regarded by them with more suspicion than he would have been had he been out-spoken and fully convinced. If he is in doubt, alter all his experience, and fears another interpretation may be placed on his "facts," how can he expect others to place a higher value on them? One must feel secure in his position, if he would have others join him.

The Advocate's opinion of Frederick W. H. Myers' massive volume, is more appreciative, in ratio of Mr. Myers' strength of expression of his belief. Yet in conclusion it says piteously:

"But we pity those who, by virtue of their environment, their mental constitution, or what not, are driven to ghost stories, telepathic theories, and mediumistic chatter and collusion in order to find satisfactory proof that the human soul lives after death, and that Jesus Christ rose from the tomb after the crucifixion."

Now in face of the fact that for nearly 2,000 years the Christian churches have been trying to prove this very thing of man's continuance after death, and that Christ rose from the tomb, and a hundred thousand preachers are exercising their cunning and ingenuity to prove the same, and yet there is doubt, and three-fourths of mankind are faithless skeptics, proves that there is need of something more. Had there not been, had the churches furnished the evidence, there would have been no resort to "ghost stories and mediumistic chatter."

A Church Saloon.

Bishop Potter of New York, has put into practice a pet scheme. He thinks the saloon cannot be absorbed and hence reform lies in the direction of its improvement. With the assistance of his church the Bishop has established a "model saloon," the "Sunnyside Tavern," where pure food and pure liquors are served, and a social center created for its patrons. The Bishop thinks it is the "bad liquors" dispensed by saloons that makes them bad, and will have only the pure article for sale at his "model." Decidedly funny is this wise talk about "pure liquors." It means that they are free from all forein ingredients except alcohol, and hence harmless when alcohol is the one poison which makes them objectionable. It is the alcohol and not other "impurities" which leads to the drink habit and makes the confirmed drunkard.

There is a return in the circle of the churches to the position they occupied a generation ago. The preacher then was greeted in his calls by a decanter of brandy or rum, and not until the temperance question had been agitated, and it was seen that it could be confused with the Sunday laws and thus secure desired legislation, was temperance made a church issue. Now it is found that the saloons are stronger than the church, and the church will exploiter itself by means of saloons, where pure liquor will be sold. We presume that the noble Bishop will call a prayer meeting, and pray God to bless the "pure liquor," and every barrel of whiskey will have a blessing "returned" over it before placed on tap!

This will open up a new line of business for the preachers—blessing beer kegs and whisky barrels, and holding prayer meetings and revivals in "Sunnyside Taverns." The pure liquor will intoxicate just the same as the bad. In fact the beer will be necessarily the same, and the whisky of the same manufacture. All the Bishop can promise is that it will not be doctored before dealt to his customers. With so much advertising the church saloons ought to do a large business, with profit sufficient to pay the parson's salary and secure the best of choirs. The people will be attracted, and thus while church members are made on one side, drunkards are made on the other. That will be the cost of it. It has been estimated that every heathen soul saved costs the missionary fund $6,000. In the saloon scheme the pay for church members is so many moderate drinkers and a ratio of drunkards.

It is an admission that prohibition is a dead failure, and moderate drinking not to be condemned.

RATIONALISM TRIUMPHANT!

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS FOR PROGRESSIVE AND LIBERAL THOUGHT.

Jubilee Year of Science and Reason!—Scientists Will Be Fully Justified at the World's Fair Congress, October 15-18, in Their Specific Work of Uprooting the Great, Delusive Superstition, Known as Christianity.

The world's fair at Chicago was made notable by a great parliament of all the religions of the world; let the world's fair at St. Louis be made glorious by an international congress of all scientific and advanced thought leaders. At the Chicago parliament, science and free-thought were not allowed the privilege of being represented, because the religious leaders thereof were not intellectually advanced enough to allow a free and full expression of what other scholarly people think and know. While it is falsely claimed by Christians that there is no conflict between science and religion and that science is its handmaid, yet the leaders of the Chicago parliament were not inclined to let science help them out. At the international congress to be held at St. Louis next October, the managers have decided to be more magnanimous and they will provide a free platform for a qualified representative of any religion, to express his views on the broad ground that Truth has nothing to fear from Superstition. There is a conflict between science and religious beliefs; but none between science and reason.

Advanced thinkers have always been stigmatized by the Christian church, which has falsely claimed to have a special "divine" revelation," and they have been called infidels to truth; but we now know, positively, that said thinkers have only been opposing a lot of childish stories based upon superstition and therefore have had a legitimate place as necessary iconoclasts in the natural order of intellectual evolution. This fact will be well established at the St. Louis congress. The iconoclastic work of advanced thinkers has been so well done that the victory over Christian superstition is complete; and it can be truthfully said that the Christian church cannot furnish any valid evidence that it ever received a special commission to preach the only gospel which sets forth the only way of salvation for all mankind. Theological deductions from the writings of men, who did not know the real nature of things, are merely human assumptions, not divine revelation. The time has now come to make the fact of the great Christian delusion known to all the world. Science and reason have forced the defenders of Christianity to modify dogma after dogma until little else remains but the "golden rule," which had its existence long before Christianity was born. The international congress of advanced thinkers at St. Louis in October will be a grand time of jubilee for science and reason; let every advanced thinker wake up to do his duty, financially and otherwise, so that science and reason can be fully defended and advanced thinkers be morally justified. From the view of Christianity, unbelief in its theological dogmas is counted as a sin; from that of science, such unbelief is a virtue, because Christian dogmas are not true. Qualified persons of any sect, who wish to speak at the congress should write to Dr. Max Hempel, 2857 N. Grand avenue., St. Louis, Mo., giving names, and subjects which they wish to discuss. Publishers of periodicals, Christian, Jew, or Freethought, are requested to send copies to Dr. Hempel to put on file at the congress. Superstition's extremnity is Free-thought's opportunity. Reason is alive though Christian theology is dead. It will be shown at the congress what great strides science and reason have made and a new departure will be taken.

The following are some of the subjects that will be discussed:

The Gospel of Evolution in the Place of Christianity.

The Future of the Religions.

The Present Status of Darwinism.

Christian Science, Theosophy, and similar Religious Departures, viewed in the light of exact cience.

The "Non-religious" Education of the Young.

Sociology; the Youngest of the Sciences.

The Law of Evolution in Social Life.

The Knowledge of Nature in its Relation to Progress in Civilization.

The International Organization of the Adherents of Progressive Thought.

The Legal and Social Position of Woman.

Ideal Law and Positive Law.

The Propagation of Philosophy as a TWENTY FOUR AUG 26 Popular Study.

The Position of the Republic with Regard to the Church.

Natural Ethics as a Substitute for Ecclesiastical Dogma.

The Separation of State and Church.

The Taxation of Church Property.

Governing Board of the Alliance:

Wm. Peterson, president; Wm. Roehling, vice-president; Fritz Gerecke, recording secretary; Fritz Schleicher, treasurer; Dr. Max Hempel, 1. corresponding secretary; Franz Hillig, 2, corresponding secretary; Franz Starz, financial secretary.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

In the World Celestial.

By DR. T. A. BLAND.

"It is inexpressibly delightful."—Hon. C. A. Windle.

"It lifts the reader into enchanting realms."—Medical Gleanor.

"It is intensely interesting."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

"Three things make this book remarkable. Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.

"It will give us courage to pass through the deep shadows of death to the sun-lit clime of the World Celestial."—Rev. H. W. Thomas.

"Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great Spiritual book, but a most beautiful romance of two worlds."—Banner of Light.

It is Printed in elegant style and bound in cloth and gold. Price $1.00.

The Mystic Thesaurus,

Or Initiation in the Theoretical and Practical secrets of Astral Truth and Occult Art. By WILLIS F. WHITEHEAD, Editor Agrippa's "Natural Magic." The book treats of The Symbol of the Cross, Spiritual Gifts, Inspirational Conception, Initiative Exposition, The Astral Brotherhood, Message of the Brotherhood, The Magic Mirror, and Celestial Companionship. It is a good text book for students of the Mystic, and will be sent postpaid, in paper, for $1.00.

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Oscar A. Edgerly has open dates for the coming lecture season. He would like to hear from societies desiring to employ a trance speaker. Address during August, Grand Ledge, Mich. Home address, 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Stoddard Gray a New York medium who has been giving "spirit seances for the past twenty years, died shortly after one of her entertainments the other evening, and a newspaper makes it conspicuous in a headline that "mediumship" killed her. The death of a minister in his pulpit, or a devotee at his prayers, or on a Sunday-school excursion is not attributed to the character of the act in which he is at the time engaged. If it were, religious worship could be regarded as involving great moral hazard.

N. S. Stevens, astrologist of Gardena, Cal., predicts the re-election of President Roosevelt. He wants all mediums to prophesy in reference to his defeat or success.

The quarter of a dollar promised the daughter of Chas. Thessman, 1148 Thirteenth street, by the spirits, was deposited by them in a glass shoe, (an ornament.).

The "Spirit Fruit Cult," of which Jacob Beilhart of Lisbon, O., is the predominating spirit, has added another to its victims. Mrs. Dora B. Greenlee, once a bright, intelligent woman, left the detention hospital last night for Elgin. She is insane through the teachings of the self-styled Messiah. Mrs. Greenlee was committed to the asylum by Judge R. S. W. Wheatley. The audacity of the members of the sect was carried even into the courtroom, where several of them appeared. They wished to interfere with her removal to the asylum and demanded possession of her 10-year-old daughter, that they might send her to the farm of "Holy Jacob" at Lisbon. Indignant relatives of the woman blocked this action, however, and gained possession of the child. Then the mother was taken away to the asylum from which she may never return.

Mrs. J. A. Anderson writes from Montana: "It is truly a pleasure to renew my subscription to your valuable paper. It is a most welcome messenger, bringing to our far-off western home a feast of good things weekly. I will also send an order for several books beside my premium book. It is remarkable how much reading matter you send out for so little money."

Frank Horowitz, tailor, of 2635 Third avenue, and his wife, Charlotte, who are charged by Mrs. Hannah Richter with grand larceny in inducing her to give them $1,100 for their influence with certain "spirits," were held for trial in $1,500 bail each in the Harlem Police Court to-day. In previous hearings Mrs. Richter testified that she sent the money by her daughters, Clara and Sallie. The daughters were in court to-day, and corroborated their mother's statement.—New York Globe.

The seventh annual convention of the State Spiritualists Association of Minnesota, will be held in First Unitarian Church, corner Eighth street and Mary Place, September 7, 8, 9 and 10, 1904, Minneapolis, Minn. The following talent from a distance will take part in making this, the seventh annual convention, a success: Rev. Moses Hull, president of the Morris Pratt Institute, Whitewater, Wis., one who in days gone by was always welcome in our city, and his hosts of friends will gladly welcome him to the convention; Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of Haydensville, Mass., makes her first visit to the west. She comes to the convention highly recommended and endorsed by the secular and Spiritualist press of the country where she has visited as one of the grandest inspirational speakers in our ranks. Miss Harlow will stay with us for the months of September and October; Mrs. J. A. Murtha comes to Minneapolis for the first time and is a message medium of rare power. Though a stranger to Minnesota audiences, her genial personality and good mediumship will combine to win for her a place in the hearts of the people; Will J. Erwood is president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualists Association and is well and favorably known to the people of Minnesota and his many friends will welcome him to the convention. The music will be under the direction of Prof. Paul Zumbach and the following artists will take part: Mrs. Paul Zumbach, soprano; Mrs. W. Thurston, alto; Mr. Paul Zumbach, tenor; Mr. W. L. Winter, bass; Miss Carrie Zumbach, accompanist. See railroad agents at your home stations as to rates of one and one-third fares on certificate plan. Admission, personal members, $1; season tickets, 75 cents; evening meeting, 25 cents; Sunday afternoon, 15 cents. Lunch will be served in the dining-room at the close of the morning and afternoon sessions, by the Ladies' Auxiliary.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

J. A. Conant writes: "In The Progressive Thinker of Aug. 13, Prof. J. S. Loveland criticises L. P. Smith's statement, that Benjamin Franklin advised Thomas Paine not to publish his Age of Reason, and alleges that the statement 'is a lie, made up out of whole cloth.' To prove said allegations, he says that Benjamin Franklin died in 1780, about four years before the Age of Reason was written. History informs us that Benjamin Franklin was embassador from the United States to the court of France from 1779 to 1783, and that he died April 17, 1790. Whether Franklin did, or did not advise Paine not to publish his Age of Reason, does not concern the writer, but history shows that J. S. Loveland's attempted proof that the statement of L. P. Smith 'is a lie' is not sustained." Mr. Loveland makes the proper correction on the fourth page of last week's paper.

Chas. A. Zipp writes from Baltimore, Md.: "Mr. H. Fred Gauss was a frequent visitor at Dr. de Gournay's home. The latter stated to him that before his impending death he desired to make a statement concerning his belief. On a later visit of Mr. Gauss and close to approaching death, Mr. de Gournay said, quite unsolicited: 'Brother Gauss, I haven't given you the statement I spoke to you of. I shall now make it. Hand me now pencil and paper so that the world may know that I die as a Spiritualist.' Herewith find appended the death-bed statement, as follows: 'Feeling my end approaching, but in the full enjoyment of my faculties, I wish to declare, all statements to the contrary, that may be made, that I die as a Spiritualist; no, not die, but pass into a brighter and more glorious life, to immortality where I shall meet my loved ones and all the great minds that have worked for the good of mankind. Paul F. de Gournay, Baltimore, July 23, 1904.'"

Spooks, ghosts and hobgoblins have secured possession of the home of Mrs. Kate Barbelle, 5633 Sawyer avenue, Chicago Lawn, and so active have their spirits become that, with her three children, she has left the place and taken rooms in a neighboring hotel. The strange noises and odd antics of unseen visitors from the spirit world have been heard and noticed by other women of the neighborhood, who, disbelieving the weird stories told them by Mrs. Barbelle, had gone to remain with her to quiet her fears. With her three children Mrs. Barbelle occupies the house, a two-story frame, and until last Sunday was not disturbed in any manner, but since then some unearthly power seems to control the place. She told a Sun reporter this morning that pictures on the wall moved, the furniture rose several inches from the floor and unseen beings walked about the rooms. Two large perfume bottles would fall over untouched. A toy piano in a bedroom up stairs would start to play of its own accord, and when no one was near it. These and a dozen others as mysterious she related. What should cause the mysterious disturbances she did not try to explain. Her husband, a waiter, is in New York. The family has occupied the building for two years.—Chicago Sun.

Hans Mettke writes from Atlantic City, N. J.: "The two papers have been found, as the clerk had put them into the wrong box and I was so glad to see them again, because The Progressive Thinker has become so valuable to me, that I miss it very much when it does not come to me regularly. I am so glad to see the letters from Brother Carlyle Petersilea again in your paper, which are so very interesting and instructive to me, especially the last one, in which he speaks of the different sins (fourteen I counted) and gives the advice to forget all evil and overcome evil with good, by sending out vibrations for goodness, kindness and purity. The Eclectic Magazine is also so fine and grand and I enjoyed to read about the fine medium, Mr. Bailey, from Australia; also about the healing power of music. I am glad to have this opportunity to send you my appreciation of and best wishes for The Progressive Thinker."

The dailies are making much effort to encourage papal superstition by telling of the "mysterious appearance" of "Christ on the Cross" on the back of a man who was struck by lightning while in Morristown, N. J. He gave his name as Abbot Parker, of Monument square, Charlestown, Mass. He was taken to a Romanist hospital, and, says the Pittsburg Gazette: "As the picture became plainer the news was spread about the hospital and the sisters flocked to the bedside of Parker to see what they called a miracle, and signed themselves with the sign of the cross, and began to say their beads. About 6:30 p. m., he was able to sit up in bed and by the aid of mirrors and candles he saw the picture on his back. As soon as he recognized what it was, for no one had told him, he fell back on the pillow crying, and as soon as he could be made to talk, declared he could not understand. Parker said that he was an Episcopalian, but in his early life had been brought up by his mother as a Roman Catholic. His father is a Congregationalist. He said he had neglected his church duties of late, but will not do so in the future. He is 27 years old." That the above is a cheap fraud, there is not the least doubt. He was unconscious for a long time in charge of the nuns before the "mysterious appearance" was visible.—The Citizen, Boston, Mass.

At the Chesterfield camp of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists, Eugene V. Debs did not attract as many people as expected. The attendance was about 3,500. The absence of a labor organization, was also disappointing to the association, but many members of labor unions attended as individuals. Mr. Debs spoke for nearly two hours and discussed economic, political and social conditions that relate to labor. He denounced the financial methods and the philanthropy of Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller. Of trusts Mr. Debs declared that if all the trusts should be crushed at once they would arise and be quite as powerful again within ten or twenty years because of the present competitive system in commerce.—News, Indianapolis, Ind.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Felix writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: "I must say I most heartily endorse your course in relation to fraudulent mediums, and hope you will continue the discussion of the same until such a sentiment is aroused that no phenomenal medium will dare hold a public seance unless under strict test conditions, a thing that is seldom or never done now. Mr. B. F. Underwood stated in a recent issue that, of the many materializing circles he had attended, 'in no cases were the conditions such as to exclude the possibility of fraud.' That is my experience exactly. The conditions were never fraud-proof, though they may have seemed so to children or half-wits, but certainly not to a man who was awake. I think if an audience insist on the mosquito net test, or other conditions that preclude the possibility of fraud, then most certainly their minds would be free from doubt and suspicion; 'best thoughts' and good conditions would prevail, and the results ought to be correspondingly good. If a medium tries to dodge the issue on such a flimsy pretence, as unkind conditions, etc., most certainly they are crooked."

Danville, a city of several thousand population over in Vermilion county, produces some wonderful things—and from there occasionally comes some wonderful stories. Danville is the home of Speaker Cannon. The Peoria Star vouches for the absolute truthfulness of the story following: "Mrs. Sarah Kimbrough is the mother of Judge E. Kimbrough, of Danville, Ill. Her husband, the father of the judge, has been dead for many years. Last Thursday Mrs. Kimbrough said to her son at the breakfast table, addressing him by the pet name: 'Bud, do you know that your father was here last night?' The judge told her she had been dreaming, but she insisted that she had seen her husband and had conversation with him, and this feeling was so strong that the judge did not attempt to controvert it. A few hours later, as the old lady sat in her chair in the window, she was stricken with apoplexy and died within a few hours."

Geo. A. Letford writes from Asheville, N. C.: "I just finished my camp season at Vicksburg, Mich., and am again at my work as salesman in the South for H. E. Bucklen & Co., of Chicago. I followed each day giving messages after Oscar Edgerly's lecture, for one week at the Grand Ledge Camp, and the messages were all recognized. At Vicksburg Camp I followed Thomas Grimshaw's lectures, and the audiences seemed well pleased. I find the South very far behind in the knowledge of Spiritualism. From now until June 15, 1905, I will meet with very few who believe in the great truth. I do not get discouraged, but do the best I can whenever an opportunity opens up to me. I give them either a talk or messages from their loved ones, and in this way am opening up their eyes, and in time they will be calling to know more of our great truth, and soon a good missionary can begin to organize some good societies down south."

A cable dispatch to the dailies shows that the papal method of putting padlocks on those of whom it is afraid, is not new. The daily press editors know what it means. Here is the dispatch: "Budapest, Hungary, July 30.—History records criminal proceedings, reporting the fixing of padlocks to a human being's mouth. In Hungary this was the ecclesiastical punishment for uttering blasphemy. The same crime was punished in Spain by tearing out the culprit's tongue, in France by branding the tongue, in Holland by piercing the tongue with nails. In an ancient grave a padlocked human face was discovered recently. And a few days ago it was put on exhibition in the national museum of this city. The staples are driven through the bony parts of the face at both sides of the mouth. Antiquarians say the lock is dated from the end of the 16th century."

C. L. Eskelsen writes: "I have investigated Christian Science for some time, and find it cannot stand the sunlight of truth. You can read on page 7, Science and Health: 'Nothing is matter, or matter is nothing.' This is false, because spirit is forever dependent on matter for manifestation here. It would be just as true to say that spirit is nothing; matter is all. Both assertions are wrong; one is dependent on the other. An intelligent old lady like Mary Baker G. Eddy surely knows this to be true, and knowing this, and still holding up a falsehood, is what Jesus calls blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, a sin that never forgiven in this world or in the next."

Mrs. Hooker McEvoy writes from Oakland, Cal.: "There is a People's Nonsectarian Mission started in this part of the vineyard. It was born the morning of the fourth day of July, and is fast becoming a healthy child of vigorous force. A meeting of a different order is held every night. Ex-Senator Dague gave a very earnest and intellectual socialistic lecture here July 30, from the mission platform. Mr. Rumford gives Analogical Science life readings and lectures two nights in a week. We have a New Thought meeting every Wednesday night, a harmonious interblending of ideas and opinions. Dr. Sivortha is now favoring us with his storehouse of wisdom. He is well known in the east. The object of the mission is a cooperative effort to do something practical along the line of helping the people to know themselves, and have a free home-like reading and lecture room, and if possible to draw in those who are going the downward road, and who will be only too glad to meet with such an opportunity as the mission offers, but as yet I have had so little help I have not yet been able to do only for those in the upper grade of life, who are either sick, obsessed, self-hypnotized or bearing the burden of prenatal conditions."

Mrs. Clara Wagner, of Defiance, Ohio, writes: "I am glad to let the readers of The Progressive Thinker hear from us. I am always pleased to read about other associations that are getting along all right. We have services every Sunday evening at 7:30. Last Sunday the subject was 'Sunflowers,' and the angel guides told us to decorate the hall with them. When I entered the hall in the evening my heart was filled with joy, for the members had brought flowers, and they made the hall look beautiful. At first we had singing, speaking and reciting of poetry by the little folks, which was very much enjoyed. After the lecture I gave a few tests. We held a picnic a few weeks ago for the little folks, which seemed to please them very much. We have lyceum teachings on Thursday evening. We get the Progressive Lyceum, and think it is a great help."

Elliot Wyman writes from East Westmoreland, Vt.: "I hope to see a continuance of Petersilea's communications; also a renewal of the several others of note—Washington, Lincoln, McKinley, Benton, Beecher and others, imparting much desirable knowledge for benefit to mortals still in earth life. While admitting with sorrow the sadness caused by frauds and fakes, don't lose sight of the true and genuine mediums. Is there not a better term to give to so-called materializations, since it is not material but a chemically produced form or apparition to represent the desired spirit friends. Why not call it by proper term and not materialization? It seems evident that no material substance can be produced as flesh, blood and bones except by natural and slow process, and it is not possible for spirits that have left the material substance can be produced as flesh, blood the earth plane, to the spiritual to take on the material again; then let there be a proper and appropriate term given and no longer call it materialization."

Mrs. L. LeSieur writes: "The Band of Harmony benefit social held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich, Oak Park, Thursday, Aug. 18, was a very pleasant affair. Mrs. Mary Hill was the speaker for the afternoon meeting; Mrs. S. J. Ashton in the evening. We had the pleasure of meeting several Oak Park people who seemed much interested. The next meeting will be Thursday, Sept. 1, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Mullins, 2157 W. Monroe street, between 42d and 43d avenues; reached by Lake street or Madison street cars."

The Banner of Light, Sept. 28, 1861, to March 22, 1862, will be sent gratis to anyone by express, C. O. D. (Regular files.) Address C. H. Mathews, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

F. H. Parker writes from Santa Cruz, Cal.: "Chas J. Anderson (boy orator) is having crowded houses at the Native Son's Hall each Sunday at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m., on new thought and psychic subjects. His psychometric readings prove of universal satisfaction. Mrs. Katie HeussmannHarveston is to build and make her home here, holding meetings each Sunday at Unity Spiritualists' Hall."

Rev. C. W. Burrows writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The Central Spiritual Union of this city (charter No. 43) begins its ninth year on the first of September. The large number of mediums identified with its work still continue. Our Sunday and Wednesday meetings fill our lovely little temple. A very pleasant surprise was the coming of the Rev. Seeley Warner, assistant pastor of the Rising Sun Mission of your city. Brother Warner and I were old chums thirty years ago in the Episcopal (St. James) church of this city. You will hear from him, for he is a thinker."

W. J. Howes writes: "We have closed our hall after five months of very successful work, more especially so when we consider that my dear wife and I opened our meetings in the heart of an orthodox neighborhood where the teachings of true Spiritualism were almost unknown to them, and it has certainly done our hearts good, and made us know that our labors have not been in vain, by the many visits we have received at our home, to wish us a pleasant journey and a safe return from our vacation, as they are very anxious for us to continue our meetings, which we shall do about the end of September."

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes: "The ninth Band of Harmony social will be held at my home, 2157 W. Monroe street, Thursday, September 1, afternoon and evening. Coffee will be served as usual at six o'clock. The book entitled 'The Aristocracy of Health,' will be raffled. Afternoon session will convene at 3; evening, at 8 o'clock. All are welcome."

A number of ladies from Chicago met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Brookins, in Wheaton, Ill., on Wednesday of last week. Friends were present from Wheaton, Aurora, Glen Ellyn and Austin. Old friends greeted each other and new friendships were formed. Lunch tables were spread under the trees where the sunlight's flickering shadows played, and the breezes wafted perfume from the gorgeous beds of flowers near by. A more perfect day could not have been given for the occasion. Several mediums were present, and after the repast the spirit friends, ever eager to make themselves known to waiting mortals when the opportunity is given them, came with words of inspiration and comfort, and many messages were given. Geo. H. Brooks, who has just returned from a trip to California, spoke most beautifully of what life means to the true Spiritualist. Others followed with appropriate and feeling little talks on the beauty, comfort and truth of our philosophy. Mrs. Brookins is secretary and her son is vice-president of the Wheaton Spiritualist Society.

Mrs. Josie K. Folsom has, on account of ill health, been compelled to cancel all camp engagements. She is struggling along doing her best to keep the work going in St. Louis. Mr. C. W. Stewart is still assisting in the public work and the audiences are increasing. Many World's Fair visitors dropping in at all the meetings, from various parts of the country. Mrs. Folsom gave independent writing last Sunday in full electric light, obtaining some twenty messages in four or five different colors. Her power in this phase is increasing all the time.

J. P. Pattison writes in reference to psychic or magnetic healing: "The Spiritualists as a very general rule, and the mediums as well as the laity, when they get sick send post haste for a medical doctor. Now I want to know why this is. Spiritualists, and mediums especially, are the easiest people in the world for a psychic healer to cure, and they certainly ought to be aware of that fact. I have cured people who have been given up to die by their doctor and family, and I have also cured people who have been told by several doctors that they were incurable. Now the truth is, I have never had one single case but what the doctors have utterly failed on before I got hold of it. On two different occasions I know my wife would have passed to the spirit world but for the work of Mr. Taylor, a friend of mine, who is a finely developed psychic healer. I think this is a question that should receive some attention for humanity's sake."

Psychologists are drifting away from the idea that there is such a thing as masculine and feminine mind. Mind is mind, whether belonging to a man or a woman. Mind grows like what it is called upon to perform, and adapt itself to its surroundings. Ruskin had read all of woman's past, historical, political, and domestic. He had studied the periods of England's greatest advancement under the reigns of Elizabeth, Ann, and Victoria, and knew their intellect for "sweet ordering, arrangement, and decision." He thought that the advice and direction of a good mother and a true wife has placed more men in the front rank of the world's heroes than all the cunning of diplomats, the subtlety of politicians, and the warfare of generals. Woman is entering the world's contests now, and mind, as expressed through woman, is therefore having new channels for its expression. —Chicago Tribune.

Secretary writes: "Church of Spirit, (301 Scaliler Building, 109 Randolph street). We beg to call attention to our services every Sunday morning at 11, also afternoon and evening at 2:30 and 7:30. Subject of address on Sunday, September 4, Origin of Modern Spiritualism, followed by psychometric readings, spirit messages, and mental telepathic demonstrations under blindfolded conditions, to everyone in attendance through William Fitch Ruffle, psychic, assisted by Mrs. Marie Jacobsen, Danish palmist and psychic. Mediums are cordially invited to assist. We have one of the coolest halls in the city, with plenty of air, electric lights, and comfortable theatre chairs. Wednesday circle and Friday class at 8 p. m. at residence, 3201 Indiana avenue."

Dr. J. H. Randall will lecture at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, Sunday evening, Sept. 4. His subect will be "Scientific Evidence of the Truth of Spirit Communion." Last Sunday, Mr. E. Dierkess gave a very helpful address.

Dr. Freedman, the Australian healer, has returned to Chicago, after a visit to various camps and the St. Louis Fair, and is now located at Hotel Florence, corner of Ogden avenue and West Adams street, Chicago.

The First German Spiritualist Society of Chicago will hold its second picnic of the season on September 4, at Reisig's Grove. Good test mediums will be present. To reach the grove, take the 12th street car, and transfer to the 52nd street or LaGrange electric cars, which pass directly by the grove.

Daniel W. Hull is lecturing and healing at Olympia, Wash., from which place he will answer calls to lecture anywhere desired, or attend funerals within 24 hours of that place. Address him as above.

After a premonition extending over a period of several years, which caused him to believe he would lose his life by falling from some high place, Orvine McLain, a painter living at 210 North Seventeenth street, was seriously injured Saturday by falling from a church steeple at Madison, S. D. He sustained a fractured skull, three broken ribs, a fractured leg and other injuries which it is thought will prove fatal. Acting on the above premonition, McLain had refused for the past two years to work on any high ladder during the month of August. Last week he wrote a friend that he believed some accident was about to happen him. Omaha (Neb.) Daily News.

Emily E. Philp writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union begins its regular meetings next Sunday, Sept. 4. Conference 2:30 p. m. Lecture 7:30. Rev. Harry J. Moore will be with us for the month of September."

Mrs. H. L. Bigelow writes from San Jose, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Society of San Jose is holding meetings at Eagle Hall every Sunday at 11 a. m. Conference meeting—subject for last and present month, 'Mediumship.' In the evening, Mrs. M. R. Stone of Santa Barbara, occupies the first half of the evening in a very acceptable manner. She is alive to all the reform movements of the day, showing that all Spiritualists should learn how to live here and now. The latter part of the evening is spent in listening to Sister ElizabethHolmes give spirit messages, which she does in an unobtrusive, lady-like way. On last Sunday six delegates were elected to attend the state convention at Oakland. We hope to have a successful meeting. It is pleasant to meet friends and co-workers at least once a year."

Mary A. Speight writes: "The Ladies' Aid Society of the Englewood Spiritual Union will hold a ten cent test circle and Social Wednesday evening, Sept. 7, at the home of Mrs. Cochonour, 759 W. 63rd Place. A good programme has been prepared and good mediums will give messages from the loved ones on the other side. A cordial welcome is extended to all. Come out and help the cause along."

Full of Good Things.

To the Editor:—Your last issue of The Progressive Thinker, Aug. 27, is an extremely interesting number, and is full of good things; one of them is the letter from Wm. Rausmayer, of Columbus, O. I have been a Spiritualist for nearly thirty years, and have been an active worker part of the time as an officer in different societies. I subscribe most heartily to all Mr. Rausmayer has said.

He has indicated the only way to secure satisfactory results. It has been my strong conviction for years that the practice of mediumship will never reach the high field of usefulness to which it belongs until it withdraws from publicity and is divested of commercialism. Will mediumship grow then? Yes, like the flower that is cultivated and properly cared for, and our spirit friends will be only too glad to assist in developing and nourishing such flowers. We will then have a Spiritualism worthy of our most exalted conception and conscientious work. May we not hasten the day when we can receive advice, instruction and inspiration from our higher friends, without having its value measured by our standard of commercial value?

Chicago, Ill. P. C. NORTON.

THE DAY.

Nature with outspreading wings of light,
Has drawn its veil away,
And left its glistening gems in sight
To hallow the new born day.

And the flowers with the breath of heaven,
As angels bless the morn
For the glorious day that is given
To us on earth is born.

The sun sheds its golden rays o'er the earth
As a halo over all,
Spreading its light with a crown of mirth,
Defies the shadows to fall.

But to life there is nothing eternal,
For all must pass away;
As death has proclaimed the removal,
Night succeeds the day,

As the moon in its cold, bright glitter,
Looks calmly in the night,
With its heavenly host of treasure,
As a silent watch in sight.

The bright gentle stars in the heavens
Come as a promise rare
To show us that other worlds are given
As onward they disappear.

But as the heavenly torches of night
Sink silently away,
Stretch forth thy helping hand of light
To souls of another day.

—Frances E. Woods.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price 25 cents.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

Mark Chester. A story by Carlyle Petersilea. Price, paper, 40 cents.

Mary Ann Carew. A spiritual story by Carlyle Petersilea. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 40 cents.

Mediumship and Its Laws. A most valuable book by Hudson Tuttle. Price, 35 cents.

Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development. An every-day useful instructor in Psychic Science. By W. H. Bach. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Mental Suggestion. By Dr. J. Ochorowicz. Price, $2.

Mollie Fancher, or the Brooklyn Enigma. Giving an account of the most marvelous case of spirit control on record. By Judge Abram H. Dailey. Price, $1.50.

Mysteries of the Seance, or Tricks and Traps of Bogus Mediums. By a life-long Spiritualist. Being an expose of how fraudulent mediums perform their tricks. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Myth of the Great Deluge. A complete and overwhelming refutation of the Bible story of the Deluge. A very interesting pamphlet. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.

Nature Cure. This is an excellent book for suffering humanity. It simply tells how to prevent and cure the ills of the flesh in a natural way. By Drs. M. E. and Rosa C. Conger. Price, cloth, fancy $2; common $1.50.

Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake, or Circumstantial Evidence. By Hon. A. B. Richmond. Cloth bound. Price, 75 cents.

New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. By Watson Heston. Price, cloth, $1.50; board cover, $1.

No Beginning. By W. H. Maple. A common sense demonstration of the non-existence of a first cause, thereby identifying God with nature. Price, 75 cents.

Obsession. How evil spirits influence mortals, and how to guard against the same. A very necessary and interesting study for sensitives. By M. Faraday. 23 pages. Price 10 cents.

Oceanides. A story of spirit life, by Carlyle Petersilea. Price, paper cover only, 50 cents.

Occult Forces of Sex. Three pamphlets embodied in one volume. Of great importance to the race. By Lois Waisbrooker, an advanced social reformer. Price 50 cents.

Old and New Psychology. Twenty-four distinct inspirational lectures, delivered in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia, and other prominent cities. By W. J. Colville. Price $1.

Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin. Price, cloth, gilt top, 75 cts.

Origin, Development and Destiny of Man. A scientific and philosophical treatise upon a subject of which man never tires—that of himself. By Thos. P. Fletcher. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Our Bible, Who Wrote It, and a Few Thoughts on Other Bibles. By Moses Hull. Price, $1.

Out of the Depths Into the Light. This little book will be read with intense interest by thousands. By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. Price 25 cents.

Palmistry. By Comte de Saint Germain, A. B., L. L. M. Practical palmistry, or hand reading simplified. Price $1.

Perfect Motherhood, or Mabel Raymond's Resolve. Dedicated to woman everywhere, that children may cease to be born accursed. By Lois Waisbrooker. Price, cloth, $1.

Philip Carlisle. By Carlyle Petersilea. A romance, and full of spiritual thought. Price, $1.

Philosophy of Phenomena. Physical and Metaphysical. Matter phenomena and life phenomena. Objective and subjective phenomena. Hyperbole metaphysical. By Geo. M. Ramsey, M. D. Price, cloth $1.

Philosophy of Spiritual intercourse. Contains an account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn. By A. J. Davis. Price, cloth, $1; postage 8 cents.

Poems From the Inner Life. These poems are full of soul inspiration—are real poetic gems; sweet with the highest thought. By Lizzie Doten. Price $1.

Poems of Progress. By Lizzie Doten. Price, $1.

Poems of the Life Beyond and Within. From the poetic inspirations of many centuries and of different peoples. Spiritual poetry translated from many tongues. By Giles B. Stebbins. Price $1.

Political Works of Thomas Paine. Containing the three volumes—"Common Sense," "The Crisis" and "Rights of Man"—three volumes in one. Just the book for patriotic Americans. Price, cloth $1.

Practical Methods to Insure Success. A valuable little work, full of practical instruction in matters pertaining to the physical, mental and spiritual health. Worth many times its cost. Price 10 cents.

Primary Factors of Organic Evolution. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D., Member of the U. S. National Academy of Science, Professor of Zoology in the University of Pennsylvania. Price, cloth, $2.

Prophets of Israel. Comprises in the main popular sketches from Old Testament History. By Carl H. Cornill, Doctor of Theology and Professor of Old Testament History. Price 25 cents.

Psychic Experiences. By Ella M. Dole. Price, 50 cents.

Psychic Light. Continuity of Law and Life. By Maud Lord Drake. This book is from the pen of an acknowledged leader in psychic philosophy and a successful demonstrator of its phenomena, and one of the oldest advocates of New Thought and Higher Education. Cloth bound. Price, $1.50.

Psychography. Marvelous manifestations of Psychic Power, given through the mediumship of Fred P. Evans. Profusely illustrated. Price, $2, postpaid.

Psychometry. Its Science and Law of Unfoldment. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, 50 cents.

Pulpit, Pew and Cradle. Second paragraph in book, last two lines reads: "Christianity is one thing for grown men. It is quite another thing for women and children. By Helen H. Gardner. Price 10 cents.

Radiant Energy and Its Analysis. Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics. By Prof. Edgar L. Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory. Containing numerous illustrations and diagrams. Price $1.75.

Realization. A Course of Lessons Upon the Inner Nature of the Self. By Loraine Follett. Price, 50 cents.

Reincarnation. By Walker and Wood. Price, leatherette, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents;

Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe, and the Law of Control. New edition, enlarged and revised and greatly improved. By M. Faraday. Price 15 cents.

Religious and Theological works of Thomas Paine. Here is a book that should be in the library of every Spiritualist and Freethinker in the land. Price, cloth, $1.

Religion. A profound philosophical treatise on this world-wide subject of contention. It is a good book for students preparing for the spiritual rostrum. By E. D. Babbitt. Price, cloth $1; paper, 50c; postage, 10 cents.

Religion of Science. Treats of Principles, Faith and Doctrines, Immortality, Mythology and Religion, Christ and the Christians, Catholicity of the Religious Spirit. By Dr. Paul Carus. Price, muslin, 50 cts.

Rending the Vail. Given through the mediumship of W. W. Aber. Price, $1.50; postage, 25 cents.

Right Generation, the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. By Dr. M. E. Conger. Price, board cover, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

Right Living. This book gives an admirable course of study in ethics, and supplies a long-felt want of an ethical text-book adapted to the comprehension of children. By Susan H. Wixon. Price, cloth, $1.

Rights of Man. Being an answer to Mr. Burke's attack upon the French Revolution. By Thomas Paine. Post 8vo; 279 pages. Price, paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Schopenhauer's Essays. Translated by T. B. Saunders. Price 75 cts.

Sixth and Seventh Book of Moses. Translated from the ancient Hebrew. Price, $1.

Science of Spirit Return. By one of the scientific minds of The Progressive Thinker corps of contributors. Rich with profound thought. By Charles Dawbarn. Price 10 cents.

Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennobling of Humanity. By E. D Babbitt, M. D. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Some Glimpses of Occultism Ancient and Modern. A series of lectures by C. W. Leadbeater. Price, $1.50.

Spirit Echoes. Poems and Short sketches. By Mrs. Mattie E. Hull. An attractive little volume, neatly bound in cloth. Price 75 cents.

Spiritism. Mrs. Piper's and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's theories in regard to it. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey, ex-president of the Medico-Legal Society of New York. Price 25 cents.

Spiritualism of Nature. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 15 cents.

Standing up for Jesus, or what the editor of the Freethinker's Magazine thinks of him on general principles. Profound, biblical, sarcastic. Price 4 cents; 25 copies for 50 cents.

Spiritual Harp. A collection of vocal music for the choir, congregation and social circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, musical editor. Price $1.25. Postage 14 cents.

Spiritual Songster. A collection of thirty-eight inspirational songs adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

J. B. Scott: Q. A friend says she desires to believe in Spiritualism, but cannot because one who passed from this life, before departing, faithfully promised to return and communicate, and has not done so. Is she right in her conclusions?

A. If you do not furnish the conditions for communication with a spirit friend, how can you expect that friend to communicate? You go to a distant city, and before you leave you promise when you reach your destination to at once telegraph your home people. When you arrive you find the lines down, or the operator absent and fail to keep your promise. Would it be reasonable for your friends to conclude you had not reached the city, or perished by the way? It is not often that such promises of departing friends can be kept. The difficulties are too great, and the spirit in despair ceases to make the effort.

Judge O. G. Richards: Q. What will be the condition of persons in spirit life who have lost their minds by disease, or age?

A. The spirit for a time retains the influences of earth-life, but ultimately these are thrown off and the spirit is free from any and every fetter and bond of its past physical life.

This question in another form, has been recently answered more fully. It appears to be recurrent in the minds of thinkers, and none has been more frequently presented for answer. The failing of the mind by the weakening of the body by disease or age, has been taken among the strongest arguments against its independent existence. Spiritualism, however, gives, a clear and satisfactory answer.

Curtis Weskin: Q. Where can I find the poem 'There Is No Death?" and who is the author?

A. As I cannot refer this correspondent to any collection containing this splendid poetical gem, which sparkles with the brilliant light of Spiritualism, I reproduce it. Its author is J. L. McCreery.

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

The granite rocks disorganize,
And feed the hungry moss they bear;
The forest leaves drink daily life,
From out the viewless air.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
And flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait throuh wintry hours,
The coming of the May.

Where'er he sees a smile too bright,
Or heart too pure for taint and vice,
He bears it to that world of light,
To dwell in Paradise.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved things away;
And then we call them 'dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate,
He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers;
Transplanted into bliss, they now
Adorn immortal bowers.

Born into that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them the same
Except their sin and pain.

The bird-like voice, whose joyous tones,
Made glad these scenes of sin and strife,
Sings now an everlasting song
Around the tree of life.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead.

Dr. Parker: Q. A young mother died here recently, leaving two young children. Everyone is saying, "What a pity! It is too bad!" Can it be too bad if it be God's will, as the preacher said it was?

A. The expression of the sense of the people shows how much more just and merciful they are than is the idea of God they entertain. The conflict is between the superior views of to-day, and the ideas inherited from a benighted past. Yes, it is "too bad," and a "pity," that such bereavements come, and little consolation is gained by the common assurance that they are for the best, and God's will. It is vain to attempt to submit to the decrees of such a God, and superstition only can hold the revolting soul in thrall.

Sometimes the loss comes by accident, unavoidable, yet a great proportion are the result of ignorance, and might be avoided, if our knowledge was increased. Spiritualism offers greatest consolation by its assurance of a continuation of life on a higher plane, yet in instances, like this where a mother is taken from her children, whose care is her greatest happiness, not only are they deprived of her ministrations, but she of the privilege, to which nothing in her new life can offer a substitute. If this life were all, such loss would be irretrievable and consolation a mockery. But if this life is only a brief moment to the future of the spirit, then are we assured that these afflictions and losses, the apparent injustice and cruelty, will pass like a dream, and be overshadowed by the transcendent perfection of the future life which knows no parting.

High School Student, Alameda, Cal.: Q. What is the condition of space as to light and heat? What is the energy of the sun?

A. The interstellar space is filled with a form of exceedingly attenuated matter termed ether, which offers little, if any resistance to the revolving orbs. Although vibrations of light and heat are transmitted through it constantly from every star in its immensity, it retains neither. Its temperature is near or if not absolute zero, or that point where matter loses all motion and comes to rest. This absolute zero has been fixed at 523 degrees Fahr. That the heat of the sun passes through space without raising it above this temperature, is proven by the fact that under the vertical sun of the tropics, ice on the mountains only three miles above the surface, remains unmelted, and cirrus clouds formed of snow crystals, float in the air at about the same height.

The enveloping atmosphere by retaining the heat received, protects the earth by preventing radiation from the cold of space. The penetration of the lower, warmer strata by the cold upper currents accounts for the sudden changes to extreme cold, and blizzard winds.

The vibrations of heat thrown off by the sun pass to the infinite coast-lines of space, unless they meet obstruction, such as the surface of the planets present. Against these they beat, and the blanketing atmosphere retains the heat thus evolved.

If an observer could be transported out into free space, his eyes would see the stars as points of light, and the sun as a brilliant globe, but there would be no radiation and reflection, softening and diffusing the rays. The stars would be seen projected against a black wall of absolute darkness. The sun's heat would strike the face but the supreme cold would not allow of its being felt.

A great deal is said by scientific writers of the "energy of the sun," and in a loose and misleading manner. To say heat and light are caused by this energy, is simply verbiage without meaning. Light and heat are forms of energy of themselves. The sun apparently is the great dynamo of the solar system, evolving light, heat, electricity, magnetism, actinic and unknown forces, and sending them out in ceaseless floods without change or diminution. What turns the dynamo, the force or energy behind it all, terrific, sublime, incomprehensible, no one has ever interpreted, no one has approached, and before the problem the egotism of science is humbled into silence.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, from Springfield, Mo., Aug. 12, 1904, Mrs. Tamar S. Wright, widow of Wm. A. Wright. She was born March 3, 1837. In the midst of the long and severe suffering of our good Sister Wright, from a cancerous affection, the spiritual philosophy which had been her staff and her comfort so long while in health, still cheered and sustained her. It was her special request that I should officiate at her funeral service, as I had also done at the funeral of her husband.

JAMES MADISON ALLEN.

Two in one month and two days. Brother Joe left us first on June 9, from the result of paralysis. He was only 37 years of age. How he suffered, God only knows. He left our hearts so desolate.

Mother's grief over her darling boy was too great for her weakened condition and age, 77 years. On July 11, she, too, left us. She was only confined to her bed six days. She said she had lived long enough and must go; she wanted to join those gone on before.

The ladies of the G. A. R. conducted the services at the grave. The pall-bearers were selected from her own family—her two sons, James and Theodore Reeder, of Columbus, Ohio; her two sons-in-law, W. C. Mann and Dell Brown, of Louisville; her two granddaughters, Mrs. Grace McKee of Columbus, and Mrs. Mary Kircher, of Louisville, Ky. She is survived by three sons, James, Theodore and John Reeder of Columbus, Ohio, and two daughters, Mrs. Mary Mann, 829 Eighth street, Louisville, Ky., and Mrs. Anna Brown. We thank the many friends for their tokens of sympathy, and the ladies of the church who sang, "Whatever starry path they took, their spirits will retrace their way and visit those they left behind." Perhaps their thoughts, like golden shafts of light, will penetrate the gloomy chambers of their hearts and fill them with celestial hope. They are not dead; their souls were born in spirit land.

MRS. MARY C. MANN.

Louisville, Ky.

John F. Rich passed to spirit life, at his home, at Summertown, Tenn., Aug. 21, 1904. He was born in Exeter, Me., May 8, 1839. He joined the I. O. O. F. Lodge at the age of 21; moved to Wisconsin in 1854, and to this vicinity in 1876. Funeral services were held at his home, conducted by the I. O. O. F. and Rebekah lodges of this places, with appropriate biographical remarks by neighbor J. J. Crane. He has been a considerate student of Modern Spiritualism since its beginning. He was too appreciative of his fellow-man to consider any punishment, here or hereafter, just that did more than to reform and lead to a better life. He seldom failed to drop a progressive thought that would set some one to thinking. He leaves a widow, two sons and one daughter. MRS. MARY RICH.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In 'Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

AS THE WISCONSIN PHILOSOPHER SEES IT.

The Spirit World a Shadow of This.

Were there a God that created the universe, the latter would necessarily be his shadow, idea, reflection, or representation of himself. A picture from the hand of the artist, is his idea, shadow. Insinuate to him that the picture is the real, and himself the shadow and how quickly he would resent it.

The spirit world is a creation, idea, shadow, of the earth world. "First the natural, then the spiritual," is a demonstrated truth. Everywhere about us, above and beneath us, is observed the coarse before the fine, the former producing the latter. In man the coarse savage produces the fine civilized. In spirit land, man's spirit body is coarse at first, and gets finer by age. Of the earth earthy, it is the mineral before the loam. In vegetation the bitter evolves the sweet. By a similar law was the spirit world created by the earth world. Without the latter there could be no former; also without first a human physical body there could be no human spirit body.

As no life is born of the spirit, there being no births in Summerland, it is absolutely certain that there never was an inhabitant there until it first existed here. No intelligent spirit denies this.

There is physical and intellectual beauty. The beautiful architecture, scenery, fruits, flowers, etc., of spirit land are all physical. There is great intellectual beauty there. It had its origin here.

The first crude locomotive engine, not the subsequent improvements, was the real. The present ocean palace is the shadow of the little steam vessel that Robert Fulton launched upon the Hudson. It might be argued that mundane inventors have spirit help, which increases the success. This would be true. It would also be true that the spirit help was sprung into being in this so-called lower world. In astronomy there is no up nor down.

The mortal can thwart the spirit with greater power than the spirit can the mortal. No spirit can control a medium when the medium knows himself, and says no.

The situation but enhances the charm and wisdom of the intercommunication. The open door is mediumship. The door swings to the mortal side. The mortal, absolutely, holds the key. The fate of all past Spiritualist movements has been decided by the mortal world. It will be so this time.

We are now in an age when no uneducated movement can win. The Universalists, Unitarians, and Methodists all understood it. Even the Catholics are that sharp. Neither does any one institution trust the others to educate it. The Chicago University has got clear of Baptist control, but it still knows no more about Spiritualism, mediumship, intercommunication, obsession, spirit life, spirit progress, and upper world conditions generally, and their extra important relations to this world's conditions than a last year's bird's nest. The Chicago University, liberal as it is, would lead Spiritualism to its everlasting death. It would be landed so low that ten thousand Spiritualist journals couldn't save it.

It is argued that we need to care for the worn-out mediums first. I have noticed that since the Spiritualist college started, money for the Mediums' Relief Fund has been more generous. Nothing commands confidence like education. A Spiritualist, now passed to spirit life, told me he had arranged to leave about ten thousand dollars to a Christian institution. He couldn't trust the intelligence of Spiritualists to wisely handle it.

Giving is habit. The more people give the more they will give. It is easier to get money for the Mediums' Relief Fund and the college together, than for either separately. The life of the college means the life of the medium.

The enlightened are always more generous than the unenlightened. The reason present-day capitalists are more generous towards education is because they are more enlightened than the capitalists of the past.

I wish there was a Spiritualist college in every state in the Union. If there were, no two would be alike, any more than there are two local meetings alike. Those who don't like the style of the present college, if they would be wise; if they won't encourage it, they would not hinder.

Spiritualism has as many different views as a kaleidoscope. No single view can please all. No one president of any Spiritualist college can perfect it. Such a thing was never yet done. One thing is certain; if the college is never started it will never be.

It is certain that Spiritualism can't be left to the guidance of the upper world. "Like attracts like." Unenlightened mediums attract unenlightened controls. There are exceptions. It is where the mediumship is unconscious. This is about one time in fifty, and the unconscious is growing less and less. Thus, leaving it to the spirits, would be leaving it to the "blind leading the blind."

There are millions of money with the Spiritualists. Those who oppose the Spiritualist college are driving all the money away from Spiritualism to Christianity. When mediums understand mediumship, which they can sufficiently understand only through a Spiritualist college, there will then be no more need for Mediums' Relief Funds than there is now for ministers and lawyers' relief funds. Intelligent mediumship will be self-sustaining. In the meantime the gap should surely be filled.

Modern Spiritualism is not yet out of danger. I speak only for myself, as I see it.

Religious civilization, at least, destroys all that it builds. Now and then, as a rare exception, there is a Spiritualist so unfortunate as to do the same. Scientific civilization will be permanent. Pure, wise, exalted, honest, acceptable to all classes, delightfully expressed Spiritualism, is scientific. The editor of The Progressive Thinker saw this fifteen years ago.

The story that the spirit caused the earth and man to be; that the spirit made everything, which some would-be wise spirits flatter themselves to sing to us, is so false, judged by every known fact, that just the very opposite is the truth. E. W. BALDWIN.

Madison, Wis.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

Echoes," by S. W. Tucker, has found its way into many homes, and its beautiful songs have cheered many sorrowing hearts, which they are sure to do when heard and sung. They should be heard in every home in the land. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

On Thursday morning, August 18, a rumor spread quickly over the grounds that Chairman Barrett was about to say good-bye to his large army of friends and seek the precincts of his home in Maine, where he has been nominated Democratic candidate for state senator of the old Pine Tree State.

Following the afternoon lecture, the period of his resignation, Mrs. R. S. Lillie came forward and expressed in eloquent words the regret that was felt over our loss. She called attention to the splendid work Mr. Barrett had been doing for years along various lines for the cause of Spiritualism, and assured him that best wishes for his success in the new field of labor would go with him. Cheers were frequent during her remarks, and Mr. Barrett responded in earnest tone, saying he should carry with him the memory of the strong friendships left behind, and that they would serve as a stimulus for the efforts he would make to secure better legislation, if it should become his privilege so to do. It was a significant fact that when he was a candidate at Needham, for the Massachusetts legislature two years ago, he received the votes of the five orthodox ministers of that wide-awake town.

Mr. John T. Lillie of California, who is a favorite of everybody, was appointed to fill the vacant chair, an honor he very modestly accepted, and illustrated his willingness to serve by the story of a sailor who, landing in a strange town found his way into the open door where a revival was in progress, just in time to hear the leader who was elucidating the parable of the sheep and the goats, shouting in ringing tones, who would be the goat? The sailor, impressed with the importance of the question, and seeing the unresponsive attitude of the audience, pushed to the front and said, "Why, parson, rather than not have this thing go on, I'll be the goat!" And so Mr. Lillie was heartily applauded, and duly inaugurated, and makes a magnificent chairman. A large delegation attended Mr. Barrett to the station in the early evening for the last grasp of his friendly hand to wish him God speed.

Thursday afternoon Mr. Willard J. Hull discoursed on Economic Equality. He said, "The God idea in any race is commensurate with the moral and intellectual development of its people, and has come as the cry, the eternal quest and reach for liberty and freedom."

Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, of Philadelphia; Mrs. M. Ripley, of Toronto, Can., also H. H. Hunt, of Conneaut, Ohio., are old time visitors at the camp.

Mrs. Flora Cabbell, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Sadie Billings, of Boston, are spending the season at the Leolyn.

Mrs. Charlotte Gilman of New York, made her second appearance on Friday, with Human Nature for ther theme. She said in part, "You cannot be unnatural because you are living in nature. Cancers and tumors and microbes are just as natural as pussy cats. Human nature is a part of God's world. We have an idea that badness is natural and goodness an extra thing that costs a great deal. Our failures are traceable to a beginning, to where the savage built into the mind of the race his crude misconception. Physical heredity, human and social heredity are what counts. Foreigners accept our institutions and become Americans. Humanity includes every lower love, and our first duty is to serve God in the human race. The world isn't within a thousand miles of where it ought to be. We are not even a healthy set of animals.

After the lecture Mr. and Mrs. Woodmansee, of LaPorte, Ind., who are visiting here for the first time were invited to the platform to receive congratulations, it being their golden wedding anniversary. They were convinced of the truths of Spiritualism forty-eight years ago, and their happy faces reflected the joy and peace that it has brought them. Kind thoughts and good wishes were freely expressed and the occasion was a memorable one.

Friday night witnessed the annual exhibition and entertainment of the children, and right royally they did their part. Fancy dances constituted most of the program, and flower costumes with the gorgeous stage decorations made a perfect fairyland. The house was packed and the performance elecited rounds of well merited applause.

Saturday morning Mr. Wright talked on Human Evolution, and said the strongest brain had been the evolution of progress. In reason and in philosophy the master brain rules the concept of thought. Genius is personal and comes through the spiritual nature of the universe. There is no democracy in talent. It comes out of the material universe of things. Its power is back of all institutions, and rests in the domain of the cause world, and the cause world is expressing largely through the intuitions of the human race, and institutions grow slowly and by gradual steps. Mr. Wright pointed to numerous characters in history dominated by benevolent purpose who had expended money in trying to make better conditions for the lower classes, and failed to lift them to higher planes of living because growth must be gradual and development comes from within. Each must see and decide what the brain needs. Industry, care and good living will make you fit for the empire of the skies.

Saturday afternoon Mrs. Gilman spoke in the place of Mr. Hull as he had filled her appointment on Tuesday. She did not take any special subject, but wished to make application of some of the things previously talked about. She said: "I have been trying to show something of the general movement of the world, and how desirable it is to stir the reasonable ambition to do all the things that belong to it. We have contentment preached to us, but it is only reasonable when we cannot get out of an environment. There is always a desire in the human soul for something beyond, and we have made the mistake of planting our homes away off in another life. But we are getting to see that this world is the way to heaven, and we must find it through improved human living. The soul needs lifting all along the line. A western senator who gave his life and money in the interest of education was seriously censured by his wife for robbing his children. He said in defense, 'I would rather my children would grow up penniless in an educated community than to be rich and surrounded by blackguards.' Social evolution is slow. Political economy is a young science, just out of its shell, only a hundred years old. We read and accept it when we should question and use judgment. Follow the advice of St. Paul who said, 'Prove all things and hold fast that which is good.' Progress has become rapid. The printing press has made the world gallop and the speed has increased the last half century. The world is full of passionate yearning for better things, and nothing lives but what we do. A few years ago the country was full of Nationalist clubs, and they were a success in a way, but they died just as social reform clubs have died, because they did not know what to do.

On Sunday morning, Rev. Paul Tyner, pastor of the New Thought Church at Mt. Vernon, N. Y., appeared for the first time at the City of Light, and after congregational singing, was happily introduced by Chairman Lillie. Mr. Tyner said: "I am profoundly grateful to have the privilege of giving such thought as I may to the purpose to which Lily Dale is dedicated, and I feel I can best employ the moments endeavoring to get at a realization of the natural and the spiritual. We are beginning to understand the effort of all the past ages, to bring the spiritual into actual realization. Looking back we see in the struggle that we have been sadly misled, the attainment of our divine desire delayed. The ascetism of the east has been carried into the orthodox faith and thy have thought to realize the spiritual by separating it from the natural. We see the mistake in the wars and conflicts, the death in life that has walked among us. Walt Whitman said, 'All things that are natural are divine,' and the converse is equally true. The highest hopes of the race depend on coming into a realization of the spiritual through the natural, the soul manifesting through highly cultivated conditions of the natural. Emerson, walking the streets of Concord and being told the end of the world was near, replied, 'Well I shall get along very well without it!' The glory of this world comes only when we seek first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, confident that all things else without stint or limit will be added unto us."

The platform was occupied Sunday afternoon by Mr. Hull, who reviewed the great work that had been accomplished and complimented the burden-bearers of the City of Light for the unalloyed joy that inspires every clean-minded worker that comes here.

Monday afternoon a conference of the mediums was called by Chairman Lillie, which was largely attended and fraught with deep interest and profit for one and all.

On Tuesday afternoon Paul Tyner discoursed on Living Forever. Mr. Tyner avowed his full belief in the facts and phenomena of Spiritualism, as evidence of its truth had been received direct and personally. He said: "I do not remember the time when I did not see what was happening beyond the seas and over the mountains."

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Kate Alexander of Columbus, Ohio, gave a delightful talk on birds, their habits and peculiarities. Scarce one among the feathered songsters escaped her unique descriptions, such an immense flock passed under her vivid delineation. The exercises were prefaced by sweet bird songs rendered by a quartet of lyceum children.

The daily meetings at Forest Temple attract great numbers and are of inestimable value to the student who is interested in all phases of mental manifestations.

C. Fanny Allyn and Tillie Reynolds are the new speakers who will be with us next week. September 2 will be lyceum day. S. M. KINGSLEY.

How He Escaped.

Capt. J. A. Humphreys, a veteran of the civil war, Spiritualist and healer, lies in bed at his home, 1706 N. Alabama street, Indianapolis, Ind., suffering from a terrible shake-up and bruises received in a fearful wreck on the Vandalia railroad at Plainfield, Ind., August 8, a wreck remarkable in escapes from death.

For years Capt. Humphreys has been a mail clerk, and on Thursday evening before the wreck he attended a seance at Mrs. Jennings' on South East street, this city where Mr. Stofer (I did not find out whether this is the correct spelling of the name but it is the pronunciation) a medium, told him that he would be in a wreck soon but would not lose his life. The medium described the locality so exactly that Mr. Humphreys recognized it as being one of two places on the road.

Mail coaches took fire after the wreck and Mr. Humphreys found himself wedged in so tight that he could not move. An elevator on one side was burning and a high oil tank on the other side was in danger of exploding at any moment. Mr. H. realized his position and utter helplessness and he exclaimed: "Highhawk, (his guide) for God's sake get me out of this." The next he knew he was where he could make his escape but he was not given to know how it was done except that it was spirit power. Mr. Humphreys is jolly and philosophical and The Progressive Thinker and other Spiritualistic literature is on his table near his bed. MRS. A. BOWEN-COOPER.

Indianapolis, Ind.

WHY I LOVE THE LYCEUM.

I love the Lyceum because
It points to me in the way
To hold the hands of the angels
Each hour the live long day.

Kind, loving hearts are mingled there,
And helpful hands clasp mine;
A mutual thrill of rapture
About our efforts twine.

I dearly love the little folks,
Their voices make me glad—
So like an echo from that land,
Where hearts are never sad.

The helpful thoughts from stories read,
The mingled aged and youth,
Will lead in Mercy's path each one
To fields of sacred Truth.

And since I love the Lyceum
I wish to see it grow,
Until Spiritualism into
Each heart and home may go.

—Roy A. Tracy.

Hay-Fever and Asthma Cureat Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Astnma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to ith wonderful powers.

Rev. F. P. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering and had no return of the disease. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years' suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter., writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years suffering. Hundreds of others give similar testimony. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the medicine before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

Spirit Photography and Materialization.

When in the spring of 1863 I first saw a spirit photograph I was disposed to accept it as a new phase of spirit phenomena. The Herald of Progress announced it as such. But soon I detected what convinced me at the time that it was a fraud, and the editors, A. J. Davis and C. M. Plumb, kindly printed my exposure headed, "How the Pseudo-Spirit Photographs Are Produced." From that article I now quote a paragraph:

"Again, take the photograph of a lady with a spirit guitar on her lap. Here the fraud is palpable. A spirit guitar would be supposed to have a back-board as well as a belly-board. This picture represents only the latter. The sound-hole in the center being black is of course transparent on the plate and shows everything through it distinctly. Hence you see the fringe of the lady's shawl and the folds of drapery through the hole in the guitar, as if it had no back. Is it possible that the spirit in this case has attempted to convince skeptics of the existence of a spirit guitar with the back-board gone? Do the spirits play on broken instruments, which from the nature of the case, could make no music? If this guitar had had a back to it, we might have believed in its spiritual origin; as it is we must conclude that it is a sham."

But despite this exposure Editor Plumb still credited the fact of spirit photography through the medium Mumler, though little more was said editorially about it. Nor was it long before Mr. Plumb received by mail a real photograph of an old lady and another photograph of a man with an exact reproduction on the background of the picture of the old lady as a spirit. My theory was proved.

For many years thereafter I scouted spirit photography until at last I was compelled to believe in it. Dr. Theodore Hansman of this city, was such a skeptic in regard to spirit manifestations twenty years ago that he pitied me and others for being deluded by them. But on investigation he became convinced and is now not only a most enthusiastic Spiritualist, but he has been for several years a medium for spirit photography and has a great number of specimens, which he gladly exhibits and explains to visitors. But I am not aware that he ever takes pay for such work, though if he did it would be all right. No one who knows him well doubts his integrity.

And now I have two remarkable specimens of spirit photography. One is a picture of George Christy, the minstrel, in costume. It was presented to me by S. K. Hall, an aged Spiritualist, and on the back of it is written by him the following, dated, Washington, D. C., July 8, 1898.

"Sometime in the winter of 1895 the spirit control of Pierre Keeler, George Christy, wrote a brief note to Mr. Chapman, late clerk in the U. S. Geodetic Survey, responding to a question, 'Would he go with him to William Keeler and give him (Chapman) his photograph?' The note read in answer: 'Bring your slide here containing the plate and you will need no camera. I will give you my picture in costume as I was wont to appear on the stage?' Mr. Chapman did as directed, bringing Mrs. Chapman with him. He placed the sensitized plate in the slide and locked it with a screw. Mrs. C. and Keeler held the slide and in a moment or two the thing was pronounced 'done.' Mr. C. took the slide home and developed the plate in his own developing bath. The image came out so quick that he had to check it. Mrs. C. kindly loaned me this negative and I had copies printed, and I can certify to the likeness, for I knew George Christy well in Buffalo, N. Y., from 1841 to 1848."

Mr. Hall is still my near neighbor and I knew Mr. Chapman well, also his wife, now a widow residing in this city.

The other spirit photograph is that of Mary C. Levy, of this city, in bridal costume. She passed over several years ago. She was a medium and helped to develop Pierre Keeler more than twenty years ago. The photograph was produced through Dr. William Keeler of this city. The bride stands alone enveloped in a very thin gauze veil. The face is distinct and, though many years younger than when she passed over, the features are recognizable as hers. She never lost her fair complexion or youthful look. She holds a bunch of flowers, and the lower part of her bridal dress is gone, leaving an apparently torn skirt. Of course I cannot vouch for this spirit picture any further than that in it I recognize the likeness of Mrs. Levy as she looked when a bride. And it is altogether unlikely that she should have such a picture taken then. Dr. William Keeler's honesty and integrity cannot be doubted, any more than that of his brother, Pierre Keeler.

In regard to materialization, have I not said enough in the columns of The Progressive Thinker? I was skeptical until sixteen years ago when I first attended materializing circles. I have seen hundreds of spirits, and have as positive evidence of that phase of spirit manifestation as of any other. In The Progressive Thinker of January 9, May 21, and July 2, 1904 will be found all I desire to say on that subject.

WM. HENRY BURR.

Washington, D. C.

I have from the beginning, and I hope I shall to the end, pursue to the utmost of my judgment and abilities one steady line of conduct for the good of the great whole.—Washington.

We seldom realize it, but very frequently the reason we have no use for people is because they will not allow themselves to be used.—Puck.

In every creed man is the slave of God—woman is the slave of man and the sweet children are the slaves of all. —Ingersoll.

Self-conquest is the greatest of victories.—Plato.

It is the act of a bad man to deceive by falsehood.—Cicero.

A soul without reflection, like a pile without inhabitants, to ruin runs.—Young.

Every man has freedom to do all that he wills, provided that he infringes not the equal freedom of any other man.—Herbert Spencer.

Quarrels would not last long if the fault was only on one side.—Rochefoucauld.

There are truths which are not for all men nor for all times.—Voltaire.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked lives. Price, by mail, $1.

"Social Upbuilding, Including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

Read This List of PREMIUMS.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

1. The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, our leading Premium Book this year. Price 25 cents.
2. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Price 25 cents.
3. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Price 25 cents.
4. Seers of the Ages, by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 25 cents.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 40 cents each.

We have only ELEVEN Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any two of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.
Any three of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.
Any four of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.
Any five of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.
Any six of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.
Any seven of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.
Any eight of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.
Any nine of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.
Any ten of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Lastly, all of these ELEVEN Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.35, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

OUR ELEVEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.35.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
6.—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Transcribed by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.
11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

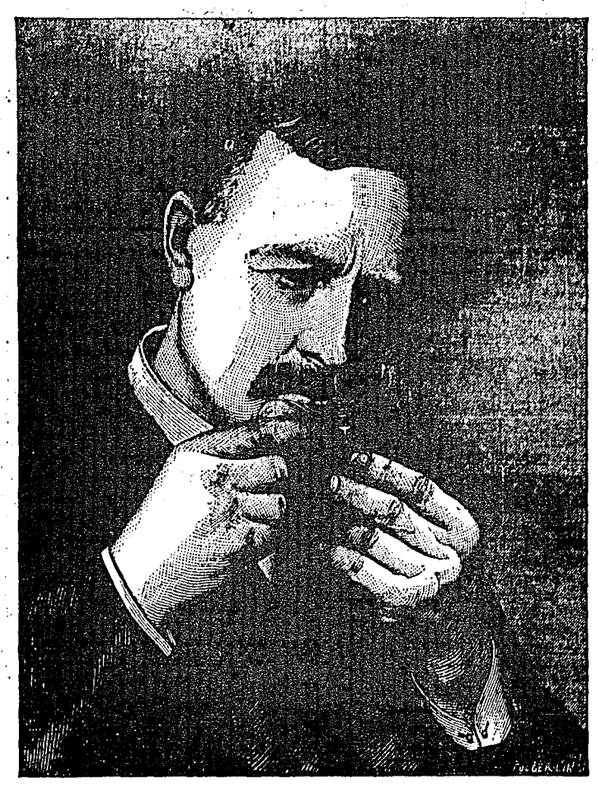
READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, caretully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Address all orders to



J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Illinois.

KEEP POSTED

In Current Spiritualistic and Occult News.

You can do it by reading each week The Progressive Thinker. The Philosophy and the Spiritualistic and Occult phenomena it contains each week, is the marvel of the age. No one can afford to be without the paper. Its price is within the reach of all.

Catarrh, Head Colds, Deafness.

WHY SUFFER WHEN LIQUID SPRAY WILL CURE YOU?

WE WILL MAIL IT ON TRIAL FREE.

Don't take medicine in the stomach to kill germs of disease in the head. LIQUID SPRAY immediately relieves and cures Catarrh, Head Colds, Hay Fever, Asthma, Buzzing in the head, Partial Deafness and La Grippe. You cannot cure Catarrh, Asthma and Hay Fever with the same remedy; don't be deceived. Each disease must be treated by the Specific that removes the cause of that disease. Our new Specifics act directly upon the cause, hence diseases disappear.

LIQUID SPRAY is the only common sense treatment of the world to-day. Others sometimes relieve but fail to cure. Our Medicator converts the fluid oil specific into the finest medicated vapor which penetrates the obscure air cells and tubes, even to the inner ear, and makes breathing easy, and heals the sore places by lining the inner surface with the antiseptic healing oils.

LIQUID SPRAY is absorbed by the mucous membrane and is carried to every cavity of the head by natural breathing, destroying the germs of disease in the head, throat and lungs. Thousands of old customers will be glad to test this new treatment. To prove that this is not idle talk, we will mail our Medicator and the proper specific, free, to any reader of this paper naming their ailment.

OUR SPECIAL OFFER:

I will mail any reader of The Progressive Thinker, one of my Spray Medicators and four drahms LIQUID SPRAY suited to their disease on FIVE days trial FREE. If it gives satisfaction, send me $2 (which is two-fifths price); if not satisfactory, return it at the expired time which will only cost you 12 cents postage and you will not owe me a penny. No one can ask a better offer.

If you have Rheumatism or Kidney trouble, mention it and I will include free, a sample treatment of Australian Life Tablets. This remedy acts upon the Uric Acid poison in the plasma of the blood and quickly relieves and permanently cures these diseases.

If you are tired being imposed upon, try a cure that cures, and here it is. Write to-day as this announcement will not appear again.

We offer to the suffering public six specifics, each one acting directly upon that disease for which it is intended to cure, viz.:

LIQUID SPRAY NO. 2

is a positive cure for Catarrh of the nose and throat. Head Colds, La Grippe and Tonsilitis.

LIQUID SPRAY NO. 3

is the only permanent and positive cure known for Hay Fever. It gives immediate relief; also good in diphtheria and whooping cough.

LIQUID SPRAY NO. 4

a valuable anti-spasmotic treatment and relief of the attacks of asthma and other spasmotic affections.

LIQUID SPRAY NO. 5

is a healing antiseptic treatment for all irritable and persistent coughs and tuberculosis (consumption) of the throat and lungs, should be used regularly and persistently.

LIQUID SPRAY NO. 6

is an antiseptic cleansing, alterative remedy, especially prepared for Catarrhal affections of the middle ear, resulting in deafness, and of particular value in dry catarrh.

LIQUID SPRAY NO. 7

is a soothing, alterative antiseptic treatment especially prepared for chronic catarrh of the nose and throat; relieves bronchitis quickly.

The above diseases, differing from each other as they do, must be treated with remedies especially prepared for each general disease.

Select the Number of medicine needed by the above descriptions. Order medicine by number or state your case and we will use our best judment.

NOTE—Remember We Mail the Spray Medicine and the Treatment on Trial Free. Agents Wanted.

ADDRESS

E. J. WORST,

16 ELMORE BLOCK, ASHLAND, OHIO.

FOR RENT.

Furnished room at 222 Irving Ave., near Van Buren Street Cars. Spiritualist family.

MRS. G. PARTRIDGE, THE Psychic.

Readings by mail only. $1.00. Sandwich, Ill.

WANTED.

Position with respectable physician, to diagnose clairvoyantly. For further particulars address, Mrs. F. A. McCloskey, box 702, Marion, Ind.

MISS MAE HUNT,

Trance Medium and Lecturer, is located at 205 Turk st., San Francisco, Cal. Readings including three questions by mail, $1.00. 7511f

ELTON E. HEDRICK,

ASTROLOGER.—Vocation, business speculation, matrimony, changes, travel, all affairs of life. Fee $2.00. Send date of birth as near the hour as possible. Address, 2621 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. 775

DON'T READ THIS.

If sick write to me, and I will give you a free examination. I want no leading symptom. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Send name, age, sex, complexion, weight and 10 cts. in stamps or silver, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth many dollars to you. Be sure and write your own letter. Address,

FRANCES L. LOUCKS,

85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

MYSELF CURED

I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address

MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

Institute of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics; can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to

E. D. BABBITT, M. D., Geneva, N. Y.

TRUMPETS.

Give your Spirit friends a chance to give you a message through the infallible Fibre Trumpet, clearer, lighter and more vibrating. Guaranteed better than metal. No. 1.—36x5 in.—insulated top and bottom, $1.50. Trumpet cases same price. Booklet of instruction for any kind of development 12 cents. Sent on receipt of price to any part of the country. Manufactured by

JAS. NEWTON, 423 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

THE VOICES

By Warren Sumner Barlow. The Voices contain poems of remarkable beauty and force. They are most excellent. Price $1.00.

WANTED.

Workers among Spiritualists, to handle "The Gentleman from Everywhere," a fast selling scientific and missionary work, heartily recommended by leading Spiritualists. Liberal commission. W. H. WARNER, M. D., Agt., Brothersville, Ind.

BIOCHEMISTRY.

The Natural Law of Cure.

BIOPLASMA.

The Life of the Blood.

By DR. GEO. W. CAREY,

"The Biochemic System of Medicine." New course of instructions in the science of Biochemistry, now ready. Send 2 cent stamp for circular. Address,

The Chemistry of Life Co.,

337 Summer St., W. Somerville, Mass

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth

By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth. $1.00.

Bangs Sisters,

PHENOMENAL MEDIUMS.

Independent slate and paper writing sittings daily.

Spirit Portrait Work a Specialty.

Sent two 2c stamps for booklet. 654 W. Adams Street. Telephone Ashland 1912.

Fun and Philosophy (In Verse).

By Byron D. Stillman, is a neat little volume of quaint humor and spiritual philosophy, interblended with tender pictures of home and heart life. It is dedicated to his "devoted mother, Juliet H. Severance, M. D.," well known to the public as a pioneer worker in the ranks of progress. It contains many of the pieces so highly appreciated by the societies where he has recited. Price, 50c. Address, BYRON D. STILLMAN, 678 East 60th st., Chicago, Ill,

Byron Stillman is a devoted Spiritualist, and possesses a brilliant mind in a body that unfortunately has many infirmities. He has been deprived of hearing, is totally deaf, and is now scarcely able to walk. Those who buy his book will not be disappointed in its merits, and at the same time will be helping the author.—Editor.

WHEN MOTHER DIED.

We folded tenderly those quiet hands
When mother died.
And softly smoothed the silken, silvery bands
On either side.
And as, so often, she her vigils kept,
We now sat watching while our mother slept
That eventide.

We rained caresses on that placid brow
When mother died,
And kissed the lips that never until now
Our own denied.
We talked of patience and of all her care,
And grew regretful as our own small share
Shrank down beside.

We idly moaned: "Were she but back again
Our hearth beside,
How much unhappiness, how much of pain,
We'd scatter wide."

"How lovingly"—Ah, me! that it is ever so,
How gleam our jewels as we watch them go
Adown the tide!

Why speak we not to longing, listening ears
So close beside,
That love that brokenly, above their biers,
We all have cried.
Why to so many must that cry of Fate
Come drifting earthward with its
"Late! too late!
Thou art denied?"

Go, clasp thy mother in thy strong young arms,
Dear boy—her pride!
Cast from thy life each folly that alarms
That truest guide!
Know that her prayers, her love, thy mother's faith in thee,
Thy glory is! a richer legacy
Than aught beside!

—Atlanta Constitution.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this best treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 28 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Church of Humanity.

A paper named "The Christian Educator and God's Defender," published at Great Bend, Kansas, is a unique publication. The following will show its trend of thought:

Some Christians in all denominations are beginning to learn the fact that the foundation on which the religions of the world are based are erroneous. They are beginning to learn that the Bible, like the Koran, the Book of Mormon and all other sacred writing, is simply the work of man. They are beginning to learn that hell is a fictitious place and the devil a fabulous being; that heaven is just as fictitious as hell and God as fabulous as Satan, that the resurrection of the dead on a great judgment day is a mistake, and that when they die they will die all over and stay dead, not from choice but from enforced obedience to the laws of nature that destroys them. They are not glad that this is true but since it is true they are glad they have found it out so they can regulate their lives accordingly and be able to teach their children the truths of nature and their sure destiny. This knowledge is to them like the fore-knowledge of death. They are not glad it is true and that they must die but since it is true they must, they are glad they know it so they can be prepared for it by doing all the good they can while alive and by treating all their fellow beings in such a way as to cause no regrets when that time comes. As the knowledge of certain death does not cause Christians to be wicked and engage in all kinds of crimes winding up with suicide neither does the knowledge of perpetual unconsciousness cause them to be wicked. Upon the contrary you will find upon investigation that the knowledge of these new found truths tend to make the Christians better in every way that makes for good citizenship. You will find them, as a rule, more sober and industrious and therefore better children, husbands, wives, parents and neighbors than before they learned the truths that all Gods, devils and holy ghosts are fabulous beings and heaven and hell are myths and the resurrection a delusion. And why should they not be? Our schools are founded and supported and our children compelled to attend them on the theory that the education of the people in the branches taught tends to make them better citizens. For Christians to advance in the knowledge of God cannot be an exception to the rule that advanced knowledge in all branches of education are beneficial and tends to making people better citizens and better equipped for the duties of life.

These Christians who have advanced in the knowledge of God by learning that he is a myth like Santa Claus cannot conscientiously remain members of their respective churches. Neither can they longer teach or pay others for teaching what they now know to be untrue about God. Yet they have not lost any of their desire to teach and to pay others for teaching what they know about God, heaven, hell, holy ghost and a Jew who claimed to be a son of God. Neither have they lost interest in progress and civilization, but on the contrary they are anxious to contribute their full share towards those objects by doing their full duty in teaching and paying others for teaching the new-found truths in this branch of study.

The members of other churches who learn that God is a myth like Santa Claus cannot honestly remain members of an organization that teaches the error that he is a real live being, yet they still want society for themselves and their children to go to. There are some features of the churches they wish to retain, such as vocal and instrumental music, sociability, etc. Hence they are uniting under the name of the Church of Humanity for the purpose of perpetuating the good features of other churches and substituting the teaching of the new-found truths concerning God for the teaching of the errors of the ancients concerning him.

Thus they seek through the Church of Humanity to retain and perpetuate all the good moral teaching of the churches and eliminate the errors and false teaching of the ancients by the substitution of the discovered truths of the moderns. They seek to perpetuate the inspiring church music but will substitute words of cheer, hope and praise for humanity for the words of idolatry to a myth God.

Every month brings me applicants for memberships in the Church of Humanity from members of some Christian churches who have learned that their respective church is mistaken in the fundamental teaching. They have learned by reading the daily papers, by observation and experience that there is no God to care for any one. Such calamities as the Slocum disaster tells them that in language much clearer and tones much louder than the combined clergy of the world can make. They reason from these sad misfortunes that befall Sunday-school scholars and teachers that as no God cared for their bodies of flesh and nerves while roasting to death that there can be no God to care for those who were not in the smashup. Hence the clergy are unable to make good Christians believe they are so much better than those who perished and so much more worthy the care of a God than they were that he put in his time helping them to the neglect of those who perished. Only bad Christians can be made so egotistical by the clergy and will remain in the Christian churches until they in turn are cast adrift by their supposed God to perish while he makes pets of other people. But the good Christians will acknowledge that those who perished in the Slocum disaster were just as good as they are and just as worthy the care of a God, and as no God came to their rescue hence no God is caring for them either. Therefore the good Christians are joining the Church of Humanity and are helping to teach the truth about God to their friends.

THE PSYCHIC BODY.

A Critical Analysis of the Same.

Some months ago the question was asked with regard to the continuity of life of the psychic body, but no one advanced a plausible theory.

To illustrate: A man's beard will grow one-eighth of an inch a week. Assuming the average earth life of a man is seventy years, and that his beard commences to grow when he reaches the age of twenty-five, at the end of his earthly career he will possess a beard twenty-four feet, four and one-half inches in length if it were not subject to the action of the elements or the razor.

The psychic body is supposed to remain intact regardless of accident or injury to the physical body; that is, if an arm is amputated, the psychic arm remains attached to the psychic body, though invisible to the non-clairvoyant eye.

This theory will also apply to hair, for each hair has a psychic encasement. If it had not such a body, it would not, could not grow; for spirit is life, and without life hair could not emerge from the flesh.

Where there is life or spirit there is its psychic body, or encasement.

This being true, means that every man of the age mentioned, materializing, would be adorned by a hirsute growth over twenty-four feet in length.

According to the testimony of those who have witnessed successful materializations, such is not the case

Where, then, is the great growth of hair? Has it become unnecessary? Has the spirit, through the power of spirit over psychic entities, cast off the beard as one here in the flesh divests oneself of heavy clothing when the summer season approaches?

As he is evidently able to do this, why should he retain any portion or all of the physical body when it would prove an impediment or be deemed an unnecessary or undesirable possession?

We deduce from the foregoing facts the logical belief—I might almost say knowledge—that the spirit eventually divests himself of the entire psychical body in his course of evolution; for if the mind is supreme in spirit life, there exists no need of any particular form of covering, because the disembodied mind can and does create, for purposes of recognition, anything that it desires.

That psychical bodies were not necessary in the higher spheres of progression seems to have been recognized by the ancients, and they endeavored to preserve the idea by means of stone carvings in which winged heads have a prominent part. These cherub-like winged heads perpetuate the belief of the philosophers of that age that the body, both physical and psychical, would in time become unnecessary and only the intellect, the spirit, survive. The spirit was supposed to inhabit the head, from which place in the brain it extended throughout the body in the form of filaments. To-day we call these filaments "nerves." The head was furnished with wings in those ancient stone carvings, to show it was the opinion of the wise men of that time that the spirit, though intangible, was able to proceed through space as swiftly as a bird, and to speak, to hear, to see, to feel, to smell, to be always vigorous with the joyousness of youth and the wisdom of age.

Ancient spirits inform us that in those days spirits were in the habit of showing only their materialized faces and heads to the seers, thereby being able to manifest without using so much magnetism, as it required far less effort and a smaller amount of magnetism to thus partially materialize than if the full form had appeared. This fact furnishes another explanation: The sculptors may have thought that only the head survived the change called death, as only it appeared in the materializations, but the more logical inference is that they were aware of the truth and sought, through these symbolical carvings, to perpetuate the knowledge that they had gained.

Robert Browning, the poet, once wrote: "All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist; not its semblance, but itself," and, continuing the thought, we may say: Spirits will materialize, not as they once appeared, but as they now exist; not as they once were, but as they hoped to be; not as semblances, but as realities.

MRS. F. M. SNARRENBERGER.

Columbus, Ohio.

Lake Sunapee Camp, N. H.

August 16, the weather is all that could be asked for. At 2:15 p. m., the meeting was called to order by the president, Mr. John Gage. A lecture and tests by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, which were well received by all.

August 17 at 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Wellman C. Whitney, of Springfield, Mass. At 7:45 p. m. seance by Nettie Holt Harding, and all tests were recognized.

Aug. 18, at 1 p. m., Ladies Aid Fair, which was well attended and they disposed of everything they had

August 19, at 2:45 p. m., lecture and tests by Wellman C. Whitney. At 7:45 p. m. seance by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, which gave perfect satisfaction.

Aug. 20, at 10:30 a. m., annual business meeting was called to order by the president, and the following officers elected: President, John Gage, Hunniker, N. H.; vice-president, I. K. Conner, Warner, N. H.; secretary, Lorenzo Worthen, Hillsboro, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriett C. Comstock, Newport, N. H. Business committee: Thos. Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; Charles E. Gove, Riverdale, N. H.; Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H. Auditors: Caleb C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Harriet G. Newman, Washington, N. H.

At 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Wellman C. Whitney.

Aug. 21 at 10:30 a. m., lecture and tests by Wellman C. Whitney.

At 1:15 p. m., seance by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, which was well attended. This was the last day that Mrs. Harding was to be here. She was liked by all. May the angel world bless her in all of her work.

At 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Wellman C. Whitney. His tests were all acknowledged, and he was liked by all. May the good angels always guard him.

The vocal music is under the direction of Miss Ida F. Bond, of Worcester, Mass., who is ably assisted by Mrs. Ida E. Young, of Montpelier, Vt., and the music is highly spoken of by all.

LORENZO WORTHEN, Sec'y.

C. WALTER LYNN,

THE

Eminent Healer

and

Gifted Psychic.

Health Restored by Common Sense Methods.

For the Cure of Mental and Physical Ailments.

OBSESSION CURED

For Free Diagnosis of Disease, send five two-cent stamps, age, name, sex, and own handwriting.

Readings and Business Advice, $1, and Two Stamps.

Address 784 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.

BOOK REVIEWS.

AFTER HER DEATH; THE STORY OF A SUMMER. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Company, Boston, Publishers. Price $1.

Anything that emanates from the mind of Lilian Whiting possesses great value. "After Her Death" will prove especially interesting. She wisely claims that when the spiritual being that has lived a certain period here slips out of its physical body, and is free from material clogs and lamentations, the readjustment in a number of ways is made. Those who still remain in this world, are far more truly recognized; some have been unduly appreciated; some have been underestimated. The risen spiritual being, now being able to discern spiritual states, and to adjust all to a new scale of values, rearranges his loves and friendships, so to speak. In fact here is a type of the judgment day.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH. Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described. By C. W. Leadbeater. Theosophical Book Concern, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

This book comprises 502 octavo pages, in clear print, durably bound in cloth. The subject matter, pertaining to the spiritual nature of man and the immortality of his essential being, is of deepest interest and intense import to all thinkers, whether Materialists, Spiritualists or Agnostics. Mr. Leadbeater is widely and favorably known as a lecturer and author. He presents the views of the advanced Theosophist, in a clear and kindly manner, entertainingly and instructively elucidating the subject from the theosophical standpoint. The special chapters are devoted to: Some Misconceptions About Death. The Evidence for Continued Life. Religious Misconceptions. Our Attitude Towards Death. The Facts as They Are. Some Examples of Astral Life. Astral Surroundings. The Desire Elemental. An Extension of Consciousness. The Work of the Helpers. Astral Visits. Visits Just Before Death. Thought-Bodies. Apparitions Announcing Death. Those Who Return to Help. Those Who Need Help. Those Desiring to Atone. The Earth-bound. Hauntings. Apparently Aimless Apparitions. Less Frequent Types. Astral Impressions. How to Meet a Ghost. Classification of Spiritualistic Phenomena. Personal Experiences. The Utilization of the Medium's Body. Clairvoyance in Spiritualism. Partial Materialization. Miscellaneous Phenomena. Visible Materializations. Our Attitude Towards Spiritualism. The Heaven World. The Nature of the Evidence. How Clairvoyance is Developed. Index. The Objects of the Theosophical Society.

THE LIFE RADIANT. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston. Price, $1.

The author sets forth in beautiful language that the Life Radiant is that transfiguration of the ordinary daily events and circumstances which lifts them to the spiritual plane, and sees them as the signs and the indications of the divine leading. Every circumstance thus becomes a part of revelation, and to constantly live in this illuminated atmosphere is to invest all experiences with a kind of magical enchantment. Life prefigures before us a spiritual drama in which we are at once the actors and the spectators.

In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration.

THE NATURE CURE BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS. Illustrated. A Bridge from the Old to the New. The Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. By M. E. Conger, M. D., Assisted by Mrs. Rosamond C. Conger, M. D. The Educator Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill. Price, bound in fine English cloth, $2; in neat, substantial cloth, $1.50.

This work presents in a plain concise manner home treatment for nearly all the diseases to which the human frame is heir. The author says:

"The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

"Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of the Nature Cure.

"The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as Nature Cure.

"Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. Nature Cure will lead the way to certain success.

"The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease

Free of Charge,

to all who will send their name, age, sex, and give leading symptoms, and all who will send $2.00 (Two Dollars) with their request for a diagnosis, I will diagnose their disease free, and will send them for the $2.00 two weeks' treatment, and the best book published on Spiritualism,

"The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism."

BY EPES SARGENT.

Cancers Cured or No Pay.

We Have the Best Method.

DR. C. E. WATKINS,

"THE WESTLAND,"

(Next to Symphony Hall.)

Boston, Mass.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

Is the oldest and most successful physician now in practice. His cures are wonderful. His examinations free to all who send him name, age, sex, lock of their hair and six cents in stamps. No leading symptom required. He makes a specialty of treating nervous exhaustion of men, with wonderful success. Write at once. Delays are dangerous. Address,

DR. J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,

35 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,

230 North Sixth St.

San Jose, Call

Do You Need Spectacles And Better Eyesight? I can help you. I Will fit your eyes by Clairvoyance and spirit assistance at your own home with the improved melted pebble lenses, to see near and at a distance. Please write for illustrated circular, showing styles and prices. Also, my spirit method of treating that restores lost vision and impaired eyesight. I guarantee to fit your eyes, and safe delivery by mail. SAMPLE FREE.—Sufficient magnetized Compound for four oz. cures sore eyes, restores the eyes to normal vision. Ten cents for postage.

B. F. POOLE,

43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

Development Guaranteed.

Do you sit in the dark? Do you close your eyes to see clairvoyantly? Do you belong to circles? Are you afraid of the trance? I will show you the better, aye, the best way to develop, and without losing your normal condition. Many years of psychical experiences, and as a psychic and teacher, for I have experienced all the phases and kinds of mediumship, have qualified me for the good I am doing. Thousands of flattering testimonials to that effect. I take the student's and psychics who fail. If you are a beginner, better start right and obtain results that are genuine. My system is without a parallel, and has had many bad imitations. Send at once, enclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, for standard occult Literature.

CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). It teaches you how to penetrate the veil of sense and matter; converse with spirits, read the crystal, see the future, prophesy are within illumination, and be a Yogis. "All students will do well to study this excellent volume."—W. J. Colville. "It is a revelation."—Light. "Best work on the subject."—Mind. "Marvelous—Epoch-making."—Lilian Whiting.

KRIBT WORLD, by Gaffield, cloth, 50 cents.

AURAS AND COLORS—With exhaustive dictionary of color meanings. A unique book for unique people. Price 50 cents

PSYCHOMETRY—The first and only book which teaches the science so that you can practice it. Price, 50 cents

EASY LESSONS in Inspiration Clairvoyance and Psychometry. Price, 50 cents.

REALIZATION—How to enter the super-consciousness and be a Yogis. Price, 25 cents.

DIVINATION—A Ms. series on how to divine hidden things, find lost treasures, become a seer. Price, $1.00.

CRYSTALS for crystal-gazing, a new lot at $2.25 each, postage prepaid.

HOW TO REMEMBER PAST LIVES—A Ms. series on this fascinating subject. Price, $1.00.

Prospectus of "The College of Divine Science and Realization." Reduced tuition.

The only one of its kind in the world.

J. C. F. GRUMBINE,

1285 Commonwealth Ave.

Boston, Mass.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 480 pages. Price $1.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

YOU CANNOT AFford to miss an issue of this paper, with its wealth of SPIRITUAL LITERATURE.

The Progressive Thinker.

SEND YOUR SUBscription in at once, and keep pace with all that is transpiring in the ranks.

VOL. 30 CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 10, 1904. NO. 772

SPIRITUALISM IS A TRUTH.

"One truth is clear--whatever is, is right." Pope.

"I long to know the truth hereof at large." Shakespeare.

"Let us make truth catching instead of falsehood and disease." Ingersoll.

"Truth depends on, or is only arrived at by a legitimate deduction from all the facts which are truly material." Coleridge.

"Plows, to go true, depend much upon the truth of the iron." Mortimer.

"Truth bears the torch in the search for truth." Lucretius.

Let us love our cause and dare to advocate its truth and decry fraud. If we have the pure it cannot be destroyed in the crucible of reason and fair discussion. It will only thrive, and expand more rapidly.

TRUTH IS IMPERISHABLE.

"My mouth shall speak the truth." Prov. viii., 7.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." William Cullen Bryant.

"To have truth and not live it is like having lungs and refusing to breathe."

"However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully frequently, and fearlessly discussed it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth." John Stuart Mill.

After Death--What?

By Charles Dawbarn, San Leandro, Cal.

CHAPTER FOUR.

We concluded our last chapter by pointing out the tremendous importance of "dust" to all planet life. This must be realized by the student who would attempt to answer our question, "After death, what?" We can now see that if man is to go on unchanged by death in his form and senses then there must be not only an atmosphere adapted to human lungs in spirit life, but unless there be dust in that atmosphere there can be no beauty for him in his surroundings.

We now go a step further and see that if in that life after death there be the rills and rivulets, the lakes, the rivers and the oceans depicted by returning spirits or their mediums, all such waters will evaporate into their atmosphere, where, unless protected by dust they cannot return in dew and rain, but will fall in deadly cloud bursts that would mean a second death for man and nature. But since spirit return is a proved fact we know that conditions must permit the new man to live and enjoy life.

It follows that man's new organs will be in harmony with his surroundings. His lungs will have to adapt themselves to the new atmosphere amid conditions so different to ours that mortal man cannot discover the existence of either the spirit lungs or the spirit atmosphere. Some ninety per cent of our mortal bodies are mere water, which comes to us harmlessly, with a speck of dust for each drop that falls. So my spirit brother must also, if he have the form I know, have dust in his air, and mingle his dust and water just as we do. And if his soul craves beauty he can only be satisfied because there is dust in the air around him, which catches and refracts the ray of light, and thus creates color, for him by its effect upon his eye.

The reader should stop right here to ask himself whether he is ready to accept the idea that the new-born spirit is living in a world of dust and water, and therefore closely resembling ours. Of course if he is so living he may have a form very much like ours. But if his "after death" thus includes dust and water he will have both dirt and mud, for mud is dust and water. His own body, his homes, cities and surroundings will need cleaning, just like ours, and about all the real change would be that he has become invisible to mortals. We have once before pointed out that this would demand soap, washing days and door mats after death, unless man and his surroundings should change beyond our present experience. But if, as is claimed, they are so changed, then his form will change, too, and I shall have to make my neighbor's acquaintance all over again.

So far we have made but a mere surface examination of the consequences of death. We are obliged to recognize that death involves mighty changes, that must affect every form physically. We are compelled to admit that. But there will be as great changes mentally, for our mentality is shaped by our surroundings quite as much as our body. Man has been taught religiously and socially, that it is his duty and privilege to increase and multiply, and we are quite sure that whether that be a duty or not, the nation that does not increase its population soon dies out, or is enslaved by some more powerful neighbor. We find every form of life shaped so as to propagate its species as its chief end. And the form of man is no exception. It is carefully shaped to hold not only the various organs by which it grows and lives, but also the organs by which it is to increase and multiply. Without these sexual organs the shape of man's body would be different, and woman's still more so. But though that is interesting and important, and compels a shape which we recognize as manhood, still it is, so far, only the physical side of our immortal possibilities.

Now let the reader stop and think that fatherhood, motherhood, brotherhood, and various relationships down to that of mother-in-law, are all the results of sex. If it were not for his mortal manhood—just as it is—the noblest attributes of man would disappear. Fancy a whole city or nation without a mother or father in it, and with a population that never knew either! All we count as holiest and most divine in man would be absent, for he would know nothing of love. And any home without love becomes a hell. In that city there would be none of the romance of youth. No maiden and lover wandering hand in hand, and presently founding another family. Without motherhood and fatherhood selfishness would reign supreme.

When the fanatic tries to imagine a contented society, free from all woes and sorrows, he always talks of the brotherhood of man. And we are perpetually told that all hope for humanity depends upon acknowledging the brotherhood of man. But there can be no brotherhood without mothers, and no mothers unless their bodies contain organs to hold unborn brothers for many weary months. And such bodies will be, and must be shaped so as to hold such organs in the best possible position.

With such truths in our mind we once again ask ourselves, "After death, what?" And we see that all pictures of life, and forms of life over there are mere distorted copies of life here. In a word, these would be revelators draw pictures of men and women in spirit life, who are never to have any experience of either motherhood, or brotherhood, and yet are to walk about, and perhaps fly about, in bodies shaped just like ours. And remember, unless they have just such shaped bodies, we could never recognize them as those we knew in earth life.

We have now seen that it is not merely the physical must change, but the mental as well, after death. The physical must change because this planet compels certain organs in certain shaped bodies, which would be useless after death. And the mental, which is the effect evolved in this life by our present organs and shape, will, of course, all disappear, and leave us motherless, fatherless and loveless after we have climbed "the golden stair." Such are surely some of the conceptions of the next life which we now see will not bear examination, and yet have been taught and emphasized by "spirit return."

We are still only at the threshold of the difficulties which beset us when we try to find out, "After death, what?" It will not do to imagine oneself loving his earth mother or wife "over there" with the old love, for that, as we have seen, was founded on the old organs and the old shape. Apart from the sex organs the size of a man, or a woman, depends on the size and density of the planet. If the planet were larger or smaller the human body would also be larger or smaller. And in the next life, the new body, whatever its shape, would be made of the materials around it, and its feet and inches would be regulated by its new conditions. So the sought loved one might be found twenty feet, or twenty inches, tall, to the dismay of the startled lover.

Of such difficulties we never get a word of explanation from the "dear spirits." We know they exist, and come back, but that seems to be about all that spirit return is so far teaching us.

Now we are ready to make anxious enquiry as to what are to be our faculties and powers in the life after death? The answer can only be from earth experiences with our present bodies and conditions. The constant answer to such questions given through sensitives has been that "will power" is the wizard "over there" that enables man—spirit—that is to say Ego—to work without fatigue, and achieve wonders impossible in earth life. We accept this as a truism, because "will power" is the one attribute by which man wields power over his surroundings in earth life. But Will is useless save as it works through, and controls matter; and we cannot conceive of Will as of any value to a man without tools. Scientists tell us that without our opposable thumb man's progress would have been impossible. So the thumb is a tool for will power. So is the hand, the foot, and more or less the whole body.

So much of this spirit talk about will power is such pure nonsense that it seems to me time somebody reduced it to common sense. Will power is useless without tools, and as it develops will power uses one tool to make another, and that is what we call "progress." Will power is a manifestation of intelligence through matter. Intelligence is never separate from will power. Of course will power may have very different tools in spirit life, but they must be material, and solid enough to handle and shape spirit man's surroundings. If telepathy be a truth, and one will power can affect the will power of another without contact visible to mortal sense, yet tools are there, and must be there, all the same. It is not fingers or toes, or a sledgehammer that does that business, but vibrations of matter must be used as tools; for thought itself is only intelligence expressing itself through matter. The ripple started in the brain may extend outward and onward in the great ocean of matter which is the raw material of the universe. Will power is always using matter as its servant whenever mind is at work. The matter used may be fine or coarse, dense or refined, but it will be matter all the same.

There has no evidence been presented to show that will-power, or even life itself, is an entity apart from matter. The chemist, no matter how fine his balance, is dealing with matter as much as the miner with his sledge hammer. And the psychologist, who cannot analyze his own intelligence, can only make it manifest through matter. So much is man the mortal's experience, so when man the spirit talks through mortal lips of his wondrous control and use of will-power, he can really only mean that he has got better tools than we have with which to do his work.

(To be continued.)

San Leandro, Cal.

SPIRITUALISM.

Though the preachers rail against it in their sermons and at prayer;
Though the world seems loth to treat it with consideration fair;
Though the human frauds disgrace it, it is spreading everywhere.
And no finger of disdain
Can affect it in the main,
For 'tis builded on a science that eternal will be there.

Though 'tis dubbed a superstition, with the devil on its track;
Though it has been held to torture by the thumbscrew and the rack;
Though the stake has held its devotees till they were crisp and black;
There is sure to come a day
When the truth will have full sway,
And the good old friends immortal will all shout their greetings back.

To their God from every quarter have gone slander and abuse,
And at times it seemed the demons of hell-fire were turned loose,
And devoting all things sacred to demoniacal use,
But the cause has held its pose,
And still holds its own and grows,
While all kingdoms of religions have unfurled their flags of truce.

Men have worried, women fretted till their nerves were out of tune,
Lest the fads and frauds and Christians would annihilate it soon,
But today it stands, as ever, from destruction quite immune;
And the world has grown to see
That it helps humanity,
And instead of being "Satan," 'tis a precious, living boon.

DR. T. WILKINS.

SPIRITUALISM ABLY DEFENDED.

Dr G. E. Chesbro, of Los Angeles, Cal., Battles Loyally for the Truth.

Speaking before the First Spiritual Mission, of Los Angeles, Cal., Dr. G. E. Chesbro took up an argument answering the criticism of Spiritualism, made one week ago by Rev. W. W. Simpson, at the Adventist tent, corner of Seventh and Spring streets.

Dr. Chesbro mentioned having read the words of Rev. Simpson in The Times, and said that many persons had expressed the wish to have him answer the criticism. This he believed he was able to do from the Bible, the book which Rev. Simpson had used in his effort to prove that Spiritualism is a work of the devil.

First John iv:1, "Beloved believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God," was the text chosen as a foundation for the discourse last night, and after announcing it the speaker said: "It has been stated that the Bible is like an old fiddle upon which any kind of a tune can be played. This is to say that any kind of doctrine can be taught and proven by the Bible. There are persons who, because they are not thoroughly conversant with the Bible, are willing to believe this statement. It is, however, misleading and a thorough knowledge of the Bible will dispel it.

"From a great musical composition an amateur can select certain disconnected passages, which may be regarded as so many different tunes, but when the master musician, who grasps every thought, every sentiment, every motion, sweeps over the composition in execution, the listening ear will catch the whole from start to finish as one grand harmony. So it is with the Bible. An honest, intelligent investigation and study, which requires the student to place himself in the same relation with the highest intelligence of the universe as did the great spiritual masters who gave to the world this most wonderful, complete and comprehensive truth concerning the great question, will disclose the fact that the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, teaches the same thing, plays the same tune.

"Humanity can never find satisfaction in knowing only one side of the question of life, for life is two-fold in its expression which is described as external and internal; objective and subjective; physical and metaphysical, or spiritual. Masters always have made this distinction in some form, either directly or indirectly, and it is very pronounced throughout the Bible. From beginning to end, while it recognizes both, it aims to make prominent the supreme importance of the spiritual, that which shall not pass away, but remain forever; while that which it has made manifest, called the physical, whether it be material thought, sentiment, emotions or forms, are all unsubstantial, and will pass away into everlasting forgetfulness.

"Our text gives us clearly to understand without a question that there are individual intelligences called spirits, who are of God, just the same as there may be men in the earthly form who are of God, because living in the kingdom of justice, goodness and truth. This does not prove that all men or all spirits are living in that way, but the text clearly implies that they are not, and the admonition of the apostle is that we determine their character, and fellowship only with those spirits which are godly. Consonant with the text to which our brother in his discourse referred, Isaiah, eighth chapter and nineteenth and twentieth verses, 'And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter, should not a people seek unto God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.'

"This text, like the first, is clearly a warning from the prophet to the people to have no fellowship with those spirits which are not of God, for they do not talk intelligently, but, as stated in the text, 'peep and mutter.' These, says the prophet, 'do not speak the truth, for they have no light in them which can be proven by the law and the testimony.' It seems strange that our Advent brother should claim these two texts in any way teach that spirituality is the work of an individuality called the devil. Nothing could be further from it. They do undeniably teach the fact of Spiritualism and spirit return. Reference was made to passages which show that communications come from demons, the angels that kept not their first estate. These angels are also called unclean spirits, which Jesus cast out, and whom the Bible clearly teaches are men who once lived upon the earth. In Revelation twenty-second chapter, eighth and ninth verses, we can read that the angel who showed John these things was a man, and one of the prophets that kept the saying of that book. What is true of this angel is true of all. The apostle Paul, in Hebrew 1:14, says that the angels are all ministering spirits, sent to minister to them that are heirs of salvation. The Bible teaches we should have nothing to do with those that are fallen into darkness and ignorance, and this is why the law was given to Moses by the angel world, that necromancers—those who had familiar spirits, witches and wizards, should be driven out. The fact that there was a law against necromancy is proof of the truth of Spiritualism, for it is acknowledged that all these are in communication with spirits of the departed, but that they are unclean or evil spirits, and that which is evil is deceptive and lying, which is the devil, whom Jesus says is a liar and the father of lies, not an individual personality. If we had a law to-day that could be enforced in driving out all who practice or are enrapport with unclean spirits, both Spiritualism and Christianity would be in far better repute."

Great mischiefs happen more often from folly, meanness and vanity than from the greater sins of avarice and ambition.—Burke.

FOUND THE LIGHT.

A New Convert Relates Her Experience.

To the Editor:—I know you will not blame me, a new convert, for writing an experience I have had, when this is just the time when all who feel in their hearts that there must be truth in Spiritualism, as well as those who know, should speak up. Although thirty-three years old, I have never had the time or opportunity to study into the phenomena of Spiritualism until a year ago last winter. The subject had always, since I was old enough to think deeply, a great fascination for me, and I longed for the chance to delve into it. Two winters ago I attended a few meetings—private circles, and almost at once commenced to feel that new and strange influence. After three or four sittings I was able to see and describe people whom those present recognized. But that evening the power from the circle was unusually strong. The meetings were soon discontinued and I have been to none since, but shall as soon as the opportunity presents itself. I made the acquaintance of a lady who is a medium, and we seemed drawn to each other in some unaccountable way. One evening, when she was visiting in this neighborhood, she had a circle, and after her control, who is an Indian, had finished talking with the others he told them all that he wished to speak with me alone, and hoped they would not feel offended because he had asked them to withdraw. The door had hardly closed after them when the medium had her arms around me, and my own mother, who died when I was three and a half years old, spoke to me. The medium's Indian control left her and my mother came in. Oh! the joy of that meeting! Only those who have lost their mothers when as young as I was, can know. We talked of things known only to us two, and she cried, "My baby, my baby." I was her youngest child, and therefore was her baby. She talked with me for about twenty minutes, and of course that was only a thousandth part of the time I should have liked to spend with her. But she said she would come again to me in the same manner. She told me her home was with me, and how that filled me with joy to think I had been "entertaining an angel unawares."

Now I can feel her presence with me often, and especially when I sit down at the piano. Some of the skeptics may say, "How do you know it was she?" I answer, because we talked of events that happened in her early married life that were known by myself only, others who knew the facts being dead.

How can people be so blind to all these spiritual manifestations? Verily they are duller than babes, for even they will blink at the light. Take materialization, for instance. I know, personally, nothing of that phenomena, but I feel, yes, I know in my heart that it is so. We are told by reliable Spiritualists, that under the proper conditions such manifestations do take place.

"Under proper conditions," I hear some of the foolish ones say. "Why do you have to have proper conditions?" Do you know, I want to just shout "Oh, fools and blind!". Don't everything under the sun have to have proper conditions?

Can, you, my dear madam, bake your bread unless you have a fire to do so with? Can water freeze unless the conditions are such as to enable it to do so? Can you, oh, enjoyer of the weed, light your pipe unless you have the conditions? You say the soul cannot possibly be seen and therefore there is nothing to see. Do you see the wind? No, you see the branches bend before it, and the roses droop their heads.

Now, hear someone shout, "Yes, but look at the frauds and fakes in it." Yes—and look at the frauds and fakes right in your churches—you may be one yourself—you know, I don't—there are frauds everywhere. Are there not weeds in your garden and don't you have to keep at work to keep them out? There are just as big frauds in the churches as there are among Spiritualists, and they have not even the excuse of money getting to condone it. Right in the city near me a well-known man, prominent in business circles and a dearly loved Sunday-school superintendent, who gave lectures on honesty and leading upright lives, to his class, was found out to be an embezzler, a forger, and a supporter of three or four women besides his wife. He skipped. Nothing has been done about him. He was smart. But if such things had been done by a Spiritualist, the so-called Christians would cry out, "Hang him!"

Oh! blind, blind men and women, the evidences are all around you, would that the scales would fall from your eyes. Is not the fact that, deep down in your hearts there is a longing for something, you know not what, a desire for the attainment of something a little higher and nobler—enough to prove that there is a future existence? Heart-broken mother, as you gaze down at the dear face so soon to be covered away from your sight—can you say that this life is the end of all? Oh, no! you cannot. Why don't you go further and study into it?

Oh, man, in the hour that you stand face to face with bereavement, can you say that existence ceases here? No! and if not why then does it not expand and develop as it does here, but fuller and broader and deeper?

Well, if those who cannot see it, or won't see it, and have made up their minds they will not believe it, will wait, it will be proved to them one day, whether they wish it to be or not, and that day is the day of their so-called death. I am not used to writing for publication, but I know I was guided to write this, and hope it will encourage others to do likewise. Your last edition of The Progressive Thinker was just brimfull of instruction.

MRS. A. H. PERRY.

South Hadley Falls, Mass.

The worst enemies of law are those who would perpetuate injustice under the name of law.—Sentinel of Christian Liberty.

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT.

The Electrical Basis of the Universe.

On July 1, 1903, the writer said in an article: "Nothing exists within a sphere whose diameter is 176 quadrillion miles, requiring light, which moves 186,000 miles per second, 11,116,000 miles per minute, 30,000 years to traverse, but corpuscles."

The sphere mentioned is that having the earth in its center, and as seen by the largest modern telescopes. For 30,000 years is quite a long time, and 186,000 miles during one second is an inconceivably rapid rate of motion. Yet, it is positively known that light and all other interstellar modes of energy travel with that impressive velocity.

Prof. J. J. Thompson determined the mass of ultimate corpuscles of matter to be about one-thousandth part of an atom of hydrogen, the smallest and lightest body of matter known until the discovery of corpuscles.

No brain is able to imagine how minute the hydrogen atom is, and all powers of the mind of man are impotent when it begins to think of the dimensions of a corpuscle. The latest deduction of the foremost of scientific men of the world is that all forms of matter at present known can be resolved into these excessively small corpuscles.

But here comes the chief fact known about them: When matter is disintegrated into its final or corpuscular condition it is impossible to distinguish any difference between the corpuscles and electricity. This is but one way of saying that the entire sidereal universe and everything in it are made of electricity.

Electricity is matter beyond any doubt, but for years it has been called a mode of energy. This philosophy sounds like saying that matter and energy are identical and both are included under one word—electricity. To get at this in another way, it may be said that no entity exists but electricity. If so—and it certainly looks that way—then the human mind is made of electricity, and electricity is matter.

This brings us around to a point in Oriental speculation, four thousand years in the distant past, when the wisest men the world has ever contained said over and over again the "thoughts and things." This idea has never died out; for from that remote epoch some psychologists have kept the primeval belief alive. And the doctrine is at this moment spreading over the world again with remarkable rapidity. Mail received here from all parts of the world contains this phrase repeatedly: "Thought power; the force of thought"; "transmission of thought power," and similar sentences bristle in the books, papers and the multitudes of letters daily pouring into this observatory. Electricity assumes more forms than did Proteus of old.

These "bodies smaller than atoms," have the property inertia and other attributes of matter, yet none so far is able to tell as where they differ from electricity. It may be well to state that some scientists assert that they are not electric, but no proof has been coming.

Radium now in New York that was received from Paris in 1900 is still giving out heat and light. It therefore must receive matter which it transforms into heat; but if heat is electricity, and electricity matter, then there is a flow of matter throughout all space; for the spectroscope sees matter in the distant glowing suns in all directions in the same phases we are familiar with here on our speck of earth.

Chemists, physicists and electricians are working night and day to find what matter is and psychologists are working also day and night to find what mind is. At the present stage of investigation it looks as though both are one and the same, and that the most common form in which they appear is electricity.

The entire speculative portion of the scientific world is racking its brain striving to interpret the flood of mysteries that submerge the human mind with inscrutable problems. The intensity of gravity is well known, and it has been measured with accuracy. Thus: Two spheres, say of gold, lead or granite, whose weight is 463,915 tons each, and whose centers are one mile apart, would attract each other with a force of one pound.

The electrical potential of that vast mass of corpuscles saturating all space, for long called "ether," has been computed; and there is a remarkable relation between them. The deductions are intensely mathematical and were made by Bergen Davis of Columbia University, and here are his conclusions in his own language: "This rather remarkable relation between the gravitational constant and the constant of the ether is very suggestive. It appears to me that this coincidence can hardly be accidental. If mass is electromagnetic, the constant of mass attraction might be expected to be related to the constants of the ether. The above result not only suggests that matter is electrical in constitution, but that gravitational force is the same in kind if not in degree with electrical forces, and that they act in a common medium."

Scientists for years have now and then written that gravity is probably electrical, and now it appears that mathematical proof is on the way. But man's place in nature and his relation to matter or "electricity," is attracting attention all over the civilized world now. It is certain that "finer forces" exist in the universe of which man is at present ignorant. Thus: One of the most conservative scientific men of England, "Sigma," says: "The real question is just whether nature consists of matter and force—the known physical agencies—or whether it must not include another order of existence, the psychical, to which is due those phenomena called life, mind, etc.

The N-rays emanating from the human body that were discovered by M. Blonlot, have been reflected and refracted and are seen to be quite radioactive on a sensitive fluorescent screen; and radiographs have been taken by "human waves." It is thought that diseases can be diagnosed by examination of N-rays issuing from the patient's body. We will all be right when man finds his place in nature.—Prof. Edgar L. Larkin, in Chicago Examiner.

The true rule of business is to guard and do by the things of others as they do by their own.—Hindoo.

Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death.—Patrick Henry.

THE OLD AND NEW BIBLE.

As Analyzed by the Editor of the New York Sun.

A significant incident—it may be said to be a consequence—of the criticism to which the Bible has been subjected during recent years is the decision of the managers of the American Bible Society, to amend the constitution of that society so as to permit the printing of the revised version of the Scriptures completed in 1885 by British and American committees, in accordance with principles and rules laid down by the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury in 1870, and further revised and edited by the American committee in 1901.

The Canterbury plan was simply for a revision of the King James version, made in 1611, or of the standard and authorized English Bible of all Protestants, and not for a distinctively new version The resolutions of the Convocation, in view of the veneration in which this ancient and authorized version was regarded, took pains to announce that "we do not contemplate any new translation of the Bible or any alteration of the language except where in the judgment of the most competent scholars such change is necessary." Even where changes were made, the revisers were enjoined to follow closely "the style of the language employed in the existing version."

In 1885, when the revised version was completed and was published by the University Presses of Oxford and Cambridge, there was a great demand for the new Bible in both England and America. In the course of a single year as many as three million copies were sold in the two countries, and it was a leading subject of discussion in the religious world of that day. The general feeling in the two countries, however, was of disappointment. The changes made by the revisers, under the compulsion of fidelity to the originals, came as a shock to the sentiment of veneration which had grown up around the old version, so that its very language had become embalmed in English literature and had profoundly affected the whole thought and the doctrinal statement and conviction of English speaking Protestantism.

Accordingly, after the brief period in which the revised Bible awakened sensational interest, it ceased to attract any large degree of attention. During the twenty years since its first publication it has made no headway. The old version has continued to hold the affections of the people, to be the source from which Biblical quotations are made and from which lessons are read at church services. The revision is used in critical rather than pious study of the Scriptures. It is true that two years ago the British and Foreign Bible Society anticipated the decision of our own Bible Society, by amending its constitution so as to authorize the publication of the revised Bible among its issues, but the demand for the new has been trifling relatively to that for the old version.

Of all the books printed since the invention of printing, the Bible has been by far the most numerously sent out from the presses of both Europe and America. The total number of the issues of the English society since its organization in 1804 has been toward 200,000,000, and of the American Society about half as many. So far as concerns the English language, these have been of the old King James version. Meantime, the Bible has been translated in whole or in part into hundreds of languages and dialects, or practically into every speech of the earth. The amount of labor expended by Protestant missionaries in this direction has been prodigious. Giving the Bible to every people of the earth has been considered by them the first great religious obligation.

The American Bible Society, by its decision to add the revised version to its issues, now admits tacitly the imperfection of this King James version as measured by the standards of modern scholarship, but the new is not venerated and it never will be venerated like the old. The Bible as revised is a strange book. Changes made in passages hallowed by three centuries of devout use produce a painful impression of almost sacrilege in the religious mind. The Word of God, in the estimation of the great mass of the English-speaking Protestant public, is the very language of the Bible as it was translated in 1611 by a commission of forty-seven members under James I.

At this time, too, when the new revision is made authoritative, there is throughout Christendom a criticism of the Scriptures which goes far beyond the mere imperfections of any translation. It weighs in the balance and rejects even the authenticity and authority of the Biblical originals themselves. The Bible emerges from its testing furnace no longer the Word of God, but the words of men—fallible, legendary, contradictory, defaced by frauds and limited by an ignorance of the natural laws of the universe which betokens a human authorship at periods when superstitions swayed the minds and governed the religious conceptions of men.

The decision in 1902 by the British and Foreign Bible Society and by the American Bible Society in 1904 to put forth both the newly revised version and the old version of 1611 as authoritative translations of the Scriptures is therefore of grave importance at a time of religious revolution due to new conceptions of the Bible.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

In the Present and in the Future Life

I have in mind this morning not only the growth of the spiritual form, but the growth of the spirit itself, both while living in the earthly body and when freed from it. We hunger and thirst after righteousness and by probing the hidden mysteries of the life to come, we are filled for the time being. I am minded of a small child that asks of its mother something, and receiving it, is for the moment completely satisfied.

We may live in our earthly forms ninety, aye, one hundred years, and be only as a new-born babe when we are born to the life to come, if we do nothing to develop our spirits. The growth of the spirit begins in earnest when we realize we have eternal life, and that there is no death, only a birth into eternity. Take for example a man that is born with infidelity firmly rooted in his spirit, transmitted to him from both father and mother; what will awaken his spirit to a consciousness of a life beyond the grave? Nothing human can do it, it takes the power of the Divine to bring him to an understanding of the spiritual inheritance awaiting him in the land beyond the reach of our mortal vision; and often some spirit of light will beat at his brain for years, trying to awaken in him the desire to live again, and also a desire to investigate these things and thereby grow in spirit.

One reason, I think, it is so hard for us to comprehend the fullness of the life immortal is, it is so plain, and sensible, we are looking for something that requires a great deal of study, when really the growth of the spirit is as the growth of the body, we—our earthly selves are not conscious of the growth of either for some time. But as the days go by, and our bodies grow in years, and we keep in our hearts and minds the desire to know and understand more of what seems to us so mysterious, our spirits are gradually unfolding, and expanding, as a flower does when the sunshine and warm rains fall upon it; and the same power that cares for the flower is caring for us, and slowly causing us to see how beautiful the plan of life is.

There is so much to be gained by beginning while yet in the earth form to unfold our spiritual natures. We have so much better chance for development along that line. To be ignorant as regards a life to come, and be born into the spiritual world without a moment of preparation (and you can make some preparation on a bed of transition) is to be, as far as a knowledge of spiritual laws are concerned, an infant. Then you are so much more liable to be enticed with wrong doing, or to be kept close to earth, by mischievous spirits who will tell you there is no place but where you are, and as you are ignorant of the laws of progression you are apt to believe them, and waste a good many days in idleness. By and by perchance some good missionary spirit comes along and in your heart is awakened the desire that should have been awakened years ago, while you were yet in your earthly body; you begin your spiritual growth, but how slowly! Not one thing do you know regarding the Power of Light, and little of the Power of Darkness, having had no direct dealings with either. As the desire grows within you to know more of the Power that gave you life, the power of the spirit of darkness will begin to manifest itself, and ofttimes you will question in your heart, was that missionary spirit right? Is there a place beyond this, where purified spirits may go? Thus the influence of darkness clings close to you, knowing if you begin to study, and learn of the beautiful life and land beyond, the beautiful cities prepared for those that come up through great trials and tribulations, they will have lost a good worker; for it is plain to be seen the more earnest one will work for things of darkness, the more earnest they will work for the Power of light when once they understand, and are assured there is work to be done.

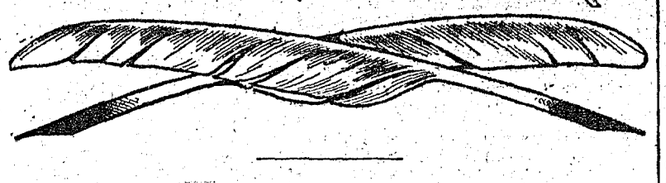
Then take for example a man that begins in his earth life to hunt diligently for the truth; his spirit begins at once to grow, and when this man shall leave his earthly body, he is ready to take up his work in the spiritual world and no power of evil, or darkness can come near to mar his pleasure in ministering to others. He will not remain close to earth, he can go far away, and will, unless it is decreed by the Power of Light that his work is among the lost and ruined, if so he is fitted to begin at once and does not have to spend years of toil in striving after light on different subjects as he learned a great deal of that in his earthly education.

Spiritual things taught earth people must be presented to them in a material form, else they cannot grasp them.

Christ, our elder brother always used a parable of material things to make his spiritual meaning plain, and in a great many ways we are like the people of old, we are slow to understand, especially if the truth does not exactly accord with our own pet belief. We should not be so—a truth is a truth and nothing can change it. We should be glad to grow gray in the service of the power of light, as each good deed done to our fellow men will bear a double harvest in the new land beyond. And how little we know compared with what is yet for us to know, and how unwilling are our feet, at times, to run on errands for our king.

Let us try to do something for those in darkness, both here and in the land beyond and in so doing help our own spirits to grow in wisdom, grace and love. Peace be with you.

MADAME ROBERTS.



The Dalles, Oregon.

Better a thousand fold abuse of Free Speech than denial of Free Speech; the abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people and entombs the hope of the race.—Bradlaugh.

The truest self-respect is not to think of self.—Beecher.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross there is in our composition.—Colton.

AN OPEN COURT

Court Adjourned After the Conclusion of To-day's Session.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

This week terminates the Open Court for the present. It has been a department of thrilling interest, in which Spiritualists of prominence have had an opportunity to air themselves as never before. In fact, it has created a decided sensation in our ranks, especially among those in remote places who have had no idea whatever of the exact status of our cause in the great centers of our land. It is, however, the candid opinion among the leading minds in our ranks that this discussion in the Open Court will be instrumental in doing great good. Did you ever stop and think, dearly beloved Spiritualists, that there is only ONE LINE along which any club, cult, sect or person can advance or rise to a higher plane, and that is along the line of absolute honesty. Any other course diverges from that line and is ruinous, leading to a hell of dark conditions.

SCUM ONLY ON THE SURFACE.

A Comprehensive Arraignment of Frauds by a Prominent Spiritualist of Grand Rapids, Mich.

It is highly amusing to watch the efforts of the frauds to check the tide of disagreeable criticism to which they have lately been subjected.

They are experts in the invention of excuses that are calculated to scare the opposition into silence. It is only to be regretted that so many well-meaning but unthinking and "easy" Spiritualists can be induced to further their designs by accepting and giving prominence to their senseless assertions.

One of the first objections to the free discussion of this question was that it would only attract more fakes to our ranks.

The fallacy of this assumption proven, it was next suggested that those who didn't know any better than to be fooled by these transparent fakes deserved to be humbugged.

But the latest attempt to silence the "fraud-hunters" deserve a medal for inconsistency. It is a fitting climax. Read it over carefully and then if you can observe any sense in it, kindly rise and explain for the benefit of those who are so weak-minded that they cannot appreciate its logic. Here it is:

"IF SPIRITUALISTS BEGIN TO DECRY FRAUD IN THEIR RANKS IT IS TANTAMOUNT TO ACKNOWLEDGING THE FRAUDULENT BASIS OF THEIR OWN SYSTEM OF PROOF OF ANOTHER LIFE."

Can anyone but a dunce be induced to accept such a transparent falsehood? It scarcely requires an answer, but, for the sake of presenting its conclusions more clearly and emphatically, we will examine it more closely and follow it to its logical conclusions.

If some mediums are frauds then all are frauds. If some phenomena is fraudulent then all is fraudulent.

Apply this logic to government. Some officials are dishonest. Therefore government is based upon dishonesty.

To business. Some merchants are dishonest. Therefore all are rogues. Some business enterprises are organized with intent to defraud. To admit this is equivalent to saying that all business enterprises are of the same class.

We might extend it further to the entire human race. Some people are knaves, robbers, criminals. But hold! To begin to decry the crime committed is tantamount to acknowledging that all are criminals.

It is just as reasonable to claim that all people are knaves and criminals merely because a few have been demonstrated to be such as it is to assume that because some mediums are frauds, therefore all must be classed as such.

Inconsistency, thou, too, art a jewel!

Upon a still body of water a repulsive looking scum will in time accumulate. It gathers only where the water is undisturbed. If conditions are right it spreads. In time it covers the entire tire surface. But the scum is only on the surface. Beneath, though obscured by the scum, the water may be clear and pure. If the water is in motion it will not form; or, if already there, you agitate the water and it will disappear.

The frauds of Spiritualism, like the scum, are only on the surface. They saw in Spiritualism an excellent field to ply their art. They came. Left undisturbed, they increased. They have forced themselves to the front, obscuring the hosts of true and honest mediums, who, rather than compete with them, remain in comparative obscurity, though laboring quietly, earnestly and effectively in their own communities, often unappreciated and in want, while skilled fakes revel in luxury, supported and applauded by the multitude, to the disgrace of true mediums and true Spiritualism. The frauds have not yet succeeded in forcing all the genuine mediums into the background. But the conclusion is inevitable that sometime in the future they will unless some decided effort is made to check their advance. Shall we blindly close our eyes to the true condition of things, allowing them to flourish, to increase and eventually to gain control of organized Spiritualism?

And the remedy?

Agitation! Ceaseless agitation! Give them no rest. They need stagnation and perfect quietude in order to flourish. They cannot endure if criticism is directed to their work. Keep incessantly agitating the matter and the frauds will eventually and inevitably disappear, and the true mediums, now held back by the more obtrusive fakes, will assume the place that is rightfully theirs. If every fraudulent medium now before the public was to be eradicated there would be no dearth of genuine mediums to fill their places. We have enough genuine mediums; remove the frauds and the true demonstrators of Spiritualism will come to the front.

Keep agitating.

A fraudulent medium is an ingenious person. He—or she—always has a simple, pellucid explanation for any suspicious circumstance in connection with the manifestations.

And, sad to say, some well-meaning Spiritualists will believe any excuse a humbug sees fit to make. They will smile to think how foolish the orthodox are to believe everything the minister or priest says—and then, with wide-open mouth and unreasoning credulity, proceed to believe everything a so-called medium tells them, no matter how little sense there may be to it.

Now I, together with a large number of thinking Spiritualists, have for a long time considered the mosquito-bar test a most excellent and satisfactory one, with the added advantage that it in no way interfered with the production of the phenomena.

Do you know that we were utterly mistaken?

If not, then let me show you the fallacy of our position. It has been admirably pointed out by the friend of a certain materializing medium to whom it was suggested that it would be an excellent idea to apply the mosquito-bar test. It is so unreasonable that I only wonder it has not been thought of before. Listen while I give it:

Of course it is well understood that the spirit who wishes to materialize must draw from the medium sufficient material to make his form visible. Well, the objection to the mosquito-bar test is simply that it prevents the spirit from drawing the necessary strength from the medium in as free and unobstructed a manner as is necessary for a good materialization.

How simple!

The clothing of the medium offers no obstacle to the production of the class of phenomena. The so-called spirit can even come out of the cabinet at times and close the curtains behind him without vitiating the conditions necessary for the production of the phenomena. Thus we see that the clothing of the medium and the dense curtains of the cabinet do not hinder the manifestations.

But you seek to place over the medium a gauzy, porous mosquito-bar, the mesh of which would apparently offer less obstruction to the free passage of whatever substance the spirit might draw from the medium than would the medium's clothes, and presto! like magic you have destroyed the "conditions" and made materialization impossible.

This is logic. Profound isn't it?

But in spite of these senseless objections, the mosquito-bar test stands today the simplest, the most perfect and effective test that has yet been devised. It is a test that no fraudulent medium will permit, and to which no genuine medium will object. And why will none of the so-called materializing mediums now before the public submit to it?

The reason is obvious.

GEORGE B. FERRIS.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Dr. Sheppard of the New Thought Searchlight, Allegheny, returned home after two weeks' visit at the "Lake."

Mrs. Coffman, on Saturday, Aug 27, gave a very nice talk to a number who had assembled in the auditorium. Whilst she was talking, Mrs. Marian Carpenter, the speaker for the last lectures of this season's course of lectures, came. Mrs. Coffman requested her to complete the afternoon's talk. She gave us a very kind greeting by saying, "I am so happy to be with you at the camp where man's hand has not smoothed off the beauty of nature."

Sunday, August 28, Mrs. Coffman prefaced Mrs. Carpenter's two lectures with an invocation to the Over Thought for their assistance and guidance in the walk of life.

Mrs. Carpenter's inspirers gave much knowledge of the earth's inventions, giving the thought the people of earth complete the inventions worked out in the spirit side of life. The lecturer said: "Search for the right in the earth life." The beautiful thought and knowledge between the lines, given to the people, was given in a very pleasing manner, and the earnest thought of right was expressed in every idea presented.

Mrs. Carpenter closed the afternoon's lecture by giving messages from those gone to a higher form of life. The well-filled auditorium listened in rapt attention. The inspired poetry sung was beautiful in sentiment and sung in a beautiful way. The sweet songster's kind thought was an inspiration to all who heard her.

LYDIE L. CURTIS.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

Only One Side to the Question.

A Comprehensive View as to Whether Spiritualists Should Take Up the Work of Exposing and Suppressing Fraudulent Mediumship, or Wait for the Outside Public to Do It for Them.

It is said that there are two sides to every question, but to the writer it seems that a question is now presented which has but one, namely, the question of whether Spiritualists themselves should take up the work of exposing and suppressing fraudulent mediumship, or wait for the outside public to do it for them.

IT IS INCREDIBLE THAT ANYONE WHO LOVES THE CAUSE OF SPIRITUALISM, SHOULD FOR A MOMENT OBJECT TO THE CLEANSING AND PURIFYING PROCESS, SHOULD RAISE HIS VOICE IN OPPOSITION TO THE INAUGURATION OF A CRUSADE AGAINST THE HORDE OF FAKES AND FRAUDS WHO INFEST OUR RANKS AND BRING DISCREDIT UPON THE WHOLE MOVEMENT.

For years this one foul blot has smirched the otherwise fair name of Spiritualism. Why it is allowed to remain there? Have we not strength enough, courage enough, pride and decency enough to marshal our forces and wipe it out? Oh! shame, that this condition should continue, year after year, and year after year.

A QUESTION ASKED AND ANSWERED.

Whose fault is it that all over the world frauds and fakes are masquerading in the name of Spiritualism? Who patronizes these frauds and fakes? Who supports them? Spiritualists. Who then is to blame for their existence? Spiritualists. Not the higher class of Spiritualists, but the less informed, the credulous, phenomena-hunting class who might better be denominated Spiritists, well-meaning people no doubt, but people who are sorely in need of enlightenment.

EDUCATION IN OUR RANKS.

And right here by way of parenthesis I wish to remark that we Spiritualists have a great work of education to do within our own ranks. How great we scarcely realize. It is not enough to convert a man to the truth of Spiritualism's most distinctive claim, to convince him of the fact of continued existence. THE KNOWLEDGE OF THIS FACT DOES NOT MAKE HIM A SPIRITUALIST BY ANY MEANS. THIS IS THE WORK OF YEARS. WIDE READING, DEEP STUDY, A LONG COURSE OF SELF-CULTURE AND SELF-DEVELOPMENT ARE NECESSARY BEFORE WE HAVE THAT GRAND PRODUCT OF THE PRESENT DAY, A GENUINE SPIRITUALIST.

THE FAKE EVIL ONE OF MANY.

The fake evil is but one of many ills which beset the Spiritualist movement to-day, evils which are directly traceable to the recently converted or the unenlightened class within our ranks. It is they who support the frauds and fakes. It is they who insist upon dragging into Spiritualism all the mummeries of the old religion, all the senseless rites and ceremonies of the church. The domain of Spiritualism is fast being settled by this class of immigrants. They are coming to us faster than we can assimilate them. And they are making mischief in more ways than one. But we must be patient. We must accept the situation as inevitable, and go on as rapidly as possible with the work of education. Spiritualism is not for the philosopher, the seer, the humanitarian alone, but for the whole world.

PURE AND UNADULTERATED SPIRITUALISM.

We must not expect, however, that the whole world is going to accept forthwith a pure and unadulterated Spiritualism. Not at all. The world as a whole is not ready for any such lofty and beautiful teaching. It was not ready for Christ in his day. How soon the pure stream of his teaching became polluted and corrupted! How soon the Christian religion as taught by its founder became mixed with and adulterated by paganism! Such a result was inevitable. Yet the truth once uttered could never be lost.

We must expect a similar result in the Spiritualist movement. The signs are not wanting. To those who have eyes to see, it is already here. Many of us have already resigned ourselves to the task of standing by and hearing a corrupted Spiritualism set forth by half-fledged speakers and mediums. We know that there is no help for this condition, that we may as well submit to the "powers that be," with faith that truth will ultimately triumph over error.

WE MUST EDUCATE, EDUCATE.

Meanwhile we must educate, educate! We must go on teaching the fundamental truths of our philosophy, go on weeding out falsehood and error wherever found. We must go on exposing the frauds and fakes, and teaching the uninitiated that all is not gold that glitters, that all is not genuine which comes in the name of Spiritualism.

If the undeveloped members of the great Spiritualist family are not able to protect themselves against the frauds and fakes, then the elder brothers and sisters should come as guardians to their assistance. No matter if these younger children do wail and cry at having their pet idols destroyed, let the work of demolition go on until not a fake medium is left to ply his nefarious trade, and feather his own nest at the expense of the credulous and unsuspecting.

MAKE IT UNPLEASANT FOR SWINDLERS.

Spiritualists, if they will, can make it so exceedingly unpleasant for these swindlers and humbugs that the last one will be glad to quit the business. No mercy should be shown them. A man or woman who is so lost to all sense of honor and decency as to trick and deceive the bereaved and broken-hearted searcher for tidings of his loved and lost, deserves no sympathy whatever. There is nothing in all the world so detestable as falsehood, nothing so despicable as deception, and when these are practised as a means of money getting, and the most sacred feelings of the heart are made their sport and prey, they become doubly heinous.

STRICT TEST CONDITIONS.

No seance should ever be held without strict test conditions, unless the persons who participate are well and intimately known to each other. In family circles and among intimate friends such conditions are of course unnecessary. But no public seance should ever be given without them. These test conditions, too, should be imposed by the sitters, never by the medium. "Tests" which the medium suggests or imposes upon himself are worthless.

If these rules were observed in every seance the fake evil would soon disappear. "Oh! but," it is said, "if you manifest a spirit of doubt and skepticism by insisting upon these tests, you utterly destroy the conditions for good manifestations."

It is true that a spirit of doubt and skepticism militates against a successful demonstration of spirit power. Every Spiritualist knows this. But for my part, if I were to attend a seance where no test conditions were imposed, I should be quite apt to feel doubtful and skeptical when some wonderful manifestation took place. I should have no means of knowing whether it were genuine or not, and suspicion would at once arise. On the other hand, if the test conditions were complete and satisfactory, I should feel assured that the manifestations were genuine. THE ONLY WAY TO ALLAY DOUBT, SUSPICION AND SKEPTICISM, IS NOT TO IMPOSE NO TEST CONDITIONS WHATEVER, BUT TO INSIST UPON THE MOST STRICT ONES THAT CAN BE DEVISED.

The conditions which destroy or prevent a genuine manifestation are in the minds of the sitters, not in the outward fact of tacking mosquito netting over the medium, placing his feet in a pan of flour, etc. If the minds of the sitters are satisfied and at ease, that is all that is necessary. But if a feeling of doubt and skepticism is present, failure to secure strict test conditions will not only not aid in the matter, but will aggravate the difficulty. So that this cry of "desroying manifestations," by insisting upon test conditions is the greatest nonsense.

I for one am glad The Progressive Thinker has turned the searchlight of investigation and publicity upon this subject, and I hope the good work will go on until the shame and disgrace from which Spiritualism is suffering will be a thing of the past. It is infinitely more creditable to "clean our own door-yard," than to wait for the health officer to call.

NORA BATCHELOR.

Ashland, Ore.

Views of a Canada Medium.

To the Editor:—In regard to the Open Court in The Progressive Thinker, for public working mediums to say what little they know—it is a trying task for them, but now it is started I hope honest and true mediums will come to the front and tell the truth boldly. Not only do away with fraud in the spiritual ranks, but also open the eyes of many so-called Spiritualists, that Spiritualism must be built up on these lines, truth, honesty and love; and for them to give just dues to true, honest workers, because you cannot build up Spiritualism without mediums.

In regard to the blue book, I have proof of it, and know it is used. Two years or over ago in Chicago, a party called on me in regard to the same. In Chicago there are manufactured every scheme for dishonest workers to tempt honest mediums; but you can not stop it. I am a platform worker and a life reader. As a medium, my motto is, to all, "Speak of me as you find me."

In regard to materializing, what little I have seen has been too much material to suit me. If my eyes were deceived, my guide would tell me otherwise, but I say it can be done by the proper medium under right conditions.

But who keeps the frauds?

Spiritualists.

Why?

Because they are not contented with what they hear from the friends in spirit life through a true medium; but no, not contented they must see. My advice to them is, to wait till they can go themselves, and not want too much. I have seen my own in spirit, from the departed body and also the living body, in my own places, and I shall not content till I can leave my old body for good, to see my own in spirit life. That is my experience.

Spiritualists must not be too selfish, and wish for medium gifts. The great trouble is, all want to be mediums if it is possible for them to be; but my advice is, become spiritual first, and don't look for fraud from every medium you see, till you are sure they do so, and then do your duty in regard to themselves and Spiritualism. But remember, true gifted mediums are not tied or bound to Spiritualism. I have been thanked by Jews and Gentiles and all kinds, and made them my true friends, everywhere.

Spiritualists must not be too selfish, and to-day there is too much selfishness among workers, but in a true spiritual medium I fail to find it, is my experience. To all honest, true workers, my best wishes go with them. I have not said all I wish, but must close this, and hope that all who read these lines will think well of my advice, and do not disgust the honest true platform workers, so as to leave your platform. Without them you fail for all coming time.

Toronto, Can. PROF. RANSBY.

A New Way to Kill Crime.

To the Editor:—I have been a Spiritualist and observer of the various workings of mediums for more than fifty years, and can testify that there are frauds in the ranks of the grandest philosophy that was ever given to mortals, and some are such palpable fakes that it would seem that the most gullible could see. I cannot agree with Dr. M. E. Conger that "If the fraud agitation should cease, and the word be blotted out from our vocabulary, at the end of ten years there would be less fraud than at this date." It is only of late that there has been much agitation on the subject. Neither do I believe that this agitation is going to make more fraud; on the contrary all counterfeits will "watch out," knowing that there is a vigilance committee on their track, and at any moment may overtake them. I cannot accept Brother C.'s view, for if it be a correct basis, we had better wipe from our vocabulary, murder, theft and all other crimes, that are being forcibly brought to our notice. Would crime cease then? Spiritualist lecturers are more sought after and are more popular if they give messages in connection with their lectures. I can name some who have to resort to knowledge gained otherwise than from the invisible. One of these would seldom be called to lecture if she didn't pretend to give tests after her lecture. One is a fine trance speaker, but the people want their appetizing dessert, and she made most bungling work of trying to give messages. I fear that her good trance control may weaken and foil her altogether sometime, if she continues the practice of trying to please the people on that line. Who is at fault, people or medium. MRS. C. C. BACON.

Ravenna, Ohio.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

The Way of the Fake.

It is vividly portrayed by G. H. Reynolds, of Los Angeles, Cal., at one time the hot-bed of fake materializing mediums. The exposure there of methods of Mr. Crindle—son of Elsie Reynolds—and his wife, as well as many others, has had a tendency to purify the atmosphere there, and give Spiritualism a solid basis on which to stand. The Open Court has illuminated the Truth with a brighter glow, and Spiritualism will now advance as never before.

He Shows the Methods of Fake Mediums.

Since Mrs. Hyland withheld some information regarding the methods practiced by fakirs, I wish, as a Spiritualist, to reply to Mr. McFarland, by telling how some of the tricks are performed, which I learned from mediums.

I have found that fake mediums not only know the address of a Chicago firm where paraphernalia and methods for Spiritualistic tricks are sold, but of other houses which make this their business. Hence, those who would do these things can obtain a few methods, and then exchange with other mediums. But when the tricks are well known, then the business of the fakir becomes non-interesting to spectators. All those to whom I have shown how the tricks were done, could easily discern the fraud when witnessing. Hence, "knowledge is power."

What appear to be physical manifestations from the spirit world has been very generally witnessed by Spiritualists and occasionally by many others during the history of the race. These phenomena seem to consist of two classes; those that appeal to the physical senses and come at will when the conditions are suitable, and those that come only spasmodically and appear to be physical, but are in fact, discerned only by the psychic sense.

The spirit rap, table-tipping, and table-moving, which can be produced at will, may be classed as physical phenomena, because recognized by the physical senses. Clairvoyance, clairaudience and clairsentience belong to the mental phenomena and may be produced at will. These last named have often been so vivid that it has seemed to the sensitive as physical demonstration in comparison to the similar dimmer manifestations coming at will. That it is purely psychic is established by the fact that only those present endowed as mediums, were cognizant of the manifestations.

It is a noticeable fact that those generally converted to Spiritualism through fakism from the material and mortal standpoint know but little, if any, of the grandeur and power of the truth in reforming humanity by lifting it to a high moral and spiritual standpoint. This class does not patronize the public meetings, lectures, or Spiritualist press, for they seek simply their own gratification for the passing moment.

In materialization, the professed mediums generally carry their paraphernalia about their persons except when under test conditions. Then a confederate, whom you would least suspect, for the paltry sum of a dollar, places it, enclosed in a black bag, in the hands of the fakir, or within the cabinet. In every case where an exposure has been made, and the fakir with his confederates examined, the paraphernalia has been found on their persons. Hence, every pretext possible has been given for keeping people from grabbing, so as to be able to continue the deception.

The credulity of the gullibles is something wonderfully strange, and can be accounted for by the fact that through attending such places, they are held under the control of dark earth-bound spirits who surround the medium.

Whatever one's occupation, he will be surrounded by spirits who will assist him in his work, though unconscious of unseen help. As a teacher, blacksmith or thief are aided by the spirit world in harmony with their several vocations, so is a fakir helped. Many of these false mediums not only give the blue book tests, but as they, themselves, declare, whatever else comes into their heads, and which generally proves appropriate. This shows spirit intelligence, but who wants communication from dark spirits such as must necessarily be around a deceiver? It follows that when a medium is once caught practicing legerdemain, he should be frowned upon, that faking may be discouraged and honest mediumship not belittled by the comparison if the impossible to be obtained from true psychics.

A well known professed medium on the Pacific coast receives his paraphernalia from his manager, who stands in front of the curtains where they part, and makes a nice little speech while the fakir within the cabinet slips his hands to the waist of the manager, under the coat and extracts the paraphernalia. After the seance, while the manager is again standing with his back to the curtain, explaining what has occurred, the fakir returns the paraphernalia to the waist of the manager.

It is an old story that ten yards of fine silk has been hidden in a watch case, a hollow heel, and the hem of a garment, as well as on the person; so that a committee for investigation not knowing the little points may be easily deceived. But when the people are made aware of some of these little tricks, they will not prove such easy marks.

There is a clever trick practiced, by which spirits seem to float down into the seance room. This is accomplished in a dark seance by a center piece being cut around, from which a chandelier is suspended, so the whole may be moved downward from the room above, so as to suspend a black ladder, down which may glide the forms robed in whiteness, glittering with phosphorescence.

Remember that black is not visible in darkness, so in a dark seance the medium comes forth, clothed in black and holding aloft a robe nicely wrapped in a black cloth, which is adroitly withdrawn and the robe allowed to fall over the form as the black cloth is being tucked out of sight. Thus a spirit seems to materialize from the air. Reverse the process, by slipping the robe upward and pulling the black cloth in place so the white robe is out of sight and a spirit has seemed to dematerialize.

How wonderful it is to see what appears to be a child or matured person rise up out of the floor. This is also done in the dark seance. The fakir with the robe hidden in a bunch comes out in black unseen, and lies prostrate. As the robe is unfolded and thrown over the head, the black cowl, having eye holes, is removed and the head lifted up, thus giving the appearance of a head protruding from the floor. The fakir arises, and lets the robe fall over his form, and a beautiful guide (?) appears.

Reverse the process, by the fakir pulling the white up around the head as he again lies prostrate, so the erect head is the last to be seen when the black is again thrown over head, and all whiteness being hidden, the spirit has seemed to disappear through the floor. The materialized child is generally a dummy manipulated by the fakir, or his confederates. It will materialize at your knee and slip away—so wonderful! Wonderful fools and slow of heart are we! Just turn on the lights at such a time and the truth of this statement will be seen.

Again the fakir from within the cabinet, may place a white robe in a wad on floor close to cabinet and pull it up while she slips quickly within its folds, and so a farm may appear in a "fair light" at the portals "of the cabinet."

The fakir after representing a form may drop a "spirit capsule" on the carpet as he returns to the cabinet from whence he calls out: "Friends, watch for a form to appear within the circle." This capsule slowly opens into a vapor, enveloping a tiny form, which enlarges into full stature and seems to talk when the medium is a good ventriloquist. As all fireworks vanish in a short time, so does this wonderful form.

Before entering the cabinet, the medium often sits near the aperture, with a shoulder at a slit of the curtain, through which she can extend her arm with a white robe, hanging over her hand, shown at opening of the cabinet. A telescopic rod can be extended six feet, so as to show this drapery above or below as desired; while two rods draped will show two spirit forms.

A medium (?) dressed in luminous robe may hold a robe suspended from each hand, so as to represent three spirits at once, and of different heights. A confederate may be called to the cabinet to hold one or two of these dummies by simply slipping his hand under the drapery, where the medium's hand is, when the medium may sally forth to greet some one in the circle, while the supposed spirit or spirits are left at the entrance to talk with the confederate. When many are materialized (?) outside, help is necessary from confederates, who may enter the room through sliding panels, mop boards, etc., all fixed so as to escape detection in the seance room. Trap door contrivances have always been discovered, from other apartments in the house.

Small rubber balloons, illuminated with phosphorescence, can be blown up under a black cloth, and floated in the air, when the black cloth is removed by a black telescopic rod, and balls of light appear, to be moved about by the rod.

A confederate can carry in a small bottle, a liquid, which can be blown into the air, causing a slight commotion, which produces lights.

Stuffed rubber gloves fastened to a telescopic rod can touch the members of a circle. If three confederates sit together, the center one can do what he pleases, unobserved in the darkness.

To avoid being caught, the medium sets up false claims against the breaking of conditions in grabbing or turning on the lights.

But, my dear friends, this is a sure way to try the spirits to see of what it consists. G. H. REYNOLDS.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Detected With the Trumpet in Her Hands, Making Spirit Manifestations.

To the Editor:—The following from the Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel, of August 12, speaks for itself:

"You have killed him! You have killed him!" hysterically exclaimed Mrs. Otto J. Eckhardt, 1223 Twelfth street, to Detective H. Fred Peck, last night.

Peck had flashed an electric light on the woman, who was acting as a medium at a trumpet seance. He had paid 50 cents admission to the seance, but the doorkeeper had not noticed that the officer had secreted a lantern under his coat when he entered. According to the woman, the victim of the tragedy was the "spirit," whose high jinks the officer had stopped by flashing the light in the dark room.

This marks the opening of a crusade which the police have begun against Spiritualist seances and trance mediums in various parts of the city. The officer had three witnesses with him and this morning the facts will be laid before the authorities at the city hall and if the law has been violated, warrants will be asked for.

Detective Makes Careful Plans.

The visit to the Eckhardt seance had been carefully planned by Detective Peck. Tuesday evening, accompanied by Oscar Baerecke, janitor of central station, he had gone to the house to attend a seance to get an idea as to how to proceed in the matter. The seance was not a success, the "Indian chieftain," under whose influence Mrs. Eckhardt was said to give forth manifestations, not being in a congenial mood. When Peck returned to the station, he made requisition for a large sized electric flashlight, which he procured yesterday. Accompanied by Baerecke and the matron of the station, he returned to the "spirit rendezvous" last night. What happened there can best be told in Detective Peck's own words. He said last night:

"Medium" Behind Flower Pots.

"When we asked for admittance we were received with a great deal of cordiality and ushered into a handsomely furnished front parlor. Chairs were placed in a circle, and the "medium" took her station before several pots of Chinese asters. To one side of her, on the floor, I noticed a large pan of water and a paper made trumpet. Another trumpet, made of tin, was on the other side. They must have been about four feet in length. When we had all been seated—there were nine of us in the circle—Mrs. Eckhardt ordered her husband to put out the lights, after the shades had been fastened down. When all was in darkness, she asked us to join hands and sing 'Nearer, My God, to Thee'—but not too loud, for fear of awakening other spirits in the neighborhood who were not desired in our company, I presume.

"Chief's" Voice Suspicious.

"'Chief Nasco is here,' I heard a voice say, which sounded suspiciously like the voice of the woman, but it came from another direction than that where she was seated. The 'chief's' voice seemed to be traveling in all directions. Now we heard it above us; then as if coming from the nether world; next it was close to my ears; now I thought its breath was mingling with my own. I then began to hear light taps, as of some one hitting another lightly upon the head. Once something grazed my nose, it seemed the proper range had not been found. While I was cogitating over what was happening all around me, and while the cold sweat was running down my spinal column, I was startled to hear a voice call to me:

"'Henry, I am Chief Weidner.'

"I was wondering what I had done to the fellow that he was seeking me, when something struck me on the head. I had worked my lantern out of my pocket by this time, and suddenly flashed it in the direction from which I had received the stroke, presumably from 'Chief Weidner.' I could not believe my eyes for a moment.

Uses Trumpet for Weapon."

"There was Mrs. Eckhardt, stretching forth her arms over me, in each hand a trumpet, frantically trying to hit me on the head. Consternation reigned supreme. The trumpets began to rain down on me with fury, in an endeavor to put out the light. Not succeeding, the 'medium' fell upon the floor and called out to me:

"'You have killed him! You have killed him!'

"I was indeed sorry for 'him,' and should really not have flashed the light. For, did the medium not tell us most emphatically Tuesday evening that under no conditions were we to strike a light in the room during a manifestation, for fear of killing the 'spirit,' who so kindly had volunteered to come over the Styx for the benefit of us poor mortals? Before I could express my repentance, the 'medium's husband had me by the throat in an effort to get the better of me. I thought it about time to sound the retreat. It was too much for me, and my pent up feelings had need to be aired. When we arrived outside I took with me as a prize souvenir, her business sign, done most artistically in red and black, which read:

"'Take Notice! We charge only for our time. Trumpet seance, 50 cents.'

"The little group of 'spirit' communers left the place in a different frame of mind from that in which they had come."

The above gives a sad picture of what is going on in Milwaukee. What is the remedy? Can the state association tell? Can the N. S. A. point out a course to pursue that will bring conspicuously to the front the genuine phenomena and leave trickery in the rear?

There are two parties in the field—one party would cover up fraud, carefully conceal it from the "innocents," and let the bad work go on. Whew! Those who have been swindled, and badly fooled, "cry fraud," in stentorian tones! Where are we at? is an important question. Can you tell? Can anybody tell? Should fraud be suppressed in business, and not in Spiritualism? Should you cry fraud when you find sand in your sugar, poison in your vinegar, and lard in your butter? and not do the same thing when you find fraud in Spiritualism? MILWAUKEE.

The Wisdom of Passion

BY SALVARONA.

"In modern philosophy there are three great treatises on the Passions, that of Spinoza, that of Hume, and that of Salvarona."—Philosophical Journal.

Illustrated with three handsome portraits of Emerson, Hosea, Byron. 12mo. 250 pages. Red cloth; gold title. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of price by postal note.

Price, $1.00. Postage, 10 Cents.

The extraordinary merits of "The Wisdom of Passion" are the copiousness of human insight and content in the way of fact and reference with which the book is crammed. Its main thesis I agree with.—Prof. William James, Harvard University.

I have found "The Wisdom of Passion" to be a book of powerful erudition and fine intuition. I would be happy if in a certain sense I had inspired it.—Prof. Ceasare Lombroso.

Here is a man who sees and says things for himself. He is not retailing conventionalities. The book fairly bristles with wise sayings. I believe the thesis is sustainable and that the author has gone a long way toward fortifying it. After I took up the book, I did not quit, except for meals and sleep till I had read it carefully from cover to cover.—Albion W. Small, Head of Dept. of Sociology and Director of Affiliated Work for the University of Chicago.

I am somewhat familiar with the tendency in modern thought to give primary place to feeling—with James' "Will to Believe," with Ward's social philosophy, with Shelley's and Browning's philosophy. "The Wisdom of Passion" fits in with their contributions. The main thesis of the book—that the soul forms its own forms by its choice—I can ascribe to—Prof. Oscar Lovell Triggs, University of Chicago.

Address all orders to H. G. Walters, Langhorne, Pa.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked lives. Price, by mail, $1.

"Social Upbuilding, Including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lectures upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

From Two Leading Minds.

Will C. Hodge, now in California, is a well known lecturer in the ranks of Spiritualism. He has a host of admiring friends in Chicago and elsewhere who are always glad to hear from him. He is followed by Dr. G. E. Chesbro, a prominent Spiritualist of Los Angeles, who has occupied the rostrum there and created great interest by his lectures. The articles by both will be read with interest.

Wants the Whole Truth.

• • • Certainly it is to our disgrace that as a people we have so long allowed these conditions to continue and that for fear of injury to the cause we have kept these nefarious practices in the back ground instead of exposing them to the full light of day. There is not such a dearth of mediums possessing honesty of purpose and integrity of character and many would have us believe, and it is due to such as well as the cause they represent that the dishonest be unhesitatingly exposed whenever and wherever they may be found. We are, however, confronted with difficulties in dealing with the problem of what is known as fake mediumship. The fakir, pure and simple, can easily be disposed of but it is not such an easy matter to dispose of persons who at times present unmistakably genuine manifestations and at other times are grossly fraudulent and deceptive. It is this class of mediums who have done more to bring Spiritualism into disrepute than the whole horde of mountebanks who possess no psychic power whatever. I HAVE STOOD BEHIND THE CURTAIN OF A MATERIALIZING MEDIUM, TALKING WITH MY WIFE AS READILY AND AS NATURALLY AS WHEN SHE WAS IN THE PHYSICAL FORM, AND WHILE SO CONVERSING, FROM OUT THE VIEWLESS AIR CAME THE FORM OF HER FATHER, BOTH TALKING TO ME AT THE SAME TIME, AND WITH THE MEDIUM IN FULL VIEW AND SITTING IN HER CHAIR. AT OTHER TIMES I HAVE SEEN THE SAME MEDIUM PUT UP JOBS ON THE CIRCLE OF INVESTIGATORS THAT OUGHT TO CAUSE THE FACE OF THE ORTHODOX DEVIL TO BLUSH FOR VERY SHAME. But the question is, What are we going to do about it and how are we to deal with this problem?

Brother Loveland's proposition that we entirely discard commercial mediumship may be a good one, but the trouble is it won't work. There is no law against it and no person can prevent a medium from exercising their mediumship and receiving compensation for their time and services, and it is only just that they do this, as much so as for a speaker to receive compensation for a lecture, or a preacher for preaching.

Any medium who is honest in his purpose and conscientious in his work is by every principle in equity and justice entitled to compensation for his work.

Between Brother Loveland's proposition and that of the honorable treasurer of the N. S. A., T. J. Mayer, of Washington, D. C., who would let the investigator take his medicine until he found out what was good for him, and until his wisdom teeth are cut, I would much prefer to abide by the Mayer proposition. Should we entertain for one moment the proposition that the law be invoked to suppress commercial mediumship, it would be only an entering wedge for the suppressing of mediumship altogether.

Personally I hold to the position stated on former occasions, viz.: WHENEVER AND WHEREVER MEDIUMS ARE FOUND WHO ARE DELIBERATELY DEFRAUDING THE PUBLIC IN ANY WAY WHATSOEVER, LET THEM BE "ANATHEMA MARANTHA" SO FAR AS SPIRITUALISTS ARE CONCERNED, AND LET ALL LOCAL SOCIETIES AS WELL AS ALL CAMP ASSOCIATIONS FOREVER DEBAR THEM FROM OCCUPYING OUR PLATFORMS OR FROM HOLDING SEANCES ON OUR CAMP GROUNDS. Let this rule be rigidly adhered to for a period of five years and most of our trouble in this direction would disappear, while a few convictions with a term in the penitentiary as a penalty would dispose of the traveling scoundrels who are fattening their pocket books at the expense of the public.

Drastic? Yes, but none too much so. It is a maxim that the receiver of stolen goods is as bad as the thief, and any local society or camp association that will in any way countenance any persons as mediums when they have been convicted of deliberately defrauding the public are "particeps criminis" in the transaction.

It seems to me that our speakers and teachers have been remiss in their duties in not specifically informing the general public, and especially investigators, that "all is not gold that glitters," that all spirits are by no means saints nor are all mediums honest, and that the spiritual mariner who starts out upon the sea of commercial Spiritualism in pursuit of truth must keep his weather eye open and look out for squalls. We have little or no trouble in San Diego in keeping the good ship Spiritualism fairly righted, having plenty of good local talent for the rostrum as well as mediums of undoubted integrity for the presentation of phenomena, and when one of the traveling fraternity who professes to do everything except to raise the dead happens to come our way, we read his glowing announcement from the rostrum and give him plenty of free advertising by giving his true status and drawing the line of demarkation between his pretentions and true mediumship, with the result that he soon discovers that he has imperative business in another locality. I was much pleased with the article of J. Young McFarland, and with himself am very anxious to know just how Mrs. Hyland successfully personated all three of those babies at once. The plea that it is not advisable to make this disclosure on the ground that it would give the snap away to other mediums, and thus augment the amount of fraud, is altogether too thin, and leaves her, to say the least, in a very interesting position. If her statement is true and she really has in view the exposure of the tricks of cabinet mediums, it seems to be in order that she tell the whole story for the further protection of investigators and the general public. Justice and fair play demands this of her, and the question will not down until fairly answered, and Mr. McFarland is not the only one who will continue to demand an explanation. Let us have the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and with this we will be content. WILL C. HODGE.

San Diego, Cal.

A Pestilential Disease.

The present fermentation, consisting of a confusion of ideas within the ranks of the great body of Spiritualists concerning certain doubtful phenomena, has existed in latency for a long time where it has been accumulating like a pestilential disease in the darkness, only abiding its time for development, which must always surely come in all cases of the kind when exposed to the healing power of truth that always brings to light the hidden things of darkness—corruption—in all their heinous forms and reveals the hydra-head which threatens destruction in death. This is just exactly the case with Spiritualism as it presents itself to the world to-day.

Modern Spiritualism was born a healthy, vigorous, and promising child.

It was welcomed at first by many of the religiously inclined, to whom it had come to teach the ways of life, and a knowledge of its mysteries, more perfectly. While yet a child it confounded the doctors of the doctrines and dogmas of the existing popular religious regime by presenting a teaching embracing an all comprehending principle of truth which proclaimed universal freedom to human thought, making every one personally accountable for his own words and acts, with no subterfuge for the hypocrite, promising peace, good will and eternal life to all.

This was too far in advance for the doctors of divinity who had learned and taught how to shift all responsibility upon another, by which only the favored few would be saved. These, therefore, joined in one voice and sent forth to the world the proclamation that Spiritualism was the works of Beelzebub, and so turned it over to the devil—and to the devil it went.

When that large, strongly organized, educated and disciplined body—the professed Christian church—holding the balance of power in wealth; holding the key to education by giving tone to the text books, and assuming the controlling power in our social system through popular literature, turned against Spiritualism, it proved to be a tremendous blow. This was accomplished first, by making Spiritualism unpopular and secondly, by leaving it in the hands of those who as a class were materially-minded, and being undeveloped and undisciplined in things spiritual, could be appealed to only on the plane of material thought, thus offering a most excellent opportunity for the charlatan to duplicate the phenomena of Spiritualism and assume the role of mediums.

It is certainly amusing to hear and read the statements of these very credulous people who believe wholly or in part that the tricks performed, and the stock tests given by the fakir, are from the "dear spirits," simply because they cannot see how these things could be done in any other way. It requires a clear, bright mind, honestly seeking to know the truth, to be sharp enough to detect the tricks of the fraud medium, just as in any other legerdemain. There is deception in our whole business system, and the fake medium who seeks for glory, honor, and money, does not scruple to adopt any conceivable method for securing the same. But really he is not so much to be olamed as the people who, through their own ignorance by refusing to learn concerning true mediumship, demand more than an honest medium can do. Hence, many genuine mediums, having no comparative prestige or means of support, are induced by the fakirs to engage in fraud, by which in giving things "definite" they may be encouraged and sustained by the main body of professed Spiritualists, many of whom are acquainted with the fake methods. There are no words in any language adequate for the just condemnation of these last mentioned.

This apostasy of Spiritualism has driven able speakers from our rostrum, and kept others away; it has largely driven sensible people from our public meetings; it has degraded our moral status, and sent the beautiful philosophy and science of our religion trailing in the dust until the cup of a righteous indignation is full which will be poured out upon this demon of destruction, for we can see it written in the very air that the day of his judgment has dawned. It is clearly evident that the angel world has sent to the four corners of the earth to gather chosen instruments to expose—yes, expose. You can never see an error until it is exposed, and error can be exposed only by knowing the truth.

It would be beyond the power of speech to express the great gratitude of all Spiritualists to Brother Francis for opening the columns of the largest and most widely circulated Spiritualist paper in the world for the ventilation of this question, which serves as a safety valve for all this corruption, that there may be no great convulsion to wreck our cause. When Spiritualism is healed of this rotten disease of fraud, it will be free to arise and enter upon its great mission in breaking the shackles that bind the minds and souls of men in slavery to superstition which has ever clogged the wheels of human progress and held the world in darkness, misery and death. G. E. CHESBRO.

Los Angeles, Cal.

THE MOSQUITO BAR TEST.

To the Editor:—I am glad that some of your contributors have suggested the mosquito-bar test. It is splendid. It answers the purpose perfectly. The fraud can not get out of it, and the genuine medium can, only escape therefrom by being dematerialized, in which event spirit power is demonstrated in a manner that none can doubt. No fraud will submit to this test—mark my word—no fraud will submit to it unless he has a confederate who can successfully play "spirit." I would like to see Mr. Aber, Mr. Riley and the various other materializing mediums who are considered genuine, tested in this manner for the benefit of science and Spiritualists at large. IBEN STONE.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. Price 75 cents.

"The Majesty of Calmness, or Individual Problems and Possibilities." By Wm. George Jordan. Another valuable little work. Price 20 cents.

"Buddhism and Its Christian Critics." By Dr. Paul Carus. An excellent study of Buddhism; compact yet comprehensive. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, $1.25.

FRAUDS IN SPIRITUALISM.

The Views of a Prominent Journalist and Spiritualist.

In a former article I indicated the view that on a priori grounds, from belief in the existence of spirits and in the possibility of communicating with them through mediums, more or less fraud is inevitable, for dishonest persons are sure to take advantage of the credulity of those who are ready to pay money for what they are easily made to believe are messages from their departed friends. The only cure for deception and imposition in this line is that habit of mind, which results from reasonable skepticism, discrimination and the scientific spirit in examining all claims made and all phenomena exhibited in the name of Spiritualism.

THE NOTION THAT THERE IS ANYTHING NECESSARILY AND EXCEPTIONALLY SACRED IN COMMUNICATING WITH SPIRITS SHOULD GIVE WAY TO THE CONVICTION THAT ALL TRUTH IS SACRED. THERE IS NO MORE SACREDNESS IN COMMUNICATING WITH A SPIRIT OUT OF THE FLESH THAN THERE IS IN COMMUNCATING WITH A SPIRIT IN THE FLESH.

THE SACREDNESS OF A MESSAGE IS IN ITS CHARACTER, NOT IN THE FACT THAT IT COMES FROM SOMEBODY WHO IS "ON THE OTHER SIDE."

If it is believed to be from one of precious memory, the message will be of unusual and of tender interest to the receiver, but no assumption of sacredness should prevent the use of all reasonable safeguards and precautions to guard against self-delusion or imposition by others. Why should a sane person be awe-stricken by seeing a figure in a darkened room, hearing a voice through a trumpet or by any other appearance or sound, genuine or fraudulent, in a circle?

Nothing but intelligence, accurate observation, the spirit and method of the scientific investigator, which make every preconception and sentiment subordinate to arriving at the truth, will eliminate fraud from the Spiritualist movement. It will be a long time before these qualities will be so general as to render it impossible for charlatans to profit by the credulity of men and women who are anxious to hear from relatives and friends who have passed away, and it will be a long time before the general moral plane will be so high as to make charlatans and charlatanry impossible.

All that self-respecting men and women, Spiritualists and others, can hope to do in this world to lessen fraud, is to expose it whenever practicable; to have nothing to do approvingly with any movement, society or person known to be conducted by, or encouraging the authors of fraud, and meanwhile to urge persistently the importance of the critical, investigating spirit and of making all examinations of public so-called spirit performances, under conditions precluding the possibility of collusion or deception.

Those who take this attitude will encounter opposition from two classes—persons directly or indirectly interested pecuniarily in the perpetration of fraud in connection with Spiritualism, and the much larger number who believe that many of the really fraudulent performances are genuine spirit phenomena, and are ready to sympathize with and defend the clever tricksters and charlatans whenever they are exposed. This makes the work of the unmasker of fraud one of antagonism in which he is assailed not only by practicers of fraud but by many honest people he is trying to undeceive and to benefit.

There are persons also with rather obtuse moral sensibilities who perceive the fraud, but in their zeal for the cause, believe they are warranted in using their influence in hiding it or minimizing the need of exposing it.

It is evident that in these circumstances the most effective way of opposing the evil is to accompany the work of exposure with the more general educative work of emphasizing the importance of scrutiny, discrimination and verification in the investigation of all public or semi-public exhibitions of the alleged doings of spirits.

If it is said that by exposures of fraudulent pretended mediums, many will lose faith in Spiritualism, the answer is, first, that this, if true, shows that fraud is a considerable factor in producing converts to the system.

SECOND, THAT A BELIEF PRODUCED BY FRAUD IS A BELIEF, WHICH, HOWEVER HONEST, IS WITHOUT MORAL OR SPIRITUAL BASIS, AND OUGHT TO BE DIVESTED OF THE SPURIOUS ELEMENT WHICH ENTERED INTO ITS FORMATION.

Mere belief in spirits and their agency in human life, is not in itself a guarantee of high character or elevated thought. It exists among savages and semi-civilized peoples in all degress of ignorance and animalism. If with the conception of continued life and belief in communion with invisible intelligences, there is not mental and moral development, love of truth, aspirations for better and higher conditions with the awakening and growth of the spiritual faculties, there is little in mere spiritism upon which to base hope of "the good time coming."

In these times most efforts to enlighten or help mankind, whether it be the work of evolutionists or that of men and women who represent the opposite extreme of thought, the Salvation lads and lassies, command respectful consideration.

BUT NO ORGANIZATION OR CULT, OR CLASS OF BELIEVERS THAT ALLOWS TRICKERY TO BE PERPETRATED UNDER ITS AUSPICES, AND RESERVES ITS DENUNCIATION FOR THOSE WHO TRY TO KEEP IT DECENT AND CLEAN, CAN HAVE ANY SUCH RECOGNITION FROM DISCRIMINATING MINDS THAT LOVE TRUTH AND HATE FALSEHOOD AND FRAUD.

Spiritualists, therefore, with their high professions, should avoid shielding or defending any "materializing," trumpet" or other pretended mediumistic performances which are fairly open to condemnation or suspicion from their antecedent improbability, or from the absence of precautions to exclude deception and the presence of motives or reasons for its perpetration.

EXPOSURES OF FRAUD SHOULD BE UNSPARING, BUT WITHOUT REVENGE OR RESENTMENT. Many of those who are in the disreputable business are, judging from a number I have seen, neurotics, perverts and degenerates, who are almost morally irresponsible for what they do, and they all must be deficient in moral sense.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Quincy, Ill.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

"An Infamous Dynamite Roman Catholic Conspiracy Detected and Exposed." "Romanism Exposed." Two pamphlets by Rev. J. G. White, author of Startling Facts. Price 10 cents each, or two for 15 cents.

HOW TO PREVENT FRAUD.

A Well Known Californian Expresses His Opinion.

This question of how to prevent fraud in the ranks of Spiritualism is a problem which should be solved, and I think it not impossible of solution. If the same methods adopted in our public institutions in preparing men and women for a profession were adopted towards mediums who go before the public, there would be less liability of fraud being practiced. When applicants enter college and obtain the degree they seek, they are furnished with a proper certificate, and if such a course was adopted with all test mediums, and none were countenanced but those who had passed a successful examination by a committee appointed by the N. S. A., there would be but little show for fakes or fakers who curse the cause and are a detriment to the success of genuine mediumship.

Such a committee could be appointed in every State; no one of such committee being qualified, but those who were honest and above reproach, to act as judges. I am aware that there are as many phases of mediumship almost as there are mediums, but a certificate could be given each applicant to correspond to the phase of mediumship.

Every careful observer must be aware that dishonesty pervades almost every profession, and fraud and hypocrisy runs rampant from church to State, and those who are searching after truth should TAKE NOTHING FOR GRANTED, BUT PROVE ALL THINGS BEFORE THEY ACCEPT THEM. The old adage is applicable to us all, that "Not all is gold that glitters," and I am afraid that too many who accept the spiritualistic theory are not careful enough to discriminate between an honest medium and a faker.

MR. CRINDLE IS THE SON OF ELSIE REYNOLDS.

TAKE THE CASE OF THE CRINDLES, WHO WERE CAUGHT HERE IN THE ACT OF PASSING OFF THEIR PHYSICAL BODIES FOR THOSE WHO HAD TAKEN ON THE ROBES OF IMMORTALITY. I ATTENDED ONE OF THEIR SEANCES, AND ONE WAS ENOUGH TO CONVINCE ME THAT THER WAS "SOMETHING ROTTEN IN DENMARK."

When they were arrested here and placed behind the bars, our city officials let them go, on their promise of leaving the city, which was entirely wrong, as they ought to have been sent to prison for a few years for obtaining money under false pretense.

The case of Elsie Reynolds is somewhat different, as I have attended many of her seances, and have seen quite a number of materializations where there was no possible chance of fraud, and yet during the same seance there were manifestations which in my opinion were make-ups.

I am of the opinion that Elsie is a fine ventriloquist, which added to the genuine made a performance which would easily deceive the credulous.

Some few months since I asked Elsie why she did not allow some well-known citizen a seat in her cabinet, which would be absolute proof that her materialization was genuine. She indignantly remarked, that it would make no difference with the public. That convinced me that my estimate that some of it was made up, was correct.

It would make this article too long to specify as to what was genuine and what was apparently false.

It is a notable fact that there are scores of people on the public rostrum who apply their mediumship under some other name, owing to the odium cast upon Spiritualism by fakirs. Anna Eva Fay was one of those. In her performance here some months since, I was one of the committee on the rostrum, and I remarked to her that I was cognizant of the fact that she had been a medium for many years, although her manager stated to the audience that her manifestations would be left entirely to the opinions of the audience. This is only one instance of many of the perquisites donated to the cause of Spiritualism by mediums assuming other names.

In conclusion, I hope that our prominent writers will take up the idea which I have presented, as to formulating some plan whereby none but those who are worthy should represent officially the different phases of mediumship. The honest expression and condemnation by The Progressive Thinker and its corps of able correspondents, of the frauds perpetrated under the guise of mediumship, is commendable, and all such frauds should be placed in headline type on a black list in its colmns.

No honest, intelligent Spiritualist can afford to countenance a class of humbugs and unprincipled fakirs whose place should be behind prison bars, instead of attempting to teach and demonstrate the proof of immortality.

G. MAJOR TABER.

Los Angeles, Cal.

A Case of Obsession.

The case of obsession and its successful treatment reported in Light of July 2, is of much interest. Can any of your readers suggest a remedy for a case of a similar kind? Three years ago a lady underwent magnetic treatment for nervous breakdown, and from that time she began to develop mediumistically, and became both clairvoyant and clairaudient. Unfortunately three astral entities of a low type were drawn to her, and soon gained complete control over both her mental and her physical activities. Her life has become a burden to her, as she is rarely given any peace, but she believes that she is helping the spirits on the other side, and consequently does not feel it right to prevent their attempts at completely obsessing her. Matters are apparently on the verge of a crisis, and yet what help can be given to one who refuses to recognize the fact that it is wrong to sacrifice oneself in order to "help" those fallen souls on the other side?—W. Tudor Poole, in Light, London.

A Fake Who Stands at the Head.

I promised the readers of the Progressive Thinker a farther report as to Prof. R. E. Dutton, whose mail was held at the Lincoln postoffice, pending a fraud order issued by the Postmaster General. The case came before Judge Munger, U. S. District Judge at Omaha, August 8. His decision sustained the action of the Postmaster General and all Dutton's mail has been marked "fraudulent," and returned to writers, and the Professor, it seems, has taken his departure. He claimed to have the greatest psychic power of any living being; there was nothing too wonderful for him to perform. Talk about your fakes, he stands at the head of the class. DR. P. S. GEORGE.

Lincoln, Neb.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

WHEREFORE THESE SHAMS?

The Eminent and Cultured Sar'gis Gives His Views.

To the Editor:—Your invitation to contribute to the Open Court on the subject of "fraud" has been in mind several days, and but for your uniform courtesy in printing what has been said on other topics, would not touch upon that one. You know personally the views entertained as to the whole subject matter of "fraud," and as Prof. Loveland and Dr. Conger so fully cover the ground, to simply endorse what they say, is enough—as their eminent common sense covers the case. "Ignorance," as Prof. Loveland says in big letter, unites the whole matter—or, in other words, "frauds" and fraud-hunters, as a rule, are both utterly ignorant of spirit and woefully so as to spirits. Nobody but a coarse nature would think of representing spirits as both do, and no well informed Spiritualist can be cajoled by the puppet shows the one party demands and the other exhibits. Both are as ignorant of spirit, its conditions of manifestation and of mediumship as the Society of Psychical Research. The responsibility of that association for the crude ideas of the average person as to spirit and spirits, is something fearful to contemplate.

But what is all this fuss about, and what started it? Mrs. Crindle-Reynolds, or "Elsie," as is her familiar title, has been off-color for a quarter of a century. She has been "exposed" more times than you have fingers and toes,, yet she serenely bobs up again, going to some respectable man's home, with no baggage but a tooth-brush, has a blanket or bed-quilt stretched across the corner of a room and gives a seance that a room full of respectable people certify to as genuine, and the Spiritualist newspapers publish it—because they can't refuse the signers. A search of back files will verify this statement.

And why? Because "Elsie" is a medium—and can give a genuine manifestation when she wants to. Half-baked, three-seance people, as ignorant of spirit as crude minds can make them, demand impossibilities and circus entertainment, and "Elsie," as she says, "gives it to them." That is as near the literal truth as you will get from a cloud of witnesses.

And, too, that Houghton expose: He was exposed and run out of the town of the writer ten years ago, and never heard of again until now. His performance was unique. He dressed in white, with white satin shoes—emblematic of purity—and the stunts were after the manner of stage lightning-changes, with his wife behind a curtain and it drawn aside as the changes were made in the presentations. The "power" was illustrated by his poor wife becoming rigid, and the back of her head placed on one chair and her heels on another, and he in his white shoes and his 150 pounds weight standing on her suspended body. And that sort of stuff was called a "seance." And because a crowd of callous-minded people are "entertained" by such a spectacle, the intelligent reading world has to stand its description as something connected with a great cause. One night sufficed in the case described, and the arrest by the police should close it up now.

And, Mr. Editor, if you will sift these periodical spasms about fraud, you will find as a rule that it is some old stock-fraud, and some new wonder-seekers who think their few observations and their one medium are the whole world of phenomena. It seems incredible that all this outcry, this crusade about fraud has only been able to materialize Crindle-Reynolds and Houghton. They at least are all that have so far appeared. Now, as the boys say, "honest Indian," is the game worth the candle?

The real harm is the poison that this unabridged denunciation instills into the minds of honest, sincere and conscientious people — Spiritualists and non-Spiritualists—handicapping mediums and phenomena, and giving a club to scoffers and enemies, when the noise is out of all proportion to the odor.

The statement may be made safely within the truth, that from the toejoint theory to the present not a single fraud has been suppressed by clamor. Nor at this late day can it be "put down" by introducing the argument of the race track and the pool-room—by bets of a thousand or any other sum of dollars.

Retiring and sensible people shrink from the discussion of these topics, as the reckless zealots at once cry: "Oh, you favor covering up fraud." As the back of the hand can't well reach the mouth that utters the insult through print, they prefer being silent altogether. The whole subject is nauseating and demoralizing.

Just run over in your mind the last twenty-five years. There is not a medium who at one time was not denounced as a fraud and impostor. Today you can count them by the score who are highly honored as men and women, and by general approval as mediums.

There are dishonest people in every walk of life. There are good dogs and bad ones; vicious horses and family favorites; breachy cows and model milkers; and there are people who can and do mind their own business, and suppress the bad, without giving them exclusive public consideration. The quiet condemnation by this class of Spiritualists has reduced tricky medims to only two or three who yet face the public. And that is after all the effective way. SAR'GIS.

OUT OF THE USUAL LINE.

A Whack at Fraud Hunters, and Their Methods Pointed Out.

Thanks for the Open Court, otherwise I could not have my say, and would be relegated to the rear. Just think of the extent of sleight-of-hand practices in the ranks of Spiritualism! I will not call this fraud, for the sake of illustration, but amusement, at the expense of poor gullible mortals. Poor Elsie Reynolds is superb. Her sleight-of-hand can almost deceive the very elect; but when she was caught in the midst of one of her tricks, she was found dressed in a human-made "spirit" garb—and no real spirit at hand!

Any sleight-of hand performer can be exposed in the same way—grab him in the midst of a trick, and you can find out the secret.

Then came Mrs. Reynolds' devoted son, Crindle, and wife, and the latter was caught in a sewing-machine-made dress, personating a poor devil of a "spirit," which was no "spirit" at all.

Poor Elsie had not fully instructed her son and his wife in the trick.

Poor Mrs. Griffen, who was exposed at her tricks in Milwaukee—a wonderful materializing medium! She was no fraud, but simply a "lightning change" artist, but it was cruel to expose her just as she was dressed as a "spirit" chieftain, in woman-made clothes. If the fraud-hunters had left her alone, a whole column could have been written in her favor—"Remarkable Demonstration of Spirit Power"—all published in the Spiritualist papers.

Then there was Mrs. Kemp, of Cleveland, Ohio, an honest, noble, sleight-of-hand performer, a most remarkable medium as announced in The Progressive Thinker frequently by correspondents—if the fraud hunters had left her alone, and not caught her and a confederate just in the act of ringing in a "spirit," there would have been no harm done, and every Spiritualist paper would have sung her praise.

I have no respect whatever for the ignorant fraud-hunters who will molest a medium in the midst of a performance, and demonstrate that the same is of the mortal wholly, and nothing spiritual about it—wholly man-made or woman-made.

Then they got after Howland in Philadelphia—these fraud hunters did—and removed another star performer from our midst. He, too, was grabbed by fraud-hunters—miserable fellows, all—and his tricks were solved, and his poor, honest little wife, ready to show a "good spirit," all dressed up in mortal garb, was caught.

Then two ladies in Boston—fine mediums—exalted mediums—May French and Neva Murivale Jeanneau—were caught, beautifully dressed, playing "spirit." They had done this so long that they were regarded as genuine mediums and would still be, if the contemptible fraud hunters hadn't grabbed them when they were posing as spirits, dressed in store-made goods.

Then came Johnson, a medium, who was grabbed in Brooklyn, just as he made himself into a little youngster, the most cruel act of all!

Then, again, these detestable fraud hunters—ignorant—at times malicious—struck a light on a trumpet medium in Milwaukee and she was found with two trumpets in her hands, making the manifestations.

Verily, I could follow with the names of twenty-five more "honest" persons whom these ignorant fraud hunters have pursued—cruelly pursued, and demonstrated that their spirit manifestations were wholly of earthly origin.

In conclusion I desire to say that I am a Spiritualist. I often see spirits. I have exalted visions. The fact that I can communicate at times with the immortals is glorious! I know—absolutely know there is a large amount of truth in our ranks, and nothing can possibly destroy it, and I am glad that for the last few weeks Spiritualists have controlled The Progressive Thinker—wholly controlled its columns—a plan never before adopted by any Spiritualist organ. It has been a surprise to all, a pleasure to many, a disgust to those who want actual free thought suppressed, and so it goes—YOU CAN'T PLEASE ALL—but this Open Court has demonstrated that those who don't read The Progressive Thinker will be left behind as to important information. In conclusion, I sign myself,

A DEVOTED SPIRITUALIST.

WOULD LET FRAUD ALONE.

A Venerable Spiritualist Would Let the Tares Grow with the Wheat.

Renewing my subscription to The Progressive Thinker, I avail myself of your invitation to give my views relative to your Open Court.

The first question that presents itself to my mind is, of what possible use or benefit can it be to Spiritualism to publish the mistakes and failures that occur? I would leave all that dirty work for the religious and secular papers to do, and they are not slow in doing it.

Second, I would let every one who attends a seance be his or her own best judge (as they invariably are) as to what transpires in their presence.

Third, admitting that there is some counterfeit with all the genuine, may not even the spurious be received by some as the real and thus lead them to further investigation till they shall find the truth?

I have attended seances myself in which I felt confident that both the true and the false were manifested. Nevertheless there were some present who received it all as genuine truth and by their emotions plainly showed that they had then and there both seen and conversed with their departed loved ones. If they were deceived, it was both pleasant and joyous to them.

You and I know that a belief in Christianity is fallacious, and that that system has only a sandy foundation. Nevertheless we know that multitudes of good people have and still do receive great comfort, consolation and solace under every and all circumstances whatever while indulging in such belief. On the same principle I would say let the exposures come from others and not from any Spiritualist journal, or let the wheat and the tares grow together, etc.

Who am I, that write thus? Though unknown to your readers, Spiritualism became a positive truth to me 27 years ago, and from that time on I have been a student of its philosophy and the laws of Nature, endeavoring to learn all I can in relation to the 'undiscovered country." J. C. N. ABBOTT.

Cedar Falls, Ia.

To expose and condemn the nefarious work of fraudulent "mediums" is dubbed "dirty work;" but it is noticeable that the "dirty work" of "dirty" tricksters posing as Spiritual mediums is merely "mistakes and failures," and call forth no words of reprehension. Apparently all the dirtiness is concentrated in publishing the facts, and not at all in the deception, swindling and fraud.

Abundance of dirty work has to be done in this world, and some of the most useful work is the dirtiest. Unsanitary conditions have to be remedied in order to conserve the public health. The same rule applies to Spiritualism—instance the morally and spiritually unsanitary conditions embodied in the work of swindling fakirs who pose as mediums.

The Open Court is performing a greatly-needed sanitary work for the good of our cause; when the work is finished the air will be purer and sweeter and more healthful, as a result of our work, and eventually it is to be hoped, the small-pox and yellow-fever of deception and vice under the name of mediumship will disappear.

Spiritualists owe it to themselves and to the public to clean up their own back-yards, and not leave it to be done by their religious or secular neighbors.

What kind of an impression would it naturally make on the outside world, the great reading public, to see the religious and secular papers publishing and branding the dishonest trickeries and shameless frauds and deceptions practised under the name of mediumship, and the Spiritualist papers, and Spiritualists generally, covering up, hiding, shielding and thus indirectly abetting, encouraging, assisting the tricksters in their fraudulent practices? Would it not in appearance proclaim to the world that Spiritualism is a base sham and Spiritualists a lot of idiotic conservators of fraud?

Thanks to fraud mediums and the conservators of fraud, that evil impression is now largely prevalent among intelligent, honest people, many of whom have discovered impositions on the part of "mediums."

Probably, where one person has been comforted or convinced by means of fraud, a dozen sincere and honest inquirers have been disgusted and convinced that all mediums are fraudulent, and Spiritualism itself an unmitigated fraud, unworthy of sensible people's notice.

Many an honest man has had counterfeit money palmed off on him, and has passed the same to others, believing it genuine; does this in any degree justify the preparation and issuing of counterfeit money, although the innocent receiver thereof may have been benefited by paying debts or purchasing useful, needed commodities therewith?

If the argument in justification or palliation of mediumistic fraud is sound, it is equally sound in the other case. They are twins of the same color.

Viewing the matter from a moral standpoint: Is a lie as good as the truth?

And again, looking to spiritual results: Is a lie as good as the truth?

Who but the suffering victim of fraud can measure the bitter revulsion of feeling upon learning that the "dear loved ones" that brought such sweet comfort were "snide" spirits palmed off on him by trickery and deception.

Spiritualism has no need of false supports, fake tests, fake mediumship, counterfeit materializations, sleight-of-hand performances, spirits whose breaths smell of whisky and tobacco, and all the other unclean 'four-footed beasts of the earth" that the ingenuity or unprincipled counterfeiters can cause to masquerade under the name of mediumship.

Spiritualism—real Spiritualism—can win its way into the hearts and convictions of the world, by the aid of genuine mediumship alone, appealing as it does to the human sense of reason, justice, truth and the higher aspirational instincts of man's spiritual nature.

JAS. C. UNDERHILL.

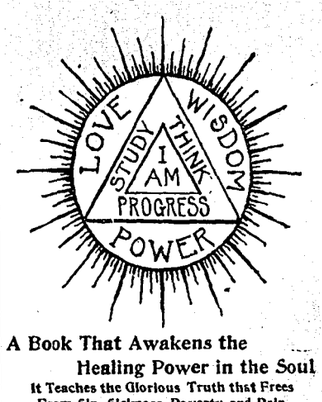
Hammond, Ind.

SOMEWHAT CURIOUS.

The Writer Declares That the Spirits Can Manufacture False Whiskers, Wigs, Etc., and Leave Them in the Cabinet.

I have read the many different writers' views upon materialization and their methods of exposing the fraudulent mediums; but from my experience, catching the spirit is not a correct way to prove the medium is true or false. The fact is, we know nothing about how the spirits materialize or dematerialize, therefore it proves nothing if we find, in catching the spirit, we have caught the medium, because the spirits use the medium to help theim make up, and, of course, it is as possible for them to materialize false hair and whiskers as it is the genuine, or as it is to make the body or the clothing that the spirit is dressed with.

I am astonished how we ignorant mortals undertake to tell what the spirits can do or what they cannot do. I have seen mediums tested in every conceivable way. I have seen them tied hands and feet, and tied tightly around their waists, with three or four knots drawn tight together, and the two ends of the cord put through two holes in the back of the cabinet and tied upon the outside in plain view of us all the time, and at the same time we could see the medium in the cabinet. Under those conditions the spirits would come out and walk around and talk with their friends, as natural as in earth life. While one of the spirits was out, a friend of mine tried an experiment of marking one of the spirits' ears, and when the seance was over the medium was untied and let out of the cabinet, she had the mark on one of her ears. The only way the medium could receive the mark was by the spirit transferring it to the medium. How these things are done we cannot tell, but we know the facts.



There is a way to detect fraud, but it is not by grabbing the spirit. One reason is, because the sudden change of conditions is dangerous to the life of the medium. I do not mean to say if we find false faces, etc., concealed about the medium, or in the cabinet, after we have caught the medium, it is no evidence the medium is a fraud, but I do mean to say it is not positive evidence, because the spirits can make them just as well as anything else, and tricky spirits, such as Herrmann and Kelly, are liable to do so.

I know some will say spirits cannot make material that will stay with us; as a rule they do not do it, but sometimes they do. I have seen it done quite often..

DR. A. P. CONANT.

(Continued on page 5.)

HEALING CURRENTS
FROM THE
BATTERY OF LIFE,
BY WALTER DE VOE.

A Book That Awakens the Healing Power in the Soul
It Teaches the Glorious Truth that Frees From Sin, Sickness, Poverty and Pain.
PRICE, $2.00.
For Sale by
COLLEGE OF FREEDOM,
Woodlawn, Chicago.

PUBLICATIONS OF
CARLYLE PETERSILEA,
Given by automatic writing through the author's mediumship.

THE DISCOVERED COUNTRY,
A narrative of the personal experience in spirit life of the author's father, who had been a natural philosopher and a materialist. An extremely interesting book. Price, $1.00.

MARY ANNE CAREW,
This work consists of the experiences of the author's mother in spirit life. Price, cloth, $1.00 paper, 50c.

PHILIP CARLISLIE,
A philosophical romance, by the guides, the subject of the title being a scientific young philosopher, who is a medium; his chief opponents being a clergyman and a materialist. Cloth, $1.

OCEANIDES,
A scientific novel, based on the philosophy of life, as seen from the spirit side. Paper, 50c.

MARK CHESTER,
Or "A Mill and a Million." This is one of Carlyle Petersilea's most interesting works. It is purely a psychical romance such as the author is noted for producing, paper, 40c.

A MASTERLY WORK.
Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.
A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1904.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

Gaining Ground.

An unmistakable indication that Christian scholars are progressing in knowledge and in readiness to speak what they find to be the truth, is apparent in the matter of the Convocation Sermon delivered recently, by Professor Mahaffy, of Dublin, to the graduating class of the University of Chicago.

He traced "the greatest truths of the Christian religion" to an origin in the beliefs of heathen nations, and expressed the opinion that many of the writings of the Bible are not inspired products of their attributed authors.

As stated by the Record-Herald, Dr. Mahaffy used for his subject, "What Does Christianity Owe to the Jews?" and after briefly tracing the connection of the Old Testament to the New, showed the students the debt that Christianity owes to heathens.

"The doctrine of the trinity and the incarnation were imported from primitive peoples. The trinity comes from the documents of the Egyptians and Indians, and the incarnation from Buddhism. It is remarkable that the notion of sacrifice appears not only in the religions of all civilized nations, but also in the lower races, commonly called heathen and primitive, and whose notions of religion were very crude.

"I do not believe that Genesis is an inspired book and that Moses was directly inspired in writing his account of the origin of the world. He used old documents of the Egyptians and Mesopotamians and did not write from direct observation. In the century to which we attribute Genesis there were many writings about the origin of the world, and I believe Moses used these. There were full acounts both in Egyptian hieroglyphics and in Mesopotamian cuneiform which were a vast repository from which he might have drawn. These early legends, of course, were exaggerated in their accounts, but have some geological truth. Moses purified these things from the many absurd exaggerations which they contained.

"There is no reason to claim that Christianity is a novelty. Do you think it consistent with divine wisdom and benevolence that all the nations of the world should have been left in absolute darkness and error to be suddenly removed by the novel revelation of the gospel, or is it more reasonable to believe that all the nations had some truth and that that truth was brought into the clear light of purity by the gospel? Christianity is, then, not a new thing, but is the gathering of all the great truths and the weaving of them into the glorious texture of Christian faith."

"Eggzactly" Right.

"Any young woman who will stick her feet under a table to entertain a young man at cards is not decent," declared the Rev. M. Schemwell in the revival meeting at Wolf Lake.

The statement was no sooner made than the chivalrous young men of that community rose up and threw eggs at the daring minister.

The Rev. Mr. Schemwell, although bespattered, was not frightened, however, and continued preaching until only a silent few were left before him.—Press dispatch.

This is a very ancient method of showing disgust for the words of a minister, but for the very unkind and insulting remarks there seems no more appropriate indication of the pent up feelings of injured young men.

This ought to teach the fossil that he is not living in the era of the Blue Laws or the days of the Inquisition, but at a time when it is known that morality, decency and purity can sit with feet under a card table as well as at the "feast of the passover," and the possessor of the feet is no less a lady for having played a social game of euchre or whist, or even "old sledge," than while kneeling at the altar in his sanctuary. If she is pure in soul a social game of cards with her "best fellow" can in no way contaminate her.

Devotional exercises can be carried on into insanity and madness, and just so card-playing can become a mania and be carried to excess and demoralization. It is wrong to be completely carried away by the fascination for either religious fanaticism or cards, and no doubt the fanatical criticism was well met by the drastic measures resorted to.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development."—By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Questions Suggested by Correspondents Answered.

Question. Who are they who have for the past six weeks occupied the attention of the public in the Open Court?

Answer. Spiritualists only.

Q. Who have viewed the condition of our cause as connected with the fakes, and tried to point out the way to redeem the truth from their pestiferous influence?

A. Ardent Spiritualists in the Open Court.

Q. Who, during the last twenty-five years have been refused a hearing in the Spiritualist press, under the pretense that if they told of the deception practiced by rank impostors, they would injure our beloved cause?

A. Spiritualists who love the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Q. What have the pure, noble, honest skeptical Spiritualists—skeptical in regard to certain phases of the phenomena, been called when they have been simply searching for the truth?

A. Disreputable Fraud Hunters.

Q. Who is it that wants to place Spiritualism on the plane of strict honesty, who want all the phenomena to bear the legitimate SEAL OF THE ANGELS instead of that of the trickster and the fraud?

A. Those Spiritualists who have bravely contributed to the Open Court, and millions of others also.

Q. Who is it that objects to having their spirit friends represented by a rotten confederate, or the medium dressed in artificial toggery?

A. The noble Spiritualists who are not afraid to appear in the Open Court.

Q. How can one advance to a higher spiritual attitude?

A. Only along the line of absolute purity and honesty. When one diverges from that line, that one attracts darkened conditions, approximating a real hell.

Q. Who originated the Open Court as presented in The Progressive Thinker?

A. It was advised by spirits—by spirits of a high order, who are aware of what is going on in our ranks, and who wish to elevate our Cause to a higher plane. Right doing leads to the light. Wrong doing, of whatever nature or kind, leads to dark conditions. That is true whether connected with an individual, club, cult or sect. Right doing leads to higher spiritual planes, while wrong doing leads to darkened conditions.

Q. If every crime brings its own punishment, why not let the fakes who deceive the public entirely alone? Their punishment is absolutely certain here on earth or in the spirit realms.

A. Because wrong doing is cumulative, and continually enlarges its tentacles or its power to do harm as time passes on. Weeds grow; poisonous plants enlarge their domain continuously, and a municipal government that is corrupt continually grows more so, as evidenced by the notorious Tweed ring in New York, and the Aldermanic corruption in St. Louis, Mo., and among the state officials. Wrong doing, corrupt practices and evil methods rarely ever right themselves. Wrong conditions can only be removed by opposition to them, otherwise their dominion will be enlarged. It is only by continually battling against evil that it can be held partially in abeyance.

Q. Is not the giving of publicity to fraud practiced in our ranks, detrimental to Spiritualism?

A. No more so than keeping the same covered up. A disease will spread just the same when its presence is not known to the public. What would you think of officials who would carefully conceal the fact that the yellow fever had numerous victims in a city, fearing if the same be made known, that the trade would be greatly injured thereby? Any sect or body of people that cannot stand to have the truth told in reference to it, should perish from the face of the earth. Spiritualism, however, being the embodiment of truth, will ultimately remove all its blemishes and take possession of the entire world.

Q. Does not the exposure of any wrong doing put a weapon in the hands of our enemies to injure our Cause?

A. Any evil deed committed by a Spiritualistic fake, or wrong doing on the part of any Spiritualist, cannot be concealed or suppressed by any process whatever. It is impossible. The secular press spreads it broadcast. The dozen or more late exposures of fake mediums throughout the country, revealing the medium or a confederate dressed in artificial toggery, were all published in leading dailies, reaching at least 35,000,000 of people. When Spiritualists were shocked as never before by the publication of an unmentionable crime committed by a Spiritualist at the Onset camp several years ago, the same was sent forth by the secular press throughout the entire United States, and created a profound sensation. One of the leading actors in the same, and who also played confederate to materializing mediums, was sent to the penitentiary. All these exposures first appeared in the secular press, and that fact led The Progressive Thinker to do what no other Spiritualist paper ever did—open its columns for a discussion of the question by Spiritualists themselves—by prominent Spiritualists, by Spiritualists who love our cause dearly, many of whom are mediums. A Cause that can not stand the telling of the exact truth in regard to its inner workings should perish from the face of the earth. But Spiritualism is founded on the Rock of Absolute Truth, will grow stronger by having those who misrepresent it by giving fake materializations or fake tests, exposed to the whole world! The discussion in the Open Court will do Spiritualism a GREAT DEAL OF GOOD! The rotten fakes will, of course, find fault with it. You can always detect a fake by his (or her) opposition to any one who exposes those who are counterfeiting the phenomena. A medium who is purely genuine wants the fakes exposed.

Q. The great Catholic church has flourished immensely by carefully concealing all wrong doing, and why should not Spiritualists follow the same course?

A. Yes, that is a solid fact. Let the whole truth be told in regard to Catholicism in the past and present, spread those facts before Catholics themselves, and within twenty-five years that sect will disappear. Why? Because it is wholly founded on error, superstition and ignorance. The secular press dare not publish the wrongs, the infamy, the sins of the Catholic church in the past or present. But with Spiritualism it is different—the secular press grasp every exposure of fake mediums or wrong doings on the part of Spiritualists, and send the same out to millions of readers. That does not permanently injure Spiritualism, because, as said before, it is founded on the ROCK OF TRUTH, and will eventually spread its benign influence over the entire earth. It is a lamentable fact, however, that anyone should suggest that Spiritualists should adopt a pernicious practice of the Catholic church, as some of our readers have done.

Q. Candidly, was it not your real object in giving space in your paper to the discussion of the fraud question, to gain publicity and popularity for The Progressive Thinker, and increase your circulation?

A. The Progressive Thinker has ever been the mouthpiece of Spiritualists and progressive thinkers along all scientific and occult lines, and shall ever be while under the present management. Other papers, to the extent or 75 or 100, have been established and run for a time filled to the brim with profound thoughts by the editor and one or two associates, but Spiritualists accept no "thus saith the Lord," no ipse dixit from anyone, and the publications failed, but Spiritualism kept right on growing.

When The Progressive Thinker was established it was intended to place its columns in the hands of the best thinkers in the ranks, and make it an institution "of the people, for the people, and by the people." To make a success of such a thing as a newspaper, secular, religious, scientific, or reformatory, requires right management and right principle. WE CANNOT DICTATE TO THINKERS NOW JUST HOW THEY SHOULD THINK. THOUGHT IS INDEPENDENT AS INDIVIDUALITIES ARE INDEPENDENT. Spiritualism cannot be retarded by calm consideration of any question relevant to its basic principle, and while some, had they been in the same position, would not have dared to risk the effect of such a vital bone of contention, we have followed the course of fairness to all and have reason to know good has been done.

In introducing the Open Court to our readers, no thought whatever entered our mind in relation to The Progressive Thinker, its popularity or increase of circulation—our only thought was to let Spiritualists themselves RUN THE PAPER for a few weeks, giving them the "full swing." During this time we have been an interested spectator, and have read and re-read the varied thoughts expressed with the keenest interest. We have been delighted with this free and frank expression, this boiling over of thought, this apparent sincerity, this desire of one and all to promote the truth in our cause; in fact, as a looker-on, we HAVE BEEN INSTRUCTED, AMUSED AND HIGHLY PLEASED WITH THE SENTIMENTS, PRO AND CON, EXPRESSED.

Q. How about presenting the Open Court to investigators? Will they not be repelled by reading the contributions of Spiritualists therein?

A. Fair-minded, honest and unbiased investigators should be attracted to this discussion upon the subject of frauds. This course can but impress the investigator with the honesty of purpose of the leading thinkers in our ranks, and at the same time cause them to use extreme caution in their investigations. This is all right, and knowing what we do of the rotten gang now operating under the name of "mediums," who are but tricksters, The Progressive Thinker would neglect a duty by not warning investigators to "go slow, and be careful," and that is all the influence the Open Court can have upon the average investigator. An investigator who would be repelled by our method of sifting and attempting to separate the genuine from the false, the gold from the dross, cannot be a very earnest or capable truth-seeker. Such a person has a flabby brain—it lacks the necessary amount of grey matter, and probably he (or she) cannot think consecutively ten minutes on any important subject. If we had had access to sentiments expressed in the Open Court forty years or more ago, we would have been able to investigate Spiritualism intelligently, and would have been saved any amount of annoyance and trouble, owing to the influence of lying spirits. Hence we believe that every honest investigator of Spiritualism will be benefited by reading the Open Court.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents.

From the Minute to the Magnificent.

Fossil remains of pigmy elephants and hippopotami, no more than three feet in height, have lately been found on several large islands of the Mediterranean. Does not this fact, in connection with discoveries in western Kansas, of fossil horses in immense numbers, only 28 inches in height, suggest that these animals, as indeed every other form of life, have ascended by slow and gradual gradation from the minute to the majestic; that instead of deterioration, as many suppose, animal life began with the infinitesimal, mere microscopic being, and through the eternity which has followed, have developed through countless millions of generations into what they are to-day? Species have risen to immense dimensions as the mammoth and have perished, while other forms of giant life have taken their place, "the fittest only surviving," as Darwin happily expressed it.

All matter abounds with life. It swims in the water, floats in the air, is imprisoned in the rock, and is only liberated from confinement when their prison walls are dissolved by heat, then they fly away in pairs, to the eye, if aided by powerful lenses, having the semblance of gases.

The germ theory of disease, now very generally recognized as a scientific fact, verifies this idea of infinitesimal life.

With the knowledge that giant animals have been developed from humble beginnings, and that mammal and vertebrate alike are but scintillations from the parent, resembling the tadpole, invisible to the natural eye, is the draft too heavy on science to suppose every form of life had its inception in microscopic being? that by evolution through unlimited duration and favorable conditions they have expanded and enlarged till they have reached their present stature?

And is it not probable other forms of minute life are now on the ascending grade, destined in the good time coming to reach what we now conceive perfected being?

Has the reader ever inspected a drop of stagnant water through a powerful microscope? If so he saw a large variety of life skipping through the minute world, engaged in physical contest with other creatures, or otherwise participating in the affairs of life.

Says another: The microscope opens to the observer a new and unexpected world, full of beauty, perfection, and magnificence. In a single drop of water it presents to the astonished vision, living creatures, of most beautiful and varied forms, entirely unlike all former conceptions of organic existence, and so extremely minute that it would require from 25,000 millions to 80,000 millions to fill the narrow space of one square inch. Small as they are, the microscope reveals their existence, their spontaneous motion, and their external and internal structures. It also makes known the fact that these minute living beings are extremely reproductive, and constitute the chief proportion of living bodies on the earth. They are found not only in the fresh waters of ponds, brooks, rivers and lakes, but even in the salt waters of the ocean, in some strong acids, in terraqueous matter, and in vegetable and animal fluids; indeed, there is no part of the world, either on its surface, or internally, in which these microscopic beings are not found, either living, else in a fossil condition. The mortar of the builder, the chalky cliffs of England, extensive tracts of country in various parts of the world, as well chains of mountains, the coral foundation of the Polynesian Archipelagoes, of the reefs and islets of the Indian Ocean, besides slate, flint, sandstone, lime-stone, and many other forms of rock—all contain, and are in fact, chiefly composed of the remains of once living, moving, invisible to the unaided eye, of animalcules. The remains of these minute creatures have added more to the mass of material which comprise the crust of the earth than the bones of elephants, mammoths, hippopotami and whales.

Whence these forms of life?

They have bodies, heads, limbs and all the machinery characteristic of larger forms. Do they think, and love, and hate? They show it by their actions. Perchance they worship. Who knows? A day may round their period of life, to be succeeded by another generation. The more fortunate may remain longer and attain larger proportions. The process of living and growth may be extended through millions on millions of years for aught we know to the contrary; they were probably the ancient parent of the fossil horse, the elephant, the hippopotami, ah, of man himself. The monkey through whom some people are so reluctant to trance their ancestry, doubtless had a different parent from man, one who was not so progressive in his ideas, hence his development was arrested at the monkey stage, while his more fortunate neighbor developed into a Humboldt, a Darwin or a Huxley.

Woman Suffragists Not Discouraged.

Woman suffragists, though opposed by such obstacles as never have been placed in the way of any other class of citizens, have not a doubt of ultimate success, and they have strong reasons for the faith that is in them. When equal rights for women, of which the franchise was only one, were first demanded a little over half a century ago, the demands were met with hostility and derision; and yet those who made them lived to see every one conceded except that for the suffrage, and this they saw granted in full in four states by mandate of the voters, and in part in twenty-six others by legislative enactment.

Wyoming had woman suffrage for twenty-one years as a territory, and no power was strong enough to keep it out of the constitution for statehood when it was formed in 1890. Utah, after seventeen years' experience of it, placed it in the statehood constitution in 1895 by a majority of 26,000 in a vote of a little over 31,000. Colorado rejected a woman suffrage amendment in 1877, but in 1893 there had been a change of public sentiment sufficient to carry it by a majority of 6,347. In Idaho, in 1896, all political parties united in endorsing an amendment, which was adopted by a majority of 5,884 in a vote of 18,408.

Five states have twice submitted a woman suffrage amendment. In Colorado it was carried the second time; in Kansas the percentage of opposition was greatly lessened; in Oregon the affirmative vote was increased from 11,223 to 26, 265, and the measure was lost only by 2,137. In South Dakota, in 1890, the amendment received an affirmative of thirty-five per cent of the whole vote cast upon it, and in 1898 it received forty-seven per cent. The first vote was taken in Washington in 1889, and in 1898 the opposing majority had been reduced about one-half.

These figures justify the belief that the question can be carried in all these states the next time it is submitted. They also offer mathematical proof of the favorable change which is taking place in public opinion.

Religion Drives Him Crazy.

The dangers of much religious reading are well exemplified by the following special telegram published in the Chicago Chronicle, and which we especially commend to the attention of our more orthodox friends who are given to expatiating on the dangers of Spiritualism:

La Porte, Ind., Aug. 22.—William Bunton, of Pleasant township, a wealthy farmer, is confined in the county jail in this city, a raving maniac. Bunton declares that he receives communications from the Lord and exhibits as proof pieces of paper on which are written passages of scripture. Bunton has followers who believe him sane and look upon him as one inspired. He was brought to the county jail in chains and he declares that before morning the Lord will unshackle him. Physicians attribute his condition to constant religious reading.

LOOK OUT! LOOK OUT!

The Progressive Thinker during its Fall and Winter Campaign will be a continual feast of good things in all occult and spiritual lines of thought. You can only keep up with the procession by reading it each week. Send in your subscription now, and introduce the paper to your neighbor.

THE OPEN COURT.

This session of the Open Court has adjourned. It has been an exciting one—one long to be remembered. Never before was such a Court in session to consider one important subject. It has been controlled exclusively by Spiritualists—first-class Spiritualists who have the good of the Cause at heart. It has done good—great good! It has awakened a vast amount of thought. Before the next twelve months shall have expired, there will be another Open Court, controlled by leading Spiritualists, and the session will be wonderfully exciting, creating a profound sensation in this country and Europe.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," Contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 480 pages. Price $1.

"What Next?" Is the Question.

The Open Court for a time will not be in session. It has been under the control of Spiritualists for several weeks, and they alone are entitled to ALL THE PRAISE, or censure, just as one happens to feel. Within the next twelve months there will be another Open Court that will shake the very vitals of Spiritualism, and cause a commotion in our ranks never before equalled. Look out for it! From all these ordeals Spiritualism will emerge grander, more beautiful, and more entitled to the respect and confidence of the world. The Progressive Thinker is the paper for thinking Spiritualists, for Spiritualists who love the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Such Spiritualists will keep posted in passing events, in the trend of Spiritual and Occult thought throughout the world, by reading The Progressive Thinker, and in no other way. Now, we advise all to look out for our Fall and Winter Campaign, which will commence next week. It will be of thrilling interest! It will raise you to a higher altitude, and give you a better conception of the grandeur of Spiritualism. Now is the time to send in your subscription. Call your neighbor's attention to the paper, thus enabling him to keep up with the advancing procession by reading its columns.

Honest Mediums Must Be Sustained.

Honest mediums should be well sustained. They are entitled to encouragement and protection, and a generous equivalent for their services. The Progressive Thinker has been, and will still continue to be, their special organ. There are many mediums in this city and scattered through the country, whose lives are pure and whose homes are heaven itself. By suppressing the fakes you encourage these honest mediums and assist the angel world in its efforts to promote the truth. Every honest medium will find in The Progressive Thinker a true friend. Its friendship for mediums has taken definite form. The $1,000 lately raised for the benefit of the medium's fund—to render those mediums comfortable who are on account of sickness or old age, incapacitated for work—was procured mainly through the untiring efforts of The Progressive Thinker. The paper is not only the Organ of honest mediums, but it has been under the special charge of the Higher Powers who have made it extremely prosperous—prosperous beyond that of any other Spiritualist or free thought paper published on this earth to-day.

RETROSPECTION.

The spirit stood on the borderland,
And beckoned the mortal to come,
"Sojourn no more on the earthly sphere,
But repair to thy spirit home."

Full three score of years he has labored here,
In turmoil and trouble and strife;
'Midst gladness and sorrow, hope and fear,
Which made up the features of life.

But weak in purpose, he turned aside,
As temptations came in his way,
Or his lower nature obtained control,
And prevailed and held full sway.

But the higher self became supreme,
As with wisdom he grew in years,
Then ever he strove to make amends,
And efface his failings with tears.

Thenceforth he willingly lent his aid
To lessen the ills of his kind;
His heart rejoiced, when others rejoiced,
As their cares were thrown to the wind.

But still he found, in worldly pursuits,
The crowd still strayed with persistence;
Wearied of earth, he laid himself down,
And waked to spirit existence.

Then all his deeds, from his early years,
In a vision appeared to view;
His pride and follies and wayward course,
As to man's condition he grew.

And further the scene disclosed itself,
Till his life was plain to his sight;
The good and the bad and middle course,
Was displayed in the astral light.

Minute events were recalled again,
In scenes that were vivid and strong;
And some there were that appalled his soul,
As he sensed what was right and wrong.

And wrong beginning entailed more wrong,
The sequence was easy to trace;
Not Lethe's river could cleanse the whole,
Nor nepenthe a stain efface.

'Twas then the good of his later years,
In refulgence appeared at last;
Which hastened to dim the former scenes,
With reflex act on the past.

And thus he learned that by goodly deeds,
Atonement would cancel the whole;
A willing task that carried relief,
And surpassing peace to the soul.

Resigned, he stood on the border land,
Submissive and ready to fall,
But the radiant spirit waved him in:
"There is charity here for all!"

JAMES MARTIN.

San Francisco, Cal.

"Astral Worshop." By J. H. Hill, M. D. Price $1.

THE REMEDY.

Is Deeper Insight Into Things Spiritual and Material.

THE OPEN COURT FOREVER! IT IS AN OMEN OF THINGS BETTER AND STILL BETTER. It is an augury of increasing elevation, a presage of clarification, and an electric line to blooming verdure.

Editor Francis says: "Whatever is said therein, each writer is responsible therefor—GIVE HIM THE PRAISE OR BLAME, AND NOT THE EDITOR." I like that. It gives an awful big latitude. We writers can give each other terrible blows and it doesn't hurt a bit.

Now I am going to say that Spiritualism is in greater danger from the narrowed radicals than from the fakirs. That won't hurt the radicals. They will simply smile. I will tell why I think so, and they will only smile again. The radical, in the first part of his work, is the broadest and noblest of creation; in the last part, he becomes the narrowest and shortest sighted. It is easily acounted for. As the big world's opposition has borne down heavier and heavier his intensity grows sharper and sharper, till at last his tired force is centered on contracted viewpoints. He runs finally into anomalous, chronic iconoclasm. Nothing satisfies less than the complete overthrow of everything that savors of the odor of yesterday.

As a Spiritualist radical he finally fights the inoffensive, innocent little word Reverend. He ceases to think that its abstract meaning is grand and beautiful. He forgets that the mother prizes nothing more highly than to be revered by her children. He continues, and would cut the word respectability out of the vocabulary.

Luther said: "I will tolerate a great deal of the old forms, and battle only for the essential doctrine, and leave something of the old worship for the people." I think Luther was wise.

THE FAKIR IS AN IRRESPONSIBLE, SHARP, GENUINE MEDIUM. HAS A BAD CONSTITUTION AND WORSE EDUCATION. IS TEMPTED ON ALL SIDES BY THE SIGHT OF POPULAR, UNPRINCIPLED MILLIONAIRES. HE, TOO, WOULD ADOPT SHORT-CUT PROCESSES AND GET WEALTH BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS; AND SPIRITS ARE NOT WANTING IN DELIGHT TO HELP HIM.

Ministers, doctors and lawyers rid their ranks of frauds by elevating the standard of education. In the arts, and music, without education, nothing is worthy of being called art or music. Science is exact to get the finest understanding of every law of nature coming under its observation. With the radical Spiritualists it's "any old thing" will do.

Another source of danger is the church. Its charming culture, restful service, and increasing liberality is drawing from us.

Mediumship is the backbone of Spiritualism. The best of mediums thus far know but little of the myriad laws and principles, a fine and profound knowledge of which must finally be the salvation of the cause. The days of unconscious mediumship are passing. After that, no medium will express more than he can understand. Intelligent spirits will not be attracted to mediums of a meager vocabulary.

AN EDUCATED MEDIUMSHIP IS THE COMING DEMAND.

The Progressive Thinker, in No. 770, editorially says: "It is of special interest to Spiritualists to note that there is not another institution of learning in this country or any other, that maintains a psychic class, in which the psychic side of life and its nature and phenomena are made a special line of study. As understood by Spiritualists, psychism is ignored by all the great colleges and universities, if not actually flouted and contemned by their faculties.

"The Morris Pratt Institute is thus unique in making a distinct study of this important subject which is of so great interest to Spiritualists in particular."

The Spiritualist college is of small beginning. That has been the history of the important institutions of learning. It is started quite radical enough for safety. Had president Eliot, of Harvard, been its first, and run it on its present system, it would never have survived its infancy. The Spiritualist college should live to have untold numbers of faculties, and each would naturally keep in touch with the world's continued progress and evolution. The Spiritualist college does not mean that very much of the old ways will not be continued in practice. The college is only an added assistance. It is already a new inspiration to all phases of the movement. As much of the old form of Spiritualism is still important, so there are parts of the church service that can valuably be utilized in the Spiritualist church. It is superficial to think the dead past develcped nothing good. Let there be "something of the old worship for the people."

Modern science has been in process of development for several centuries, and is still in its infancy. Modern Spiritualism, with every possible advantage, for a century, will still be in its infancy. Science is a weekday movement. Spiritualism is very largely a Sunday movement. The difference is great. Science is utilitarian. Spiritualism deals with that which has been a church principle for all the ages. It is overflowing with deep sentiment. It quiets the speculations of the brain and is a solace to the heart.

The Spiritualist college should aim at last to lead all other colleges and universities. It should exist as long as there is a head to throb or a heart to pulsate. It should be ambitious to cleanse the murky streams now flowing to the other shore and turn them to bright and shining waters.

E. W. BALDWIN.

Madison, Wis.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and relected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies, for schools and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price 50 cents.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

The Open Court.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3.

LITTLE BY NAME, BUT LARGE IN MIND.

A Prominent Spiritualist of Seattle, Wash., President of a Leading and Prosperous Society There, Presents His Views in a Comprehensive Manner.

So much has been spoken and written concerning the "two great issues" now before the Spiritualistic public, viz., "The Great Psychological Crime" and the offer of Bro. Hale of Los Angeles, Cal., of a thousand dollars, lawful money of the realm, for one case of genuine materilization, that more of the same tenor may lead to a surfeit. Yet, as these restless apparitions will not down until exhausted of their vitality, or be otherwise satisfactorily disposed of, a brief contribution may not add a dangerous ingredient to the somewhat confusing mixture (to the Investigator) now on file. * * *

Of course the discussion is not without beneficial results, as it will no doubt cause the Investigator to be more guarded and thorough in his investigations, which is very much needed, and will also impress upon the minds of our Psychics the importance of understanding and defining more clearly the special phase they may at any given time be presenting to the public; a class of work now almost wholly overlooked and unthought of by a maority of our professional workers; but the feverish anxiety manifested by so many of our people seems to have been, now that the smoke of the battle has largely blown away, to a large extent unwarranted, and by the uninformed or wrongly informed, will be taken as a confession of weakness on the part of the defendant in the case.

But it is more directly with the offer of Bro. Hale that we wish to deal at this time. Here again we discover a very pronounced inclination to become 'feverish" through an over-anxious desire on the part of many to have this challenge accepted.

We have even progressed so far in this direction as to hint of "moral cowardice," if it is not, while others are disposed to assail the motive of Bro. Hale in submitting such a proposition.

Why is it that we become so easily alarmed, or why so aggressive, and, Irishman like (the writer is one-fourth Irish), ache to use our "chillalah" on the cranium of one who may venture to submit a proposition of this character?

Bro. Hale's proposed method of doing business may be wrong; probably is, but we can see no grounds for the dark forebodings indulged in by some, if the challenge is not accepted. Several issues of The Thinker have one or more contributions of this character, and even that veteran worker, Bro. Hudson Tuttle, whom we have been "swearing by" for the past thirty years, and in whose guiding light we delight to linger, seems to share in this pessimistic view, and thinks if this challenge is not accepted materialization as an evidence of Spiritualism will disappear. Are the evidences of materialization so rare or are they so modern that they are now to be swept away by a wave of the hand, or even a failure on the part of Spiritualists to avail themselves of the blessed privilege so magnanimously extended to them by Bro. Hale?

If so, we have read the world's history incorrectly and have but little faith in the evidence of our own senses as applied to this phenomena given under the most exacting conditions, and by an increasing number of Psychics of unquestioned honesty and intelligence.

No. We do not share very strenuously in this feverish desire to accept Bro. Hale's offer, and would not like to be accused of moral cowardice or disloyalty to the cause in consequence; neither have we any doubts concerning the fact of genuine materialization, or the permanency of that fact as an evidence of Spiritualism.

But to point out a few reasons why Bro. Hale's method is in error: First, the great difficulty of determining just what should be accepted as test conditions in a given case. So far we have not obtained sufficient knowledge of psychic law as to be able to formulate an ironclad rule in detail that would apply to all cases with equal fairness to the psychic and the public, for the proposed experiment is to be made in a large measure for the benefit and instruction of the latter. Setting up test conditions has generally been a failure, so far as being acceptable to the parties interested is concerned.

We have an idea that the proposed experiment would not prove an exception.

Speaking of test requirements reminds me of the case of a gentleman who attended one of our Sunday meetings lately. He claimed to be a friend to Spiritualism, but as yet "unconvinced." I inquired what class or degree of evidence was still lacking, to which he replied, That if a psychic could give him information which neither himself nor the psychic knew anything about, and no one in the audience knew anything about, he thought he would be satisfied; that is, if he could verify it and learn it to be true. We assured him that such information had been frequently obtained, but suggested that he should go one step further and include those who never lived on this planet or anywhere else.

The case illustrates the difficulty of establishing test conditions.

Another point generally overlooked in propositions of this character. This, like all others of its class, becomes public property, and receives a concentrated public attention. Does Bro. Hale and others, taking into consideration the present chaotic knowledge of psychic law possessed by the general public and our own as well, feel that it is fair to demand a manifestation involving the most subtle law in the universe, and to the extent of constructing a perfect material body, including organs of speech, sight, hearing, smelling and tasting (for all these would be necessary), and all this to the satisfaction of a carping body of critics, or even a body of scientists chosen for the purpose?

Fifty or one hundred years hence this would be a "fair" proposition, but not at the present time; and yet there are those people of intelligence and of scientific training who affirm the fact of materialization.

We know enough of this subtle law at this time to defeat its natural operation, and but little more.

One hostile mind can vitiate the operation of law in a formulated case, and the attitude of the public mind in general hostile, concentrated upon the proposed effort, would probably be sufficient to prevent success.

And again, the fact of a moneyed consideration introduces in my opnion a very undesirable, if not fatal element.

"Commercialism" in Spiritualism is its greatest obstacle—not to use a stronger term!

Our efforts should be to remove our work as far as possible from the commercial influence.

Any motive prompting any medium to accept this challenge, other than one of absolute unselfishness, would probably, and should as a matter of fact, prevent satisfactory results, and yet the $1,000 is placed at the threshold of this enterprise, as an inducement to try the experiment.

A yard stick is desirable in taking lineal measurement of gross material substances, but would be out of place in the laboratory of the chemist, or the transmutation of hydrogen and oxygen into water; and a moneyed consideration is equally out of place as an inducement to measure the efficiency of psychic law.

But supposing for one moment that some worthy medium should accept and meritoriously receive this reward, would that settle the matter? We think not. The curiosity seeker and the skeptic would still be at large, and still unsatisfied. Success in this case would no doubt stimulate some other person less worthy than Bro. Hale to offer a still larger inducement for similar service, and the same taunt of "moral cowardice" would be heard, if not accepted.

The whole effect, instead of being an aid to the cause of Spiritualism, would be debasing. We would probably evolve under existing conditions the most accomplished set of fakes that the psychic world has ever known.

Personally, we regret that this offer was ever made, though appreciating thoroughly the good motive which prompted, and the worthy object sought to be accomplished by it.

This method of propaganda or any other of like character, is wrong in essence, and will make the burden we are carrying temporarily more difficult to be borne; but we need not conclude that any overwhelming disaster will follow. There is sufficient genuine phenomena to satisfy any mind willing to accept the evidences that satisfy in other matters, quite as obscure as the one phase of materialization. We need not worry because public sentiment is conservative and skeptical. These act as a check upon the over-zealous or over-credulous.

Bro. J. S. Loveland, in an issue of The Progressive Thinker, hints at the thought that we are inclined to force our phenomena upon public attention.

It is probably true as a matter of fact. We are possessed in a marked degree with the desire to press the phenomena to the front; but ours is a natural religion or science, and we are reminded continually that Mother Nature in her processes is inclined to move slowly, and we may very properly follow her example. There is a long reach from cosmic ether to revolving planet; from protoplasmic cell to lordly man; "far cry from Indian wigwam to kingly palace," and we needn't worry if the present age fails to discover all there is to be learned in the matter of calling "spirits from the vasty deep," clothing them in material form, with or without a thousand-dollar attachment.

The strongest movement among our people will be wrought out by proceeding steadily along the line of legitimate business, repelling the approaches of, and removing from, our ranks the illegitimates, and permitting, in most cases, the opposition to wear itself out in combating the new truths which march irresistibly onward. There will always be an "opposition," and it will always find itself kept very busy in its efforts to stem the tidal wave of human progress, accelerated as time passes, and human thought and experience deepens and broadens.

Again we say, all psychic phenomena must be tested by the application of known psychic law, and until we have securely established this knowledge as has the chemist or electrician, we may very properly allow all challenges to combat, to remain unnoticed and unaccepted, and when that time comes, and is recognized, challenges like that of Bro. Hale will not be made.

R. F. LITTLE.

Seattle, Wash.

Test the Spirits, Not the Medium.

To the Editor:—There has been much said lately in your valuable paper, as to the fraudulent manifestations in Spiritualism. I desire to say just one word: I for one have no faith in what any one confessed fraud has to say on the subject. But as a medium, I desire to say that there are those who resort to fraud; this is my opinion only, I have no proof to offer against any medium. And as a medium I desire to say that in my opinion the investigating public is more to blame than the medium, because they do not investigate Spiritualism in the right manner. My guides here give to the world the only sure test to apply when attending a seance: Test the spirits, and not the medium. By following this course all frauds will soon leave our public platforms, and our private circles. To make the matter more clear I will say that when I have met such men as the Rev. Joseph Cook, Epes Sargent, Minot J. Savage, Rabbit Schidler, and hundreds of college professors, and thousands of the world's greatest savants they tested the spirits that controlled me. For instance, Rev. Joseph Cook asked the question, "Warren Cook, what year was my father born?" The answer was "In 1812," which was correct. Major John C. Kinney, one of the committee asked, "What was the cause of your death?" This question was asked of a friend who was killed in the battle of the Wilderness. The answer was, "Shot through the heart, when leading a charge." The answer was correct. Now ask the spirits such questions, and if the answers are correct, what do you care if the medium is standing on his head, or is tied; test the spirits.

There is no physical manifestation ever produced, but what can be so cleverly counterfeited that no one but an expert can tell the genuine from the false.

One word as to the pellet test (writing a question on a slip of paper, and folding into a small tight wad). There is no call, or reason why the medium should take these pellets in his hand, in a private seance; nor is there any need in a public hall for a medium to be blindfolded with two or three bright gas lights right over his head. If he is a genuine medium, he can in a public hall, by merely touching the pellets, or questions, answer the question; and there is no need of the bright gas light over his head. If you go to have a slate-writing, take two clean slates, write your name on the slate frames, and let the medium handle them all he wants to to magnetise them; as long as he does not write on them himself, or put the slates out of your sight, no need to screw them together or fasten them, because if a medium can mesmerize you long enough to write a long message on a slate without your seeing him, he can mesmerize you long enough to untie, or unscrew the slates. Besides your test question to the spirit will be such that the answer on the slate cannot be done by the medium. In fact, test the spirits, not the medium.

DR. C. E. WATKINS.

THE BLUE BOOK.

The Views of a Former Secretary of a Camp Meeting, Who Is Perfectly Familiar with the Methods of Tricksters.

The "Blue Book" is a great theme at present and upon the altar of sacrifice, and we hope the sacrifice will exalt the matter to higher and purer motives for its students and the world at large.

Some of the writers in your columns make an extremely voluminous effort at its compilation, when the facts in its make-up are as simple as the facts in it are given out.

This "BlueBook" may exist in reality—and I would not dare dispute it, though having never seen one—but in my opinion it would be devoted more to formula and hints pertaining to the make-up of applicable tests in connection with the names of deceased persons furnished to the "fakir," than in its exhaustless store of names.

If you wish to start in the business of a fake medium you can get the names of hundreds of people of any town, city or hamlet in Michigan or in any State that maintains a State Board of Health. This board is required by law to keep a record of all deaths, when and where, causes of death, ages, etc. I am informed that this record may be had at the price of two dollars by applying to the Secretary of the State Board of Health.

It is easy to get a volume of this record. Pick out the locality you wish to visit, study all the names of the people deceased in that locality until you are "long" on memory; go to your designated point and fire these names at an audience as spirit given. At this point it is necessary to be a little wary in giving tests, that you do not overdo the matter, simply giving messages applicable to the occasion and the deceased parties. Giving the name, date of deceased, cause of death, etc., is generally considered by the credulous ample proof of genuineness. At this point you must develop acuteness, quick at discernment, to turn every word and action of your victim to account. Don't attempt any descriptions of deceased parties unless you are thoroughly posted, for in this you must remember the genuine medium excels. For the accuracy of description, the detailing of peculiar acts and of character belongs to the well developed and honest mediums, who have spent years in most cases in developing their psychic powers. To give an accurate description of the deceased person, characteristics of mental nature, etc., is worth more as a test of development and honesty than the name, age, etc., but in your case it will be necessary to develop your "cheek" with galvanized brass. Stimulate your brain with just enough conceit to act your part without fear or favor. Join your State and National Association and, above all others, the "Blue Book" ring, and you are "winged" for the soaring upliftment "star" of the first magnitude.

After you have become confidentially known to the Fraternity, you will meet another grade still lower (if it is possible to be lower) than you are. This grade is called Cappers. You will find them on your route readily in the form (generally) of a "fake" medium. You will take names and notes of easy victims and their deceased friends, at each and every place you work and when you meet your fraternity, compare notes and exchange.

I have studied these things through my connection with the Grand Ledge Camp as secretary for the first three years of its life. The organized sensitive will, no doubt, feel shocked at the mention of these frauds in connection with the State and National Associations, but all "stars" of this grade and magnitude that have visited our camp—which, to be reasonably accurate, includes a half dozen of them—all wear the corporate badge of these societies. Why? do you ask. For better protection, of course.

The better organized, the better protected. The better protected, the less morally reliable and responsible. The less of all these the more responsibility rests upon individuality.

THERE IS NO INTENTION IN THIS TO IMPUGN THE GRAND LEDGE CAMP, OR TO BELITTLE MEDIUMSHIP IN THE LEAST, FOR ALL CAMPS SUFFER THE SAME FROM THIS SORT OF PARASITE. WHY IS THIS SO? YOU WILL ASK.

Simply because they are shielded by policy and silence. All camp boards are made up about alike, as follows:

"Oh, my," says one of the board, "we must not let it be known that such a speaker gives 'stock' tests; she is such a fine speaker, and besides she has such a host of friends. She is a 'drawing card,' so long as people don't know the difference."

Up jumps another member who has gone completely psychologized over a materializing medium, perhaps half developed, two-thirds fraud. He never gets anything straight through any other medium but this one—no matter whether any one else ever got anything genuine, or whether the public in general pronounce this medium a fraud or not—he (the medium) is a favorite. Mr. and Mrs. "Policy" steps to the front and declares for peace and to have peace the fraud or "half-bake" is accepted as a matter of course, and so by silence and policy, iniquity runs. These facts and many more are underlying causes for such conditions.

The Grand Ledge Camp Board is undergoing a great change, and if this class of montebanks are not left out of the deal it will not be because of any lack of backbone to eliminate it in the future.

J. P. RUSSELL.

Grand Ledge, Mich.

THE WHEAT AND THE CHAFF.

As Viewed by a Leading Worker in Michigan.

Spirit Friend of Earth, can ye separate the wheat from the chaff, the genuine from the fraud?

The question of the truth of spirit communion is not at stake, for it is a fact in nature, shown forth in all ages under proper conditions, but those who look, listen, and study, cannot fail to find much so-called spirit phenomena, which is not such; not alone in the materializing and trumpet seance, but on the rostrum in messages and tests, as well as in private sittings.

We believe the practice of fraud is based on the desire for money or the need of it, as the case may be, together with the fact that there is a constant demand for phenomena, at a remunerative price.

To illustrate: The speaker who can give a good logical lecture ofttimes finds he is not in demand at any price unless he can give messages, while those of less than ordinary ability as speakers, who give messages or reading, win the place at liberal prices.

This means that a large majority of those who claim to be Spiritualists do not care for the philosophy, the reason why, the beautiful teachings which, if followed, would bring us into sympathy with our fellow beings and into harmony with all nature, giving us better health, longer life, making us happier, grander and better in the here and now, and preparing us for better conditions in the future as well as giving a truly scientific basis for a belief in the continuity of life, which can be demonstrated by the true phenomena.

Although many of them have had ample proof of the continuity of life, they still seek the phenomena; they want something sensational, or they want the dear spirits to advise them in some love affair, or tell them how to manage some business scheme to make it bring them larger returns, and a thousand other things which they should be better able to answer themselves, than any other could be, whether in the flesh or out.

It is this demand for phenomena and desire for money that brings forward the fraud medium.

To illustrate, one who can get an occasional genuine message, realizes the demand; they also realize that in all branches of business from the beggar on the streets to presidents and kings, fraud and deception is practiced, yet they are upheld and applauded; then they say, why should I hesitate to give more than I get from those gone before? The temptation is too great. They yield. Then they study newspapers and your conversation to get pointers on which they can enlarge, and in giving this they draw from you some additional points which are ofttimes handed to the next fraud coming into your locality, who of course can give a more complete reading and draw you out further possibly. We believe this to be the origin of many stock tests and information in this line constitutes the real blue book.

It is a shame, nevertheless it is a fact that these frauds with their trumped up and sensational tests, win a paid place on our rostrums, while our most logical, true and honest speakers and mediums, who cannot give genuine messages and will not give fraudulent ones, are compelled to drop out of the work for want of support.

We realize that it is very difficult to punish the fraud without sometimes hurting the genuine; nevertheless something needs to be done.

We would suggest that we hire speakers for what they are worth as speakers, paying for no public phenomena.

Allow mediums to carry on their business free from license; then watch, and when fraud is positively found, state it in local and spiritual papers, and prosecute under the State law.

If public messages and descriptions must be given, have them before the lecture when conditions are best for the phenomena. Have a committee appointed who are acquainted with the stock tests of the locality to report after the messages, not stating that such and such messages are frauds unless it is a self-evident fact, but stating that certain descriptions had been given from three to twenty times before, as the case might be, and thanking the spirits to step aside next time, and allow some other spirit to give a message unless they can give something more than to repeat what has been given before. We think even this would greatly diminish the size of the "blue book," as well as lessen the volume of public stock tests. I should like to say a few words in regard to the State conventions, for I feel that they are being largely run on the machine plan, and I fear that many times fraudulent mediums have been chosen as delegates, who in turn would help to elect such as would at least be liberal in helping them to place and position.

I hope that I may be wrong in this suspicion, but fear I am not; however, there would be no wrong in urging that you send your strongest and most substantial members as delegates to your state conventions.

H. L. CHAPMAN.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men. JOHN F. M.

A PROMINENT LECTURER.

One of Large and Varied Experience Expresses His Views.

To the Editor:—The true Spiritualists owe you a debt of gratitude for the unpleasant task you have taken upon yourself to do in cleaning out from the rank and file of Spiritualism the fake mediums who have so long infested the ranks of the Cause.

That you will succeed, as you deserve, in the noble work begun, is not at all likely, but the true men and women who have the Cause at heart will applaud your work and ever hold you in grateful remembrance for what you already have done and still aim to do through your truly Progressive Thinker.

It is a common custom among our pseudo Spiritualists when there is any dirty task to be done to shift the burden of work on others instead of aiding or sharing the work of reform, so the evils of abuse go on for years, and sin and fraud abound and flourish in the ranks to the disgust of the better class, until a crisis comes, as at the present time, and the public cry out for reform. I believe that that time has come, and your persistent course to call a halt and to bring to trial and justice the guilty parties is a means to an end, and the inauguration of a new era of true Spiritualism, and we may expect to see pure Spiritualism broaden and deepen until, like the radiant dawn of day, the sunbeams of truth will cast the shadows of night into the background and the dew-lighted earth sparkle with the fragrance of heaven over a sin-laden earth.

But incidental to this new era of our Cause much earnest work must be accomplished and the rough acres of stubbles must be cleared in the forest of iniquity.

But you, Bro. Francis, will not receive the credit you deserve in this work you are engaged in, for the lazy drones will say anybody could have done what he did, and it is ridiculous to give him so much praise. We all know about the frauds practiced in mediumship before you undertook to root it out, and we did not deem it worth the while to take up the matter, knowing it would cure itself in time. So it is, the man that does nothing always has plenty of excuses for his inactivity, but it is the man who does things that makes himself felt and is respected.

The good a man achieves may not be commensurate with his work and sacrifices, but at least he has the satisfaction of knowing he did something to help along the cause of truth as he honestly saw it.

I have only this to say so far as my personal experience has been as a public speaker in the Cause of Spiritualism, that among that class known as phenomenal mediums, and I have had a wide and varied one with nearly all of that class, I have found many of them morally weak and inclined to trick and simulate in their manifestations. There are, however, honorable exceptions, and these exceptions, whose names have never been smirched in the practice of fraud, will not feel hurt by the criticisms which may be justly meted out to that class that have disgraced their calling and the cause they represented.

I will say also, in conclusion upon this subject of frauds, that in my public work I have been the financial loser in refusing to serve societies that had previously engaged fake mediums to serve them on their platforms, and would not appear on their rostrums with them, for in so doing, knowing them to be frauds, I would countenance the brand they practiced.

A speaker who has to depend on the leader of Spiritual societies cannot always express his honest convictions as to the truth he may know concerning a medium, without he offends some and makes enemies where he would have the good will of all, and is often obliged to look on what he knows to be fraud and trickery.

He is in the position of a Christian minister I once heard of who on his introduction to a new pastorate was waited upon by the rich leading members and was told he must not in his sermons speak on the subjects of temperance, women's rights, slavery or politics, but confine himself to the subject of Jesus Christ and him crucified. The Spiritualists are very much after this sort of Christians; they do not want to hear the rights of man discussed, but to hear about the Sweet By and By and from their loved one in the spirit world. If men would learn the Law of Laws of eternal progress, he must not stop his labors with the first manifestations of truth, but must push onward to other attainments of undeveloped good and riches in Nature's field that awaits his crowning efforts.

Spiritual truth is untarnished by the shameful practices in her name, and is rising more luminous day by day with her garments of ever revolving beauty fresh from the hands of her creator, and is destined to become the groundwork of all systems and the religion of the world.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

MATERIALIZATION.

The Law of Its Manifestation Stated.

To the Editor:—What a tempest in a teapot you have caused over the subject of "fake materializations." Yet how many who are writing so copiously know the basic principles of this phenomena or any other on which the spiritual philosophy is founded.

Years ago the following message, written through the hand of Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, was given to me as the true method and motive of all the phenomena that have ever come to the world:

"When anything is to be demonstrated, any evidence to be given to the world, a band of spirits is formed here to give that demonstration, through a medium developed for that purpose.

"FARADAY."

In the light of this law, what becomes of "fake phenomena," but to relegate it to all other efforts to simulate the genuine after the latter has once been given by the medium developed for demonstration of this order, by the special band having this work in charge?

The early phases of this phenomena had no special commercial value, and really demonstrated the power of spirit over matter in this department of phenomena. The work then was in the charge of spirit chemists and electricians and until it was transferred from their field to that of commercialism we had little of the "fake" even in the form of "personation."

The desire to make this phenomena a finacial basis of gain is responsible for most of the mischief the cause is now suffering from, but the spirit chemists can hardly be held accountable for the "fake" performances in California or elsewhere.

THAT THE GENUINE EVIDENCE HAS BEEN LARGELY WITHDRAWN FROM THE WORLD OR CENTERED AROUND A FEW MEDIUMS IS PROBABLY TRUE, FOR SPIRIT GUIDES OF THIS ORDER ARE NOT IN THE SPIRITUAL MARKET FOR SALE.

Mr. Hale of California is calling for evidence on the same plane as the "fakes," that is by offering money to mediums as though they had the power to get their guides to give the evidence for money. He is not the only one who imagines that spiritual gifts are in the market because the "fake mediums" are. Under the law I have quoted, mediums who have these powers know that unless the spirit guides direct the circles there will be no manifestation given, and most of them have sense enough not to try. It would make no difference if Mr. Hale raised his offer to take another track than commercialism, if he ever gets a genuine manifestation.

Such mediums as W. W. Aber know this, and unless Mr. Aber gets positive directions to change his regular order, "California Spiritualism" of the "fake" type can stay in the ditch in which it now lies according to the testimony of Mrs. Hyland. I have no question as to the truth of her statements as to what she personally knows of the "fake" business, having had a hand in it herself and charged her victims liberal fees for obtaining the information, but it is hardly fair to ask Mr. W. W. Aber to go to California to prove that there is such phenomena, because he has kept out of that field in which she is an expert.

By the law, as written through Mrs. Twing's hand, no medium can give phenomena of this character unless he obtains his development from spirit. Evidently Mrs. Hyland and the other California "fakes," never have had this development, and hence cannot be expected to know very much what the law of spirit regarding materialization is.

To say one cannot touch a materialized spirit at all is coming it strong. To say that some cannot, would be nearer the truth. It is all a question of the rates of equilibrium of vibrations between the spirit and the mortal. When this is perfect one can touch the spirit and ascertain how solid and substantial the form may be, and in Mr. Aber's seances, it is often done. I have also seen it done with others, and have done it myself when conducting and participating in circles of this order. We did not do it for money, however, as an incentive.

Perhaps, if the California field is overrun with fakes, it might be worth while to inaugurate a scientific circle and see if there is not a better way than to give the fakes the field.

Personally I am out of the field as a writer or exponent of the philosophy, so have no interest in California Spiritualism.

But Mrs. Hyland and Mr. Hale will not be likely to enlist the spirit chemists by their methods, and unless they do, good bye to their hopes of seeing genuine materialization.

THEY MAY DO GOOD SERVICE IN EXPOSING THE "FAKES" HOWEVER

The law I have stated has not been abrogated, and I do not know as it is very important to the spirit world if "California Spiritualism" should die with the "fakes" and their victims.

B.

Hawks Park.

AN OLD-TIME LECTURER.

Mrs. Addie L. Ballou, One of the Prominent Workers in Spiritualism in Its Early Days, and a Splendid Medium, Gives Her Opinion in a Cogent, Impressive Manner.

To the Editor:—When summoned into court to bear witness, we may have to give testimony over and over again in the same case. Though I have again and again remonstrated, and reiterated the statements in many forms, I am still in evidence to respond to your call, and to hold up your hands in maintaining the integrity and honor for our beloved cause. No one who knows me and has ever heard my voice, but knows that all these years since my first adherence to Spiritualism, I have vigorously protested AGAINST THE PROSTITUTION OF THE SACREDNESS of Spiritualism by simulation, falsehood and fraud; making myself in so doing often the target of phenomenal expositors, because so often detecting their sleights of hand, and discovering their methods, and have incurred at times very direful threats accordingly, which have, however, never silenced me.

Let me again repeat what I have always said: If the survival of Spiritualism depends on phenomena that cannot withstand the light of day, let us bury it.

If mediumship must survive through deceit and mechanical contrivances, through commercialism and hypnotic assertion, the sooner it perishes from among us the better.

Again, if mediumship and that which it in its purest essence demonstrates, does not better the recipient and the dispenser, and become a blessing, let us put it away till we are either hungered or enlightened sufficiently to appreciate its true worth and beauty.

We have tarried too long in wonderland.

We have become familiar with hobgoblins and the makeup room.

The time for the scientific laboratory is passing, and it is now our time to observe.

To get next to God—yes, God, if you will, which is to know ourselves and become as Gods in knowledge of our great oneness with all universal nature, and how to master all things, principally self; to see through our own cleared windows of thought and comprehension all there is to see, and be a part of all there is to know—every one his own medium by refining and spiritualizing himself.

Away forever and forever with such commercialism!

Purge the temple of money changers, and live in the daylight!

It is time to put away our stray dolls and turn towards humanity, and there we will find angels, not only with those who suffer, but in ourselves. When we find those human angels, we have touched the spring, compared to which the revelations of the cabinet and the darkened seance are like a remote dream of illusions, myths and shadows.

Give us the light!

Our friends in the land of the to-morrow never meant their visitations among us to be made merchandise of, or to bestow for a price a kiss upon a dear dead baby's lips.

Before this rush to the arena for gold we stood face to face with them, and their tender touch was an inspiration, their words a revelation, their presence an exaltation. We were baptized with a holy incense, and drawn near to purification of thought and deed, as the earth towards the sun in its revolutions.

For many years these appendages on human credulity of the Reynolds-Crindle type have deceived an over-credulous and over-willing community; again and again, and yet again, exposures have been made, and "every time," to use her own expression, "It fills my pockets with good gold." And yet knowing her practices and her true character, the Spiritualists take her again to their bosoms, and she knows they will, and close their eyes and bury their ostrich crests in the sands and see no fraud, nor will they. "If she practices fraud, the spirits make her do it!" She is a world's best medium just the same.

* * *

For nearly twenty years—perhaps more—this Reynolds-Crindle family have been living off of the credulity of the people, their spirits and tests being WHOLLY OF EARTHLY ORIGIN, and in connection therewith were the artificial paraphernalia—cheap cheese-cloth robes, etc. The same tawdry and the same exposure and public indignation, and what did it amount to?

Spiritualists are not to speak aloud of these things, but gently deal with such affronts, and if we are in duty bound to swat the Vagabond Demon of Deceit, we must first upholster that ill-starred, but most apparent and least sensitive and least harmful, place of punishment.

If we have any far-reaching thing to be thankful for, it is the editor's characteristic fearlessness and moral courage to stand for the truth and right and the honest exposition of the faith that has been so dear to all who hope for immortality and whose love of humanity and those who are gone to the Morning Land to represent us and watch our conduct, not with criticisms, but with charity and tenderness, trusting in the pure and true within each of us to do only that which is noblest, kindest, grandest and best.

I wish I could say something that would express my deepest feelings on this matter, something that would burn, penetrate and convince all of the duty to be done, of the privileges to enjoy, of the blessed peace which comes to wreath the lives of those who dare to see the right and seeing dare to do and defend it.

ADDIE L. BALLOU.

San Francisco, Cal.

Materialization.

I Believe, but do not know, that materializations sometimes occur. That they are extremely rare I am satisfied; that the phase, genuine or false, has been detrimental to the progress of Spiritualism I am thoroughly convinced.

People interested in obtaining some demonstration of the continuity of life, have sought it in the materializing seance, with result that the gullible have been gulled and the ungullible have been disgusted. If the inhabitants of the spirit world have sought in this manner to prove their existence they have proved nothing so much as their own lack of wisdom.

Granting that some invisible being occasionally takes on a visible form, gathered somewhere, there is no evidence that this form is animated by the intelligence of one who once in earth life bore a form more or less resembling it. It may have been built up by any who had some knowledge of the former appearance of the person represented, even if, which so far as I know is not often the case, some knowledge of the past events is shown, this knowledge may have been common property to the hosts immediately surrounding the earth. Identity can in no case be established.

It is possible and I think true that spiritual beings sometimes clothe themselves with matter sufficiently to become visible or tangible to the physical senses. The last place at which I should expect this to be done would be an ordinary materializing dollar-a-head show.

A genuine materialization, if such there be, might occur spontaneously when all conditions were unexpectedly perfect. It would not be likely to occur when people gather together with no higher object than the gratification of curiosity, or worse, the desire to draw again into earth cares those who may be hoped to have escaped from them. If under such circumstances a manifestation took place at all, we might expect with it more of the "blasts from hell than airs from heaven."

E. J. BOWTELLE.

Pine Grove, Niantic, Conn.

(Continued on page 7.)

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

772

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building.
Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 15.
Admittance without examination.
Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week.. .. .. 1.75

Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

W. J. Colville lectured at Camp Chesterfield, Ind., for nine consecutive days, Aug. 21 to 29 inclusive, to large and enthusiastic audiences. He then spent a few days in Anderson, where the Spiritualists own a beautiful temple on Madison avenue and 13th street; lectures in that place were also very largely attended. Mr. Colville is now in St. Louis, lecturing frequently in the Pine Street Temple, of which Thos. Grimshaw is regular pastor, and addressing many conventions connected with the World's Fair. Address till further notice, care of Louis Cohen, 2612 Lafayette avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Gilbert E. Smith writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "We wish to announce that the Church of Sacred Communion opens its doors on Sunday evening, September 4, 1904, at 1246 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the coming season, and every Sunday evening thereafter. And as last season was such a grand success, we also hope to make the coming the same, and expect to see quite a number present at our coming services. Everybody is welcome; there is no charge as the church is kept up by the many friends. Our members have adopted the envelope system in the church which helps us very much. Come to our services; good singing and speaking. Miss Emma C. Resch, our young and gifted medium, demonstrates spirit return."

There is much comment over the curious circumstances connected with the discovery of the body of Clyde Stanley, aged 19 years, of Newton, Ill., in a flat car near Effingham, pinioned down by a pile of bridge iron. It is believed from the nature of the wounds on his body that he was murdered. He was a solicitor for a Chicago portrait company of which his brother was district manager. After the funeral his brother George in looking over the birth record in the family Bible, found immediately after the record of the birth of Clyde, an additional line in the writing of the young man which mentioned his death and giving the year as 1904. When it was placed there is not known, but there could be no mistaking the handwriting of the dead young man. His family believed that he had a presentiment concerning his fate.

The Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association, at its annual business meeting here, elected the following officers for the coming year: President, W. F. Peck, St. Louis; vice-president, W. A. Willing, Northwood, Iowa; secretary, Mrs. M. B. Anderson, Clarksville, Mo.; treasurer, Mrs. Christine Cooper, Clinton, Iowa; trustees, David Stanton, New Sharon, Iowa; J. N. Randall, Ottumwa, Iowa.

"Five years ago, when I was leaving this city, I was talking with Dr. Gallup about his activity in preaching," said the Rev. J. T. Husted at the funeral of James Gallup yesterday. "He then said to me that when five years had passed his work would have reached its end, as it has." The relation of this unusual coincidence was but a small part of the informal address of Mr. Husted over the remains of his old friend at Park Congregational church yesterday afternoon. He was assisted in the simple service by the Rev. S. T. Morris, assistant pastor of the church. The services were attended by a large number of those who had known and loved Dr. Gallup. The interment was at Oak Hills cemetery.—Grand Rapids, (Mich.) Press.

Frank T. Ripley, lecturer and test medium, is now ready to engage for lectures and messages for the fall and winter. Address all letters to Tipton, Ind., P. O. Box 326.

There is in Paris a new school of psychology to investigate such questions as mind-reading, mental suggestion at a distance, clairvoyance, presentiments, automatic writing, double personality, etc. This school, unlike most associations studying these subjects, has for its members medical men almost entirely, whose professional duties bring them in close contact with these often curious phenomena. The members are followers of Charcot. They claim that most of these societies of psychical research, especially in England, have produced no results, due to too much speculation and mysterious interpretations, which have led people into error, which is more difficult to uproot than it is to propagate the truth.

J. C. Andre writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "As the time is near at hand to open our meetings, I would be pleased to correspond with some first-class talent with dates open for December, January, February and March. In my notice of closing last spring I stated that we raised sixty dollars, which should have read one hundred and sixty. Everything looks bright for our new society, and we hope to have a revival as it was some years ago, when such good workers as Mrs. Joslyn, Boozer and many others who were in the work for the good of the cause."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Owing to Monday, September 5, being Labor Day, we were compelled to go to press on the previous Saturday, thus crowding out many items of interest.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley had an exceedingly pleasant and profitable engagement at the Clinton camp. Last week she went to Buffalo, N. Y., to serve the First Spiritual Church there, for the month of September. She will serve near-by societies for week meetings. Address her in care of Niagara Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Mrs. Cooley is one of the best rostrum workers in the field to-day.

E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A. missionaries, are making their headquarters at Battle Creek, Michigan during the month of September. They will serve the Battle Creek society the Sundays and Tuesday evenings of the month. Their services may be secured for other evenings of each week at towns within reasonable distance of Battle Creek. October 1, they will turn their faces toward St. Louis, Mo., arriving there in time for the N. S. A. convention which will open October 18, and last four days. Parties wishing their services en route, please address No. 11 Beach street, Battle Creek, Mich., until October 1.

Dr. Beverly writes: "We wish to invite all to Arlington Hall, northwest corner Thirty-first street and Indiana avenue, on September 21 and 28, to hear Mrs. Lindsley of Grand Rapids, Mich., who is a fine inspirational speaker and test medium. We expect from time to time the best talent in the country as speakers and mediums. Our hall is newly decorated, and we can accommodate a large number of people. Remember our next monthly party will be held Saturday evening, October 1. We shall have some fine entertainments this coming winter, and hope you will come and bring your friends. We believe our social functions are bringing social people closer in touch, and in time they will unite in civil and social co-operation for the advancement of this spiritual truth that alone can uplift humanity."

Litterateurs, musicians, Spiritualists, geniuses, and all folks who now and then enjoy cosmic consciousness, are excited over the remarkable dream story H. Rider Haggard, the novelist, has given to the public. Mr. Haggard says that while suffering a nightmare and while still half-conscious, he dreamed that his favorite retriever was dying, and that the animal was endeavoring to tell him the facts. Three days afterward the body of the dog was found in the river. It was discovered it was killed by a train three hours before Haggard's dream. The novelist hints that the spirit of the dead dog communicated with him. There are many things that cold, unimaginative realists will say about Mr. Haggard and his dream—a mere coincidence, or the product of an aesthetic mind. They might even say that he ate mince pie before going to bed or an imported sausage, an article full of canine possibilities. But the mystics, the impassioned slaves of feelings, will never be convinced that Mr. Haggard's dream was other than a real and tangible evidence of a spirit dog.—Eagle, Okla.

W. D. Akers writes from Meyer's Falls, Washington: "My dearly beloved wife bid us good-bye on Sept. 7, 1902. I have heard her voice three times since she left for her home in that sun-bright clime. There is scarcely a night passes but I see her blessed shadow upon the wall beside my bed. I expect to meet her ere long. The sun will soon drop behind these mountains for the last time with me. I am 84 years of age, and expect to live and enter the heavenly 'Canaan' a full-fledged Spiritualist. Enclosed find $1 for subscription to The Progressive Thinker."

Mrs. M. A. Fogg writes from the Niantic camp-meeting: "We are just about to close a very pleasant season of service here. We have had good speakers on the usual line, and all came but Mr. H. D. Barrett, who thought it was for his interest to stay where he was. We had a good speaker to fill his place. Our service of song has been fine. The ladies of the Aid are working for their hall, and though not money enough to vote its being built, they see a possibility of it in the sale of more of their lots. I have just sold one, and may three more in lump to-morrow, which will justify them in its construction. We are not dead, croakers to the contrary. Old ones have passed on, but they are around us still and the younger ones are stepping to the front, and another year we are planning changes for good. Lots of young people here, and the bathing is fine, they say. Well, I have got out of my arduous work of seven years as secretary and treasurer of the Aid Society. Miss Mary Hatch is my successor. I return to Southington this week, so please send my Progressive Thinker to that place. Mrs. Kate Stiles, of Onset, gave us the closing service of the season, which was listened to by an appreciative audience. At the close of the morning service, J. Frank Baxter spoke to us through her organism. We have had this season two lovely singers, a Mr. Hamlenton and Mrs. I. E. Church, of New London, whose musical selections just fill the heart with the vibrations of love and harmony. Conference, tests and music filled the closing hour with a grand success and makes one feel in kindred touch with all the world."

John A. Lant writes from Detroit, Mich.: "This city lies along along the Canada border with the city of Windsor opposite, and connected by frequent ferry boats. An International Spiritualist Society has been formed here for the fraternizing of both cities. Prismatic Hall has been secured in Detroit, and success to the new society is assured from the start. The first meeting of the season will be held September 18, and meetings will be held regularly every Sunday evening. Mrs. Jenkins of Windsor will be the regular speaker. A lawn fete was held last Tuesday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Fish, for the benefit of the Earnest Workers. The Island Lake camp closed with reasonable success, and the regular Sunday morning and evening meetings of Mrs. LaGrange, who presided there, will go on for the season at the large hall on Miami avenue. Miss Mabel White of this society, took charge of a band of destitute children and gave them an outing at Island Lake, restoring every one to their kindred rejoiced in spirit, and rejuvenated in body. A benefit circle was given by Mr. Coles this week for Mr. Lammy, a good medium, who has fallen sick and is no longer able to work to support his family."

Harry J. Moore is now filling an engagement with the Englewood Society. His address is 446 West Sixty-third street, Chicago.

Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society is to have another worker from the Rising Sun Mission, to lecture for it Sept. 11, Mrs. Nora E. Hill. Her good work when here before insures her a hearty welcome and a full house. Come and hear what she has to say. Services at 319 East 55th street, at 8 p. m. Mrs. Kline will be on hand with messages as usual. We will also have another euchre party at the same hall on Sept. 9. There will be plenty of beautiful prizes in linen and hand painted china. Come and win one. Game to begin not later than 2:15 in the afternoon and 8:15 in the evening; so come early; no average given to those who come late."

C. J. Barnes, the excellent trumpet medium, will visit Rockford, Mich., on the 10th of September. He will then go to Jackson, Mich., and different parts of the state for a month or six weeks. He will be glad to meet all of his old friends on his route.

Chas. Thessman, whose little daughter is a medium of rare powers, expresses his high appreciation of The Progressive Thinker.

B. Vaughn writes: "Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Vaughn are located at 2421 Calumet avenue. Mrs. Vaughn will hold a circle Wednesday evening, Sept. 7, in honor of their daughter, Mrs. L. E. Simmons. There will be readings, palmistry, music and refreshments."

Will J. Erwood, one of the best lecturers in our ranks, would like an engagement in Chicago, during a couple of Sundays in October—one before the N. S. A. convention, and one or two after. Address him at 924 Vine street, LaCrosse, Wis.

Ruth Eastman writes: "As secretary for Forest Home Camp, located at Snowflake, Mich., P. M. R. R., I will say that the camp came to a close Aug. 21, with D. W. O. Knowles as speaker and message bearer for the day. Although threatened with rain from early morning, people came in by wagon and boat load. An eager and appreciative audience listened to the morning service. The afternoon service was somewhat curtailed, caused by the approaching storm. The people were loth to leave their seats, so eager were they to catch every word. It was a happy ending to know our cause was appreciated to the last. Aug. 7 was the first rainy Sunday in the history of five years in camp, but it did not hinder two good services in The Retreat, by Mrs. Cora Morrill, to the campers mostly. Although the program was not carried out to the letter, owing to unavoidable circumstances, yet all seemed satisfied. The association is proud to announce that the camp of 1904 was a success in every way; no great financial returns, and no debts. A portion of the grounds was surveyed; the remainder will be soon, and 41 lots platted, mostly 50 x 50 feet for leasing. The desirability of such lots can be attested by those good workers in the cause, E. W. Sprague and wife, who opened camp July 31, as well as by all who have been with us in the past. Three stock and two social members were added to the association. Each one worked in harmony with the other, and much good was accomplished. We are already laying plans for next year's work."

Laura Matlock writes from Grand Ledge, Mich.: "On Saturday, August 20, Mrs. Marian Carpenter began her engagement at our camp. We can always have good words to say of her work. Under the influence of her spirit guides, she gave us five lectures, all of which were highly appreciated by our people. On Friday Aug. 26, Mrs. Piper of Battle Creek, Mich., held a message meeting, and while she is practically a new worker for our cause, yet judging from her work, we can well presume that she will become as famous as her namesake of Psychical Research fame. August 27, Mr. Dell Herrick began his engagement, it being Mr. Herrick's first appearance on our rostrum. His work proved to be all that we had been led to expect. We hope to see him at our camp again in the future. I cannot close this report without saying a word in regard to our chairman, Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly. That his work, both as chairman and lecturer, was appreciated is evidenced by the fact that the campers joined together and on the last Sunday presented him with a beautiful black silk watch fob and a solid gold Sunflower badge, which stands as a small token of the regard we all feel for him. We have all been pleased to have Mrs. A. E. Sheets with us from time to time during the camp season, and we sincerely hope she will so far recover her health as to be with us the entire season next year. The management have arranged to have our camp open one week earlier next year."

J. A. Toren writes: "The Society of the Psychic Forces, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, have engaged Dr. J. H. Randall to lecture on Sunday evening, September 11, and H. F. Arnold, on Sunday evening, Sept. 25. Both speakers are well known on the South Side, and draw large and appreciative audiences. Mrs. Isa Cleveland has returned from her two weeks' vacation, and will be present to take up the message work with renewed energy. We extend a cordial invitation to all, and especially strangers, to visit our meetings and learn more about the grand truths of Spiritualism. The messages at our meetings are clear and undisputable as hundreds of investigators will willingly testify who have been present in the past, and many hearts have been gladdened by positive evidence that their loved ones who have passed away can and do communicate with them. Our hall number is 361-3 East Forty-third street, three blocks east of Cottage Grove avenue."

A. Scott Bledsoe writes: "The twenty-sixth annual camp of this society was held in their beautiful grove near Delphos, Kansas, from August 5 to 21. The workers in attendance were Mrs. Bessie J. Bellman of Howard, Mrs. Inez Wagner, Mrs. Etta S. Bledsoe and A. Scott Bledsoe of Topeka, and Mrs. Alice Baker of Dallas, Texas. This was pronounced by many the best camp ever held on the grounds. A movement was put on foot to raise a fund sufficient to pay off all indebtedness of the camp, and more than eight hundred dollars was raised. A good brother has promised to double any amount raised and thereby enable the association to build an auditorium and make other much needed improvements. All the workers gave good satisfaction and especially Mrs. Wagner's trumpet seances pleasing to the many who attended. May Delphos camp live long and be prosperous. I. W. Richardson was elected president for the ensuing year."

Charles H. Green writes: "Sunday, Aug. 28, Mr. Geo. Montgomery addressed the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission at its hall. He chose a Biblical subject for his address, and very ably impressed his hearers with his words, defining the relationship of the Bible to the truths of Spiritualism. His address was followed by spirit messages through various mediums. The evening congregation was addressed by Dr. J. A. McFarland. He specially favored us this evening as Rev. Thos S. Warner, the assistant pastor, was to have addressed us, but was suddenly called from the city on account of the illness of his father. His words were enough to stir in the most dormant of minds a desire to learn more of the truths of our religion, Spiritualism, and to awaken new trains of thought that would undoubtedly lead the most orthodox of Christians to investigate our belief. Our hall was filled to its capacity and by such displays of attention and interest, it becomes more and more gratifying each day to observe that Spiritualism is becoming a factor in the minds of many. Tests by Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Weaver were also features of the evening, Sunday, September 11, Miss N. G. Warren will give an inspirational lecture under complete control. In the evening we will be addressed by ex-Senator T. A. Bland. Both lectures will be followed by spirit messages through our mediums. We invite both Spiritualists and those who are not, to attend our meetings at 378 S. Western avenue, at 3 and 8 p. m. every Sunday."

H. G. Purinton writes: "Your paper is needed here in Virginia, and missionaries also who can talk and teach truth, instead of belief. I will relate two instances that have occurred near here. A young man (a telegraph operator, rather wild, but I never heard he ever committed any crime), was run over by the cars and killed. His father is a Calvinist Baptist; his mother a Campbellite. They are nearly insane with belief that their boy is doomed to eternal torment, with no chance for redemption or salvation. The other is a case of clairaudience. A woman heard and recognized the voice of her neighbor who had been buried a few days before, calling her name."

Wm. A. Thompson wrote an article for the Open Court, but it came to hand too late to publish in full. He says: "I have critically read every article of the different writers, pro and con, with interest. In regard to our sister Eva Cassell's article in the last issue, in part I agree with her, but on some points I am compelled to disagree. Point of agreement: I am decidedly in favor of exposing every one who practices fraud. When we have positive proof, we should then and there expose them before all present, give them advice to reform. My point of disagreement: The experience I have had is that there are genuine materializations; however, only in one instance have I seen one full form, but on many occasions I have seen partial forms. We cannot all have the same experience. We would do well to use our reason and judge according to evidence. I have on different occasions seen partial forms of spirits at my own home, the medium being Mr. Naham W. Koons, who is nearly seventy years old, and who has been a medium since he was ten years old and who has been well-known in this vicinity since 1858, and has never been found practicing fraud."

Mrs. Wilfred Hansell writes: "The First Spiritual Church of Niagara Falls, under the pastorate of Mrs. A. Atcheson, of Buffalo, is rapidly coming to the front. She has labored faithfully and truthfully in our midst for two years and four months, bringing the light and comfort to many a soul. During August communications only were given, and many hungering hearts received comfort from the other side of life. Through her efforts Spiritualism is a much-talked of theme at Niagara Falls, and the officers and members are greatly encouraged. Last Sunday night our hall at 2207 Main street, was filled to the doors."

Mrs. J. Lindsey writes: "I spent the whole month of the camp at Clinton, Iowa. It was certainly most successful, and well attended. Everyone came with a good will and hearts full of harmony; not anything like inharmony. The speaking was of the best. The conferences were fine, all taking part. The mediums were all good. Everybody seemed pleased with their work. The officers of the association did all in their power to make the campers feel happy. The lyceum was under the management of Mrs. Lacy, who made all the children happy. The orchestra was of the best, and the singers were fine. I was so happy and comfortable, located with my friends from my own city of Grand Rapids. I am now at present in Chicago, where I will do some missionary work; then I go to Wattnott, Ill., to lecture for the society there. The Progressive Thinker was in full demand at the camp. Brother Peck, the president filled his chair with satisfaction to all."

Rev. Cora Benton, trance speaker and message giver, will be glad to hear from societies wishing a representative of the highest spiritual forces. Address 1714 Adams street, Toledo, Ohio.

A correspondent writes: "Genuine mediums!—yes, hundreds of them. Among them is Mrs. M. E. Weaver, No. 46 DeKalb street. She brings you in touch with the spirit world at once, in a manner unexcelled. She will surprise you by giving your own name in full, and then the tests that follow are simply marvelous. She reflects credit on Spiritualism by her life and work. Verily, the angels walk with her."

T. W. Sherk writes: "Next Sunday evening, Dr. D. S. White will lecture at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Subject, "Is Spiritualism a Science and a Religion?" Mr. Coates, the medium, and president of our society, has returned from his vacation refreshed and eager for the work before him. The workers in our church are full of enthusiasm and determined to carry well laid plans to a successful issue this coming season, and surely there never was a cause that called more loudly for intelligent consecration. While the great world lives in and for material things should not we Spiritualists earnestly endeavor to demonstrate that the true life includes the spiritual and immortal?"

A very pleasant wedding party of special personal friends of the contracting parties assembled at the home of Rev. J. M. and M. Theresa Allen, 651 South Grant street, Springfield, Mo., on the evening of August 27, 1904. The bride, Miss Eleanor H. Atkinson, and the groom, Mr. George W. Langdon, are both of this city and are firm believers in Spiritualism, Mr. Langdon being the honored president of the Southside Spiritualist Society. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers, plants, vines, etc. The bride was gowned in blue voille, trimmed in white, and carried a bouquet of white roses. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. M. Theresa Allen, assisted by Rev. J. M. Allen, and was very impressive and beautiful. At the colse of the service a bright little miss showered the happy couple with flowers, while Mrs. Allen said: "Thus may your future pathway be strewn with flowers." Congratulations followed. Refreshments were served and after the friends had departed Mr. and Mrs. Langdon went to their newly-built home at 797 West Elm street.

Lake Sunapee Camp, N. H.

Tuesday morning was bright and it looked as though it would be a good week. At 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Providence, R. I.

August 24, at 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Whitlock. At 7:45 p. m., seance by Mrs. Whitlock; the tests all acknowledged and gave general satisfaction.

August 35, at 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Whitlock.

August 26, the Ladies' Aid annual business meeting, and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Addie M. Stevens of Claremont, N. H.; first vice-president, Mrs. Martha Gove, of Riverdale, N. H.; second vice-president, Hettie Burpee, of Sutton, N. H.; secretary, Mrs. Martha Davis, of Hartland, Vt.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriett C. Comstock, of Newport, N. H. At 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests. At 7:45 p. m., seance by Mrs. Whitlock.

August 28, at 10:30 a. m., lecture by Mrs. Whitlock on "The Aim and Object of Spiritualism," which was well delivered and was well received. At 1 p. m., a seance by Mrs. Sadie L. Hand. This was her last seance at Lake Sunapee camp, and she gave perfect satisfaction. She was here all of the month. She did good work, and was liked by all. At 2:15 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Whitlock. Her subject was, "It Can't Be, But It is." I wish that thousands of people could have heard it. This was the closing address for the season.

This has been a very harmonious season. The attendance was small, but the meeting was a good one.

LORENZO WORTHEN.

To Wisconsin Spiritualists.

Arrangements have just been made whereby I am enabled to devote my whole time to field work in the interest of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, and therefore am desirous of hearing from every town and city in the state where meetings are desired. Our state association is in need of strenuous work, and it is for this reason that I have felt to put in my whole time in its interest. Spiritualists, let me hear from you. We want to grow, and grow we must. The time has arrived to arrange for fall and winter work. Let us prove that we are thoroughly alive.

I shall arrange my itinerary in routes north-east, south and west, as it will be better in every way to do so. Will you not be the ones to start the good work in your locality. You can make arrangements for one, two or more meetings, as you think best. Either write me or our secretary, Rev. Nellie K. Baker, of Portage.

We want personal memberships. If you have not renewed your membership, will you not do so now? Remember every little helps, and it aids in placing Spiritualism before the public when you do your part.

I shall make the conditions for meetings so easy that all can comply with same. In arranging for meetings, first come will be first served. Wisconsin has a good start in the work. Shall we keep that work moving? I am sure that every Spiritualist in the state is anxious to see the day when they can say "I am a Spiritualist," and not be afraid that they will injure their business. You can help make it so, by assisting to the extent of your ability. In various parts of our state obnoxious laws have been passed. This should not be so, and if we strive together in presenting Spiritualism in its best form to the public, we can soon stand upon a firmer footing. Address me at LaCrosse until October 1; after that at whitewater, Wis.

WILL J. ERWOOD,
President W. S. S. A.

BOOK REVIEW

Still on the Search. By George Otis Draper. Peter Eckler, Publisher, New York. $1.50 net.

This volume comprises a very readable account of a trip around the Mediterranean and elsewhere, and embodies an entertaining record of comment on human nature and its environments, by the observant author.

It is especially interesting to readers of a freethinking class of mind, and many of the comments disclose a rich though quiet perception of the humorous.

The book has many illustrations, by the author, disclosing much artistic ability.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Kate M. Hampson, widow of Oliver Hampson, on August 30. After about eighty years of earth-life her weary little body is laid aside and her soul takes its flight to the glorious realms of spirit life, where she will awaken in perfect health and happiness, and rejoice in the great change that has come to her.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price 25 cents.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

The new song-book, "The Golden Echoes," by S. W. Tucker, has found its way into many homes, and its beautiful songs have cheered many sorrowing hearts, which they are sure to do when heard and sung. They should be heard in every home in the land. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

"A Plea for the New Woman." By May Collins. An address delivered before the Ohio Liberal Society. Price 10 cents.

"Harmonics of Evolution. The Philosophy of Individual life, Based Upon Natural Science, as Taught by Modern Masters of the Law." By Florence Huntley. A work of deep thought, carrying the principles of evolution into new fields. Price, cloth, $2.

"Dr. Carus answers the question: "Is Life Worth Living?" very fully and satisfactorily. The whole is a comprehensive and helpful treatise."—Journal of Education, Boston.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

Starnos. A rosary of pearls culled from the works of Andrew Jackson Davis. Intended to imbue the sorrowing and stricken heart with new inspiration. By Dr. Della E. Davis. Price 50 cents.

Startling Facts or Deeds of Darkness Disclosed, Relative to Auricular Confession, and Its Relations to Sacerdotal Celibacy, Convents, Monasteries, Morality, and Civil and Religious Liberty. By Rev. J. G. White. Price, 75 cents.

Strike of a Sex. A unique story of a strike among women. Price 25c.

Studies in the Outlying Fields of Psychic Science. How to investigate, form circles and develop mediumship. A test of genuine mediumship. By Hudson Tuttle. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Superstition in All Ages, or "Le Bons Sens." Testimony of a Catholic priest who abjured the Christian religion and asked God's pardon for having taught it. Price, cloth, $1; postage 14 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope. This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. Price 25 cents.

Teachings of Jesus, Not Adapted to Modern Civilization. With the true character of Mary Magdalene. A book full of truth. By George W. Brown, M. D. Price 15 cents.

Ten Commandments Analyzed. By W. H. Bach. Price, 25 cents.

The Arcana of Spiritualism. A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy. A splendid work by the seer and philosospher, Hudson Tuttle. Price, $1.25.

The A, B, Z, of Our Own Nutrition. An excellent work and guide to perfect health. By Horace Fletcher. Price, $1.

The Aristocracy of Health. A Study of Physical Culture, and Our Favorite Poisons. A masterly work on the subject, by the gifted writer, Mrs. Mary Foote Henderson. Price, $1.50.

The Candle From Under the Bushel, or Thirteen Hundred and Six Questions to the Clergy. Nuts that are hard for them to crack. An interesting book. By Wm. Heart. Price 40 cents.

The Crisis. By Thomas Paine. Price, 25 cents.

The Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. Price, 75 cents.

The Development of Spirit—After Transition. The origin of religions, and their influence upon the mental development of the human race. By the late M. Faraday. Price 10 cents.

The Discovered Country. A very spiritual book, given through the mediumship of the late Carlyle Petersilea. Price $1.

The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God. By Dr. Thomson J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

The Dream Child. Reads like an inspiration. Treating clearly upon the laws of affinity, love and the attendant pain and sorrow invariably experienced therewith. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

The Fairy Land of Science. This beautiful book fills a niche in the hearts of the young people. Lyceum library literature. By Arabella B. Buckley. Price $1.50.

The Fountain of Life, or Threefold Power of Sex. A work that should be studied by both man and woman. It is one of the author's most useful and instructive books. By Lois Waisbrooker. Price 50 cts.

The God Idea of the Ancients, or Sex in Religion. A sensible, logical statement of opinion, but not of a revolutionary or sensational nature. A good book all through. By Eliza Burt Gamble. Price $2.25.

The Greatest Thing Ever Known. A dainty, helpful book. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price 35 cents.

The Great Psychological Crime, which claims that subjective mediumship is injurious, is edited by Florence Huntley, author of "The Dream Child" and "Harmonics of Evolution." Price $2.

The Idea of God. By Dr. Paul Carus. Fourth edition. 32 pages. "An effort to purify our 'Idea of God' that it may be greater, sublimer, and more awe-inspiring to future generations than it has ever been yet."—Literary World, London. Paper cover, 15 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization. A trenchant and masterly treatise. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price, 25 cents.

The Kingship of Self-Control. Full of most helpful ideas, and bound in white covers with pretty floral design. By William George Jordan. Price 30 cents.

The Life of Jesus. By Ernest Renan. Translated from the original French. Price, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

The Life Radiant. For every one in every walk of life. By Lilian Whiting. Cloth binding. Price, $1.

The Lover's World. A Wheel of Life. Treating on the subjects of love, marriage and parenthood. By Dr. Alice B. Stockham. "The Lover's World, garnered sheaves from the wisdom of books and life's experiences, is now returned to the heart of humanity." Price, silk cloth, $2.25.

The Majesty of Calmness. By William George Jordan. Price 30 cts.

The Missing Link of Modern Spiritualism. A most valuable book, giving a history of early Spiritualism. Written by Leah Fox Underhill of the Fox Sisters. Reduced to $1.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature. Demonstrates the continuity of life and our environment of spiritual influences. Free from all theories of superstition. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 25 cents.

The Mystic Thesaurus. By W. F. Whitehead. Leatherette, Price, $1.

The Other Side of Death. Scientifically examined and carefully described by C. W. Leadbeater. Price, $1.50.

The Romance of Jude. A story of the time of Christ, given through the mediumship of Mrs. Longley. Cloth bound. Price, 50 cents.

The Power of Truth or Individual Problems and Possibilities. It is excellent. By William George Jordan. Price 75 cents.

The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional. This is a most valuable book. It comes from an ex-priest, whose character is above reproach. By Father Chiniquy. Price $1.

The Prophets of Israel. Popular sketches from Old Testament History, than which no branch of science, in the last generation, has undergone a more profound revolution. By Carl Heinrich Cornell. Price 25c.

The Principles of Light and Color. Including The Harmonic Laws of the Universe, The Etherio Atomic Philosophy of Force, Chromo Chemistry, Chromo Therapeutics, and The General Philosophy of Fine Forces, Together with Numerous Discoveries and Practical Applications. Illustrated by more than two hundred engravings and four-colored plates. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Price $5.

The Relations of Science to the Phenomena of Life. Ideas of life scientifically expressed in contradistinction from the old theories. By Spirit Professor M. Faraday. Price 10 cents.

The Religion of Spiritualism, Its Phenomena and Philosophy. This work was written by that noble modern savior and grand man—Rev. Samuel Watson. A marvelous work. Price $1.

The Soul. Its Nature, Relations and Expression in the Human Embodiments. This is clearly a book on re-embodiment, or the principles of reincarnation. By the guides of Cora L. V. Richmond. Price $1.

The Soul of Things. These three volumes are among the most popular works ever written in explanation of the Spiritual philosophy. By William and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. Price $1.50 each; postage 15 cts.

The Soul's Song of Triumph. A prose poem by Harrison D. Barrett. Price 10 cents.

The Spiritual Alps, and How We Ascend Them. A few thoughts on "How to reach that altitude where spirit is supreme and all things are subject to it." By Moses Hull. Price, cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death, and Its To-Morrow. The Spiritualistic idea of Death, heaven and hell. A logical statement, proven both by facts and the Bible. By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

The Spiritual Significance. By Lilian Whiting. This book is all that the name implies—a spiritual book. Price $1.

The Spiritual Wreath. A new collection of words and music for the choir, the congregation and the social circle. Containing 64 pages. By S. W. Tucker, author of many musical publications. Price 15 cents.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. A book of short stories, written expressly to interest and instruct the young. A good work for Lyceums. By Susan H. Wixon. Price $1.

The Sunday Question. A historical and critical review, with replies to an objector. Its motto: All time too sacred to do wrong; no time too sacred to do good. Price 15 cents.

The Talmud. Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry and legends. Also sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polang. Price, cloth, $1.

The To-Morrow of Death, or the Future Life According to Science. Is just what it purports to be—what the title indicates—in every chapter. By Louis Figuier. Price, cloth, $1.50.

The Unknown. By the scientific writer, Camille Flammarion. Price, $2.

The Widow's Mite and Other Psychological Phenomena. A new book of 538 pages by I. K. Funk. A most remarkable and valuable book. Price $2.

The World Beautiful. Series One, Two and Three. Choice volumes of restful and educational reading, uniting the ideal and the real in this life. By Lilian Whiting. Price, each volume, $1.

The World's Sixteen Saviors, or Christianity Before Christ. A key to all the sacred mysteries of the present religions and their Oriental formation. By Kersey Graves. Price $1.50; postage 10 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

High School: Q. Did any Quakers suffer martrydom in Boston?

A. That depends on what is understood by martyrdom. During the years 1659-61, while John Endicott was governor of Massachusetts, four Quakers were executed in Boston. They were banished by the godly government for their belief under pain of death if they returned. They defied the law and were mercilessly dealt with. Endicott was a Puritan of the most pious type, and otherwise than as a religious zealot, is represented as an intelligent, and courageous man. The new world he believed was for the elect—that is Puritans, and Quakers were of the devil, without a right, he as God's servant, was bound to respect.

Student: Q. Will you give the cause of "tidal waves," such for instance as have been observed on the Great Lakes many times?

A. Tidal waves on the ocean may be produced by two or more waves uniting, but probably the most disastrous are produced by tilting of the ocean bed by earthquakes. A small uplift, by imparting momentum to the entire body of water, may give rise to an irresistible wave. Such waves in the lakes require no other explanation than the slight pulsation of their floors.

"Upper Sackville," B. C.: Those who wish while visiting the Exposition at St. Louis, to attend Spiritualist meetings and become acquainted with speakers or mediums, can address Thomas Grimshaw, 3015 Pine street, St. Louis, Mo. He has generously and zealously done everything within his power to represent the cause at its best and make the attendance of visitors pleasant and profitable.

Mrs. A.——, Md.: Q. Why is the work of Spiritualist missionaries confined so exclusively to the northern states?

A. The missionaries employed by the N. S. A., are so few in number that they cannot answer the call made upon them, and unless there is sufficient interest in a town or neighborhood, to make a request to the missionary to come, little or no good will grow out of a visit from a missionary. This question does not seem to know that in Texas, there is active mission work. At Galveston is a flourishing society and children's lyceum. There is a state association which maintains missionaries, and the work is actively carried on. It is not the latitude but the character of the people. If they ask for the missionaries, they will be visited with impartiality.

A. S. Shambough: Q. Can materialized spirits see in the seances they appear in?

A. The reason for this question being suggested is too amusing to pass by, and really gives it a complete answer. The writer says that not long ago he attended a circle. "It was in a tent in the camp. Now when I have attended seances in the city, I always sat on the left side having lost my left leg, and wearing a peg-leg, which is then out of the way. This time I was placed on the right side. A spirit—of a woman—came out of the cabinet about three feet to my right and began feeling around like a person in the dark. I felt the touch as it came toward me. Felt my shoulders, hand and face, and feeling my glasses, started to go to the next, when she stumbled against my peg-leg, stopped a moment and backed into the cabinet. It was dark."

From this, the questioner infers that spirits cannot see when materialized. This conclusion would be in accord with the "facts," and shows how much depends on accuracy of observation, and being sure of our "facts."

This questioner starts with the supposition that the "materialization" was a spirit, instead of allowing the facts to prove what that materialization really was.

A spirit perceives through all the senses, far more acutely than while in physical form, and to these senses may have added a sensitiveness to mortals unknown. For a spirit to blunder and stub its toe on a peg-leg, would be impossible. Such a performance cannot be spiritual.

Investigators are so eager to gain assurance that their friends live on the other side, that they accept manifestations which in other moods they would look upon with suspicion, or reject. They overlook the points of weakness, or like this correspondent, invent theories to cover them over. While they remain in this condition, and regard with wonder and rapt attention the fumbling of "spirits," in the thick darkness of such seances, fraud will flourish and the seance become a mountebank performance.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

Los Angeles, Cal.

The Truthseekers' Society, at its morning session last Sunday, inaugurated its new president, Dr. Heath, who in a few remarks, pertinent to time and place, gave evidence of his fitness for the position to which he has been elected, by calling upon the membership of the society for renewed efforts upon their part to assist the officers in lengthening the roll of membership and thus enlarging the scope and influence of the society.

The morning conference sessions of this society are becoming veritable love-feasts for the introduction and friendly interchange of thought, and no one attending them can help profiting in matters spiritual. The marked quiet prevailing at these meetings, and the close attention paid the different speakers, are strong indications of the good being effected.

In the evening sessions, a lecture upon some interesting subject usually precedes the messages which, for some time, have been given through the instrumentality of Mrs. Horder, of Pasadena. The control, "Fritz," gives truthful messages, as the writer can well attest, many of which are wrought in with amusing incidents.

The Christian Spiritualist Society, at its meeting, Sunday afternoon last, let its organization expire by "lapse of limitation," and then re-organized with an efficient corps of officers, Mrs. Lettie Allen, the presiding medium of this society from its inception, now withdraws to other fields of labor, which fact necessitated this action.

To both of these societies the writer would respectfully suggest that a well trained and dtermined effort should be made to gather the children into classes of lyceum work. Spiritualists, if you are convinced of the truth of your religion, why not strengthen the cause and seek to perpetuate its efficiency by bringing its truth into the consciousness of these little buds of promise who must, ere long, come into your positions upon this ever-shifting stage of action. The writer studied the philosophy of Spiritualism before seeing any of its phenomena. When he had gained a tolerable idea of the philosophy, lo, the phenomena came unsought. This is the plea I am making for the children: Give them the philosophy and moral lessons taught by your religion, and their minds thus prepared will be fitting receptacles for the proofs which will inevitably follow.

J. L. MERRITT.

Los Angeles, Cal.

THE OLD NORTH HOLLOW.

A Song by Dean Clarke—Tune: "The Old Oaken Bucket."

Our talented brother, Dr. Dean Clarke, has gone to his native state, Vermont, to attend an old home gathering, to be held in the town of Rochester, August 30, in the neighborhood known as the "Old North Hollow," where he was reared. He composed the following Lyric, to commemorate the scenes and events of his childhood, which he has most graphically and poetically described. He presents it to us for publication, noping that it may please his many friends well enough so they may preserve it, and sing it to his memory long after he has passed to the "Great Beyond." We trust it will make him as famous as the song from which it is patterned, as undoubtedly it is fully its equal in poetic merit.

How dear to our hearts are the scenes of our childhood,
When, after long absence, their sight we renew;
The grand old Green Mountains, their mantle of wildwood,
Whose varied rich colors enchant our fond view;
A peaceful green valley where nature reposes,
Where thrift and contentment in modesty dwell,
As lovely as that which was promised to Moses—
The dear old North Hollow we all love so well.

The grand old North Hollow, the mountain-girt Hollow,
Whose voices and echoes retain their old spell.

'Twas here that our parents toiled hard and provided
Good homes where we grew up to manhood's estate,
And sad was the day when the children divided,
And each for himself went to battle with fate.
Those years of hard labor, from March to December,
To raise our own living and something to sell,
Each farm boy, and girl, too, will always remember,
And to the grandchildren their hardships will tell.
The stony North Hollow, the wall-fenced old Hollow,
The tough-soiled North Hollow where no manna fell.

Our parents believed in a school education,
Tho' scant was the book lore possessed by themselves.
They well knew that knowledge ennobles the station
Of him who with brawn for his livelihood delves;
And fondly they thought that some child rarely gifted
Might shine where earth's great ones supposedly dwell,
So o'er the long roads, often bleak and high drifted,
The dear old red school house we poured to, pell mell.
O, high-souled North Hollow, the school-lighted Hollow,
Of some of whose scholars Fame's tablets now tell.

And now to the scenes in the valley before us
We bid a reluctant but cheerful "good-bye."
Ere long we shall go to the parents who bore us,
Whose beautiful home is in realms upon high.
But we'll never forget the dear lovely old Hollow,
Where many long years it was joyous to dwell,
And oft will return as the swift-flying swallow
Comes back to the nest where he broke from his shell.
O, dear old North Hollow, the blessed old Hollow,
The tears dim our eyes as we bid you farewell!

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

The Open Court.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 5.

FRAUD IN MEDIUMSHIP.

A Prominent Spiritualist and Leader Gives His Views of the Prevalence of Fraud in the General Walks of Life, and Does Not Wish to See It Condoned When Occurring Among Mediums.

It would be as reasonable to expect that there should be no fraud in the pulpit, no fraud at the bar or on the judicial bench, or no fraud in commercialism, as to ask for no fraud in mediumship. Human nature about averages. The medium enters the field of commercialism and sells his gift, and why not? We see the pulpit orator sell in his gift to the highest bidders, and the gifted bankers, lawyers and so-called men of affairs all use their gifts for their own advancement. A President of the United States is swayed by extreme partisanship and a desire to succeed himself. Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States are influenced by an outside pressure and give decisions accordingly. Legislatures are bought, unprincipled and tricky bosses in political control and rule the commonwealth. The spirit of commercialism prevails. The disposition to get all you can, no matter how, if you are not caught within the meshes of the law, and the world accepts all this and seems to be satisfied.

Now with this spirit dominating the world to-day, what can you expect of the men or women who discover they have a gift there is a demand for, and hanging out their shingles, commence to do business from a commercial standpoint?

There are mediums perhaps that can get good results under favorable conditions; under unfavorable conditions they cannot and then the trouble commences, for those that have paid their money want value received, and are ready to denounce the medium and cry fraud, while those who have gotten good results under favorable conditions will stand for the mediums, and thus they line up and form the two parties.

We have had much experience with these two classes at Lily Dale during the year. I remember one case where parties being suspicious that all was not as represented grabbed the "spirit" that was outside the cabinet to find a very flesh and blood medium. She wriggled away from them and got back into the cabinet, whereupon one party denounced the medium as a fraud, while one-half the audience denounced the grabbers and claimed the spirit dematerialized and went down through the floor, and a small war was on for a time between these factions. The officials of the camp were blamed by both parties—by the grabbers for allowing such frauds on the grounds and by the other side for not driving grabbers out of camp. We can imagine the effect such an experience would have upon honest, though skeptical investigators. In this case they left the camp grounds and did not return in years. In the meantime I never knew this medium to ever try to hold another seance on the grounds, and thus this particular grab produced good results.

And now, fellow Spiritualists, let us try to be honest with ourselves, with the mediums and the public, and above all let us not condone fraud or cover up guilt, thus becoming a party to the crime, for fear of the consequences in any direction. A. GASTON.

Meadville, Pa.

A COMPREHENSIVE VIEW.

A Former Officer of the Chesterfield Camp Expresses His Opinion in an Impressive Manner.

I think out and out frauds do the movement but little, if any injury; it is the person who is a FRAUD ONE DAY, and gives GENUINE MANIFESTATIONS the next, that is the great impediment to the advance of Spiritualism. This class I believe embraces the whole of commercial mediums with but few exceptions.

If this is not true, why do not these mediums flock to the support and assistance of those who are earnestly endeavoring to rid our ranks of charlatans and pretenders, and incidentally to remove the competition of this class from the true medium. IF THE AVERAGE COMMERCIAL MEDIUMS WERE THOROUGHLY HONEST, WOULD NOT SELF-INTEREST INDUCE THEM TO DO THIS?

Why is it that when conditions are proposed, which, while not interfering with genuine spirit manifestations, yet make it absolutely impossible for fraud to be perpetrated, that these mediums, if they be honest at all times, do not immediately give their seances under these conditions and no others? By doing this they would remove all suspicion from themselves and draw a line of demarkation between themselves and the fraudulent element. Instead of taking this course, is it not true that they oppose all such efforts and attack the ones making them as "enemies of mediums" and "fraud-hunters."

Who, let us ask, should be more interested, and who has more to gain by the detection and exposure of fraud and the devising of means to make it impossible, than the absolutely honest spirit medium, conscious of his or her truthfulness and honesty?

To my mind, there are two things responsible for this deplorable condition. One of these is the CRIMINAL CREDULITY and gullibility of SPIRITUALISTS themselves.

The other is the fact that mediumship is made a matter of merchandise. The medium is drawn into the COMPETITIVE STRUGGLE, and soon degenerates into a mere money-lover, making money-gaining the chief end in life. Unselfish and humanity-loving guides are soon displaced by those on the plane of the degraded medium, and the result—the condition in which we see Spiritualism to-day.

I am a great admirer of The Progressive Thinker and of the wonderful effort you are making for the removal of these evils. May you remain on the earth plane for many years to wage this battle, is my hope.

F. J. MACOMBER.

Anderson, Ind.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price, 25 cents.

THE FRAUD QUESTION OF SECONDARY IMPORTANCE.

I make no claim as belonging to the master mind class; possibly a few thoughts from the servant class may serve to give variety to the menu of the Spiritualistic table as spread weekly by you, Mr. Editor, in the rightly named Progressive Thinker. A single sentence is all I care to say on the hackneyed subject of fraud. All Spiritualists and others attending materializing, trumpet or slate-writing seances, should insist on strict test conditions. If the medium refuses to give these, do not patronize him (or her) the second time, and persuade others to do likewise. This is the quickest and surest way to break up fraud mediumship. If people will not do this, they have no right to complain of fraud.

To my mind there are questions affecting Spiritualism far more seriously and vitally than the fraud question.

Spiritualism came to earth to redeem its people from ignorance, error, poverty and crime. It has done something toward abolishing ignorance and falsehood. What has it done toward the abolition of poverty and crime.

Little or nothing.

Not one Spiritualist writer or speaker in a hundred touches upon the primary cause of poverty and crime. Why is this? Are they fearful of popular opinion, or do they lack the inspiration so vitally essential to the times in which we live? Under the system of economics in which we live, one man in forty years is said to have accumulated a thousand millions of dollars. This man has a year old grand-daughter, who inheriting this fortune, will at the age of 75 years, at prevalent rates of interest, own and control thirty-two billions worth of property. In the meantime other individuals are accumulating proportionately and 60 years hence 95 per cent of the property of the nation will be in the hands of 3 per cent of the people. Such a condition means abject slavery for the masses and sensuous luxury for a few masters, the loss of national spirit and the death of patriotism.

Are we not following in the footsteps of ancient India, giving our central thought to the mere occult, and neglecting the industrial and material, which practically are the foundation of all mental, moral, and spiritual activity? It was the neglect by the intelligent class of cultivating a knowledge of these fundamental principles and forces that caused the downfall of India and Egypt, and gave them into the hands and control of a nation which gives material things their due weight and place in the mighty structure of humanity and its social life.

If Spiritualists will not step forward and help deliver the people from economic slavery, then their mission is but half fulfilled, and a cult, essentially political, social and religious will evolve from the masses which will perform this glorious work; thousands of Spiritualists are already in this work, but there should be millions!

Sisters and brothers, let us look well to the foundation of all faiths, of all morals, of all true philosophy and religion, the rights and liberties of man, and maintain fearlessly and in a practical way equal opportunities for all in the physical sphere of human life.

B. L. FRENCH.

San Francisco, Cal.

MIXED FRAUD IN MANIFESTATIONS.

I see it proposed that mediums, in order to secure genuine manifestations, be covered over by mosquito netting that shall be nailed down around them to prevent any operation of the medium, independent of the spirits. Certainly such persons, suggesting such arrangements, must have but very limited experience in spiritual work. One-half the persons writing about fraud appear to not know the limits and nature of it, and some clearly report genuine manifestations as spurious. The only cases of clear fraud are those in which the pretended medium wholly simulate the manifestations and receive no aid from decarnated souls. Such are completely counterfeit and spurious.

But there are many instances in which the medium is only partially involved in the imposition. There are plenty of spirits that aid fraud, and this must be taken into consideration in dealing with the produced results. The proposal to confine the mediums in mosquito netting, as was done recently in Michigan, amounts to nothing if they have the aid of trickery and willfully deceptive spirits who will use their power to perform spurious work. There are many cases in which the medium is honest in which the work appears to be wholly attributable to deception. I remember a case detailed with great particularity by Giles B. Stebbins in the early history of the work. He called on a very humble wash-woman in Western New York, who was greatly gifted as a medium. She was used by the spirits to perform many inexplicable things. She charged nothing for her services, so any suspicious work could not be attributed to mercenary motives. The seance with Mr. Stebbins was conducted by himself for investigation, and was of a private nature. The medium was nailed down by mosquito bars and numerous twines. In a few minutes the spirit—or what purported to be—came out dressed in white and began many performances. Mr. Stebbins stepped back to where she had been pinioned and she was not there. The netting lay on the floor in correct position and yet fastened by the numerous tacks, but the person was non est. When the seance was brought to a close, the medium was found in position incarcerated in the netting, precisely as had been arranged at the beginning.

Now, what are you going to do with a case of this kind? Was that medium a fraud? There are numerous instances where mediums have been closed up in seamless sacks and the same sealed and yet the manifestations proceed without delay. Do you suppose if you were to lock fast a medium and yourself hold the only key that spirit power and intelligence could not release that medium as the angels knocked the chains off Peter?

Many persons seem to think that the medium alone is responsible for all that occurs at a seance, but very often the forces on the other side have the power and the will to practice deception. Sometimes a medium may have strong power as a medium, and be allied with dishonest natures on the other side that are only too willing to confederate with him to produce any kind of mischief. In attempting to suppress and head off fraud, you have them to deal with, and in a case of that kind your wits will be tested to the utmost. You will discover that your mosquito bar test will be flimsy enough. C. H. M.

Elkhart, Ind.

AN EARNEST PLEA.

In Favor of Eliminating Fraud All Along the Line and Elevating Spiritualism to a Higher Plane.

Every individual and every church or organization has more or less fraud in them. Every political party and every family has its deception and fraud.

For the individual to eliminate fraud from himself and learn to be rather than seem to be what he or she is not, is the road to progress, to true manhood and womanhood. But how many of the human family succeed even among those who recognize this fraud in themselves and hold themselves up for daily inspection, to be searched by this spirit of truth? How many arrive at the point in themselves where there is no night, no dark side to themselves? Those who have eliminated all deception and fraud from their lives have found the kingdom of heaven within, where there is no night, where there is perpetual sunshine and summer, where bloom the fragrant flowers of purity, love and peace. These are the rewards of eliminating fraud from our individual lives. This is the work of the pure spirit—the God within.

Shall not Spiritualists seek the truth and discard the fraud in order to attain purity as a sect?

Shall they not honor and follow truth wherever it may lead?

Where is there a class of people, a religious sect or organization more devoted to truth than the Spiritualists as a whole?

Instead of suppressing the truth by vituperation and anathema they covet investigation and give truth a free field to cope with error, trusting implicitly in the outcome.

Their faith in the power of truth is unbounded.

As proof of this witness the able discussions on that "Great Psychological Crime," and its attack on mediumship.

Witness the present holding up to the light of the various tricks practiced by unprincipled mediums.

SO LONG AS SPIRITUALISTS HOLD TO THE LIGHT OF TRUTH INSTEAD OF DODGING IT OR SUPPRESSING OR COVERING IT UP, SO LONG CAN SPIRITUALISTS BE PROUD OF THEIR CALLING.

What church or sect dare to peer into their past record and eradicate the fraud and lies, the very foundation upon which they are built?

What church dare follow and worship at the shrine of Truth and cry out to the powers that be to turn on the light—more light?

Is not the foundation of church and state laid in fraud and injustice from start to finish? And he who turns on the light is a heretic and a rebel.

The Christian church proposes to worship the Prince of Peace.

Do they do it?

Do they follow him?

Our nation professes to be a government of, for and by the people. Are we, in fact?

Eliminate the fraud out of church and state, what a revolution it would be!

But let Spiritualists go on and eliminate the fraud out of Spiritualism, as much as possible. It is the right road.

Also as indivduals, learn to be in spirit and in truth what we seem to be. Get fraud and deceit rooted out and manhood and womanhood shine forth in full glory.

E. K. WALBRIDGE.

Pittsburg, Kans.

PROOF PALPABLE.

That Materialization Is a Fact.

Mrs. Laura M. Hylands's articles in The Progressive Thinker would seem to say that she does not believe that any materializations or physical phenomena is genuine.

I do not know that she wishes to be so understood.

Now I know some materializing mediums that are dishonest and frauds, while I am acquainted with others that are genuine.

Several years ago, two or three honest men asked me to join them in a thorough investigation of the powers of a materializing medium who was not then, and never, I think, has been since, known to the world as a medium. We, four or five, with our wives, met at the house of the Judge of the District Court, where our experiments were made. In the residence of the Judge was a small bedroom. It had but one window and one door. The door opened into a sitting room. We took that door off its hinges and hung a curtain up instead. The window was nailed down securely. There were no closets, nor trap doors, nor cupboards, nor anything else in that room except one chair. We used it as a cabinet.

We took Mr. B., the medium, put him in the chair; put mittens on each hand; then with needle and No. 20 white thread, securely sewed those mittens to the ends of his coat sleeves. Then, with the same thread, we sewed his coat up securely in front, and putting his feet in a pan of flour, we ran several strands of the white thread from the bottom of his pantaloons to the carpet on the floor. In all this sewing we tied frequent hard knots in the thread. We also attached the chair to the carpet by white thread.

It was simply a physical impossibility for the medium to move the chair or to leave the same without breaking scores of strands of this thread. After the seances, we found him in the exact position we had placed him.

About ten persons sat in the sitting room, in front of the curtain over the door passage. Various phenomena followed. We had no full form materialization, but many face and chest exposures occurred. An aperture, or slit in the curtain, had been provided about five feet above the floor. Through this many faces came. Full, well formed hands and arms would be thrust out; handkerchiefs held up to the aperature would be seized by those hands. They would disappear inside and in a few seconds the handkerchiefs would be thrown out to us tied in many hard knots, so tightly that it required the owner several minutes to untie the same.

These spirit hands seemed to be as natural as physical hands of mortals. They would be slapped, one against the other in full view, producing a concussion and noise as loud as would be produced by clapping the fleshy hands. Tablets of paper with a pencil were passed in and messages were written and thrown out.

For about three weeks these seances were held, and every vestige of doubt that this phenomenon was produced by invisible intelligences was forever removed from the minds of the investigators, all of whom were honest, intelligent adult persons.

These seances were not public and the medium was not a professional. No money was paid except to compensate the medium for his time, as he was a poor man. They were held in the residence of a distinguished judge of the courts. There was no motive to commit fraud, and there was no fraud. Nothing can make ten earnest investigators believe they were the victims of fraud.

Of course I freely admit there are dishonest, fraudulent mediums as there are dishonest preachers and doctors and politicians. I personally know some of them, but the majority of mediums, and of all professions and calling, are well meaning and honest. I have seen genuine materializations through mediums other than the one I have mentioned above.

R. A. DAGUE.

Alameda, California.

Convinced of Materialization.

I have read the many articles in your valuable paper, regarding Mr. Hale's offer of $1,000, and I am glad to note that Mr. Shaw of Toledo, Ohio, has made a proposition through your paper to Mr. Hale which is very reasonable, and I hope that Mr. Hale will accept. Mr. Shaw's proposition, for he is evidently sincere in his proposition to give $1,000 in order to be convinced of the truth of materialization, and Mr. Shaw will convince him, thereby doing good work for the cause, for no one who ever saw genuine materialization doubts it. Space will not permit of my experience commencing fourteen years ago when I wrote up in The Progressive Thinker my first sitting at the home of a genuine materializing medium, James Riley, of Marcellus, Mich., and I am truly sorry to see in your paper that he has been seriously ill at Battle Creek, Mich., and I trust that he may be spared to continue in the good work. I was a very hard subject to be convinced of the truth of spirit return, and I ran across a good many frauds, but I did not refuse the genuine. James Riley did more to convince me of the truth of spirit return than all of the other mediums I visited, except two others in Columbus, O., and one of them I hired to work for me because he was not a professional, and through him I got a great deal of truth. I was at Farmer Riley's house eight times, and I can truthfully say as thousands of others can who have been at Mr. Riley's sittings, materialization is a fact.

If Brother Riley was not ill, Mr. Hale could be convinced of the truth of materialization by going to Brother Riley's home at Marcellus, for a good deal less than $1,000. Hoping that Mr. Hale may get the light which he seeks, through Mr. Shaw. A VEREBOME.

Carthage, N. Y.

PROOF PALPABLE.

A Message Written in the Most Difficult of all Languages, the Chinese.

I will express some thoughts in the Open Court in hope of aiding progressive thinkers to take the most reasonable and liberal view of the present situation. There have been doctrines, averments, assumptions, theories promulgated and propagated in the name of Spiritualism that are in positive conflict with its facts, its principles, its philosophy. This has always been so, yet all errors belong to those who express them, and we all have errors and faults, more or less. No one knows all the truth and every one knows some truth. We are Spiritualists by what we know; not what we believe. Our science is fact—our philosophy is truth.

We are free to believe or disbelieve anything, and some believe things that others do not. We should not be alarmed when we see errors propagated in the name of Spiritualism, for they can do it no harm. Every man and woman should be liberal, unselfish, tolerant and allow others the same rights and privileges we claim for ourselves individually; for we all have complete freedom to say and do and think as we like.

If we put a saddle on a horse it is not part of the horse and will not be there always. Just so, if fraudulent practices and erroneous doctrines be saddled on to Spiritualism, that does not make them component parts of it.

It came to pass several years back, that the medium, Henry B. Allen, was called upon to hold a seance at the residence of a wealthy farmer a few miles from Summerland, and he went. There was a Chinaman employed in the house at the time, and Ion was invited into the seance, and he went in. It lasted one hour, and Ion was astonished and pleased with the wonderful manifestations of sight and sound; particularly the concert played upon instruments by invisible hands.

The members of the circle received messages written by spirits, and Ion got one written in Chinese, and he was the only one there who could read it. Ion said it was a message from his grandfather, containing some words that proved identity, and that he never heard that name spoken or saw it written in that country.

The next morning Ion met his comrade, and with a good degree of enthusiasm, described the wonders he had seen and heard in the seance—told the man that he received a spirit message from his own grandfather, and showed it. The man read it and replied: "It am one trick. You no foolee me. You write him yoself."

Ion had no more patience with that man, so he went to another one of his countrymen and gave him a description of the wonders he had witnessed, and showed him the message from his grandfather. The man took it in his hand and read it and said: "It am de Debilim."

This illustrates the attitude of some professed Spiritualists, who are ready to make the charge of fraud as soon as a case is sated. * * *

The age of reason has dawned and the sun is mounting toward the zenith with slow certainty and casting into shadow many old ideas of the past. We should trust to time and conditions for our fellow-being to progress above and beyond all errors, as we do.

Wrong-doing injures the wrong-doer, but cannot injure Spiritualism; and when we view it in the right light, separate from faults and errors of its adherents, we see in it much consistency, unity and harmony.

A. H. NICHOLAS.

Summerland, Cal.

Have You Hay-Fever or Asthma in Any Form?

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous.

Miss A. E. Frye, Lakenan, Mo., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever after several years suffering, altho' physicians had said a cure was impossible. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, writes March 8th, that he used Himalya (the Kola Compound) on numbers of Hay-Fever cases with satisfactory results in every case. Hon. L. C. Clute, Greeley, Iowa, testifies that he was cured by it after eighteen years of suffering with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Physicians or change of climate did him no good. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the Importers, copies of which they will be glad to send you.

To prove beyond a doubt its wonderful curative power the Kola Importing Co., No. 1163 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

11 Read This List of 11 PREMIUMS.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

1. The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, our leading Premium Book this year. Price 25 cents.
2. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Price 25 cents.
3. A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Price 25 cents.
4. Seers of the Ages, by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 25 cents.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 40 cents each.

We have only ELEVEN Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any two of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.
Any three of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.
Any four of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.
Any five of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.
Any six of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.
Any seven of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.
Any eight of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.
Any nine of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.
Any ten of the Eleven Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Lastly, all of these ELEVEN Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.35, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

OUR ELEVEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.35.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.
6.—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Transcribed by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.
11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Address all orders to

J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Illinois.

KEEP POSTED

In Current Spiritualistic and Occult News.

You can do it by reading each week The Progressive Thinker. The Philosophy and the Spiritualistic and Occult phenomena it contains each week, is the marvel of the age. No one can afford to be without the paper. Its price is within the reach of all.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In "Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

What the Swedenborgians Teach at Their University.

At Urbana, Ohio, the "New Church" has a university, not large, yet one any organization might well be proud of. In the catalogue for 1904-5, which is its 54th year, there is a statement of the objects of the school, and wherein it differs from all others. The Spiritualist will be pleased to see how perfectly Swedenborgianism and Spiritualism duplicate each other. The university has for its object to give a complete education in all branches, these being taught in the light of the philosophy of the new church. This philosophy, briefly stated, teaches that the spiritual world has a substantial existence, more intricately and distinctly organized than the natural, and bears to the natural world the relation of cause to effect. It therefore follows that all natural science is the ultimation and embodiment of spiritual science. Heat and light, electricity and magnetism, chemical phenomena, plant and animal life, and every possible manifestation of energy and life in the world of matter, are but the varied effects of ever present and irrepressible activities of spiritual force and life. Hence there is no conflict between natural truth and revelation. This view of natural science emphasizes the importance of the most thorough study and careful research in all of its branches, and adds to the commonly recognized value of such study, as a means of a wider sphere of usefulness in the daily affairs of life, an uplifting and ennobling element for the reason that it is the eternal element. To education in both its natural and its spiritual sense Urbana University is dedicated.

There is one objection to this course and that is, the whole scheme and tendency is to interpret nature by the Bible. The interpretation of the Bible by Swedenborg is as infallible as the book is to the most orthodox. All study hence is ultimately tied to the interpreted scripture. It seems a pity that such a sublime view of the interpretation of the spiritual and material universes, and the dominance of the former should be weighted down and perverted to the support of a book that has only a forced relation thereto.

The claim that "there is no conflict between natural truth and revelation," may be true, but when this takes for granted that the Bible is a revelation, and all the teachings of science are in unison with it, nothing can be more erroneous. There is not probably a single interpretation of natural phenomena in the Bible that will bear the searchlight of science.

Discussion.

The one object of discussion should be the gaining of full knowledge of the truth. To discuss for the purpose of silencing an opponent, is scarcely above the encounter in the prize ring.

To care nothing for the means by which an opponent may be defeated, to employ sophistry which pleases the crowd, and to conceal opposing facts and shade those which support, is unworthy of any one claiming to care for the truth, and brings no good results. The moment personalities come in, the contest sinks to the caste of a prize fight, and truth flies away.

What are we after? To expose the weak points in each other's armor, or character? Or to get at the truth? It is not what any man looks on as truth, for personal opinions are nothing—one man may stand opposed to all the world and be right.

As I understand; we as Spiritualists are and all want to know what is truth, and unite upon its everlasting foundation. If discussion is generously conducted instead of being driven wider apart, we shall be drawn together.

All the time we use in defining what we understand another's position to be, and exposing it, is utter waste. What have we to show for the truth? That is the question. When we have done this, we shall find there is no time left for personalities.

A New Crown for the Virgin.

In 1854, when Pope Pius IX, promulgated the dogma of the immaculate conception of the Virgin, he gave an ostentatious pageant of placing a crown on her statue at St. Peter's. The present pope will repeat the crowning with a pomp and lavish expense that will eclipse the tame performance of his predecessor. The crown is being made under the direct oversight of the pope. It will have twelve stars formed of rare diamonds and will cost $10,000. The pope on that occasion intends to hang a diamond necklace on the virgin's neck! All for what? To worship a creation of fancy, which could not have existence. A "virgin mother," is a contradiction in words which would be ridiculed by anyone not steeped in superstition. Is it not late in the centuries to have such stupid folly linger mocking the culture and intelligence of our civilization? Think of a great religious body, claiming to have God's representative on earth, magnates, cardinals and priests bowing in the dust before a painted doll, crowning it, and hanging necklaces and trinkets on its irresponsive form! and this in the dawn of the 20th century! Is this religion yet awakened from the nightmare sleep of the Dark Ages?

Pure Food.

Commercial competition has, to cheapen products, gone to the extent of adulteration, and it is time the consumers cry out against it. Health depends on the quality of our food, and we may say that spiritual progress is determined by the condition of the physical body. There is a mutual interrelation between the spirit and the body, and therefore the question of food has far more significance than its material consequences.

The experiment station of Wyoming makes a report on tests of foods made recently, which should make every purchaser hesitate.

Out of four hundred and twenty-five articles analyzed, two hundred and sixty-eight were adulterated or misbranded. Twenty-one kinds of baking powder were analyzed, only nine of them being found pure. Ninety-eight kinds of spices and condiments were analyzed, fifty of which were adulterated or misbranded. Out of one hundred and twenty-six kinds of canned goods tested eight were found pure and true to name. Of "meat, fish, oysters," etc., three out of nineteen samples were "not adulterated." Thirty-four samples of sugar, syrup, candy and honey were tested, and exactly half of them were untrue to name and brand. Out of nine samples of jellies and preserves, one was found pure. Every sample of vanilla extract and catsup was found to be bad. Every sample of canned beans—there were twenty-nine different brands—was "preserved" with salicylic acid. Eleven kinds of canned corn were analyzed, and all but one were found to contain the same illegal preservative.

The excuse of the manufacturers is that these preservatives and adulterants are harmless. We believe a Washington professor persuaded a class of officials to use the preservatives as condiments, and there was no serious result to health. But these subjects did not receive the quantity and many kinds that are absorbed into the systems of those partaking of the prepared foods. Canned vegetables, fruits or jellies are preserved with salicylic acid; meats contain boracic acid, and the fresh quarters are washed over with it and embalming fluid, which also goes into "pure milk;" bread is made from poor flour, white with alum, and baking powder may be strengthened with alum and ammonia; butter may be lard, tallow, oil or any deodorized grease; cheese with the butter of the cream replaced with cheap fats; all kinds of food may be colored with poisonous analine, and the "honey" and "drip" syrups made in the sulphuric acid vat of the factory acids, and various metallic solutions may linger. A supper that takes as seasoning, salicylic acid, embalming fluid, boracic acid, formaldehyde, alum, ammonia, sulphuric acid, and quantities of metals and minerals ought to promote nightmares, and give doctors employment.

Can the necessity for laws compelling honesty in manufacture be denied?

HUDSON TUTTLE.

MT. PLEASANT CAMP.

Interesting Letter From This Popular Resort.

The Mt. Pleasant camp-meeting is over, but like a sweet perfume the memory of its harmonious combinations and spiritual vibrations lingers with me, making life sweeter and better. I had the pleasure of enjoying the last four days of camp in this enchanted spot, enjoying a constant feast of good things, physically, mentally and spiritually. This is one of our most successful camps. Prof. W. F. Peck, the president, is equally well adapted to preside at a meeting, give the oration or lead the singing. He is also an adept at managing the various entertainments, whether it be a card or tea party, dance or minstrel show, he is the life and spirit of it. He not only works incessantly himself, but has the rare tact of enthusing others; if you cannot sing, you make a joyful noise and if you are only a listener you still participate with undivided attention and applause.

No wonder he was re-elected president, a position he has filled for a larger number of years than any other camp president in our ranks.

Mr. W. A. Willing, the vice-president, is his able supporter. Mr. Willing is big in every way, but especially so inside, and every inch of him is devoted to Spiritualism. He is a deep thinker, an intelligent reasoner, a fearless representative of our great cause, and a lawyer.

Dainty Mollie Anderson, the secretary, and sweet, wholesome Christine Cooper, the treasurer, both bright and winsome in their own charming personality, complete the official roster, backed by a board of trustees including G. H. Brooks and Max Hoffmann. No wonder this combination of brain and force has brought forth such a successful season.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow delivered a masterful address each day, giving voice to the unspoken pent-up feelings deepest in the hearts of the people, which she clothed in fairest garments and sent forth to assist in working out human destinies. Her subjects were on the questions of the hour, real live problems which the people must solve correctly before they will ever be settled.

Woman's proper place and influence in the world was handled with the dainty, forceful touch of the inspired artist. Through dark ages woman has struggled onward and upward, she has battered down the doors of prejudice and has reached up her hand to save man from his own worst self, to save her children, with her great mother heart—that anchor which holds, though rocks are torn and worlds turned upside down.

She portrayed woman taking her proper place in the intellectual world, winning her share of the diplomas and decrees at our schools of learning. In the world of industry, when pushed there, she does her duty. Six million women are to-day bread-winners in America, none more industrious and trusted than she who has proven to the world her superior honesty, faithfulness and virtue; we would have but few prostitutes were there not men to pay the price. Woman the star of a better and a sweeter and grander nature, her tongue is being heard and her hand felt. She it was who gave to the world its Modern Spiritualism, through her influence we shall have a land without a king, a church without a bishop and a home without a slave, a humanity that knows no merchandise in virtue and land, no woman selling herself for a home.

Then shall "Old Glory" float over a ship of state that does not acquire through bullets, the veil shall be rent asunder, the nation shall rise, for the mothers have been set free.

The negro question was discussed in the same earnest, human way. Lincoln's great thought was more liberty, to-day we have trouble not because Lincoln made a mistake but because we do not know how to carry out this idea. When you make laws to assist principle you will lead men out of their shortcomings, when we sin against the rights of nature we reap tears and misery for they are as natural as its joys. The world remembers the men who have dared to stand alone advocating a principle, with eggs and brick-bats flying. We remember Carnegie in stone, reverence Cooper with his institute, hug Garrison to our heart but shed tears over Lincoln.

Miss Harlow is a pronounced Socialist and declared that the majority of us would be, did we but understand its principles. We are afraid of the name only. Socialism now would bring disaster, we must grow into it. Nature never skips one step or evades a single duty. She keeps sight of the minutest in the balance. Agitators catch the thoughts which slip over the heads of the people, who first combat, then tolerate, and then accept it. Where some are millionaires and many paupers, you are not well off. Only as the whole has been lifted has good been done and only as society is benefited will the race progress. Remove the idea that money rules the world. Labor is the lap in which men are born and souls created and idleness brings degeneration. Socialism is an effort to institute a system of better order, that man may receive more here and now. Our nation has grown wealthy, but as individualls we are poor. Machinery came to benefit society and not individuals. It has brought the white man to a slavery worse than the black man's ever was. When labor is robbed of three-fourths and then works only half the time is it any wonder that some men drink and steal and riot—they have to live. A girl in the cotton mill weaves eighteen hundred yards of cotton every week for twenty-five dollars a month; where does the balance of the money go? One tenth of our nation lives in excessive luxury, thousands of others starve. When will you begin to reform this? What will you do first? Now is the accepted time. No more women prostitutes, or men libertines, or children baked or bleached from toiling in our cotton or glass factories. Our glass glistens, but it is tears of children's blighted and lost hopes. Our cotton has woof, the warp is the despair of the wrecked lives of the weavers. Our factories are filled with beings that cry for relief. Let us give them broader opportunities that as the cobwebs are wiped away we shall have a new generation, greater born.

Mediumship did not come to live our life for us, yet we continually ask trivial questions. We have demanded of mediumship according to our ignorance and not our wisdom. Remove the incentive to get something for nothing, stop asking for miracles, they cannot override the law in nature to please you or gain your dollars. As long as we demand materialized spirits they will be furnished; as long as you want spirits in flesh and blood with natural voice you will have them, but when you try to live closer to the spirit realm yourself and catch that voice you will do away with toggery and confederates. Mediumship came for a most sacred and useful purpose to assist you to live a higher and better life.

I can give but a faint idea of the burning eloquence which poured like a torrent from her inspired lips and held her audiences spell-bound. Our philosophy has a mighty exponent through this delightful, genial woman, this earnest, eloquent worker.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley was the test medium, as fine an exponent of the phenomena as Miss Harlow of the philosophy. A large number of messages were given daily and all were recognized and eagerly received.

Mr. and Mrs. Zumbach from St. Paul had charge of the singing which was declared by the visitors to be superior to that in any camp.

The food provided at the hotel was of unusual excellence, indeed everything possible was done to make us feel welcome and to aid each to solve life's problems that we in our daily work may rear a temple worthy the spirit of progress which typifies this age.

LAURA G. FIXEN.

Wonewoc Camp, Wis.

The season to which so many have been looking forward with joyous anticipation has come and gone, and most of the camps are a thing of the past, and reports of the work done will soon be spread upon the pages of our leading papers, for the edification of those who could not attend. This phase of the camp question would not be complete without a brief report of the work done at Wonewoc camp.

Though this camp is one of the newer camps, there cannot be one situated in more beautiful and picturesque surroundings—nor characterized by more perfect harmony than that which seemed to be the keynote this year. The workers are all full of vim, and many a heart was made glad while on the grounds.

All things considered, our attendance was very fair, and the success of the camp sufficient to encourage a continuation of the work next year; so much so is this that the decision was made to make the camp a permanent institution, and a lease for a long period of time was secured, as also a fund for the erection of the new auditorium which will adorn the camp grounds next summer. Among other things will be quarters for the workers who will come to the camp next season. It has been one of our chief drawbacks that it has been necessary to house our workers in the hotels at the foot of the hill this and other years; this feature, however, has been done away with, as the generous response of the citizens of Wonewoc, and the visitors, has made both pavilion and mediums' quarters possible for next year. As a consequence every medium who comes to serve the camp association, will remain upon the hill.

Among the workers who were present were Rev. Moses Hull, Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. Murtha, Mrs. Whitwell, Mrs. McFarlin, Mrs. Pierce, Mr. J. S. Maxwell and the writer, who acted as chairman during the camp, with the exception of four days during an absence from the camp. Mr. Maxwell, who is quite a handy man to have hanging around took the place, and filled it, with the assistance of others, during the writer's absence.

The writer's absence from the camp was caused by a call to attend the funeral of Mrs. Malie Achenbach of Bemidji, Minn. Mrs. Achenbach was one of the most progressive and beloved citizens of Bemidji, and her transition was a great loss to the town. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Kincannon, and a sister of Rev. Mrs. Ted Smith, the well known Spiritualist pastor of that town. Her transition was the result of serious difficulties which necessitated several severe operations, from the shock of which she was unable to survive. Many friends gathered to meet the sorrowing relatives, and to wish the arisen sister Godspeed in her new home, where she was permitted to join the husband who had passed on but a year before.

The services were held Sunday morning, and in the evening the beautiful little Methodist church was placed at the disposal of the writer, by the broad-minded, liberal pastor of the same, who assisted materially in making the meeting a success. A large audience assembled, and spoke kindly words to the speaker when he was taking his departure.

But I have digressed a little. Many interesting features were introduced at the Wonewoc camp, among which were a minstrel show, with an all-star cast, and a trial in which the culprits were adjudged weakminded and given a very heavy sentence. Should any of the readers attend the Minnesota convention they would do well ask Mr. J. S. Maxwell, the genial president of the Minnesota Association if he knows anything about the "famous bearded negress" who took active part in the minstrel show. Not only in this particular has the "man from Minnesota" won name and fame.

Being in need of active advertisers, the management of the LaCrosse County Fair implored the bearded negress, president of Minnesota, to go out and post bills for the fair. Ask Maxwell. He knows—it is simply a case of the "biter bitten," or the "hunter caught in his own trap."

The meetings, which were more than good, were interspersed with pleasant times and rare good fellowship which made every one feel that it was good to live.

Those who contemplate visiting a camp next summer will do well to watch Wonewoc, as there is going to be "something doing" there.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

BOOK REVIEWS.

AFTER HER DEATH; THE STORY OF A SUMMER. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Company, Boston, Publishers. Price $1.

Anything that emanates from the mind of Lilian Whiting possesses great value. "After Her Death" will prove especially interesting. She wisely claims that when the spiritual being that has lived a certain period here slips out of its physical body, and is free from material clogs and lamentations, the readjustment in a number of ways is made. Those who still remain in this world, are far more truly recognized; some have been unduly appreciated; some have been underestimated. The risen spiritual being, now being able to discern spiritual states, and to adjust all to a new scale of values, rearranges his loves and friendships, so to speak. In fact here is a type of the judgment day.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH. Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described. By C. W. Leadbeater. Theosophical Book Concern, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

This book comprises 502 octavo pages, in clear print, durably bound in cloth. The subject matter, pertaining to the spiritual nature of man and the immortality of his essential being, is of deepest interest and intense import to all thinkers, whether Materialists, Spiritualists or Agnostics. Mr. Leadbeater is widely and favorably known as a lecturer and author. He presents the views of the advanced Theosophist, in a clear and kindly manner, entertainingly and instructively elucidating the subject from the theosophical standpoint. The special chapters are devoted to: Some Misconceptions About Death. The Evidence for Continued Life. Religious Misconceptions. Our Attitude Towards Death. The Facts as They Are. Some Examples of Astral Life. Astral Surroundings. The Desire Elemental. An Extension of Consciousness. The Work of the Helpers. Astral Visits. Visits Just Before Death. Thought-Bodies. Apparitions Announcing Death. Those Who Return to Help. Those Who Need Help. Those Desiring to Atone. The Earth-bound. Hauntings. Apparently Aimless Apparitions. Less Frequent Types. Astral Impressions. How to Meet a Ghost. Classification of Spiritualistic Phenomena. Personal Experiences. The Utilization of the Medium's Body. Clairvoyance in Spiritualism. Partial Materialization. Miscellaneous Phenomena. Visible Materializations. Our Attitude Towards Spiritualism. The Heaven World. The Nature of the Evidence. How Clairvoyance is Developed. Index. The Objects of the Theosophical Society.

THE LIFE RADIANT. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston. Price, $1.

The author sets forth in beautiful language that the Life Radiant is that transfiguration of the ordinary daily events and circumstances which lifts them to the spiritual plane, and sees them as the signs and the indications of the divine leading. Every circumstance thus becomes a part of revelation, and to constantly live in this illuminated atmosphere is to invest all experiences with a kind of magical enchantment. Life prefigures before us a spiritual drama in which we are at once the actors and the spectators.

In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration.

THE NATURE CURE BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS. Illustrated. A Bridge from the Old to the New. The Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. By M. E. Conger, M. D., Assisted by Mrs. Rosamond C. Conger, M. D. The Educator Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill. Price, bound in fine English cloth, $2; in neat, substantial cloth, $1.50.

This work presents in a plain concise manner home treatment for nearly all the diseases to which the human frame is heir. The author says:

"The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

"Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of the Nature Cure.

"The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as Nature Cure.

"Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. Nature Cure will lead the way to certain success.

"The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

"Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

PSYCHIC LIGHT; THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE. By Mrs. Maud Lord Drake. The Frank T. Riley Pub. Co., Kansas City, Mo. Price, $1.50.

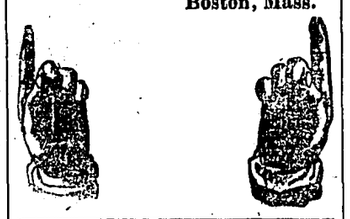
This work, consisting of 600 pages, neatly bound in cloth, is a marvel of excellence. Mrs. Drake is well and favorably known in every part of the United States, and the experiences and incidents of her remarkable career are graphically written. A medium from childhood, the manifestations given in her presence are wonderfully impressive, and will hold your attention through the entire book. It will tell you something of the following: Attends a Funeral in Spirit; Animals Clairvoyant and Clairaudient; A Pair of Slippers Walk Up Stairs in Day Light; Catches the Music Box in Mid Air; Chinese Seance; Child Medium; Christ Is Coming—Christ Is Here—a Vision; Colored Seance by Washington's Exclusive 400; Faces on Frosted Window Glass; How Spirits Talk; Locates Buried Money; Money Materializes in the Air; Murdered Woman Reports Her Death; Silver Brick Presented to the Medium; Spiritual Faculties, and so on and on through the 600 pages; every page full of spiritual meat. An excellent book for church members as well as Spiritualists.

TWENTIETH CENTURY GUIDE TO PALMISTRY. By the Zancigs. Professional Palmists and Demonstrators of Telepathy or Thought Transference. Price $1. The Hennebery Co., Publishers. Chicago. This book contains about all that can be known in the way of instruction pertaining to palmistry or reading character by the hand.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

IMPORTANT.

Owing to the fact that the courts have in every case decided against Psychic Healers who advertise to cure the sick without drugs, where the case has been between the U. S. government and a Healer (deciding that it is a clear case of intent to defraud) to advertise to diagnose also, without leading symptoms being given. Therefore I have decided, as a physician in good standing, to not advertise my gift of Psychic Healing, but will diagnose disease and not ask a fee for so doing. I will therefore hereafter diagnose disease



Free of Charge,

to all who will send their name, age, sex, and give leading symptoms, and all who will send $2.00 (Two Dollars) with their request for a diagnosis, I will diagnose their disease free, and will send them for the $2.00 two weeks' treatment, and the best book published on Spiritualism.

"The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism."
BY EPES SARGENT.

Cancers Cured or No Pay.
We Have the Best Method.

DR. C. E. WATKINS,
"THE WESTLAND,"
(Next to Symphony Hall.)
Boston, Mass.

SPIRITUALIST MEETINGS.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7.45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Mrs. Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, 560 East 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Light of the Truth Society meets each Sunday at the northwest corner of 47th street and Cottage Grove avenue. Conference at 3 p. m., and lecture and tests at 8 o'clock. Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union holds meetings at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West Sixty-third street, every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Conference in the afternoon at 3. The Ladies' Auxiliary meets every Thursday afternoon at same number. Harry J. Moore, lecturer.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 7:30 in Garfield Turner Hall, corner of Garfield and Larrabee streets. Mrs. Lizzie Swensen and Frank Joseph, mediums.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 962 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Church, Licht und Wahrheit, meeting every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in Wicker Park Hall, 501 W. North avenue. Lecture and tests by Mrs. Th. Loll and Mrs. J. Villroak.

Church of the Spirit Communion, Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Conference and messages at 3 p. m.; lecture at 8 p. m. Messages by H. F. Coates and others. Good music.

Church of the Soul Communion holds meetings every Wednesday evening at 8 p. m., and Sundays at 3 and 8 p. m., at 207 Lincoln avenue, between Garfield and Webster avenues. Lecture, messages and tests. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Rising Sun Spiritual Mission holds its meetings every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:45. Sunday school at 1:30. Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. All welcome.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer. Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 523 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

Church of the Spirit, Schiller Building, 109 East Randolph street, conducted by Prof. Wm. Fitch Ruffle. Services every Sunday at 11 a. m. Brief address, closing with readings for all. 3 p. m., brief address, followed by tests and mental telepathic demonstrations. Speakers and mediums invited. 8 p. m., address, followed by messages.

The Universal Occult Society holds its meetings at No. 77 East Thirty-first street, Hall "C," every Sunday afternoon and evening, the Hon. Robert Gilray pastor. Good mediums to give messages. Conference at 3 p. m. Regular service at 8 p. m.

Spiritual meeting, Van Buren Hall, corner Madison street and California avenue every Sunday. Inspirational lecture and extemporaneous inspirational song by Mr. Cooper Walker, and free tests by prominent mediums at 10 a. m. and 2:30 and 8 p. m. Everybody invited.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

FOR RENT.

Furnished room at 222 Irving Ave., near Van Buren Street Cars. Spiritualist family.

MRS. G. PARTRIDGE, THE Psychic.
Readings by mail only, $1.00. Sandwich, Ill.

MISS MAE HUNT,
Trance Medium and Lecturer, is located at 205 Turk st., San Francisco, Cal. Readings including three questions by mail, $1.00. 707tf

WANTED,
A single man who can be relied upon to do work on a small farm, and have a good home in a Spiritualist family of two. Peter Goodspeed, West Pawlet, Vt.

WANTED,
Lady Medium, Palmist or Character Reader, to travel. Long engagement. State experience, age, salary expected, etc. S. B. Box 121, Sioux City, Ia.

Astrologist and Clairvoyant.
Send sex, date of birth (hour if possible), with 25 cts., and two cents for return postage, for partial reading. THERESE DUANE, box 87, Berkeley, Cal. Get your children's Horoscopes.

Success, and How to Win It.
By B. F. Austin, B. A., D. D.
A Lecture and Course of Twenty-four Success Lessons, by Dr. Austin. Price 25 cents.

ELTON E. HEDRICK,
ASTROLOGER.—Vocation, business speculation, matrimony, changes, travel, all affairs of life. Fee $2.00. Send date of birth as near the hour as possible. Address, 2631 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. 775

DON'T READ THIS.
If sick write to me, and I will give you a free examination. I want no leading symptom. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Send name, age, sex, complexion, weight and 10 cts. in stamps or silver, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth many dollars to you. Be sure and write your own letter. Address,
FRANCES L. LOUCKS,
35 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address
MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

Institute of Higher Sciences
And College of Fine Forces.
Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics; can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to
E. D. BABBITT, M. D., Geneva, N. Y.

YOUR FORTUNE
Typewritten and sent FREE if you will send your birth-date and three stamps for mailing expenses. I have astonished thousands with my wonderfully correct reading of their life, past and future. I correctly reveal your future love affairs, business success, marriage mate, etc., and give advice on all affairs. Address, SHAGREN, Dept. T. B., 2152, San Francisco, Cal.

FRANK N. FOSTER,
The Noted Psychic for
Spirit Photography
Send name and address for circular. Sittings by mail. 91 Fitzhugh St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

BIOCHEMISTRY,
The Natural Law of Cure.
BIOPLASMA.
The Life of the Blood.
By DR. GEO. W. CAREY,
"The Biochemic System of Medicine." New course of instructions in the science of Biochemistry, now ready. Send 2 cent stamp for circular. Address,
The Chemistry of Life Co.,
857 Summer St., W. Somerville, Mass.

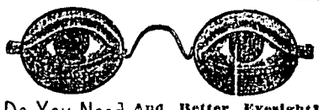
A MASTERLY WORK.
Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.
A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

Bangs Sisters,
PHENOMENAL MEDIUMS.
Independent slate and paper writing sittings daily.
Spirit Portrait Work a Specialty.
Sent two 2c stamps for booklet. 654 W. Adams Street. Telephone Ashland 1912.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS
Is the oldest and most successful physician now in practice. His cures are wonderful. His examinations free to all who send him name, age, sex, lock of their hair and six cents in stamps. No leading symptom required. He makes a specialty of treating nervous exhaustion of men, with wonderful success. Write at once. Delays are dangerous. Address,
DR. J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

Fun and Philosophy (In Verse).
By Byron D. Stillman, is a neat little volume of quaint humor and spiritual philosophy, interblended with tender pictures of home and heart life. It is dedicated to his "devoted mother, Juliet H. Severance, M. D.," well known to the public as a pioneer worker in the ranks of progress. It contains many of the pieces so highly appreciated by the societies where he has recited. Price, 50c. Address, BYRON D. STILLMAN, 578 East 60th st., Chicago, Ill.

Byron Stillman is a devoted Spiritualist, and possesses a brilliant mind in a body that unfortunately has many infirmities. He has been deprived of hearing, is totally deaf, and is now scarcely able to walk. Those who buy his book will not be disappointed in its merits, and at the same time will be helping the author.—Editor.



A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.
Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. His characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

Longley's Choice Collection
OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.
Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.
WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.
"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.
"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.
"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.
"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.
Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

C. WALTER LYNN,
THE Eminent Healer
and
Gifted Psychic.
Health Restored by Common Sense Methods.
For the Cure of Mental and Physical Ailments.
OBSESSION CURED
For Free Diagnosis of Disease, send five two-cent stamps, age, name, sex, and own handwriting.
Readings and Business Advice, $1, and Two Stamps.
Address 784 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.
Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whisperers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER
Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.
Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,
230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal

Do You Need Spectacles And Better Eyesight? I can help you. I will fit your eyes by Clairvoyance and spirit assistance at your own home with the improved melted pebble lense, to see near and at a distance. Please write for illustrated circular, showing styles and prices. Also, my spirit method of treating that restores lost vision and impaired eyesight. I guarantee to fit your eyes, and safe delivery by mail.
SAMPLE FREE.—Sufficient magnetized Compound for four oz. cures sore eyes, restores the eyes to normal vision. Ten cents for postage.
B. F. POOLE,
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.
When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Crumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

FREE TOBACCO CURE.
Mrs. J. Lester, 312 State St., Des Moines, Iowa, has discovered a harmless remedy for the tobacco habit. It can be given secretly and is harmless. Prescription sent free for stamped envelope to pay postage.

Development Guaranteed.
Do you sit in the dark? Do you close your eyes to see clairvoyantly? Do you belong to circles? Are you afraid of the trance? I will show you the better, aye, the best way to develop, and without losing your normal condition. Many years of psychical experiences, and as a psychic and teacher, for I have experienced all the phases and kinds of mediumship, have qualified me for the good I am doing. Thousands of flattering testimonials to that effect. I take the students and psychics who fail. If you are a beginner, better start right and obtain results that are genuine. My system is without a parallel, and has had many bad imitations. Send at once, enclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, for Standard Occult Literature.
CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). It teaches you how to penetrate the veil of sense and matter, converse with spirits, read the crystal, see the future, prophesy are truths illumination, and be a Yogist. All students will do well to study this excellent volume."—W. J. Colville. "It is a revelation."—Light. "Best work on the subject."—Mind. "Marvelous—Epoch-making."—Lilian Whiting.
SPIRIT WORLD, by Gaffield, cloth, 50 cents.
AURAS AND COLORS—With exhaustive dictionary of color meanings. A unique book for unique people. Price 50 cents.
PSYCHOMETRY—The first and only book which teaches the science so that you can practice it. Price, 50 cents.
EASY LESSONS in Inspiration Clairvoyance and Psychometry. Price, 50 cents.
REALIZATION—How to enter the super-consciousness and be a Yogist. Price, 25 cents.
DIVINATION—A Ms. series on how to divine hidden things, find lost treasures, become a seer. Price, $1.00.
CRYSTALS for crystal-gazing, a new lot at $2.25 each, postage prepaid.
HOW TO REMEMBER PAST LIVES—A Ms. series on this fascinating subject. Price, $1.00.
Prospectus of "The College of Divine Science and Realization." Reduced tuition.
The only one of its kind in the world.
J. C. F. GRUMBINE,
1285 Commonwealth Ave.,
Boston, Mass.

The World's Sixteen Saviors,
Or Christianity before Christ. By Kersey Graves. New and startling revelations in religious history which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified G

YOU CANNOT AFford to miss an issue of this paper, with its wealth of SPIRITUAL LITERATURE.

The Progressive Thinker.

SEND YOUR SUBscription in at once, and keep pace with all that is transpiring in the ranks.

VOL. 30 CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 17, 1904. NO. 773

SPIRITUALISM IS A TRUTH.

"One truth is clear--whatever is, is right." Pope.

"I long to know the truth hereof at large." Shakespeare.

"Let us make truth catching instead of falsehood and disease." Ingersoll.

"Truth depends on, or is only arrived at by a legitimate deduction from all the facts which are truly material." Coleridge.

"Plows, to go true, depend much upon the truth of the iron." Mortimer.

"Truth bears the torch in the search for truth." Lucretius.

Let us love our cause and dare to advocate its truth and decry fraud. If we have the pure it cannot be destroyed in the crucible of reason and fair discussion. It will only thrive, and expand more rapidly.

TRUTH IS IMPERISHABLE.

"My mouth shall speak the truth." Prov. viii., 7.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." William Cullen Bryant.

"To have truth and not live it is like having lungs and refusing to breathe."

"However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully frequently, and fearlessly discussed it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth." John Stuart Mill.

EXPLORING UNKNOWN LANDS.

Do Dogs "Telepath" Messages of Forthcoming Events?

The recent dog spirit incident, in which the famous novelist, Rider Haggard, claims to have been told, or "telepathed," of the death of his pet dog, etc., arouses the question as to whether dogs and other animals, birds, fish, bugs, etc., have individual spirits or not. An incident in the life of the well-known Boston artist, Mrs. A. C. Littlefield, would tend to throw a ray of light upon this much-disputed subject.

Some years ago she had a valuable Mexican poodle which had been presented to her by some southern friends. It was, I believe, during the Cleveland presidency, and the Southerners, being warm Democrats, christened the dog "Grover Cleveland." Some of the distinguished psychical researchers and occult students in the North were great admirers of the pup and called him "Grover" for short. He was a typical aristocratic dog and was held in such high esteem that a very valuable oil painting was made of him by the artist and framed in a costly, specially designed, hand-carved frame. The dog was a high liver, and his death was predicted by an Indian spirit, but at the time the prediction was not believed, although later the dog croaked on time as the dead Indian had foretold. Did the spirit read the dog's mind or was it a case of subconscious ego of the subliminal telepathy of the constituency? The psychologists are now up against the real thing hard, and we will leave the puzzle for the Harvard professors to analyze. The dog died. At the same time a well-known special correspondent of western newspapers happened to be present with an Eastern schoolteacher.

They both were "in at the death" of the dog, and when they supposed the dog was merely sleeping, saw the artist break out crying, saying she "had just seen the dog's spirit leaving his body," etc. The newspaper man said: "Oh, no, the dog isn't dead yet." But he was dead, as dead as a door-nail.

A Harvard University graduate also saw the death scene, and the facts of the case are capable of scientific proof—if such were needed. We may say that spirits in the next world claim that all forms of life have a spirit of some kind as an animating principle.

Exploring Unknown Lands.

The famous explorations of Stanley and Livingstone and others in "Darkest Africa" are eclipsed to-day by the startling discoveries made by many advanced travelers, going far out into the once unknown lands beyond the grave. It has been proved by thousands of reliable people that the air, the spheres, the whole universe is densely populated by almost invisible spirit life, vegetation, trees, grass, animals, people, angels, etc. Some explorers say there are seven spheres around this earth, each one inhabited by spirits of different density, weight or specific gravity; that is to say, the heavy spirits walk on the earth like ghosts; then they shake off their material density by degrees and are advanced from one sphere to another much as children are from one school to another. What was once thought to be cold air in the higher regions where balloonists froze to death while in material bodies, is now known to be thickly populated by various forms of spirit life. Besides the millions of other worlds, stars, planets, etc., which anyone can see at night, it is claimed that this whole universe is crowded with spirit life.

The lower sphere or earth-bound spooks, are apt to be an ignorant, degraded lot of beings not much better than the rank and file of the rabble on earth, from whom they come. These spooks infest bar-rooms, hang around people whom they can obsess to drink, smoke, gamble or gratify their low, sensual appetite. They often control the bum class of mediums, and, as they were on earth, like to get their victims into trouble only to laugh at them.

The higher spirits come down to teach these spooks, duffers, but the lower spirits are often unable to go above their own spheres until they have outgrown their earth attractions.

Boston, Mass. ROXBURY.

THE MODERN SAINT.

No monkish garb he wears, no beads he tells,
Nor is immured in walls remote from strife;
But from his heart deep mercy ever wells;
He looks humanely forth on human life.

In place of missals or of altar dreams,
He cons the passioned book of deed and days;
Striving to cast the comforting sweet beams
Of charity on dark and noisome ways.

Not hedged about by sacerdotal rule,
He walks a fellow of the scarred and weak,
Liberal and wise his gifts; he goes to school
To justice; and he turns the other cheek.

He looks not holy; simple is his belief;
His creed for mystic visions do not scan;
His face shows lines cut there by others' grief,
And in his eyes is love of brother-man.

No medieval mystery, no crowned,
Dim figure, halo-ringed, uncanny bright,
A modern saint; a man who treads earth's ground,
And ministers to men with all his might. —Richard Burton.

Sorrow is a kind of rust of soul which every new idea contributes in its passage to scour away.—Johnson.

Ovid finely compares a man of broken fortune to a falling column; the lower it sinks the greater weight it is obliged to sustain.—Goldsmith.

COGENT THOUGHTS.

Cause and Effect Are Inseparable.

In comprehending and illustrating this divine law we are entering a realm which has been considered too sacred for man, if we are to judge by the methods of procedure by which he has dealt with the momentous questions pertaining to his life and destiny. But to deny that there is a realm forbidden him to explore is only proclaiming a truth known to illuminated minds of all ages. He has been debarred only by his inability to understand the facts pertaining to those questions, which will be removed as he develops his capacity for their comprehension.

The laws of heredity and climatic influences are as operative with nations and races as with individual entities; they being some of the prominent causes which have produced the diversified lines of thought manifest in the different races. The effects produced are largely shown in their religious beliefs and with that hold upon the intellect and conscience which makes the efforts to turn the current of national thought into a foreign channel an almost hopeless task. In the efforts to Christianize the old religious beliefs of India which date back long anterior to the foundation of our religious cycle, and rejecting the causes by which they were produced, and ignoring the universal truth which underlies the foundation of all religious beliefs, and trying to place them upon false premises, has produced the effects which are apparent at the present time.

Assertions that they do not sympathize with modern thought, and are holding back the car of progress that to outward appearances is moving forward with increasing speed, are not satisfactory, for while accepting the belief of all religious systems in the universal destiny of the race, may they not find acceptable reasons for rejecting that which to those who are looking into the interior life is moving on a line which unless changed will culminate in results as disastrous as those which overthrew the nations of antiquity. "All is not gold that glitters, nor wealth that shines," and in our own country the efforts made to alleviate the unfortunates in life's battle by building asylums where they can find relief, and places of refuge where the criminally inclined can be incarcerated and society protected from their depredations is without doubt prompted by feelings of kindness; but it is only dealing with the effects as they are made apparent, and neglecting the causes which are productive of such discordant results.

When through gigantic combinations of wealth the necessities of life can be advanced in price beyond the limit which the laws of trade demand and the rights of the people rejected to the extent of robbing them of millions and placing it to the credit of the combination that manipulates the deal, where is the limit to be placed, and how will those poverty producing forces be brought under the control of the higher law of love to our fellow-man? By donating a few thousand to the founding of asylums or to prosecute those unfortunates goaded to desperation by want, they may think to quiet their conscience and be represented before the world as her benefactors.

"But the blood of thy brother crieth unto me from the ground" is the voice of the divine Spirit, and never before has it been with such distinctness as at the present time. We are not sounding the note of an alarmist who believes that the efforts that are being made for improvement are futile to stem the revolutionary tendencies, but whether the transition from the convulsive period of the present to the more perfect one of the coming time shall be through a peaceful educational development of an understanding and acceptance of the Divine law which says that while one being created in the image of the heavenly father and mother suffers hunger or cold, or has not the means placed within its reach that it can use for its material and spiritual improvement society has a great preparatory work to do and is on dangerous ground until it is accomplished. Or will it be as has been the changes which were wrought in the past through clashing of interests culminating in the arbitrament of war?

The pilot that is to direct human life out of the almost interminable labyrinth into which it has plunged largely through ignorance of the laws governing its life, is the divine law which says that every effect is the result of a corresponding cause which clears away the mystification that has to the external mind clouded the truth and in the form of creeds and senseless ceremonies made it difficult to understand, when "the wayfarer tho' a fool need not err" in his comprehension if presented unmasked.

Geology tells us that the present forms of life retain faint traces of workings by which they can be traced back to the more primitive forms from whence they came, and placed in their true order by the divine law of evolution as it has operated in the material world. So in the realm of the spiritual the forms of thought which are the effects of a past barbaric age have left their impress upon the present, but which is passing away through the ability of the soul to more perfectly understand the truth, enabling it to discriminate between the forces that are only transitory in their operation and those that are eternal.

While in the darkness of night we hope for and have confidence in the coming of the morning; so in the present blindness, measures that at best are only temporary in their operation will give place to that knowledge which will go to the foundation of the social structure, placing the temple that will be reared on a basis that is enduring, proving the truth of the words of the Divine Teacher, "for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

HAMILTON DE GRAW.

West Troy, N. Y.

We must not let go manifest truths because we cannot answer all questions about them.—Jeremy Collier.

SEEKING THE LIGHT.

All progressive minds are constantly seeking the light along Spiritualistic and occult lines. No two can see exactly alike on any important subject. There will be a divergence somewhere, hence the spirit of toleration should exist on all sides in reference to the opinions of others. Mr. Ward of New Canton, Ill., is being developed along new lines, and the results thus far have been very remarkable. At some of his circles entrancingly beautiful music has been heard on the piano, when no material instrument of the kind was at hand. The music could be heard as plainly as if emanating from an earth-made piano instead of one invisible to the naked eye—perfectly distinct to all present. Some of the statements made in the following communication diverge from the commonly accepted opinions of Spiritualists, and we hope for more light thereon at no distant day.

To the Editor:—As to the development we are pleased to say, that we are told by the unseen forces that it has reached that point where connection between this and the spirit world exists independent of mortal force. That for the first time in the history of the world, spirits are able to demonstrate the underlying principles of spirit manifestations, and the laws that govern them, and prove where the dividing line lies between mortal spirit manifestation and immortal spirit manifestation. How many do you think are ready for spirit teaching not blended with mortal force?

How many are ready to learn the limitation of mortal spirit power?

Until mortal spirit power has been demonstrated, and its limit of action, independent of the body, reached, no mediums should think they have connection with spirits out of the body. This is done, however, because the governing power between the mind and the spirit is undeveloped, and consequently all manifestation, be it good or bad, has been charged to spirits out of the body, when the truth of the matter is, there is absolutely no true spirit power there, no connection whatever.

Now, Brother Francis, spirits are able to prove that all spirit manifestation is done through vibratory force, and "development" is merely teaching the mortal spirit how this force acts and how the mortal spirit shall gain the heights where it can act as an earthly receiver.

You will probably doubt my sincerity when I tell you that independent slate-writing, one of the highest phases recognized, can be done by the mortal-spirit, independent of the physical body, and without any connection with outside spirit force. This can be done, as can all other phases of so-called spirit manifestation, independent of true spirit power. But mortal spirit power cannot prove spirit communication out of the body. That must be accomplished by the spirits who have shed their earthly raiment. They can do so now, because mortal spirit has reached out and gained heights sublime, and through vibratory laws can act as a perfect receiver for manifestation of true spirit power.

We know, and spirits can prove through every law of nature and reason, that no spirit ever deturned to earth; that the space through which they manifest is unmeasured, and that spirit manifestation is a governing of the forces that exist throughout space.

Will Spiritualists with their theories of obsession and earth-bound spirits, and their utter ignorance of mortal spirit manifestation, be ready for the overthrow of their beliefs?

Will they accept proven facts concerning spirit power?

When spirit power begins to operate, frauds must cease, as it cannot be imitated.

We do not care to say what is to be done, as we know the spirits do not need us as a mouthpiece, but notwithstanding this, we are glad that we are to be lifted above present-day Spiritualism. That is ridiculed because of its inability to clear the mists away.

We are glad to know that spirit power can at last lead us out of the ruts of ignorance, can demonstrate scientifically that we live again, and the purpose for which we are living. We are being guided by the spirit power, and as we have been guided by it these many years, we know. There is no use to make any announcement of our intentions, but we know now that we will not do any work in this part of the country on account of atmospheric conditions, and as soon as our business affairs can be arranged, it is our desire to go beyond the mountains, where we know there can be no more hindrance.

Brother Francis, we talk with spirits by the hour. We are to see views of spirit life and conditions as they actually exist. We are to see, as we have already, actual spirits—not "materialized" ones.

Do not understand me as criticising any phase of spirit manifestation. I am not disputing any of it, but I say the spirits will show where the dividing line lies. Is it not time? Have we not gained the right of authority when we talk to spirits as we do to mortals, when we simply sit down and hear their wondrous music, and when we are told that the work is finished, and that spirits are now ready to lead the world out of darkness? No mortal mind can conceive of the change to be wrought, under the guidance of the spirit power.

You are aware of the fact that we get independent messages; in fact, all phases of spirit manifestation, both mortal and immortal.

The immortals are to prepare manuscripts for a book, giving the law of life on this planet, also the journey through space from its beginning to where it blends into a transparent world, with illustrations; also the beginning and end of all life forces, fully illustrated. When these promises are fulfilled, and spirit power demonstrated and proved to be as real as wireless telegraphy, what will be the effect, and what will become of beliefs?

Many Spiritualists are just as far from the real truth as those who claim nothing. The importance of it all lies with the spirit in the mortal, and the work will be in their behalf. They are to know at last something of the life that animates their forms; of why it is here; whence it came, and where it is going. Ignorance of these things is worse than their pictured punishment as it must all be learned anew, before progress can be dreamed of in the land of souls. Nevertheless our cause has withstood error's fearful brunt, until at last we are nearing that altitude of spiritual heights where we can no longer be pointed at with the finger of scorn, for we can prove our claims to the wide world, to the great and small minds of earth. When we first became interested in spirit manifestation, our highest desire was to know how the work was done, if it was in the mortal power to do any of it independent of the mind and body, and to that aim we have worked these many years, and the goal has been reached, and we know and can prove where the dividing line lies between mortal spirit and true spirit power.

In these years that we have worked to the end that spirit power directed, we have failed to have any experience detrimental to us in any manner as many others claim. Our health is perfect, and our path clear, and our faith in spirit power supreme. The desire to bring others into our confidence concerning our spiritual work, save those whom we know to be sincere and ready to know all truth, has left us entirely, and we know now that spirit power works for universal good as well as individual, and the work to be done will be done at the right time and in the right place, regardless of what we do or say.

We have no jurisdiction over the spirit power that comes to us. We are not operators, simply receivers. Our practical development was finished some time ago. We are anxious for abler judges than we are, to witness spirit power.

Now, Brother Francis, you know something of our claims, and I should be much pleased to know your opinion of the effect when they are proven to be facts, and they are facts, you will some day know here, or in the land of souls.

We are no longer astonished at spirit manifestation; it is a part of our existence, and to us the novelty has worn away. We know something of what is to be, but that does not excite us; we are beyond that stage.

EMMA M. WARD.

New Canton, Ill.

MANIFESTATION OF SPIRIT POWER

Spirits Light the Gas and Cause Trouble in a House.

A most remarkable demonstration of spirit power was witnessed by several gentlemen a few evenings ago at the home of Mrs. Clara U. Myers. On Sunday evening she remarked to her husband how remarkably strong she felt, as she with a number of persons belonging to her class, had been away for a little outing together. She retired about 9:30 p. m., and at 2:30 in the morning, she was taken with violent pain in her body, and for nineteen hours suffered the most excruciating pain that I ever witnessed. Once in a while, her little guide Rosie would control her and ease her suffering. We were powerless to help her in any way, as her guides would not allow anything to be given her, stating that they were removing the old and injecting new chemicals into her body. Every part of her body underwent a change, in order that the guides could have more power for the development of those in her classes. I wish to say right here that I have seen at many mediums but have never seen one so self-sacrificing for others as this dear soul is.

We were told by the guides to gather around her bed at 9 o'clock, and the following gentlemen did so: Mr. Myers, Mr. O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. Morris, the Messrs Leisk and myself. The guides explained to us the nature of the treatment, then told us to feel the flesh of the body. It was just as though she had been dipped in water. The guides then left her and when she came to, she did not have a particle of pain, and on the following day was up and about the house.

While this was going on and the guides were working with her, an evil spirit got into the next room and turned on the gas, lit it, and burnt a towel that was hanging on the wall. Her spirit mother came and put the fire out (so we were told afterwards by her guides). The door of the room was closed. Several of us smelled the smoke which had penetrated to the upper floors and a search was instituted, the cause being found as already stated. All the persons whose names I have previously given, will testify to the truth of what I have written.

I have been investigating the truth for ten years or more, but have never witnessed any grander demonstration than this during all that time. "King," her guide, is one of the grandest spirits it has ever been my privilege to come in touch with, working faithfully to help humanity.

Her many friends in Boston, New York and Chicago will be glad to know that Mrs. Myers is at the present very well and faithfully working for the cause of Truth. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for space in your valuable paper.

DR. J. W. COWAN.

San Francisco, Cal.

We are accustomed to judge others by ourselves, and though we graciously absolve them from faults which are like our own, we condemn them with severity if they have not our virtues.—Balzac.

Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death.—Patrick Henry.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross there is in our composition.—Colton.

The Prodigal.

No, my son, it isn't that the world has grown hard-hearted; it isn't that we aren't just as glad to-day to see the prodigal come back, and just as lovingly anxious to welcome him home as ever was anybody in the fifteenth chapter of Luke. It is the manner in which the prodigal of to-day frequently returns that throws a wet blanket over the festivities of the welcome. When he comes down the road with his hat hanging on his ear and his hands in his pockets; when he kicks the faithful old house dog as he lounges in at the gate; when he calls his father "guv'nor" and the servant girl "slavey;" when he wants to know "What's for dinner?" before he has been in the house fifteen minutes; when he gives his elder brother two fingers to shake, and advises him to comb the hayseed out of his hair; when he throws himself into the easiest chair in the house, perches his feet on the window sill, and announces that he'll "take a tub before dinner;" when he comes back with a generally forgiving air of good fellowship about him, and tries to make all the family feel very easy and reassured, then it is, my son, that father longs to run and meet you while you are yet a great way off and fall upon your neck with a plough-line and welt you into a state of becoming humility and penitence by the time you are ready to take off your hat to the bound boy and crawl up the front steps to ask your brother to shake hands with you. Good people are just as glad to-day as they were, my son, to see the prodigal come home, but it does rattle them a little to see him come in a hack and ask them to pay the driver and send for his baggage.—A. V., in Agnostic Journal.

The Race Question.

Never in the known history of the world has there been such an object lesson brought before the public, illustrating the unity of life, as is now being enacted here at the World's Fair.

Ainus, Igorrotes, Pigmies, Patagonian giants, people representing every spot on the earth are here in a mosaic of color, type, and idiosyncrasy.

Black, white, red, yellow and brown, mingle together like the colors in a kaleidoscope.

The saw-toothed cannibal from the South Sea Islands jostles the exclusive Hindoo Jain whose vegetarian religion will not permit him to eat an egg, because it contains the germ of life.

In strolling among them we notice how unlike, and yet how alike they are, their difference being exoteric, and their similarity esoteric.

They all smile when pleased, frown when angry, look sad or gay, as the mood takes them; they love, they hate, they are good and bad, with all intermediate degrees of both.

Their religions, promising rewards and punishments, are all based upon the one central truth, though the religion of one may seem the superstition of others.

All this points to a beautiful, magnificent truth, viz.: there is no race question, except a geographical one.

There is no doubt all have the same source and the same destiny; the same hopes and fears, the same needs and interests.

Hereditary and chosen rulers, for their own selfish ends, have fostered race hatred in their ignorant subjects, religious bigotry has done the rest to make this old world weep tears of blood throughout its known history.

Come to the World's Fair if you want to solve the race question or rather see it solve itself.

We were just talking with a fire worshiper, who spoke very good English, being an interpreter for his tribe. His voice was soft, low, melodious. Said he: "Madam, you bring me a book; it is your religion; you say it contains all there is of truth. To-morrow some one else brings me a book—his religion. He says it is all there is of truth. Some more people bring me some more books—each all there is of truth. Madam, I not read the books. I have my own. It is written here. (Laying his hand on his heart.) To me it is all there is of truth. I love my people. I do no wrong. I worship the fire; it speaks of power to destroy, that it may create again. It is Spirit, it is God."

He lifted his beautiful black eyes heavenward, a pink flush dyed his brown cheeks, and I knew God was speaking to him in words he could understand, better than any that might come from my stumbling tongue. So I turned away in reverential silence.

All the societies here, notwithstanding the extreme hot weather have received fair patronage, though not what had been hoped for. The Cottage Tent City Annex to the World's Fair should receive better patronage from Spiritualists and New Thought people visiting the fair.

It is well equiped for meetings, rest and recreation and affords a delightful opportunity for getting together under the very shadow of the World's Fair buildings, with the privilege of searchlights from the Ferris wheel and other eminences to chase away the spooks.

The Ladies' Society meeting at the Odeon Thursday afternoons bids fair to develop some splendid speakers and mediums. The cause here can safely report progress.

MRS. M. M'CASLIN.

St. Louis, Mo.

Have Animals Souls?

Again and again this question is asked, and arguments pro and con are offered in profusion. Some people, feeling much attached to their living or departed pets, take affirmation for granted; while others, and fine logicians among them, deny such possibility, and find the idea ludicrous, that we should share our future blessed homes with creatures so far below us, "for," they argue, "where shall we draw the line? If cats, dogs, horses are admitted, the law must apply to the rest of creation, even to the insect pest; and we must expect to have nine-tenths of our future happiness absorbed by mosquitoes, flies, fleas, bugs, spiders, snakes, scorpions, etc."

Sad logical outlook indeed!

To think of all the tiny tormentors we savagely dispatched on earth, turning up again on the other side and taking sweet revenge in all eternity! To think of all the hosts of the same ilk, too numerous to come to an honest bite during their short earth-life, and now awaiting compensation in a new life, where we all expect a chance to work out our possibilities.

Alas! what a prospect for arisen humanity!

But, seriously. We should never draw extreme conclusions; for none of us possesses wisdom enough to offer any infallible dictum. The best equiped scientist, the best developed medium, can only give to us part of the truth we crave; others must add, must supplement, stone by stone the grand structure advances, and even a fraction of a stone will count.

But shall the mighty temple ever be finished? A faint voice within me answers, "Never! It is the endless work of endless generations, throughout eternity."

May I be pardoned for this digression from my subject proper!

The convenient term "instinct" for any demonstration of animal intelligence is now considered obsolete by up-to-date scientists; the word "intellect" has taken its place, and even a psychic undercurrent is not any more out of the question.

From here to "soul" is only a short step, which I would not hesitate to venture, considering the many phenomena that have been reported from different persons. If only one of them can be authenticated beyond the shadow of a doubt, then the question is settled. Since the truth of the existence and persistence of the soul of man is established, psychic kinship with man entitles the higher animal to the same claim.

The chain of evolution drawn by scientists, the tree of life, with man as its crowning point, is an admirable working hypothesis (though already on the point of being supplanted by others); but cannot claim infallibility.

Nature's so-called laws, probably formed by necessity in the course of eons, do not always work machine-fashion, or we could not speak of her "whims" and "freaks," that are observed in the mineral as well as the vegetable and animal kingdoms. Man, the "crowning point of creation," often makes a very poor show and would sometimes do well to change places with some well trained donkey.

It will not do to simply speak of man, genus man, as the "non plus ultra" of creatures, unless we have in mind the ideal man, or rather ideal mankind—men and women capable of forming high ideals to cherish and to follow, capable of highest mental and moral development; towering above the level of average mankind.

If I were a good, faithful dog, I would not desire to change places with some brute of a master, called man; if I happened to be an intelligent horse, (for instance the one mentioned above), I would not exchange my place in life against that of the average negro; still less of the low one; the yet existing savage tribes being entirely out of the question.

The soul-principle is evidently a matter of degree and develops on different scales in different individuals, animals not excluded. In some human beings it is scarcely perceptible, justifying us to doubt its final unfoldment, while some animals show too much of the principle to justify doubt about future persistency. With the majority of creatures, however, it may not be strong enough to persist, but return to what might be termed a common source; in this case we need not fear mosquitoes, etc.

But we might do well to discard some of our human conceit, and prepare to meet on the other shore animals exhibiting better soul-elements than many of our human kith and kin.

MRS. HENRIETTA STRAUB.

Port Orange, Fla.

Great mischiefs happen more often from folly, meanness and vanity than from the greater sins of avarice and ambition.—Burke.

The worst enemies of law are those who would perpetuate injustice under the name of law.—Sentinel of Christian Liberty.

THE STORY OF SHUNGOPAVI.

The Wonder-working "Medicine Man" Among the Cliff Dwellers at the World's Fair in St. Louis.

Ralph Waldo Emerson says that an institution is only the elongated shadow of one man. The World's Fair at St. Louis, now the greatest exhibition of human progress the world has ever seen or is likely to see again in a century, is also the reflex of its organizers and by the same token it may be said that the several exhibits, large and small of whatever they tell are the visible duplication of the ambitions of the men that brought them into being.

The World's Fair at St. Louis is particularly rich in the displays of the peoples of strange and out-of-the-way regions. This socalled anthropological department shows excellence in variety as well as in extent. For Americans none of these divisions has more interest than the one in which the modes of life of the American Indians are exhibited by a collection of the leading groups of human beings that originally occupied the soil of what is now the United States. The Indians as they are familiarly known exist in the public mind largely in the guise of savages or semi-savages. When we speak of Indians we conjure up visions of atrocities of the Apaches, the Sioux, the Comanches, the Nez Perces and the like and the deadly struggles in which these until very recently engaged with the white settlers of the West. Tradition, romance and history are full of deeds the most daring regarding the encounters, awful and sanguinary that preceded the now no longer disputed occupancy of the North American territory by the white men.

But the World's Fair now teaches another lesson and it gives us in the person of one strange man another record. Hundreds of years ago before the white man came, long previous to the time that Anglo-Saxon land-hunger showed itself on this continent, there lived in the Canyons of the Colorado river, in what is now Arizona and New Mexico, a rare race of people known as the Cliff Dwellers. Whence they came no man can tell. Only their descendants to-day, the Mokis, Zunis and Pueblos have tradition of their forefathers, and they tell us at the World's Fair in the department devoted to the Cliff Dwellers, that their ancestors were a peaceful race, that they worshiped the sun and that their priests claimed miraculous knowledge concerning the powers of the earth, and the air. They tell us further that that power is transmitted by their priests, or medicine men, as we call them, from one to the other, and thus has been handed down unimpaired from earliest times. The Cliff Dwellers have among them a wonder-worker, named Shungopavi, a mysterious man, now in the prime of life, who possesses occult powers that defy explanation by any American or foreign scholar who, so far, has been privileged to witness his marvelous performances.

Shungopavi duplicates many of the miraculous things spoken of in Scripture. He seems to have solved the mysteries of space and time. His feats of legerdemain are the talk of World's Fair visitors. He works entirely without apparatus. His person is engaging. The blood of his ancestors shows itself in him by a dignity of demeanor before the mixed audiences that daily see him. He is truly a wonder-worker, the like of which no World's Fair has ever before presented. * * * *

Two Remarkable Works.

Dr. A. J. Davis' "Diakka" and Dr. J. M. Peebles' work on "Obsession" are companion books, each one reflecting certain conditions existing in the spirit realms, and each one should be carefully read and considered. The work of the Diakka, veritable inhabitants of the realms above, is vividly portrayed by Dr. Davis, one of the greatest of living seers. Dr. Peebles, a man of world-wide experience, presents a vast array of evidence in regard to evil spirits and their disastrous work among all classes. Don't suppose for a moment that the work of the Diakka or evil spirits is confined exclusively to Spiritualists. They are far less afflicted by them than any other class, for they are more on their guard against their pernicious influence. Read both books, and become thoroughly posted in regard to Diakka and evil spirits.

"THE DEMONISM OF THE AGES AND SPIRIT OBSESSIONS."

As often repeated, "there's no end to books." They flood alike libraries and city market places; and none in this period of time seemingly sell like novels based upon the lower, intermediate and higher planes of thought. It is largely true that a man's library reveals both his taste and character.

Never, in my opinion, since the publication of "The Seers of the Ages," by Dr. Peebles and A. J. Davis' "Diakka and their Earthly Victims" (including the present time frauds) has there appeared, whether within or without the realm of religious literature a book of such serious, such grave and wide-spread importance to the human race as the straightforward, comprehensive work here under consideration.

The mind is startled and appalled before an array of facts which at last make clear and definite some of the direful phenomena and mighty mysteries of life, and which no science has heretofore mastered and no philosophy explained. Here again has analytical Spiritualism unlocked the secrets of an arcanum forever inexplicable to mortal understanding, and warned mankind against gigantic dangers.

Astounding Revelation.

That our earthly existence is encompassed by an atmosphere replete with millions and billions of living, disembodied spirits; that we are immersed in a seething sea of spirit life; that these spirits have carried beyond the grave every mortal trait, disposition, impulse, tendency, temptation, appetite, passion and weakness that characterized and constituted their earthly individualities; that in a sense they are yet freer than when here to suggest and practice evil; that they can intrude their crude, selfish, ignorant, malicious, revengeful and malevolent wills upon unsuspecting denizens of earth; that they can hypnotically and magnetically influence, affect, obsess, control and finally possess living mortals; that they can alter, interrupt, divert, twist, disfigure and destroy life's plans and transform its conduct; that their physical and hypnotic powers often, for cause, transcend those of good spirits; that they can gratify their most sensual, bestial and wicked appetites through mortal personalities; that they can and do practice every false pretense, lying, deceit and imposture to effect their ends; that "dark demoniac spirits have the power, either through ignorance or selfishness, to disturb or absorb the vitality, to cause nervous irritability, to partially paralyze, to infuse poisonous auras into the emanating spheres of those they desire to injure or make ill, for some purpose best known to their infernal selves;" that finally they have the power to produce insanity and power to kill; and that crimes of every hue and grade have ever been and now are suggested, instigated, encouraged and abetted by the unseen powers of the air, comprises altogether a revelation so momentous, amazing and vital as to challenge the earnest attention and investigation of all men.

Universality of Obsessional Forces.

In the fourth book of his "Commentaries," the very learned authority, Blackstone, says: "A sixth species of offense of which our ancient books are full is a crime of which one knows not what account to give. I mean the offense of witchcraft, enchantment and sorcery. To deny the possibility, nay, actual existence of witchcraft and sorcery and demons is at once flatly to contradict the revealed word of God in various passages of the Old and New Testaments, while the thing is itself a truth to which every nation in the world hath borne testimony."

Indeed, so universal have been these influences, all tongues and times bear witness to their existence and operations. The "Lieu-chai-chiei," a work of sixteen volumes, is one of many ancient Chinese records of the subject. Even planchette is old in China. And the responses to the Vevius and other circulars discover that to-day there is no part of the vast Chinese empire exempt from ancestral worship and demonism, side by side.

Demoniacal obsessions in India are cited in the oldest Brahminical manuscripts and Vedas. They are in evidence in the hieroglyphs, inscriptions and stone records of Egypt, the clay cylinders and written fragments of Babylonia, the mountains of Assyria, the Zend books of Persia, the biblical histories of Syria and Judea, and throughout the great epics and philosophic dialogues of Greece. We know that Rabbinical demonology prevailed during and for many centuries after the time of Jesus. Obsessions abounded and do abound among the millions of the naked races in Southern Asia, the cannibal and other tribes of Africa, the snake-eating Pacific islanders, the wild bushmen of Australia. After reciting what he personally saw and learned in many of the older Oriental civilizations, our author continues his study of demoniac spiritism in Ceylon, South Africa, Asiatic Turkey and Mexico.

The Actions of Demons.

The world beneath and about is haunted. It is full of spirits, good and bad, pursuing their various errands, contending for mastery and intermingling incessantly with human affairs. And thus have they manifested some form throughout antiquity.

An ancient Chaldean magic formula is thus translated:

"May the god of the house be installed in the house,
May the favorable demon, the favorable god, enter the house,
The wicked demons, the wicked Alad, the wicked Gigiur,
The wicked Telal, the wicked Maskeln,
The phantom, the spectre, the vampire,
O, Spirit of the Heavens, conjure them,
O, Spirit of the Heavens, conjure them, dispel them."

Ben Zacohai says: "Demons have the gift of speech, and they speak in behalf of themselves. They know the past and profess to know the future. They may be consulted in both respects, but questions about lost treasures had better not be directed to them. They produce convulsive ailments in children. They impose upon their subjects slavish restrictions. They like sacrifices of blood."

In the book of Zobit the demon Asmodeus is described as malignant and viciously wicked.

Zenocrates describes the "terrestrial demons" as a middle order between gods and men, and that they "are like human beings capable of inferior passions and dangerous to mortals."

Hesiod and Homer, Sophocles and Euripides describe the eccentricities of demon influences. Horace tells us of an obsessed actor who became demonized and spasmodic, tore his garments and went screaming through the streets.

In the Demonism of India we read of the pranks and mischief committed by the Kama Loka. Of the wild contortions, howlings and superhuman actions of the obsessed who resorted to the Madura pagoda, making the place a pandemonium.

The "Bhutte" demons of India seek satisfaction for their selfish desires and thereupon often go away. The name generally applies to those who died by violence, often notorious evildoers, ignorant and malicious, wandering in the invisible intermediate state, intent upon mischief, annoyance and physical and mental injury to mortals. The "Pisacha," another class of evil spirits, include drunkards, the lascivious, treacherous and violently tempered. They manifest with malice, and delight in working confusion and trouble, causing pain to men and animals, gratifying low, depraved appetites, and finally in taking life. The "Pretas," says Prasad Chatterji, "influence and inflame the physical cravings of weak girls and men by possessing them, and assist black magicians for the sake of offerings of drinks, flesh and lust."

With the actions and behavior of evil and unclean spirits in the time of Jesus all are familiar. "What have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy us?". "And when the demon had thrown him down in the midst, he came out of him." "There met him a certain man out of the city, who had demons, and for a long time he had worn no clothes and abode not in any house, but in the tombs. And when he saw Jesus he cried out and fell down before him. And Jesus asked him, What is thy name? And he said, Legion, for many demons were entered into him." "I brought unto thee my son, who hath a dumb spirit; and whithersoever it taketh him it dasheth him down. And he foameth and grindeth his teeth and pineth away." Many similar examples may be promptly recalled.

In his able work, "Demoniac Possessions," Dr. Menzies Alexander says: "Demons often form themselves into bands—'the society of the angels of destruction.' A whole legion sometimes lies in wait for a person to fall into their hands on the commission of some fault. Their action is thus a kind of obsession which may readily pass into possession. Under cover of darkness demons often surround houses and injure them that fall into their hands. This is especially the case if there be unclean places."

The Haunting Places of Unclean Spirits.

It was said of old by the Sibylline oracles, "Ye shall have the reward of your evil counsel; ye have made your sacrifices to demons in hades, and ye shall dwell with them." And so, too, we are taught in the book of Enoch, that those "who worship foul spirits and demons are drawn down to low places to abide with them."

How profoundly vital and far-reaching is this great lesson to the human race. Evil communications corrupt good manners. They degrade, bear downward and chain the soul to the low levels of the earth. "So evil-minded demoniac spirits, earthly and selfish, naturally descend, dwelling not only within the atmosphere of the earth, but in the filthiest and foulest places of city slums and hovels." Dr. Alexander has just told us how they especially like unclean places, and continuing, says: "Demons are more active in darkness than in light. At cock-crow their power begins to weaken." The "Shabriri" are always a menace to those who drink water from stagnant pools."

As to external appearance the shape of demons "is mostly human, but they assume various forms at will. Those associated with dirty places often appear in clouds of smoke.

"They infest all ill-aired places, the atmosphere of dark swamps, and garbage deposits are charged with them. They seek the low places."

"Shadows cast by the moon, certain trees mossy by sluggish streams, and dark vaults are natural lurking places for demons. All places of uncleanness are congenial to them. Graveyards are their favorite resorts. Old ruined bathing places invite them. Ruins should be avoided on account of these unseen foes."

In the Toga Vasishta we read of deceased persons "with special attractions to the houses they had lived in at the time of their death, lingering in these places; the consequence of which was that their souls, being cut off from the normal evolution from the material existence toward the spiritual state, were tied, or tethered, so to say, to these places."

Conspicuous among the haunted places of the world is the Ranjnad Chettrume at Permagoody, Madura, India. The inmates had been ruthlessly slaughtered to the last man. As a consequence of this wholesale massacre, "the adjoining Brahmin quarters became haunted by the disembodied spirits of the slain. The poor people of the agraharam were tormented by these spirits; all sorts of howlings would be heard in and about the Chettrume; murderous sounds and groans would be loudly ringing in the haunted grounds."

Dangers and Warnings to Mediumship.

Timid persons there are who profess to disbelieve, or seek to deny, these darker facts of demoniacal obsession and possession, sometimes exclaiming, "It will hurt Spiritualism." Our author very properly rebukes this manifestation of cowardice and willingness to close one's ears to actual and eternal facts, and rises quite to the sublime when he replies, "No truth can perish; the building stands after the scaffoldings have fallen."

We all remember the outcry which immediately followed the publication of Andrew Jackson Davis' "Diakka," as though its plain confession of facts, rather more unpleasant than ordinary, would inevitably work the destruction of our whole philosophic structure. But we live and will live and flourish all the better when we have bravely confronted the whole truth and taught the world not only of its existence, but the human duty of making the most out of these indestructible facts of nature. And these revelations of the darker side of spiritism (not Spiritualism) are facts, just as absolute, demonstrable and universal as the more agreeable facts of the brighter side.

Forewarned is forearmed. Apprise us of danger if such really exists, and the battle is half won in overcoming it. Sad beyond language to describe have been the obsessions, the possessions, the delusions, the betrayals, the infernal psychological crimes practiced in all ages upon innocent, trusting, virtuous, worthy, but wholly unsuspecting media, victimized to their physical, mental, if not moral ruin, while tens of thousands, under the delusion of witchcraft have suffered deaths of woeful ignominy and merciless cruelty.

How much of this has ever been and is now avoidable, by a simple knowledge of the facts embodied in obsessional demonism and the laws which should govern all communication between the visible and invisible worlds.

These vital warnings, therefore, will finally render mediumship safer and far more valuable to the world. For it will ultimately clarify and improve the intermediary state through which the two aspects of our world communicate, the one with the other. It will give us truth for error, and exact instruction instead of the floundering guess-work, or wilful imposture of deceiving and lying controls. Mediumship will now be forever on its guard and so enabled to protect and environ itself that no false, or at least demoniac spirit will be able to penetrate the medium's aura, nor in any sense influence her phase of mediumship.

It is easy to understand how this must at once redound to the exaltation and value of all manifestations. The deceiving spirits will find themselves successfully debarred. Liars, false-pretenders, self-seekers and evil-doers will be held at a distance, and under such safeguarded conditions we will no longer be misguided by pernicious advice, and no longer mis-taught by cunning falsifiers and ignorant impostors who discourse with great grandiloquence upon themes about which they really know nothing at all.

The book, therefore, so far from injuring the cause of Spiritualism, will place to its credit the revealment and history of new and important truths and open to it yet another service to mankind in teaching the timely manner of their highest use. Spiritualism, of all religions and philosophies upon the earth, should be the very last to turn its face from any single fact in universal nature and ignore its influence upon human life. If such fact or facts contain evil, then no other teacher of men can better analyze and control it in the name of good.

The Exorcism of Evil Spirits.

And that these precious ends of remedy and control may be unmistakably realized, Spiritualism has ransacked heaven and earth to find out the true laws of exorcism, the best and surest means of casting out devils and summoning peace and harmony where before was demoniac desolation and blighting ruin. Nor has any other religion taken the pains to do this important work for mankind since the days of Jesus and his disciples.

As demons love darkness rather than light, so do they revel in unclean moral debasement, and retreat undone and defeated from the pure and shining presence of the spiritual. "What have I to do with thee," was repeatedly addressed to Jesus. Our author says; "Rabinical demonology, prevailing for two or three centuries after Jesus' time, would have been intolerable if the undeveloped spirits had had everything their own way. But all finite things and forces have their limitations. So these demoniac influences were restricted by environments. The partial loss of the divine image through wilful perversions rendered succeeding mortals more subject to these nefarious agencies."

But the "divine image," the divine presence and power of the spiritual, was the power that failed not whenever and wherever manifested. We read in Mark: "And when he had called to him his twelve disciples he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases." And in Matthew: "He cast out the spirits with his word." And back of that voiced word was the "I will, be thou clean"; and back of this were the glorified spirits of Moses and Elias; and back of these that legion of angels; and back of these that Christ-heaven cloud of witnesses; and back of and above these, Almighty God, the Central Consciousness, the life, power, love and wisdom of the universe."

Thus, in the early days of the Christ-Christianity, before it had fallen to the sacerdotal, evil; and unclean spirits were everywhere energetically disengaged by true believers, as well as by the disciples and by Jesus; as witness, Luke: "And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the demons are subject to us through thy name."

And so, too, throughout the ages have demons been cast out by and through spiritual gifts, in the name of spiritual light, cleanliness, health and power. Hence we find the exorcists of China, India, Egypt, Judea, Greece and Rome to have been representative persons, whose lives were clean, calm and orderly, elevated to spiritual planes, and thus empowered to demagnetize the obsessed and destroy the hypnotic cause of their enslavement. In the palmy days of Egypt, Greece and Rome, exorcists enjoyed official dignity and were often identified with the councils of kings and emperors.

The harmonizing power of music is often competent of itself to break the hypnotic chains and dispel the obsessing spirits. The case of Saul is strictly in point: "And it came to pass when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul that David took a harp and played with his hand; so Saul was refreshed and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him."

Hesychius, Clement of Alexandria, and many other writers refer to the successful use of music, either solely or as an aid, in cases of exorcism.

Dr. Peebles' book is most highly valuable as a text book on this subject of exorcism, or cure of the obsessed; advice and instruction too detailed to quote here are given to those who seek self-cures, and otherwise reference is made to our most prominent American exorcists.

A Conscientious Work.

All in all "Demonism of the Ages" discovers a painstaking and profound scholarship, and patient and thorough research into the occult lore and religious literature of all antiquity, and comprehensively carried down to the present. As in "Seers of the Ages," and, indeed, in all his writings, the distinguished author never wearies in his search, not for fragmentary facts and half-truths, but for the whole truth, let it be what it may. It has been the privilege of the writer to have personally known Dr. Peebles in both public and private life, for nearly a third of a century, and recently overtaking him, in the harness, on the Odeon platform at St. Louis, my surprise was great to find him supple of limb, strong of voice, and, though in his 84th year, with the intellectual virility of a person of forty. But he was, meanwhile, as ever and always before, the same unbending man of conscience, intrinsic honesty, inflexible integrity, whose honorable manhood had only ripened and mellowed into the ideal grandeur of some venerable Nestor, regal Grecian Sage or Syrian Seer, to know whom was honor in itself.

The doctor, though wielding a moral battle-axe for half a century and more in the interests of reform, is still for "peace" and "arbitration" in place of war"; and he continues diligently fighting for these principles. It needs no telling that on the platform he is independent and fearless, and under his occasional bolts of sarcasm and irony there beats no more tender, genial and fraternal heart—a heart overflowing with good will to all.

Without a trace of vanity he believed this last book of his would stand for the higher Spiritualism, and so it will. It specifies and reveals facts of which not only many Spiritualists are ignorant, but are simply undreamed of by the world at large, howbeit millions of living beings to-day are suffering obsessions that began with their very conception and have influenced their whole lives on the side of evil and misfortune.

That the world is blind to spirit forces there is no question. And here is a great work for Spiritualism, to enlighten the world, to set it right, to place before it eternal truth and the grandeur and glory of the spiritual ideal. The Living Christ, once of Galilee, is yet toiling for men, and it is the gospel and mission of true Spiritualism to join him in the world's vineyard.

JAMES V. VOLDO.

Guard Against Mental Rigidity.

No Authority Should Be Considered Too Sacred to Question.

This is an age of invention and discovery. The circle of knowledge grows larger. Old ideas, theories and systems have to be revised to make them harmonize with modern thought. The man who formed opinions in his youth and is unable to modify them, to eliminate the error and to assimilate whatever of truth is presented to him by later teachers and reformers, by later lessons and experiences, is necessarily left behind. There are many such persons. Neglecting to acquaint themselves with other views than those which they early imbibed, their thought runs in certain ruts, as it were, and they lose both the power and the disposition to accept any thought which cannot readily be made to agree with their predilections. Even where there is no fear, such as is generated by superstition, to consider a new theory or to adopt a new method, the inclination and ability to do so are lacking. Mental flexibility is lost, the mind as well as its organ the brain, becomes rigid, the power of change and adjustment is gone and a state of fixedness is the result. Such a state means unprogressiveness, stationariness—"intellectual peace at the price of intellectual death." To such minds the words of Bagehot apply: "One of the greatest pains to human nature is the pain of a new idea."

In a changing environment change in an organism is a condition of continuance. Variation is a factor in all development. It is necessary to that modification required for adjustment to newly evolved conditions. The penalty of inability to change in adaptation to such conditions is extinction. Such has been the case through all the ages of the ascension of the higher from the lower forms of life.

Man lives in a mental as well as in a physical medium or environment. It is in this mental medium that the chief changes are now occurring with a rapidity which taxes the capacity of the average mind to adjust itself to changing conditions, to new methods, to new conceptions, to new discoveries, following one another, in quick succession, in almost every field of research, to newly acquired knowledge in every province of thought.

The mass of people still assent, immense numbers indifferently to the old irrational creeds. Of modern philosophic and religious thought, of modern religious criticism they have no knowledge and are influenced by it only because they are obliged to breathe the common social and religious atmosphere, and are thus affected more or less, however unconsciously, by that which they can neither appreciate nor understand. Representatives of the old dogmas deplore the liberalizing influences that are working, and yield to them only as they are compelled to do by the pressure from the thinkers whose numbers are rapidly increasing, and from the masses who are stirred by the Time-spirit. In this period of rapid transition, confusion of thought, inconsistencies and reactions are inevitable. Nor are they confined to the field of religious belief. "Back to Kant" and "Back to Hegel" have been the cries of some philosophic teachers. Back to the philosophy of the middle ages some of them would have thinkers go. Others find in Plato's speculations all the true philosophy and real wisdom that have ever been taught, while a larger number wish the western world to accept Buddhism, and to look for the solution of the problems of life and destiny to "mahatmas" of Thibet.

Meanwhile men of science pursue their investigations and make new discoveries; great thinkers continue, now as in the past, to make valuable contributions of philosophic thought; the application of science to the practical affairs of life, the utilization of natural forces to serve the purposes of man, the rapid diffusion of knowledge and the quick communication between all the civilized nations of the earth, must add to the rapidity and complexity of the changes in man's intellectual environment and call for the greatest flexibility and power of adaptation in the generations to come.

It behooves all to guard against mental rigidity. No authority should be considered too sacred to be questioned. No creed should be assented to because of its venerableness or of the numbers that have lived and died believing it. No theory or opinion should be held as a finality. No investigation should be shunned because it involves doubtfulness as to the truth of the investigator's cherished views. The mind should not confine its thinking to a few deeply-worn channels. It should employ all its faculties and allow none of them to become atrophied. Diversity of pursuits, of studies of pleasures tends to make an individual, as it does a nation, flexible, versatile and progressive.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Views on Various Matters.

To the Editor:—If I may be permitted a little space in your most valuable paper, I shall be thankful, as I would like to say Hurrah! to Brother Baldwin's article of September 3, "The Spirit World a Shadow of This." For surely it seems to me that with at least forty-five years' experience of conscious touch with the different planes and conditions of spirit life, I ought to be able to add some quota of knowledge toward gaining a better understanding of the spirit world, which I know every one who is a student in this line of study is anxious to do.

I believe he is correct when he says, that "Spirit is an evolution or refinement of matter," and not matter a materialization of spirit. By my own unnumbered experiences, I know that when a spirit first passes out from its mortal body, it seems to carry so much of the grosser properties of matter with it, that in coming to me soon after transition they can make themselves felt by tangible touch, which as time goes on becomes less and less tangible as they become refined to vibrate in harmony with more refined states of thought and feeling. If in time, and that depends on their effort to get acclimated to their new condition of life, they have become so refined as not to vibrate in unison with this plane or condition of physical matter, if I would then love to commune with them by touch, I must by soul projection go to their plane to come into tangible touch with them, a thing I am often permitted to do.

After they no longer hold gross particles of earth's matter to their spirits, so I may feel their hands upon my brow and cheek and pat my hair or feel their forms press against mine, they, many, who can vibrate on my spirit plane of consciousness can manifest by telepathy, and sometimes when the life waves are very passive they may reflect themselves upon my soul's aura, so as to be seen by me, and a certain number of spirits, being now eleven in number, are in such perfect attunement with me they can manifest upon this plane of life very convincingly by playing upon my instrumentality as one would upon a harp, bringing not only their own voices but gesture and mannerisms in every detail. This of course is subjective, perfectly so. But let me state right here that it is never imposed, but when mutually agreed upon by myself and the controlling spirit; and allow me to also state for the benefit of those who have become frightened out of their mediumship by reading "The Great Psychological Crime," that the controlling of my organism by this circle of well-informed spirits has never been detrimental to me in any particular, but has always been a benefit, schooling me in laws and facts which I could otherwise not have gained, for after all, experience is the grandest educator on earth, if it is wisely presided over by spirits of intelligence, but I am sorry to say, many times it is the reverse, therefore the need of the solicitation of the author of The Psychological Crime. The only fault I found with that was the author's one-sided view of the question. And now right here comes in the need of a better education regarding psychism; and we know these truths are not touched upon in our most liberal theological colleges, and that is wherein I believe in the future of the Morris Pratt Institute, when the Spiritualists of these United States better understand its mission. It is not so much just what it is now; surely I wonder it is alive; it has had but very little sympathy so far, but seemingly plenty of criticism by both, culture and ignorance, and since it stands up under it, let us hope that it will continue to stand as a monument that Spiritualists can point to with pride as an institution of learning, where our young mediums can be guided by some of the pioneers in this movement whose hearts have been torn and minds confused by getting all their knowledge by the cruel master experience. Surely as some say, it is the best teacher, that may be true in a way, if it does not destroy the physical body in order to educate and unfold the soul.

But I fear I am making this letter too long, and will close by saying that some of the Mental Scientists of Milwaukee are not fully satisfied with Mental Science. It proves they are growing, and they have invited me to speak for them while here, which will be until about the month of September, when I again take my departure for Plainview, Minn., where all mail will reach me for engagements for work during the coming season. As my mother's health has improved I hope to be kept busy, therefore societies in need of a speaker, or circles in need of a teacher please correspond with me at the above address.

CATHARINE M'FARLIN.

SPIRITUAL PROBLEMS.

Prepared or Unprepared, We Are Called Upon to Solve Them.

Optimist and Pessimist agree that our civilization needs civilizing, that the revolution now upon us is serious, and signifies a great change in the physical and mental relations and expressions of all the people; causes are sought and studied.

A serious question: Are our religious, political, educational, professional, business and social relations resting upon a sound basis?

Are they not all troubling, more or less, in the balance? Optimist or pessimist, liberal or conservative, all are convinced that a change that will reach up to causes, is a pressing demand.

Humanity is being tried and tested. These are times when more souls are being tried than in any former time, when a "Moses," a "Jesus" is looked for.

Demonstration of continued life, the all-pervading, mightiest power and force in existence, is in evidence, and may be trusted to respond to all anxious souls.

Our republican form of government is thoroughly distrusted, pronounced a failure; it fails to civilize, it fails to prevent the most barbarous cruelty, the burning at the stake without trial. Millionaire criminals and robbers rule and control the destinies of this great nation; our laws are not executed. The diabolical schemes and practices of the medical profession keep apace with the hold-ups and crimes of the every-day increasing number of bandits and criminals; they belong to the same class and should receive the same treatment. Is this portrayal a dark one? It is as true as dark.

Fifty years ago a materialistic God, devil, hell and heaven, with mythical and mysterious attachments, held the subjugated multitude by fear, an angry God, a yawning hell, with a roaring devil to keep the furnace hot for the sinners God had created.

Science has since taught how to extract the devil's teeth without pain, the degradation of fear has given place to an intelligent study of the problems of every-day life, and fear is being rapidly changed to courage.

One-half of the crimes of this "New Era" are the results of injustice heaped upon the burden-bearers; justice and an orderly recognition of the rights of the negative, producing class, will change, inspire, and uplift and secure results long looked for.

Is there a balm in Gilead? A thousand times the demonstration of continued life has been declared the most important truth that humanity has ever been called upon to deal with.

Is this declaration true? What proportion of professed Spiritualists realize its full significance? Why is this declaration true? Because of its infinite relations, broad and far-reaching influence; its influence is unmeasurable.

It relates to an infinite universe, an infinite universe was not created, and does not require an infinite God to engineer it.

Demonstrated continued life signifies we have always lived, not created, but the result of universal change and growth.

Most sublime and far-reaching; is the one declaration that is soul-satisfying, it never fails, and fully settles the question of the significance of life.

All the religions of our world are the outgrowth, the direct result of this great truth.

Because of the traditions, selfishness, restrictions, limitations and subjugating influences of the past, Spiritualists have not yet as a body passed the chrysalis state of growth; as soon as we reach the butterfly plane we are willing to let go of the material,—it is written Jesus let go—break the chains, remove the packs and give the worm full and complete possession of material environments; the beautiful, dazzling, golden-winged butterfly does not require much of the material, only the fragrance and nectar of the beautiful flowers; the change from the present chrysalis state, to a full recognition of the significance of a demonstration of continued life, will dispel the shadows of the past, emancipate the great multitude from kingcraft and priestcraft, and hasten the day of jubilee.

Ninety per cent of Spiritualists are in chains and don't realize it; they are subjugated and led by the methods and deception of a hypocritical debauched church.

Hope and faith is a sandy foundation and unworthy of the least consideration by those who have reached even the vestibule of truth, and light of demonstration. Spiritualists are ripe for revolution inside and out, and no time should be lost in a mighty overturn.

The key: Demonstration of continued life furnishes the key to the present situation; this key will unlock all the myths and mysteries of the past and present, solve all the practical spiritual problems, substitute light for darkness, love for ignorance and selfishness.

No other power or influence can be trusted to do what knowledge of life and spirit will do for humanity, when we have outgrown the chrysalis—the materialistic state.

Infinite life without beginning or end, is a mighty thought power, and inspiration towards a strong personality, an independent intelligent individuality. Our weakness at this time is largely due to personal neglect, it is easy to be led and subjugated. The distinguishing feature of early Modern Spiritualism was its liberalizing personal individualism; the glory of modern civilization has ever been a fuller recognition of individual freedom.

Spiritualists have no good reason to complain; I am not complaining, but write to consider and suggest.

The crisis we are now passing socially and nationally is a direct result of the agitation of Spiritualists and liberalists for the past fifty years; as agitators we have moved the world; our mistake, as Spiritualists, has been in adopting methods of a decaying church and submitting to their selfish subjugating influences; ambition to lead and the temptation of rest, furnished by the modern church has been a snare; more backbone, more character, more knowledge and personality, more sturdy every-day individuality, is a demand made upon the thinkers and leaders everywhere.

Privilege is the curse of present society; just how to adjust ourselves to the physical facts of the world and avoid privilege is one of the important problems, and may be solved by a deeper, broader conception of life and its relations.

Personal freedom to think and act, without any shade or shadow of subjugation, is the way out of the present barbarous condition, nothing is of more importance than thought and unlimited freedom to think. Continued personal life in an infinite universe, is a profound inspiring subject, it is destined to break all the shackles and develop individual freedom; Spiritualists who are contented with present conditions are still in the chrysalis state, let them rest until the light and heat of the new life reaches them.

Demonstrated continued life possesses all the elements of life, light, love and spirit, of all religions that have tended to uplift humanity from the subjugating influences of ambition, selfishness and injustice; it is the key to the present remarkable materialistic condition, it is sure to open wide the door to life within and dispel all the shadows.

A comprehension of the power and influence involved in an endless personal life, spirit life, is the balm in Gilead, the resurrection, the sure salvation.

The spirit world, the mightiest power and force known, can and will solve all of life's problems.

DR. M. E. CONGER.

Chicago, Ill.

The Wisdom of Passion

BY SALVARONA.

"In modern philosophy there are three great treatises on the Passions, that of Spinoza, that of Hume, and that of Salvarona."—Philosophical Journal.

Illustrated with three handsome portraits of Emerson, Hosea, Byron. 12mo. 250 pages. Red cloth; gold title. Will be mailed to any address on receipt of price by postal note.

Price, $1.00. Postage, 10 Cents.

The extraordinary merits of "The Wisdom of Passion" are the copiousness of human insight and content in the way of fact and reference with which the book is crammed. Its main thesis I agree with.—Prof. William James, Harvard University.

I have found "The Wisdom of Passion" to be a book of powerful erudition and fine intuition. I would be happy if in a certain sense I had inspired it.—Prof. Ceasare Lombroso.

Here is a man who sees and says things for himself. He is not retailing conventionalities. The book fairly bristles with wise sayings. I believe the thesis is sustainable and that the author has gone a long way toward fortifying it. After I took up the book, I did not quit, except for meals and sleep till I had read it carefully from cover to cover.—Albion W. Small, Head of Dept. of Sociology and Director of Affiliated Work for the University of Chicago.

I am somewhat familiar with the tendency in modern thought to give prominence to feeling—with James' "Will to Believe," with Ward's social philosophy, with Shelley's and Browning's philosophy. "The Wisdom of Passion" fits in with their contributions. The main thesis of the book—that the soul forms its own forms by its choice—I can ascribe to—Prof. Oscar Lovell Triggs, University of Chicago.

Address all orders to H. G. Walters, Langhorne, Pa.

Man and the Spirit World as Disclosed in the Bible." By Rev. Arthur Chambers, Associate of King's College, London. An excellent book for Christian people who would investigate and learn the facts of Bible teachings as well as modern spirit phenomena. Price, cloth, $1.10.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH

Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described.

BY C. W. LEADBEATER.

A Volume of 500 large pages, treating very interestingly if Life, Death and Immortality, Clairvoyance, Spirit Phenomena, Etc, as viewed by an acknowledged and cultivated exponent of Theosophy. Price, $1.50.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.

By J K Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

THE TALMUD Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polang. 859 pp. Price, cloth, $1

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphero (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

RADIANT ENERGY and Its Analysis, Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics, by Edgar L. Larkin, Director Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California. This book treats upon a new branch of research into the laws of nature, and to the student or even an admirer of the modern astrological literature will surely come with great interest. Price, cloth, $1.75

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crocker. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

POEMS of the Life Beyond and Within. Voices from many lands and countries, saying, "Man, thou shalt never die." An excellent selection. Edited and compiled by Giles B. Stebbins. Cloth. $1.

A VIVID PICTURE.

Illustrating Mental Laws and the Judgment Day.

We are looking into future relations of life with each other, and the conditions governing those relations. Vast as the subject is, I may be permitted to give a word in relation to the laws governing that condition. No one can learn all, and as each gains a little light, it seems to me that it will benefit the conditions of the human race, if each will give his or her gem of truth, kindly helpfully to aid as far as it will, to bring progress on earth, higher spiritual and moral unfoldment. If one has found a diamond, another a pearl, it is unnecessary to say the pearl is valueless because it is not a diamond, or claim the diamond's flashing light is darkness because it is not a pearl.

I believe all mediums are being taught by spirit teachers; one may learn one lesson; another a very different lesson on the same subject; lessons in between, which would blend the whole as one, may be learned by a third, but the third needs to give his lesson and let the chain be completed, and not quarrel because the others have their links, for the three links need to be brought into relation and give brotherly love and fraternal friendship to the whole Spiritualist world.

Why need we quarrel with those who lay the Bible aside, because they have found God speaks to them, as well as to the prophets of old, and they read in the laws of cause and effect in nature's demonstration the written law of divine command.

If another still finds in the Bible that which relates to higher truths, proving that the mediums of old were also taught by those passed into the spirit world, and the laws governing their condition of life illustrated in the teachings given, must we break the circle and exclude half the family?

Would it not be well for us as Spiritualists to study the law as we are able to do, and see how they relate to the illustrations given by Christ and other Bible mediums.

In my early life I studied the Bible to learn spiritual truths. As I grew older I studied nature to learn spiritual truths. When I developed my mediumship I questioned the spirits. I sought proof of higher laws to learn spiritual truths. I felt it important to me to learn what kind of a country each year of mortal life was hastening me towards.

There are so many different planes and grades of conditions in this world of mental condition governed by scientific laws, that there is no wonder that so many different stories are given explaining what we all seek to unravel, the great hereafter.

I have tested mental laws, gained the proof that persons at a distance in mortal condition, can send their thoughts to you so as to build on the atmosphere before a developed sensitive a picture of themselves. I have proved the condition by seeing faces appear before me, noting the time and learning after that the person was thinking of me at the time I saw the face in my room.

Mental laws are so forceful that they carry feelings of love or hate, illness or happiness, to the sensitized person. The mind produces a picture on the atmosphere of any material thing it thinks of intently, so that a sensitized plate produces a picture of that which was thought of as well as the sensitized person sees it.

A man who comes to my meetings often, had a picture taken to obtain spirit photographs. It was taken on Sunday. When developed, not only several faces, supposed to be spirits, were beside him in the picture, but his son not in spirit life, with a wheel, was also there as plain as he himself.

This boy was in a distant town, and had never ridden a wheel that he knew of. But Thursday he received a letter telling him that the boy was learning to ride a wheel, and that Sunday he had taken a long pleasant ride. Knowing his father's interest in all that he did, he could not help thinking of him, and thus the picture was procured by mental laws. I have found many proofs of these laws, or my spirit teachers have given them to me, proving that they are more forceful in their condition of life than even with a sensitized medium.

Thoughts of past acts produce a picture of all relating to them, as real as if they were acted over again. The soul in eternity starts back from his own thoughts, for all that he has done that was evil presents itself to him. They chase him, the phantoms of the past, also the thoughts of those he has injured appear before him, and add to his condemnation by making him see his acts as they see them.

An illustration was given me clairvoyantly of a special case. A negro had committed several murders, but the last crime which led to his capture and confession was, torturing a mother and babe to learn where money was kept. The mother, tied in a chair witnessed the burning of her baby's feet by the colored fiend. When on the scaffold the man ended his life as a mortal, a Catholic priest stood beside him who had led him to confess his crimes and seek salvation through the teachings of his creed.

I wondered what the man's condition could be when he awoke to the fact that Christ's blood had not washed his soul from its stains, and as I thought of his sin and wondered, the voice of one of my guides said, "Go into the mental realms, and find the man; see for yourself what eternal law gives to him. God is law, mental law; it judges, condemns, punishes and rewards."

In a moment I saw the man. He seemed to be hastening away from all human habitation, fleeing through dark forests, hiding in caves, crouching behind great rocks; a terrible look of fear was on his face, for ever as he looked or paused in his flight, he saw the thought forms of those he had harmed as if pursuing him. Their thoughts as well as those of others who loved them, came after him like phantoms, to escape which he sought to hide in secluded places, hastening from place to place, but could not escape the unchangeable law.

My guide's voice again said: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth. In that day they shall call on the rocks to hide them." The true meaning of the Bible judgment day was illustrated in the short lesson.

Thus my guides show me how much there is to learn of spiritual conditions from the Bible, but which cannot be understood save as psychic powers are developed, the philosophy as well as the phenomena of spirit life proved, and a knowledge of mental science gained. The more we learn as truth the more we are able to see that Christ and other Bible mediums were far ahead of us, even in this age of advanced thought, and understood well the higher lessons we are just learning.

MRS. MAY A PRICE.

Washington, D. C.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents.

SOUL AND SPIRIT.

So much has been said in regard to the soul and spirit, and so many conflicting ideas presented, that one becomes confused and hardly knows what to think.

If we believe the teachings of the orthodox church, also those of many of our Spiritualist and New Thought lecturers and writers, we must conclude that man is a triune being—three individuals in one, or that he is a physical being possessing a spirit and soul, and in accord with such teaching we often hear the expression—my soul or my spirit.

The orthodox minister warns us to be very careful lest we lost our souls. He does not attempt to explain what the soul is but leaves all such abstruse questions with God. Just as the preachers and the church have always wanted to do with all questions; but the scientist takes great pains to tell us what the soul is and its relation to the the body and spirit, yet often when he gets through his explanations are about as clear as mud.

A few advocates of re-embodiment teach that the soul is afar off, does not descend into matter but projects a part or power of itself into the material world in the form of the physical body. This body they call the child of the soul. But this is so vague, we want to ask where is the soul and what is it? How did it have its beginning and where? What is the purpose of its existence?

I do not pretend to know nor do I insist that my knowledge along these lines is absolute or my conclusions past controversion, but I have like a good many others a few ideas I am willing to inflict upon the public.

I believe that instead of having souls we are souls, and that the soul and spirit are one. Hence I may say I am a soul or I am a spirit.

Some of the ancients said spirit meant breath. Others called that part of the individual which survived death of the body and could be sensed or seen the spirit.

Most people to-day talk of the dead as spirits, never having thought of their being spirits while in the mortal body.

So we can plainly see that all this talk about spirits has arisen from the fact that man has persisted in putting in an appearance now and then after his so-called death, and the people have named him a spirit.

It does away with a great deal of perplexity when we come to consider man as an individual—we may call him a soul, who is seeking to express himself on the different planes of life through bodies corresponding to the planes upon which he desires to operate.

For instance he builds for himself a physical body with organs and faculties adapted to his purpose of coming in contact with physical environments. While manifesting through this body here he may have many bodies, as many as he has planes of consciousness.

It is a well established fact that there is a body similar to the physical called by some the astral body—by Paul the spiritual body.

This body or temple, as some have poetically called it, exists during the life of the physical and the soul employs it for its expression the same as it does the physical body.

No one ever sees the soul, the real man or woman, but only a manifestation of same by and through a body.

Clairvoyants see the spirit, they say, of someone still in the earth life. They see but an expression of the individual, viz., one of his bodies, and when a decarnate person is seen it is a material body (much attenuated) and not the soul.

The idea has prevailed that there can be no freedom of the soul from physical conditions until the death of the body, but we hold that the soul in the ultimate is free and that its range of operations, planes of consciousness and grasp of knowledge far transcends anything thought of by man in his cramped physical expression.

This is partially proven by hypnotism. When the subject is freer to a certain extent and he begins to be lifted out of his prison house, so to speak, something of the scope and grandeur of life flashes upon him. He seems to know the mysteries of being, to remember the past and be able to read the future. No wonder he is loth sometimes to descend again to the narrow limits of life in the physical.

Then how much we feel that never finds expression here. Every man, woman and child carries within songs sweeter far than any they can sing, and we are all poets, painters, musicians, orators, philosophers, philanthropists and lovers, yet we let the world know but little about it.

And sometimes we forget the fine emotions that lie buried within the depths of our being until perchance we listen to a grand lecture, a song or sweet symphony from some great soul, then we are stirred, lifted, rejoiced, baptized with light from the eternal worlds, and we are amazed at ourselves.

The greatest writer has said but a small part of what was in him, and the famous productions of the master musicians are but fragments from the infinite depths of song.

Victor Hugo after having written for more than fifty years in every style imaginable and upon every subject that claims the attention of the human mind, declared that he had not said a thousandth part of what was in him.

Life is a unit. One life, but different expressions of individual entities on the different planes of consciousness; and we are really never separated from our dead, for while we sleep or even while awake we may be with them on the plane of vibration they occupy in the body corresponding to their "spiritual bodies."

That we are not conscious of this while conscious to physical life does not disprove it. The soul knows whether it consciously knows or not.

We may remember a part an experience and call it a drea mor we may not remember at all.

A man was thrown from a vehicle and his skull crushed in on the brain. After his recovery he could remember nothing that occurred prior to the accident, although he learned readily and was otherwise normal.

After twenty years he had an operation performed and the piece of skull raised from off the brain. He immediately remembered all he had known before the accident but knew nothing of what had taken place since.

This proves that a person may be in possession of knowledge and have experiences of which he is not cognizant.

I am often asked if insane people will be sane after the death of the physical body? Naturally, yes, as the loss of the mind as it is termed, is but a derangemene of some part of the mechanism of the body through which the soul is trying to express. The soul or real self remains intact, and unhurt, and when freed from the imperfect body will go on its way rejoicing.

Looking at it in this way life does not seem such a hideous nightmare, such a grand farce, for where a soul fails to accomplish its purpose in any embodiment and its bark goes down in the dark waters of its earthly existence,

It cannot be lost nor injured,
For the Father's hand will guide,
And within the love unfailing
It must evermore abide.

I was, I am, and ever shall be. This every soul can truthfully exclaim. I am not caring about trying to save my soul from destruction, for I know that I am and shall ever be, and that all the forces in the universe cannot destroy me. From the eternal past I have come, no matter how, but judging from what I know of life in this expression it has been through persistent effort to adjust myself to my surroundings, to overcome obstacles and master my every situation.

"No man-made laws can alter facts" and all the creeds in Christendom cannot damn me, for I am a law unto myself, and above, beyond, and superior to any law except that written on the tablets of my being by the hand that brought me into existence.

The idea that a soul has its beginning with the physical body gives one a very narrow, contracted view of life, and it is not strange that confusion arises in the mind when we undertake to deal with the problem of life from this standpoint.

I have no way of proving that the soul has had an existence prior to this, but it seems reasonable to me that it is so. I cannot think that within the short space of a human life-time the soul can acquire all its wonderful knowledge and power. I believe that not only man but every form of life expresses itself continually in one way or another through matter. The beautiful rose we admire to-day is but the expression of the soul back of it.

All creatures on the lower planes of animal life are souls and in a way immortal.

I do not hold that the rose always remains a rose, but in accordance with its nature it will seek higher, better conditions for its expression.

The animal seeks, though unconsciously, higher and more complicated forms of development, and thus comes on up the scale of being.

Some of our Spiritualists claim that animals hold a body and an existence for a time after death. May it not be possible that they soon find expression in some form of physical life again? Naturally that most needful for them.

If as scientists declare, man is the product of evolution, is it not possible that the process of evolution may be some such as suggested above? And the soul continues to clothe itself again and again in materiality until it has had every experience and advantage earth life can afford it. When such time comes it will go on into higher expressions of life, free from and master of all earthly conditions.

Many Spiritualists argue that re-embodiment is unnecessary since the soul can go on obtaining all that is necessary for its further growth and unfoldment in the spirit world. At the same time they will tell you we are now in the spirit world the same as the dead except that we have our physical bodies. This I believe is true. Now if the so-called dead do not have need of this life, why do they linger here seeking to get control of the physical bodies of mediums?

Some will say for the good of humanity, for the development of the medium, etc., but we know that the person controlled is not always benefited and often the guides as they are called, will tell us they remain with us for our mutual good. Thousands are controlling mediumistic people because they need earthly experiences and must have a form of expression.

So I have come to the conclusion consciously here, the same no doubt I have myriads of times before, that if it is necessary for me to operate on the physical plane through a physical body, it is infinitely better that I build one of my own. It will serve my purpose better and will not be an imposition on another.

What is this for? For the individualization and unfoldment of the soul.

What is unfoldment of soul? In my opinion it means the development of faculties corresponding to every branch of knowledge. These to be so strong and so perfect that in every possible condition or environment of life we shall know without the effort of acquiring knowledge. For instance every faculty must be as perfect as was Handel's for music or as is the natural mathematician's for numbers and calculation. Also that the soul may become calm and self-possessed, fearless and free, and master in the realm of its being, perfect in knowledge and perfect in love.

The Christs have been souls thus unfolded who have come to earth with a mission, knowing from whence they came and whither they were going.

It may seem like a slow and tedious process, this being born again, but we have all the time there is, and if we have infinite possibilities we also have endless life in which to unfold them.

So let us not be discouraged even though, like Helen Keller, we lack the most important avenues of communication with this world. Let us not be in a hurry, nor worry and fret, but rest in the sweet assurance that all is well with the soul.

"I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace;
I stand amid the eternal ways
And what is mine shall know my face."

That a soul can be lost is a most absurd idea, since the very aim and object of life is individualization.

Everything is exclaiming I am, I am, I am! If not in the musical tones of the present day New Thoughtist, then by its everlasting persistence in self-development, its determination to be.

There is no sin except the transgression of some law of our being, and no hell except the punishment that follows as a natural consequence. Neither is eternal, for the soul shall eventually triumph over all error, make reparation for every mistake or wrong and obtain complete happiness by attuning itself to the rhythmic vibrations of the universal life. In the very nature of things this is so.

Do not imagine, then, that when you lie down in the cold embrace of death your spirit, as you call it, will be floating about without form, an intangible, elusive indefinable something; for you cannot die, and the death of your body does not change you.

You are a centralization of nature's forces. For countless ages you have been rising to higher and higher states of being, pushing on up the spiral stairway of knowledge and love.

Contesting every inch of the way, you have with dogged persistence and from stern necessity brought yourself to where you are.

Now what are you going to do? Go out into nothingness? lose your identity? No! You are and ever shall be, nor ever will you be a disembodied spirit, but always a conscious, loving, aspiring soul, clothed upon with a body adapted to your new condition of life.

There is no mistaking the grandly unfolded souls. Majestic in bearing, broad-minded, tolerant and progressive, they are the beacon lights along the shore of earthly existence, and the very highest indication of a great soul is its tender sympathy and loving consideration for all creatures that like itself are struggling upward towards the light.

San Antonio, Texas. LAURA B. PAYNE.

A PLEA FOR PURITY.

ITS BEAUTY, GRANDEUR AND UPLIFTING QUALITIES ARE POINTED OUT.

"There Is a Well-Defined Conviction In the Minds of Many That There Is a Certain Sacredness Involved In Conversing With Departed Friends."

In all lines of human endeavor those best fitted to endure the various vicissitudes incident to their particular work survive longest. The survival of the fittest is merely the triumph of purity. The pure, therefore, realize a greater degree of comfort and profit from their endeavors.

The average employe must be free from health-wrecking and bankrupt-making habits, for the modern employer cannot afford to employ any one who is known to be a victim to habits which will eventually dim the mind and destroy the body.

The cigarette-smoking youth is not wanted in business life. The beer-drinking man finds, sooner or later, in his pay envelope, the eloquent words, "Your services are no longer needed." He finds himself supplanted by the clear-brained total abstainer.

The public is a kind and generous employer, in a way, and is slow to wrath, forgiving much and hoping for better things of its employes.

The medium is an employe—a trusted one—of an employing public. It therefore behooves the medium to be above reproach with regard to habits and personal cleanliness.

There is a well-defined conviction in the minds of many that there is a certain sacredness involved in conversing with departed friends, in spirit life. It is quite shocking to their finer sensibilities to detect the odor of whisky or tobacco upon the medium. The idea of absolute purity is inseparably associated in their minds with that of spirit communication. This is natural, and it should be encouraged by the purity of the medium's thoughts, deeds and daily life.

The writer well remembers a certain medium who was in the habit of puffing clouds of smoke from a cigarette while on the street and even while in the seance room. He said the smoking of a cigarette "steadied" his nerves, seeming to forget that nothing is better for the nerves than an abstemious life. The writer has carefully observed the countenances of those present at the seances of this man, and almost without exception surprise and disgust were found to be depicted there. Although this medium was well developed in both the inspirational and materializing phases, and in charge of a flourishing church, his downfall was gradual and certain.

No one can wreck a body and benumb a spirit with impunity, expecting to escape the results of a violation of natural laws. We must merit reward in order to receive reward, and a medium cannot hope to report to the public for duty with a tainted breath and a clouded soul and expect continued employment at a high wage.

A discerning public places the seal of its approval only upon those who live purely—for the others it has only tolerance. Competition in this age of the world's history has fixed a standard of competency, and absence of injurious and offensive habits is an important factor therein; for virtue has become more than its own reward.

Modern commercialism recognizes a department of sentiment, and it employs mediums in that department, for without sentiment we are stoics; and stoics have no need of industry as we, to-day, understand the term. When departed relatives are mentioned, the active element of sentiment possessed by that great mass of people called "the public," is at once aroused. It is the first step for many on that never-ending path of knowledge which Spiritualism has helped many timid feet to tread. On this initial tour of investigation must the conceptions of purity and of spirituality be shocked and the inquirer turned backward by impurity?

Mediums who mirror in their daily life the truths of Spiritualism are moderately well paid, experience no ill effects through the exercise of their psychic powers, are surrounded by friends, and are happy; but mediums who are victims of alcohol, tobacco, morphine, cocaine, immorality and insincerity, usually perish miserably. Many learn too late the fact that purity and true mediumship are inseparable. Too often truth is not made superior to all else, and the mad desire to gain money overbalances the desire to be a real force for good in the world. It is then that the mercenary medium seeks to give only such facts and results which will "please the customer," and the first step toward the ruin of that medium's psychic powers is made.

The writer has always contended that mediumship should not be depended upon as a sole means of gaining a livelihood. A trade, or a profession enables the medium to remove mediumship from the corrupting influence of money and creates an independence in which the desire to help humanity, to uplift mankind and to remove error and superstition shines forth as the most important motive. The necessity of an independent means of support is particularly applicable in the case of the inspirational psychic; for the advice given by a great medium to his pupils, whom he sought to develop, should be remembered: "Take no thought how or what ye shall speak; for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the spirit which speaketh in you."

In this connection the writer would give it as his opinion that a calm, clear, dispassionate statement of spiritual truths is desired by the truly intelligent audience in preference to the most elaborate embellishments consisting of windmill-like swinging of arms and stamping of feet that can be devised by the most athletic or inventive lecturer. The day of the gymnastic lecture is past. It has gone the way of the sermon that was accompanied by a stamping as of many horses, and a pounding on the stout oaken reading-desk like unto the noise caused by a full dozen pile-drivers. The proper place for the control that seeks to substitute muscularity for intelligence is in a boiler factory. All things have their time and place, but the forum is certainly not the place for monkey-like contortions and sky-scraping gestures. Truth is naked, but she requires neither the arts of Delsarte nor the strength of Vulcan to make her more beautiful.

Let us have more facts and less fuss; more purity and less putridity; more reason and less rapacity.

Let us encourage the "higher criticism" if it tends to eliminate the non-essentials. That impure habits and personal uncleanliness are non-essentials to the well-ordered life is quite well recognized.

"This trio you should cherish: Knowledge, Reason and Purity. The greatest of these is Purity, for it is a crown of blessing upon the possessor of the two others."—Norwa.

The writer has often pondered upon the saying of the ancient warrior above quoted, and his found a world of meaning in it. Study it well, and you will find the truths of a thousand years of experience concealed in a few words.

F. M. SNARRENBERGER.

Columbus, Ohio.

AN IMPORTANT VISION.

With the Spiritual Lesson Derived Therefrom.

Last night, or rather this morning, I had a very clear vision on the vibratory system in nature and man.

I have had many visions in the years past, on these lines of the science of nature and man, but this time another view was presented to me and I could not only see man's powerful action in all of these operations, but I could understand rightly while seeing. As a result, the following was penned by spirit aid after I arose:

It is with a sense of pleasure that we announce that you have gained another true idea concerning universal operations, viz., that really the electrical workings combine the full science of man and nature. Thus, man's committals and his rescue therefrom comes, must come through that system wisely governed for purposed results.

Therefore, to write and to talk on this, the true science of life, is in order, for the time is come when it can be not only comprehended by the studious of earth, but also demonstrated. Man has learned that connections can be made or formed between the earth and elemental electricities and magnetisms, that there is this radiant power of life-flame in nature, also in man, and which, in man, is nourished from and active in these natural force and substance activities; that man being the conscious entity in the employ of Supreme Wisdom, is rated as the governing power on his planes of expression and has these rights of rule supremely vested in him. But thus far he has viewed things wrongly, and has aimed to dominate his weaker brother man whom it is his duty to aid in performing his parts in these associated labors of force and substance regenerations, and thus in the general progress of men and things. Had these simple and self-evident truths been beheld and adhered to by man the appointed Master in creation's scheme, he would now be on the lofty planes marked for this cycle and world age. Alas! he is found far below required vibratory average, hence the necessity of these heaven-enforced helps during the crisis through which all things are passing at the present time.

Therefore it is not a thing to be wondered at that the immoral and deficient in true soul development now found on earth and those sent out from Earth in such deficient form, should mingle for undesirable results. It is done to bring the mass of humanity to their senses and to recognize the true status of the race in the connected life of divided planes of life's expression, and so take steps to educate all classes of so-called criminals, insane, feeble-minded and generally deformed. Thus alone are these wrongs righted and a redemption wrought from these states of mind and soul slavery to ill forces and their compulsions to acts of harm to the perpetrators and their intended victims.

This vibratory system in man and nature is for regenerative purposes changing crude into refined substances, but man being wrongly active in desire, thoughts and deeds, becomes a debtor thus to others whose conduct is thus affected and universal rules then, must, in the name of justice and equity punish all such offenders.

From such righteous punishments, for effecting self-restoration to true usefulness, none can be relieved, only as they are capable of seeing their true condition and undoing the wrongs, first by a true desire to aid where before they hindered pursuits of others in common welfare, then by active thought and labor to help in such ways. This at first sight seems like an unsurmountable task to an enfeebled soul in any form, but when it is considered that as they thus try to undo the wrongs they have done, help is given them in due proportion, so it is not of themselves alone that this redeeming task is accomplished, but at the same time it cannot be done for them unless they are the principal actors in true, honest efforts as indicated.

This is the foundation of the true plan of man's redemption and thought thereon is invited.

Psychical and Physical.

Among such experiences, one a few years ago impressed me greatly.

It was about nine o'clock one evening, I was sitting in my room, when I felt a peculiar sensation of joy and sadness pass over me. At once I was clairvoyant and saw in the street before the house a company of heavenly Sir Knights mounted on white horses and in full regalia.

They passed on, keeping the middle of the street until they reached the home of a prominent physician, a Sir Knight also, who was sick at the time. There they halted, made a salute, then turned and marched out to the cemetery, still keeping the middle of the street.

One week later the doctor's funeral occurred, which I attended. The Knights Templar had charge of the service, and lo! they marched in the street as I had seen the heavenly ones doing. It was an impressive ceremony for the reason that more than earthly interest was manifested therein.

I have often wondered why it is, but I see the higher order of Masons or Sir Knights frequently attend the last rites of their earthly brethren. I see also others receiving such attentions, but not to such a marked degree.

Is this evidence that the Mason's creed to assist one another, etc., is acceptable in heaven's sight? Or is it merely the deference shown the order? At any rate it is a mark of honor.

MRS. M. KLEIN.

Van Wert, Ohio.

SUNSHINE THOUGHTS.

"This world is not so bad a world
As some would like to make it,"
There's warmth in every wintry soul,
If you can only wake it.
A word of cheer, dispelling fear
From sad hearts in sorrow,
Sets notes athrill in heart and will—
God's promise for to-morrow.

In every weary soul we meet,
A kindly word may lighten
Their lives to rosy sunshine sweet,
By just one word to brighten.
So as we go, let each bestow
A friendly word of cheer,
That dewy flowers of love may grow
In by-ways far and near.

This old world would brighter be,
If each would do his part
To shed on all a genial smile,
And kindliness impart;
And hearts bowed low in deepest woe
Would find joy's richest treasure,
By just one little word of cheer,
To make their lives a pleasure.

BISHOP A BEALS.

Summerland, Cal.

HEALING CURRENTS
FROM THE
BATTERY OF LIFE,
BY WALTER DE VOE.

A Book That Awakens the Healing Power in the Soul
It Teaches the Glorious Truth that Frees From Sin, Sickness, Poverty and Pain.
PRICE, $2.00.
For Sale by
COLLEGE OF FREEDOM,
Woodlawn, Chicago.

PUBLICATIONS
OF
Hudson Tuttle.

Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.
This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.
In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRIT AND THE SPIRIT WORLD.
English edition. Price, $1.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF MAN.
Containing the latest investigations and discoveries, and a thorough presentation of this interesting subject. English edition. Price $1.

THE SECRETS OF THE CONVENT AND OF THE SACRED HEART.
This book was written for an object, and has been pronounced equal in its exposure of the diabolical methods of Catholicism to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Price, 25 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.
A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?
How to investigate. How to form circles, and develop and cultivate mediumship. Names of eminent Spiritualists. Their testimony. Eight-page tract for mission work. Singles copies, 5 cents; 100 for $1.25.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.
By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best peoms of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 225 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE.
For the home, the lyceum and societies. A manual of physical, intellectual and spiritual culture. By Emma Rood Tuttle. A book by the aid of which a progressive lyceum, a spiritual or liberal society may be organized and conducted without other assistance. Price, 50 cents; by the dozen, 40 cents. Express charges unpaid.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.
For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.
All books sent postpaid. Address
HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

PUBLICATIONS OF
CARLYLE PETERSILEA,
Given by automatic writing through the author's mediumship.

THE DISCOVERED COUNTRY,
A narative of the personal experience in spirit life of the author's father, who had been a natural philosopher and a materialist. An extremely interesting book. Price, $1.00.

MARY ANNE CAREW,
This work consists of the experiences of the author's mother in spirit life. Price, cloth, $1.00 paper, 40c.

PHILIP CARLISLIE,
A philosophical romance by the guides, the subject of the title being a scientific young philosopher, who is a medium; his chief opponents being a clergyman and a materialist. Cloth, $1.

OCEANIDES.
A scientific novel, based on the philosophy of life, as seen from the spirit side. Paper, 50c.

MARK CHESTER,
Or "A Mill and a Million." This is one of Carlyle Petersilea's most interesting works. It is purely a psychical romance such as the author is noted for producing, paper, 40c.

In the World Celestial.
By DR. T. A. BLAND.
"It is inexpressibly delightful."—Hon. C. A. Windle.
"It lifts the reader into enchanting realms."—Medical Gleanor.
"It is intensely interesting."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.
"Three things make this book remarkable. Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.
"It will give us courage to pass through the deep shadows of death to the sun-lit clime of the World Celestial."—Rev. H. W. Thomas.
"Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great Spiritual book, but a most beautiful romance of two worlds."—Banner of Light.
It is Printed in elegant style and bound in cloth and gold. Price $1.00.

The Mystic Thesaurus,
Or Initiation in the Theoretical and Practical secrets of Astral Truth and Occult Art. By WILLIS F. WHITEHEAD, Editor Agrippa's "Natural Magic." The book treats of The Symbol of the Cross, Spiritual Gifts, Inspirational Conception, Initiative Exposition, The Astral Brotherhood, Message of the Brotherhood, The Magic Mirror, and Celestial Companionship. It is a good text book for students of the Mystic, and will be sent postpaid, in paper, for $1.00.

A MASTERLY WORK.
Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.
A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

Life In the Spirit Realms.

Letter From Abby A. Judson, Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea.

My Dear Friends and Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—I feel sure that you will all be glad to hear from me, although I was not accustomed to write for this particular paper. But all papers that give forth great truths to the people are very dear to me.

The old Banner of Light was and still is exceedingly dear to me; but The Progressive Thinker is a young giant, and really I would like to stand in the shadow of its mighty arm.

I occasionally control another medium when writing for the dear old Banner; but why not write for both papers, now that my powers are increased an hundred fold? While I was still with you in the form I read with a great deal of interest books written by the spirit Franz Petersilea, also the one written by the lovely and progressed spirit, Mary Ann Carew, former wife of Franz and mother of Carlyle. These books seemed to turn for me the key that unlocked the secrets of creation.

I had read and thought most deeply of evolution; but the more I traced it up and thought of it, the more bewildered I became. It seemed to lead upward to a dreary waste, simply peopled by men, women and children. According to the law of evolution not a thing could be immortal but mankind.

I often expressed my thoughts to friends, telling them that the theory of evolution did not satisfy the indwelling spirit and soul, and I thought there must be a lack, for my soul reached out after something more, and I was sure that if the soul craved something more there must be something more to complete its joy and satisfaction.

A friend advised me to read the books of Carlyle Petersilea, written by the spirit of his father, and others. I obtained and read them, and was perfectly delighted. Here was the food that my soul had longed for. I had all along felt that there must be truth in evolution, and could not give it up entirely, but like my own being, there seemed to be an incompleteness about it, and these books gave me that which I sought: Involution and Evolution. Hand in hand they must go. Evolution led to dreary wastes, but hand in hand with Involution led to all that was most lovely and satisfying—that all life whatever was first involved from the spiritual germ, where evolution took it up and carried it into the spirit realms. Thus the spirit realms held all life and beauty that the earth's produced, intact; and I could not disbelieve it if I would. It satisfied my soul and made me happy; and I know it was the truth.

Yes; all life was immortal! and now I am here in the spiritual realm and know it to be correct, for I am surrounded by the flora and fauna that the dear old earth has sent hither. She nourished all life close to her breast, for a season, and then sent it hither to make glad the spirits of men, women and children.

I had never met Carlyle Petersilea, nor his revered father, face to face when in the material form; and when I heard that Carlyle also had come to this life, I longed to see and talk with him. I found him engaged in his legitimate business, that of instructing the young. Already a beautiful conservatory of music was in full swing. I think swing is a very good word to use here, although the medium somewhat objected to it, but if you could hear the rhythmical swing of the volumes of harmony that are sent forth into the sublime ether, you would think the word quite appropriate.

I found Mr. Petersilea a genial, polite, noble-hearted gentleman, very glad to see me indeed.

"Ah! Miss Judson," he said, "how glad I am to think that you feel interest enough in me to seek me out. You are just the lady I want to meet. One in whom I have always felt the deepest interest. My dear wife has talked of you to me for many years, and now I am sure you will be one to aid me in controlling her to write, that we may together hold up the Banner of Truth."

Now, this was the very opportunity that I was seeking, and I said:

"Mr. Petersilea, you make me very happy. This life is an exceedingly beautiful one, but I want to do more for the world we have both so lately left. I have found it rather hard, thus far, to find mediums who are willing to give me their time free—mediums who will write for me hours at a time without expecting or looking for reward. Is your wife one who will give me her time and attention?"

"My wife is one who would give her time to anyone whom she thought good and worthy, and if, thereby, it would please me."

"You and your wife were very happy and truly united?" I said.

"Yes," he answered. "We sincerely believe that we, together, form the perfect whole. She is now in deep grief, but I hope soon to be able to soothe and comfort her more than I have yet been able to do, and you will help me, I know, Miss Judson?"

"I surely will, and make myself happier by doing so."

"Miss Judson, I think my wife is about the only medium through whom you can give the true and perfect law of involution and evolution, and so let us clasp hands in unity and friendship, and aid each other all we possibly can. You have not started another Seminary for young ladies?"

"No. I do not think that is now my particular work and mission—for, Mr. Petersilea, I am not now alone as formerly, but have found one as dear to me as your wife is to you; and we also think that we form the perfect whole; and we are exceedingly happy in our union. Old maids do not forever remain old maids," I continued, laughing.

"So it would seem," he replied. "I congratulate you with all my soul; and have you formed a home here?"

"Oh, yes; a very beautiful home, and you must visit us there."

"I shall certainly do so," he replied. And he has kept his word, and we have entertained him as well as we were able, but I think that we have to thank him, for his exquisite music entertained us far more, and carried our souls up into loftier regions of bliss, if that were possible.

No; my work does not lie within the walls of a seminary, but it is with and for humanity in general. Together with my beloved I join with others to do all the good possible, and give truth, as I find it, down to earth.

"Your home is yet with your wife on earth?" I said.

"Yes," he replied; "and will be until she too leaves the body of flesh, and then, like yourself, we will form a home to suit her taste, and whatever suits her will be to my taste also. This is as it should be."

"Yes; and those pseudo-philosophers of earth must and ought to learn that true marriage answers more purposes than one or two; that it not only answers the purposes of earth, but those of heaven."

"It is supposed by some of those who think themselves very wise, that marriage cannot enter into the heavens because, forsooth, marriage does not bring forth children; as though that were the only end and aim of the marriage relation; whereas, the truth is, that true marriage answers very many different purposes. In fact, there is no purpose whatever, either on the earth or in the heavens, that true marriage does not answer. One might fill a large volume with the purposes of the marriage relation. It develops life itself, and then responds to every known purpose in life, both on earth and throughout the heavens.

"Miss Judson," said Mr. Petersilea, "you have expressed the very truths that my wife and myself labored to make the world understand because we lived it."

"And I never fully comprehended it until after I had read your books; and you may perhaps, never quite know the comfort and joy they gave me. You wish me to control your wife to write up the fauna and flora of this beautiful world?"

"Yes," he replied; "for my own mind and time are so much taken up with music that I do not feel competent to write about them. I see these things all about me, to be sure, just as I did on earth; but, when in the material I had no time to study them, and all that was written about them in my books was written under strict spirit control."

"I was deeply interested in all this for many, many years before leaving the body, and studied them carefully, and since coming to this life I am more deeply interested still, and have spent a large portion of my time in the study of them. I have also attended many lectures, given by most eminent men and women here, and it is a never failing source of interest and pleasure to me."

"Have you your little dog, still?" asked Mr. Petersilea.

"Certainly," I answered. "My little Daisy is with me as of yore. I noticed, as I entered here, a large, beautifully spotted coach dog lying near the door; to whom does it belong?"

"Thereby hangs a tale," answered Mr. Petersilea. "He belongs to me, however, but I left him in his material body with my wife. A cruel-hearted man poisoned him shortly after my so-called death, and my poor, grief-stricken wife was obliged to witness his his agonies for a number days, until the end came; and here he is with me as you see. Coupled with her great sorrow it nearly drove her to despair; and, really, I wonder her brain is not turned, for she is a woman of strong, deep feelings and emotions. Now, dear Miss Judson, allow me to take you to my wife."

"Nothing could delight me more," I replied; and we started; and now, friends, in controlling Mrs. Petersilea to write, I shall endeavor to give you nothing but the truth; but I will say that by a natural law, which is well understood here, that the man who poisoned that beautiful dog, thereby doubly rending the heart of an already broken-hearted wife, will, through a just law of recompense and strict justice, suffer all the agonies himself that the dog did, and the cruel act will follow him throughout eternity. Does this sound strange to you? It would not if you were here and understood all about the ether. An act of any kind is like a pebble dropped into the placid waters of a lake or pond; the act vibrates throughout the ether forever, and as the guilty one goes on he meets it at all times and places; it is also plainly discerned by all other spiritual beings; he cannot wipe it out if he would; and so of all other acts, be they good or bad, as he goes on he meets the good acts everywhere, and they return to him goodness and happiness; the bad, as he meets it, returns to him evil and woe.

So be very careful, my dear friends, and do only that which is good, merciful and just, if you desire to be happy, for this is the only way, and all desire to be happy.

Now, dear friends, all life is immortal; and animals here are exquisitely beautiful. They are very beautiful even on earth, but here, like man, they are far more perfect still. No life of anykind is propagated within the spheres. All life is propagated upon the earths and at so-called death rises up into the spiritual realms to fill those realms and make them exceedingly beautiful. No creature here is able to slay another and has no desire, for material hunger has ceased with it. All reptiles that on earth are poisonous are not so here, for they do not need this power as a defense as they cannot be injured or killed. Man also cannot slay his brother man as he does on earth, neither can he slay an animal, bird, or fish. All exist in their beautiful, perfect, spiritual forms within the spheres which surround the earth for millions upon millions of miles, until a point is reached where the earth no longer holds any attraction for them, and then they exist as perfected entities within the all-pervading ether. Farther than this I am not able to tell you, but thus far I can and do tell you the truth; yet eons of ages pass before this exalted state is reached. As it is with animal life so it is with vegetable and floral life. All rise up to their proper altitude, one year after another, in their lovely, spiritual forms and condition, to surround us with beauty and brightness.

I felt sure after reading Mr. Petersilea's books that this must be true—that it was the natural resultant and sequence of all life, and how gloriously happy I felt when I found that he and I were right. One can reason on no other premises and come out right. If one reasons on evolution alone one comes out all wrong. That brings the spirit of man into a spiritual life where nothing exists but himself—that is, he, as a spiritual entity, would roam through the boundless ether surrounded by nothing but ether and other spiritual beings. What a dreary thing to think about. Never a tree, shrub, flower, bird, fish, or animal. No water, no land, nothing but boundless ether. What object could man have to live at all? He might rest within the ether and exchange thoughts with other spirits, but what would they think about?

I often sat in my own little home on earth and thought deeply about it. What an awful, dreary waste it must be, simply to look for all eternity into the ether and see nothing else; and this is what it must be if one follows out evolution alone and nothing immortal but the spirits of mankind. What would or could there be to interest babes, children, youths, and young maidens, simply to roam around and look forever into the dreary ether. O, my dear friends. This is not so; but the spiritual world is filled with all the forms that exist on earth, in their spiritual state.

Everything that grows, or has life, develops within the material, and after throwing it off, just as man does, rises up, just as he does, into the spirit realms, that man may be surrounded by all that he has loved and admired on earth.

O, my dear friends. I really shouted and clapped my hands for joy when I found that these things were true. I wish that every man, woman and child on earth could read the book entitled Mary Ann Carew, for it shows up, in detail, all the beautiful things that are here, shows just how children are cared for and taught. The book was written by the spirit of Carlyle Petersilea's mother, and is true in all its details.

Now would not some of you like to know about my own particular life here in the spiritual world? That I joined my parents directly after coming here is true; but I did not remain with them after my loved one was brought by them to me. Dear friends, I failed to be united to that dear one on earth. The joy and completeness still remained in store for me. I could write out all the sweet details of our courtship, but perhaps the editor of The Progressive Thinker would not care to publish them, enough to say, that I missed, as a young girl on earth, the delightful life with parents, and the sweet joy of being a wife and mother. I was deprived of all the little details that go toward making the life of a young girl happy. Now, shortly after I had entered the spiritual home of my father, and had visited that of my mother, for I must tell you that my father and mother are not united here in this life, as you all must be aware that my father, when on the earth, was married to three different ladies, and my own mother was united, not very long after coming here, to one whom she loved; and that union still holds good; but, in the home of my mother, all that I had missed on earth was here righted, and I lived out the joys that I had lost there. I was once more, in spirit, a sweet young girl, playing with my little dog and gathering flowers. My hair was long and thick, my eyes large and bright, my skin clear and white, my form perfect, supple and graceful, and if you will believe me, I had an organ, which seemed to be a counterpart of the one I so much loved on earth. I glided in and out of my mother's home, happy as the lark that met me in the dewy morning; and I visited much back and forth between my father's and my mother's homes; and, then, my love came and courted me, and we married as they marry here in the spirit world; not just as you do on earth, for we do not unite ourselves here unless we are sure that we belong to each other right of natural law, and, by natural law we are united.

As there is no propagation within the spirit realms, in order to be a mother, I must take to my breast some little dead born baby of earth, or one who had lived but a short time within the material body. And this I did, so that I might know the joys of a mother, for my soul cannot be rounded out until I go through all the natural experiences that belong to the first plane of life.

Yes, I have now a number of dear little children in my home, little ones of earth that left their natural bodies behind. So, now, I have a lovely home, overlooking a beautiful, winding river, whereon little boats are dancing, going and coming, filled by happy children. My home is on a slight elevation, with a wide veranda running the whole length of that side of the house overlooking the river; and within my home I have all things that are beautiful and useful. Near my home are many stately elms and oaks, green lawns, beautiful shrubbery; and the whole bright with parterres of flowers; and I want you all to understand that I have my dogs, all of them, and my cats. I mean all that have left the body of flesh; and, now, laugh, ye who may; but when you get here the laugh will be on our side. I have a large number of horses, not wild ones. They are as beautiful and perfect as horses can be, and as happy as they can be also; their eyes bright, their necks beautifully arched. They gallop and canter and trot over my green lawns and out among my trees, and I watch their beautiful motions with delight. They all love me and will come when I call, and their great lovely eyes thank me for all I did for them when I was down below; and they know, as well as I do, that I tried to save them from being tortured when there. A number of these horses had been used for the purpose of vivisection; slowly and miserably tortured to death, or until their unhappy spirits left their bodies. Others of these horses were poor, miserable creatures, that had been starved, overloaded and beaten to death. Yes; I took the most miserable and unhappy ones that I could find, and, behold, they are recompensed. But what shall be said of those who committed these crimes against them?

Well, I had a goodly number of dogs playing about and gamboling with my little children, and they are as happy and beautiful as spiritual dogs can be. Many of these were, on earth, deserted, starved, or kicked and beaten to death. O, yes. I am gathering up stray waifs now just as then; and, remember, all of you who read this on earth, that when an animal, or child, or bird, or even a man or woman is extremely unhappy, starved, beaten, or abused, that Abby A. Judson will be there in spirit, for her spiritual ears are ever open to the cries of distress and misery, and she will help them, and if she cannot do this she will take their suffering spirits, as they leave their bodies, and bring them to her beautiful, spiritual home, and care for them until they can be made happier and better somewhere else.

Mr. Petersilea says, that I must add a piano to my home, and he will come and occasionally give me a lesson. Thanks to his great, noble, generous heart! and I shall surely avail myself of his kindness. I play some, but not as well as I might and ought, and I would like to perfect myself in all branches of art and music as well as take care of all miserable cats, dogs, and other animals, together with wretched men, women, and children.

O, there is enough to do here, you may be sure, and you who have known me on earth must know me well enough to know that I shall never sit down in a lovely home of any kind and enjoy myself, for I could never be happy unless I were doing good and relieving those who suffer.

The world is anxious to know some of the details that go to make up the life within the spiritual realms, and this medium is one through whom we are able to give these details, and in giving the details truth will be made manifest. Spirits, who control most mediums, have not, thus far, been able to give the details concerning this life; and the reason has been prejudices and preconceived ideas that the lower world is slow to give up; and many Spiritualists are just as bad; but there are some who wonder that long lectures can be given, and thousands of them, for years, that deal simply with the abstract and philosophical, ignoring all details whatever, and thousands of spirits, when questioned as to their life in this world, have not, thus far, been able through their mediums to say much more than that they are very happy, that this life is very beautiful, and so on; but, when questioned as to the details, it seems to many that they are wholly unable to tell anything; and it has come to be said: 'If the spirits can give long lectures, and thousands of them, why in the name of all that is good and true cannot they tell us something of their lives there?"

Well, friends, one great reason has been, that if these same spirits were to tell about this life as it really is, very few would hear them at all. Knowing this, they have avoided doing so until the time should come when one or two, more advanced, bolder and more courageous than others, could be used for the purpose. One great obstacle that has stood in the way, has been acceptation of evolution standing by itself alone. This gives no immortality to any other than mankind; whereas, nothing can be more erroneous. So, when spirits try to tell of this life as it really is, thus far, very few would hear or believe them.

When an evolutionist undertakes to say that all possibilities are latent, or exist hidden within the lowest forms in nature, he is at sea, and will never be able to land anywhere; but, when he once understands that the germs of all life whatever exist within the ether, and involution is taking place at all times and with all things in nature, then he will arrive upon firm and reasonable ground; and, when he once can be made to understand that if a germ first exists within the ether in an undeveloped state, after development it can also exist within the ether as a developed entity, and when once this great truth is accepted, then the spirits will have no difficulty in describing this life as it really is and giving all the details concerning it. But when you are told by the evolutionist, that animals have no existence after the death of the body, then of course nothing below the animal can; and it lands one into a great void, where nothing exists but mankind; and, of course, spirits could do nothing else except to roam about within this boundless ether without aim or object. Yet it is said by these same ones, that man progresses eternally—that is, he is continually being wiser and happier. But if there is nothing for him to observe except ether, how is it possible for him to do so?

Now, is it not reasonable to suppose that we have far more here in the spiritual realms than you do on earth instead of less? and that we must necessarily have all that you do there in a higher, more subtile and refined condition? and all life whatever has traveled onward and upward to a more perfect state.

Well, all that I, Abby A. Judson, can tell you, is that it is so—it is true; and, consequently, that we have all that you of earth do in a more refined condition, more perfect and beautiful.

The lamb skips and plays; the horse, with arched neck and beaming eye, trots and gallops about; and thus of all life whatever, ethereal, perfect and beautiful.

You mourn because the earth and its products are not perfect, forgetting that they are simply developing up to perfection. Now, if all life is not immortal, then man is not immortal. It is a great mistake to think and teach that man alone has an immortal spirit. It is spirit alone that gives life and shape to anything, and all spirit is immortal, and all entities that have form and shape are immortal. Matter is also immortal, but not intelligent, and exists, simply, to clothe the immortal spiritual entities.

Very few can realize what a satisfaction it was to me to find that I had been right in my ideas of the persistence of animal life after the dissolution of the material covering.

Many of you say that even if the life of an animal persists after the disintegration of the material, it does not prove that animals are immortal—that their life soon fades away and is merged into the universal ether. Well, how do you know this? If the life of the animal fades and merges into the ether, then man's must do the same; for if one single identity is lost, then all are; for no great universal law ever breaks. The breaking of a law would render that law imperfect; and there are no imperfections in the laws of nature. There are no imperfections in the laws of attraction, repulsion, or gravitation, neither in the electrical law; if there were, then all things would go to smash—worlds would collide and chaos reign generally; therefore I am sure that the identity of all entities persists throughout eternity; and why should I not feel thus sure? I am here, surrounded by the identical creatures that I loved. I have not faded in the least, but quite the contrary, and if possible, I am more identical than ever before. My identity has become larger, grander, broader; and so of all the creatures below me in the scale of being.

Oh, how I do wish you all could see them. My horses are more gracefully, grandly beautiful, without imperfections or blemish, and so of every other creature here, and so of all other life. The grass is greener without an imperfect blade anywhere to be seen; the trees the same; the flowers more brilliant, showing no sign of decay; the singing birds trill in ecstatic joy; the shining fish leap from the waters, glistening with lovely coloring in the sparkling light of this glorious world.

Now, this is either myself, Abby A. Judson, who is writing this through the medium of Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, or it is the reflex action of her own mind, or the subconscious self of the lady who is acting as my amanuensis. Now I assert that it is myself, Abby A. Judson, who is doing this writing and not the reflex action of the mind of the lady or her subconscious self. Dear reader, which would you prefer to have it? Would you like to think that it is reflex action or subconsciousness? If so, you can think so. No one can take that right away from you; but that will not alter the truth of the matter one iota.

I have taken particular pains to seek out, and make myself known to Dr. Hudson. He was glad to see me, but looked a little crest-fallen.

"I want you to come with me," I said, "and see the harm that you have done to the world through your writings; and after that, I want you to make amends by controlling a lady—Mrs. Petersilea—to write. You are an honorable gentleman, and I know you will do this."

"I will do what I can, madam," he replied. "I certainly do not wish to remain in error of any kind, and I will try to undo the wrong which I unwittingly did." And so Mr. Hudson himself will control the medium to write, one letter at least, and he may like it so well that he will gladly control the writing of more.

Now if you wise men and philosophers of earth want to roam around in the limitless ether, without homes or even bodies, where there is nothing, not even a green tree, shrub, or flower, no water, no life of any kind except that of the spirits of mankind—they may be able to do so. I cannot say; but the women, girls, little babes and small children, of which there are vast numbers here, are not able to do this. They must have homes. They must be surrounded by sweet, natural objects, such as pet animals, birds, flowers, trees, and shrubs, and water they must have or perish and go into oblivion. If water, then little fairy boats and so forth. As for being broken up into many personalities, I, for one, beg to be excused. Thus far I have never been, to my knowledge, other than Abby A. Judson. That I was once in the form of an undeveloped, spiritual germ is also true; but that I can ever return again into an undeveloped spiritual germ is not true; my development must continue on forever, as far as I now know, and if one can find an end to forever, let one try it; or if one can find an end to limitless space and ether, let one try it, and if one finds it, then let one jump off into—where? what? Why, space, filled by ether.

Now if you want to know where the germs come from, first find out where the ether came from, for germinal points are co-existent with the ether. The ancients called the ether God, for within it all things exist that ever were or ever shall be; and if you want to know—like the little child when told that God made her, asked, "Who made God?"—who made the ether? why, answer that question as the teacher did the child: "God never was made. He existed always." The possibilities within it never were made. It has always existed and always will exist.

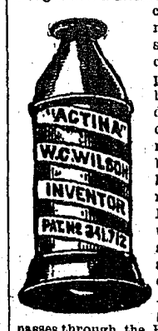
ABBY A. JUDSON.

Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea, Medium, Garvanza Station, No. 1. R. F. D., Los Angeles, Cal.

The custom and fashion of to-day will be the awkwardness and outrage of to-morrow. So arbitrary are these transient laws.—Dumas

When a man has not a good reason for doing a thing, he has one good reason for letting it alone.—Thomas Scott.

Philosophy, when superficially studied, excites doubt; when thoroughly explored, it dispels it.—Bacon.



Can it be true, as is so constantly affirmed, that there is no sex in souls? I doubt it exceedingly.—Coleridge.

To dally much with subjects mean and low, proves that the mind is weak or makes it so.—Cowper.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 10 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.
Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address
DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1143, Detroit, Mich.

'773

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE

Founded by Morris Pratt. Chartered in 1902. A school under the auspices of Spiritualism. Established for the diffusion of general culture and the acquisition of useful knowledge.

Thoroughly Qualified Teachers.

A large and beautiful building.
Steam heat and hot and cold water throughout.

A Two Years' Course

prepares specially for public and private work. Open to all of both sexes and of all ages over 15.
Admittance without examination.
Absolute freedom of thought and expression encouraged. For thoroughness and the growth of individual and independent thinking, unequaled.

Tuition per year $50.00
Tuition by the week.. .. .. 1.75

Board with furnished room per week, $3 to $3.50.

OPENS SEPTEMBER 27, 1904.

Located at Whitewater, Wis., 60 miles north of Chicago.

N. B.—All who decide to attend should be present at the opening when the classes are formed and take the full two years' course. For catalogues write to Moses Hull, president, Whitewater, Wis., or Clara L. Stewart, secretary, Whitewater, Wis., or A. J. Weaver, principal, Old Orchard, Maine.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE SOUL OF THINGS;

Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind, which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price, $1.50. In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each. Postage, 10c per copy.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Captain Geo. W. Walrond, of Denver, Colo., the well-known lecturer and platform test medium, will begin his coming winter spiritual and occult services on the first Sunday in October, and will continue the same every Sunday and Wednesday evening from October to June next inclusive, at his new meeting hall, 1512 Glenarm street, Denver, Colo., to which address all letters and communications should be mailed. Captain Walrond, we are glad to hear, has completely recovered from his recent paralytic and nervous ailments.

Will M. Kellogg, of New Boston, Ill., writes in reference to the Clinton camp: "We have had a very fine meeting, and one most encouraging feature is that fully one-fourth were strangers, and all expressed the intention of coming again. We leave for New Boston, Ill., (our home) in a couple of days."

Mrs. Catharine McFarlin is engaged to lecture for the Chicago Englewood Union for the months of October and November. During the rest of the season she is still open for engagements. Her address until October 1 will be Plainview, Minnesota.

Lawrenceburg, Ind.—Following a declaration to his mother that the spirit of his dead friend, Henry Witte, had appeared at his bedside during the night and had told him that he was lonely without his company, William Maloney, 23, lapsed into a decline from which physicians are unable to arouse him. The young man, who is the son of Michael Maloney, ex-county treasurer, a few days ago was a close attendant at the bedside of the young man who he said appeared to him in a dream. Witte died of typhoid fever and young Maloney was one of the pall-bearers. Maloney's parents tried to impress upon his mind the fact that the apparition was nothing more than a dream, but he insisted that the spirit of Witte had told him that he would soon follow him to his new home. His condition is critical.

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes: "At the Band of Harmony social, Sept. 1, the book entitled 'The Aristocracy of Health' was raffled. Nine was the lucky number. F. W. Coen of Roger's Park, was the winner."

The Spiritualists of Washington and British Columbia have closed their annual gathering and camp-meeting at Surprise Lake, nine miles from Tacoma. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, A. R. Little of Seattle, first vice-president, E. L. Nicholson of Seattle; second vice-president, Mrs. French of Spokane, secretary, George E. Knowldon of Tacoma, treasurer, J. A. Kinton of Puyallup; trustees, George H. Head, Mrs. E. G. Benson of Seattle, J. C. Richardson of Hamilton, Mrs. E. J. Hammond, E. B. Estes of Tacoma. A permanent camping site at the lake has been purchased by the association, and several cottages will be built before the next annual gathering.—Seattle (Wash.) Post.

Emma Moore writes: "On Sunday, September 11, the Spiritualists will commence their meetings for fall and winter, in G. A. R. hall, Bishop Block, afternoon and evening. Mrs. Emma M. Nutt-Moore will be the speaker and medium. Friends visiting in the city will receive a cordial greeting. Not having contributed to the Open Court column, yet as a Spiritualist and worker for the cause, my best wishes go out for the upbuilding of our glorious truth, and that the garden may be rid of the weeds, and thistles, is my sincere wish."

Rev. Cora Benton, trance speaker and message giver, will be glad to hear from societies wishing a representative of the highest spiritual forces. Address 1714 Adams street, Toledo, Ohio.

Thomas E. Mooney, of Brockton, Mass., aged 27, a shoemaker employed at the W. L. Douglas shoe company's No. 2 factory, in the gang room, committed suicide at the home of his sister, Mrs. Annie Dee, 65 North Montello street, by shooting. Mooney had formerly been confined in the Taunton insane hospital, but was discharged from there two months ago as cured. For some days he had been complaining that he heard voices telling him to shoot himself, but he told his sister he would not obey them.—Boston Globe.

Mrs. Freedman, the well-known psychic, has returned from the East and is now located at the Hotel Florence, 606 West Adams street, where she can be consulted. Phone Seeley 3268. Dr. Louis Freedman, the Australian healer, has his offices at the same number.

Mrs. Emma F. Jay Bullene of Denver, Col., prominent as a lecturer in the ranks of Spiritualism, is now in Chicago, arranging for the publication of a book entitled, "Psychic History of the Cliff Dwellers."

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner will go to Winfield, Kans., on Sept. 15, for one week, and then on to Texas, where she is to fill a number of engagements.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

E. J. Schellhous writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "Spiritualism is making good progress in Kansas City, Mo. Mr. Aber's seances are excellent and well sustained, many people coming from a distance to witness the manifestations and converse with their departed friends. Mrs. Wagner, a trumpet medium, of Topeka, comes to this city once a month and gives seances. Mrs. Fred Cross is being developed as a trumpet medium, making rapid progress. This is commendable, as it is a family circle—one of the most efficient and satisfactory methods of the propaganda. Mrs. Powell, a trumpet medium, gives seances once a week. Mrs. Shackelford is a trance medium who delivers lectures from the platform every Sunday evening. Upon the whole, the outlook here is encouraging."

The annual camp-meeting of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists came to a close yesterday. The attendance on the closing day was not so large as the ordinary Sunday crowd. The meeting this year has been a successful one from a financial standpoint. While the attendance has not been so large as last year or the year before the association was able to make some money out of concessions which were this year under the control of the association. There has been a gradual decrease in attendance the past three years, while the number of people living in the camp ground this year was the largest in the history of the association, but the Sunday crowds have been smaller than usual. Camp Chesterfield is essentially a Sunday camp, owing to the large towns that are located within easy reach of it. There is no other camp in the country that turns out the big crowds to be found at Chesterfield on Sunday, but there are other camps that have a larger number of dwellers. Two years ago the attendance at the camp footed up 55,000. Last year it dropped below that figure and this year it will reach about 40,000. The association will clear about $2,000 on the meeting and after paying out $1,600 spent on building new cottages this year, will still be $400 to the good.—Anderson (Ind.) Bulletin.

Sans Germaine, who is also known as "Professor Arago," appeared before Justice Martin yesterday afternoon charged with obtaining money by a confidence game, because of his inability to make one of his clients rich by finding for him a chest of hidden treasure. He is said to have collected as a retainer $1,000. When his client learned that the treasures refused to be found he followed Germaine to Chicago and caused his arrest. Henry Behlen, a railway engineer, of St. Louis, admits that his trouble was caused by his belief in a legend current in St. Louis that a fortune is buried near Mount Olive, Ill. He had no hope of finding it until he met Germaine, who advertised himself as a hypnotist and clairvoyant. Behlen called on Germaine to consult him and incidentally mentioned the fact that he had $1,000 deposited in a bank. The mention of the $1,000 is said to have reminded Germaine of the hidden treasure of Mount Olive. He said he could find it by exercising his occult powers. "I can find that treasure for you if you will but follow a few simple directions which I will give you." Germaine is quoted as saying to Behlen. "Germaine told me he could go into a cataleptic state, in which he could see in his mind just where this treasure was buried," said the engineer. "The only condition mentioned was that I give him $1,000, over which he was to spread sand to make it magnetic. With this in his hand he would lead me to the spot where the treasure was buried, according to his story." After some discussion the roll of bank notes was counted out. The following day Germaine left St. Louis with the money. Behlen waited patiently for the return of the clairvoyant and his fortune. "A short time ago I learned that he was in Chicago," said Behlen, "and sent detectives after him and caused his arrest."—Chicago Chronicle.

With farewell exercises last evening, the annual meeting of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists ended an eight weeks' session at the Chesterfield camp. W. J. Colville and Mrs Gillespie were the speakers. Mrs Gillespie was robbed of her purse, containing $50, a gold souvenir and her return ticket to San Francisco, when her cottage was entered by burglars during her absence.—Indianapolis News.

Doctor and Mrs. Carl A. Wickland will open Sunday afternoon meetings at 1629 N. Clark street, corner Fletcher street, beginning Sept. 18, at 3 p. m. All cordially invited.

W. A. Wilson writes that Mr. J. A. Davis, of Alexandria, Ind., is at Kokomo, holding seances, and is meeting with good success and the work is progressing very nicely.

The friends and relatives of Mrs. India Hill, an excellent speaker and medium, gathered at her home, 1205 North Church street, Decatur, Ill., Thursday evening, to celebrate her fifty-fifth birthday. The evening was spent in a most enjoyable manner, consisting of music and light games. Among the numerous presents received was a beautiful mahogany rocker. The presentation speech was made by F. G. Schmitt. It was responded to by Mrs. Hill in a most touching manner. At a later hour delicious refreshments were served and the party dispersed assuring Mrs. Hill that all had spent a most delightful evening and hoping that they would have the privilege of enjoying a like occasion for many years to come.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Dr. Brooks of California will be with us Sunday evening again, to give a lecture from an illustrated chart. His lectures are very spiritual and uplifting. They explain in a scientific way the science of life, and the signs of the times are made plain as day. We need more of these advanced thinkers to lead the people in the way of truth. No one can afford to miss this treat. Special music has been provided and the best mediums will demonstrate the nearness of our departed friends. The Spiritual Science Society is making great preparations for their next party, at Arlington Hall, northwest corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue, which will take place October 1. We invite all to come and help and encourage this grand work. The hall has been nicely decorated and every convenience you will have for an evening's enjoyment."

Mrs. Alice Baker writes from Dallas, Texas.: "I left here August 11 to fill an engagement with the Delphos (Kans.) camp. Upon arrival there I was greeted by whole-souled people who at once made me feel that it was good to be there. Delphos camp is situated in a beautiful spot where nature in all her glory sheds its rays of sunshine. Upon my return from Delphos camp I stopped at Wichita, Kans., for a week, ministering to the good people there. I was met there by Judge Tucker who escorted me to the home of Brother and Sister Givans, where we were royally welcomed and entertained. I found in Wichita a good society composed of noble, earnest souls. There was an earnest desire manifested by these good people for me to remain during the month of September, and when the good-bye had to be said, I felt loth to depart, but my plans for returning South were such I could not tarry longer, but hope that in the near future I may be permitted to visit the Sunflower State again. I have again taken up our work in Dallas, Texas, and only hope that the angel world can use me as an instrument for the accomplishing of much good while here."

C. W. Slayton writes from Hart, Mich.: "This would be a nice location for a good medium. No society at present organized, but plenty of good material. I believe a good medium located here would do well; also build up a flourishing organization. Inquirers may write me for particulars. Our village numbers 1,500, with country around; a handsome, lively village in the midst of the best fruit belt in Michigan."

Mrs. L. LeSieur writes: "The ninth benefit sociable was at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mullins, Thursday, Sept. 1. Mrs. Haire read some fine selections in the afternoon. Mrs. S. J. Ashton was the speaker of the evening. The answers to questions were particularly interesting. Mrs. Richmond will be with us at our next meeting, Sept. 15, at our Band of Harmony rooms No. 512 Masonic Temple. This meeting will be a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Richmond after their long absence. The ladies will bring cake and we will serve coffee and ice cream."

Mrs. F. E. Beach writes from Ambridge, Pa.: "This week's Progressive Thinker is the best ever published, or at least seems so to me. One of the articles that I think best is by J. S. Loveland. He writes on a subject that has been a great study with me ever since I believed in Spiritualism—how much comes from the spirit side of life, and how much is psychometry and telepathy. I have often been in halls when articles were read from, and heard their secrets disclosed, and I felt quite certain that they would never have been told by a spirit, and such a one as was described giving the message—a beautiful spirit that had passed out some years before, and had grown in knowledge and wisdom—to come back and give a secret in a public hall, is a little too much for my imagination."

Mrs. S. T. Allen writes from San San Francisco, Cal.: "Miss Mae Hunt's meetings continue in interest and large attendance. Sunday, Aug. 21 we listened to a grand address on 'The Laws of Mediumship,' by an old Egyptian philosopher, Hermes, whose very presence seemed a spiritual benediction to those present. Miss Hunt is developing a ballot test phase which will be ready for the public before long. An interesting feature of these meetings is the singing of little Vera Randall, a child of ten who has a beautiful voice and who is herself conscious of the presence of spiritual beings. Taken all in all these meetings are very spiritual and uplifting, and are conducted wholly by the spirit."

Mrs. P. J. Gillette writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "Being a reader of your valuable paper, which gives food for thought pro and con, I must add my experience at Farmer Riley's seances. I remained there two weeks. He held a sance there every evening. They were unusually well attended, as he charged no fee. I consider him an honest, genuine medium for materializing. I saw S. S. Jones, editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal. He looked natural as in life. I approached him and he smiled. I asked, 'Do you recognize me?' He bowed, 'yes,' but did not speak. He remained ten minutes, then slowly vanished from sight. I saw many during that time but not any that I knew."

J. Wagner writes from Allegheny, Pa.: "The Psychic Research Society held a picnic and dance at Vermont Park, Millvale, Pa., Aug. 31, followed with tests and speaking. Rev. S. M. Oles, Sr., and S. Oles, Jr., gave splendid messages. A minister of the gospel, Mr. John Thresher, spoke very forcibly in favor of our cause. Your humble servant gave a short lecture on 'Spiritualism, Its Relation to Natural Law.' This society is doing a good work. Mr. Oles is a perfect gentleman, earnest in the work. May the angel world spare him and his son and co-worker for many years to come."

F. T. L. says: "Spiritualism as understood and practiced must divest itself of many of the crudities and absurdities which mark its infant stages, just as Christianity has discarded the crudities and absurdities so unreasonable which credited God with less justice than an ordinary justice of the peace. Spiritualism must call for the most honest, thorough and critical investigation of its claims and rid itself of the impostors who pretend ability to do impossible things before it can claim the sincere attention of the masses of intelligent people. The time is coming when the truth will be known, when the cardinal principles of intelligent Christianity and intelligent Spiritualism will be accepted as substantially the same; when the two, hand in hand, will conquer the degrading influences of atheism and materialism."

Amos Steckel of Bloomfield, Iowa, a prominent Christian orthodox lawyer, writes: "I think that the body of the Bible is of divine origin. There may be immaterial errors. In each edition of your paper are truths, but also contradictions or conflicts between different writers, who claim to believe in the same Spiritualism. Everything that comes from God to man through man blunders on the way. There is no serious conflict between the backbone and spinal column of the Bible and the rational claims of Spiritualists. I am orthodox, but can receive and reject, from any other source. The universe of truths belongs to free men."

C. H. Mathews writes: "The Banner of Light files were sent to Mrs. H. L. Farrington, 4542 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, Flat 1, that lady being the first

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

---

applicant. There were two others, one lady and one gentleman."

G. H. Brooks writes from Baltimore Md.: "I began my labors for the First Spiritual Society of Baltimore, Sunday, September 4. The attendance in the afternoon was small, but the evening audience was good. I am located at No. 811 North Fremont avenue, to which all mail and telegrams should be sent. I will respond to calls for funerals and some week-night meetings within a reasonable distance of Baltimore."

J. H. Moon of Little Rock, Ark., writes that he has with his wife, investigated Spiritualism, and seen spirits materialize in his own home. He thinks a good medium would do well in the "City of Roses."

Mrs. Henry writes: "On Wednesday evening, Aug. 17, at the residence of Mrs. Blondin, 2903 Groveland avenue, the Ladies' Auxiliary connected with the Universal Occult Society held its social. About fifty attended. It was a little too cool for a lawn social, so we took possession of the house. Our president, Mrs. Davenport, called upon Dr. Cross, who made a few very appropriate remarks, as did our pastor, Mr. Gilray. Prof. Caldwell and daughter furnished some very fine vocal music. Mrs. Vaughn gave spirit messages. Prof. Leon and Prof. Verne gave readings; also Mrs. Waggstaff and Mrs. Henry, in her gypsy costume. Ice cream and cake furnished by the ladies for ten cents. Everyone seemed to enjoy the evening. On Sunday evening, Aug. 28, our president of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Mrs. Marian Hunt Davenport, was ordained as a spiritual minister. At the close of services at the Universal Occult Society, ordination was conferred by Dr. Warne, president of the Illinois State Association. Mrs. Davenport was dressed in white, and she carried sunflowers and had one in her hair, as that is the emblem of Spiritualism. After receiving the congratulations of her many friends she invited most of us to her home where she refreshed us with ice cream and cake. We feel she will be a shining light in the cause of Spiritualism."

J. F. Mitchell writes from Arkansas: "The Progressive Thinker has got better with each year for nine years. We think the premium worth more than the cost of both paper and book. We now have all the premiums, and don't want to miss a number of either."

T. A. Thompson writes from Wichita, Kansas: "I cannot afford to be without The Progressive Thinker, it is so full of instruction and encouraging communications, and can be obtained at so much less than its real value, some single copies being worth the cost of a year's subscription. I wonder so many Spiritualists try to get along and keep alive as believers in its noble teachings, when it can be had so cheaply."

T. W. Wisner writes from Caro, Mich.: "The Progressive Thinker is the best paper on earth. Caro has about 2,500 citizens, and seven churches to show them the way to 'heaven,' and seven saloons to show them the way to 'hell,' but in my twenty-three years residence here I never have set foot in any of them. I have no use for poor whisky or poor religion, and it is hard to tell which has been the greatest curse to the 'things' called men."

L. S. Burdick writes that he visited Camp Chesterfield, and enjoyed the same very much. He was particularly pleased with the lyceum presided over by the gifted teacher, Mrs. Gillespie.

Mrs. Hamilton Gill has returned to the city and will resume her Sunday and Thursday night circles, also gives private readings at her residence 522 W. Monroe street. Mrs. Gill spent several weeks at Vicksburg and Grand Ledge camp-meetings, where her controls did excellent work, both in public and private seances. The results were very gratifying to the presidents of both associations.

Jesse H. Bickford writes from Habana, Cuba: "I have visited all the Spiritualists I could find in Cuba. At Sagua la Grande, a fine little city on the north coast, I found a harmonious society. Its president was at Lily Dale, N. Y., when I was there. The world will hear from this society before long."

T. W. Prichard writes from Pittsburg, Pa.: "We desire to call your attention to the prosperous condition of the First Spiritualist Church of Allegheny City, under the pastorate of Rev. G. Clinton Day. Four years ago our church was run down and in debt. The trustees thought it was time a change should be made and extended a call to Brother Day. He accepted, and his work has been more than successful. The old debt has all been paid, and the church newly renovated and enlarged. The present church will no longer hold the people and we are making arrangements to erect a new Spiritual Temple. Brother Day is an earnest worker and is loved by all who knew him. His lectures are scientific, and appreciated. The Ladies' Aid Society and the Mite Society are both in a very prosperous condition. Harmony and true love is the dominating factor of our church."

Chas. H. Green writes: "Sunday, September 4, the regular monthly experience meeting of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission was held at its hall, 378 S. Western avenue. A number of our mediums and members related incidents in their lives, showing why they became Spiritualists and believers in our doctrines. Their arguments were interesting and convincing. Messages by a number of our mediums followed. The evening lecture was by Rev. Mrs. N. E. Hill, the pastor, who although limiting her remarks to a few minutes, held the closest attention of her auditors, and commanded the greatest respect with her words. Mrs. DeWolf-Kiser also addressed the congregation with a few timely remarks, after which Mrs. Jaquet spoke. Mrs. Weaver again favored us by giving a few convincing spirit messages. Spiritualism, as it was, as it is, and it should and shall be, was the fundamental portion of the discourses of our various speakers. Sunday, Sept. 18, the afternoon lecture will be by Mr. John M. Clarke. Dr. C. Burgess will give a special lecture that evening with a history of Indian life, and describing the relation of the Indian to mediums in material life as guides. Both lectures will be followed by spirit messages. Saturday evening, Sept. 17, we will hold our second annual package party and entertainment at our hall, 378 S. Western avenue. Admission will be free, those attending only being required to bring some kind of a package, which will be auctioned. All are invited."

J. A. Smith writes: "On the fourth Thursday of this month Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor of the Light of Truth church, will hold a basket picnic in Jackson Park. The friends will meet at the German Building. I hope the members of the societies all over the city will take this opportunity to have an outing and get acquainted."

Mrs. Henry writes: "On Saturday evening, September 24, the Universal Occult Society will hold a social at 2903 Groveland avenue, the residence of Mrs. Blondin. We hope to have a number of good test mediums present, Mrs. Vaughn, Mrs. Isa Cleveland, Prof. Leon and others, some good elocutionists, and vocal music by Professor Caldwell and daughters, and expect to have the Highland bagpipes, as our pastor is Scotchman. So all come and have a good time."

Rosetta Gifford, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., prophesies the success of Mr. Roosevelt at the coming election.

T. W. Sherk writes: "Mr. E. Dierkess speaks next Sunday evening at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Mr. Dierkess is a medium and inspirational speaker, and will be heard with interest. We would like a larger attendance at our meetings. Many preparations are being made for an aggressive season's work. Next month Moses Hull will lecture for us two Sundays, and other able speakers also have already been engaged for early dates. A fine musical programme is being provided for, while Mr. Coates is always present to give messages. Come and help us."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Owing to the cool weather the Ladies' Aid Society has discontinued the meetings at Marshall Hall down the Potomac river. Mr. F. A. Wood, president of the First Spiritualist Society, has returned from his vacation. The Ladies Aid met Mr. Wood to greet him. After the business session Mr. Wood was presented with a beautiful bouquet of flowers. Mrs. M. T. Longley was selected to make the presentation. She found in each flower something sweet and appropriate to remind Mr. Wood of his loyalty to the cause. Among the home arrivals was Mr. Payson Longley. Mr. Longley responded to the roll call by singing, 'Only a Thin Veil Between Us.' Many new features are to be added to the different societies; one is a dramatic and literary club. Mr. Hinkle, Mrs. Duell and Mrs. Congdon urged the endowment of beds in the different hospitals for the sick. Mrs. M. T. Longley endorsed the idea, as she had had some experience in getting sums for the benefit of the worthy mediums. With donations from one cent up, they hope to realize quite a sum. All Spiritualist societies ought to be able to own one or two cots in the hospitals where their members will have care. The next meeting will be held at Mrs. Dr. Butts, 1402 L street N. W. Mrs. Congdon will address the meeting followed by tests by Mrs. Hinkle. Mr. E. Noble holds meetings every Sunday evening. Mrs. Price holds meetings in the same hall Monday evenings."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Please remember that the Spiritual Science Society at Arlington Hall, 31st street and Indiana avenue, have a free reading room and library at the hall, open every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m. We also have free literature for distribution. Send us books, new or old magazines, and they will be cared for and used by the people who come and are so hungry for food on New Thought and Spiritualism. Our next party will be Saturday evening, October 1. Bring your friends and enjoy something fine. Sunday afternoon and evening will be filled with rich things for all."

Thy Hyde Park Occult Society, which meets at No. 319 E. 55th street, has the pleasure of announcing that there will be a mediums' meeting held at its hall on the evening of Sept. 18. Mediums are particularly invited to be present, as this meeting will be theirs exclusively, and a rich treat will be in store for those who attend and desire a communication from their spirit friends.

C. T. Schneider writes from 132 Mulberry street, Williamsport, Pa.: "I am home from Lily Dale, N. Y., and will be pleased to hear from societies or from persons wishing to form a society. I give tests and am an inspirational speaker. I will remain any length of time agreed upon."

O. E. Kropp, recording secretary, writes: "The last regular monthly meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists' League was held at the hall of the Hyde Park Occult Society, 319 East 55th street, on Monday evening, Sept. 5, 1904. The regular routine of business was transacted, and upon motion it was decided that the League secure a hall in the central part of the city for our October meeting. On motion a committee of three was appointed to look after a hall; said committee are Mrs. Hilbert, Mr. J. C. Thoran and C. Kirchner. Commiteee on arrangements for our next meeting are: Dr. Geo. B. Warne, Mrs. Isa Cleveland and Mrs. Nora Hill, and due notice will be given later. A list of two hundred and ninety new names was added to our already long list of members, and we are in hopes of adding as many more names to the list at our next meeting. On motion a rising vote of thanks was extended the Hyde Park Occult Society for so kindly giving us the use of their hall."

Mme. Florence Montague and Mrs. Belle Lewis from London, are expected to arrive in Montreal on Allan steamer "Ionian," which leaves England Sept. 15. Mme. Montague is already very well known in America, particularly in California, as an excellent speaker and gifted seeress. Mrs. Lewis has lived all her life in England, but as she has achieved a wide reputation as a mental healer and teacher of mental science, and is moreover a member of London Spiritualist Alliance, and frequent contributor to "Light," she comes well credentialized. W. J. Colville says he has personally known of numerous instances where she has been phenomenally successful in difficult cases and also in helping young people to pass examinations and public performers to conquer stage fright. He has resided in her house and had abundant opportunity for testing her work, and most cordially introduces this newcomer to the American populace.

W. J. Colville's work in St. Louis is progressing very favorably in the Temple 3515 Pine street, close to Garrison avenue, of which Thomas Grimshaw is regular pastor. On Sunday, Sept. 11, five services were held in the Temple: Lyceum, 9:30 a. m.; service with lecture by Thomas Grimshaw on "Scientific Proofs of Immortality," 10:45 a. m.; meeting for messages, etc., 2:30 p. m.; meeting of the Universal Peace Union, addressed by Alfred Love and Prof. Bachellor of Philadelphia, and W. J. Colville, 4:30 p. m.; service with lecture by W. J. Colville on "The Coming Co-Operative Commonwealth," 7:45 p. m. Attendance large at all sessions. World's Fair visitors avail themselves of the library and reading room, open daily, where The Progressive Thinker and other excellent periodicals are always to be found. W. J. Colville is conducting a course of instruction in Spiritual Science daily at 3 p. m., and delivers lectures on great popular topics every evening at 8, Wednesday excepted, when clairvoyance is demonstrated by local workers.

TO WOMEN WHO DREAD MOTHERHOOD

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain—Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or remain childless. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at childbirth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how it may be done absolutely free of charge. Send your name and address to Dr. J. H. Dye, 134 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you, postpaid, his wonderful book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure sterility. Do not delay, but write to-day.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

Three Journeys Around the World. By the renowned lecturer and traveler, Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price, $1.50.

Three Jubilee Lectures. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 35 cents.

Thomas Paine's Examination of the Prophecies. A consideration of the passages in the New Testament, quoted from the Old and called Prophecies concerning Jesus Christ. Price, 15 cents.

Tree and Serpent Worship. Showing up the ridiculous side of the old, old story of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. By A. S. Hudson, M. D. Price 15 cents.

Truths of Spiritualism. This book narrates many of the striking experiences of its author as a lecturer and test medium in the earlier days of Spiritualism. By E. V. Wilson. Price $1.

Twentieth Century Guide to Palmistry. By the Zanzigs. A good book for all those interested in this study. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 25c.

Two In One. A compendium of Biblical Spiritualism. A combination of "The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" into one volume. By Moses Hull. Price $1.

Unique Bible Picture-Book. Old Testament stories comically illustrated. Exposure by ridicule; exposure by facts. The stories humorously told. By Watson Heston. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Vaccination a Curse. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Treating on a subject of vital importance to every one. Price, $1.25.

Vedanta Philosophy. By Swami Vivekananda. Price $1.50.

Views of Our Heavenly Home. This book is a word-picture by one of our best artists, Andrew Jackson Davis. A highly interesting work. Price 60 cents; postage 5 cents.

Voices. The Voices contain poems of remarkable beauty and force. They are most excellent inspirations. Neatly printed and nicely bound. By Warren Sumner Barlow. Price $1.

Volney's Ruins and the Law of Nature. This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Voltaire's Romances. A new edition, profusely illustrated. A delightful reproduction, unique and refreshing. 480 pages, with portrait and 82 illustrations. Price, cloth, $1.50; postage 15 cents.

Warfare of Science With Theology. Information not procurable in the libraries of the world in a half century, showing the opposition of the church to science. Two vols., 900 pages. Price $5.

